The second day was exclusively devoted to the consideration of the inspired Word in relation to the Jews. Mr. Brandreth and Mr. Holland spoke in the morning, and showed the obligation of the world to God's ancient people, and of the manner in which this obligation should be repaid in love and service to them in the day of their dispersion. Rev. James Smith spoke fervently on the "life from the dead" which the nations would receive through the ingathering of the Jews. In the evening noble addresses were delivered by Rev. G. Greenwood, of America, Mr. Carr and Mr. George Trench, of Ardfert, Ireland, the latter dealing especially with the glories of the millennial kingdom.

Thursday and Friday were devoted to the second coming of Christ. The attendances were very large, the Free Assembly Hall being well filled on each occasion. In all the addresses there was a general agreement that the world would not get better by any of the devices of man, but, according to the sure word of prophecy, it would grow worse and worse until the Lord Jesus Christ should come and put all things under his almighty sway.

OOTACAMUND, INDIA.

The second annual Convention for the deepening of spiritual life was held at this hill station May 14 to 17. It is one of the most hopeful signs of the times that these conventions are being held in India. This week there is one going on at Kodaikanal, on the Pulney Hills. These hill stations furnish great opportunities for the gathering together of Christians to wait on God and seek a fuller measure of his Spirit for life and service. For missionaries especially, of whom there are over seventy at Ootacamund, connected with various societies, it has been good to meet day after day, and breathe an air of spiritual revival, which is even more necessary for the soul than the invigorating "Nilgiri air" is for the body.

The Convention lasted three days, with a praise meeting on the fourth. The subjects for the three days were, "Christ for us," "Christ with us," "Christ in us." As these glorious themes, or rather these aspects of the one glorious theme, Christ, were opened up by the speakers, under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, we were made to realise more fully than ever what wealth we have in Him in whom we are complete. Many who have gone down, or are about to go down, to the plains, back to their spheres of toil, to bear the burden and heat of the day, will carry with them the vivid consciousness that they have met with God on this Mount of Transfiguration, and that He will be "for them, with them, and in them." as they descend to deal with the evil spirits at the foot of the Mount.

The meetings, of which there were four held daily, one being a most helpful Bible reading by Rev. T. Walker (C.M.S.), Tinnevelly, culminated and terminated in a praise meeting, at which explicit testimony was given of distinct blessing received. There was no teaching of "sinless perfection," but there was a clear setting forth of the perfect ability of the Almighty Saviour to keep our feet from falling, as we abide in Him and He in us.

The whole tone of the Convention was missionary, not only at the two missionary meetings, but throughout. How could it be otherwise when held on such a battlefield as India, with its teeming multitudes unconquered as yet for Christ? It was not on the heathen alone that the members of the Conference felt that their missionary force was to be expended. Convention week was also "race week" at Ootacamund, and this meant that large numbers of our countrymen and women, including nearly the whole of "society," assembled for two days on the racecourse, where all the paraphernalia and saturnalia of the English turf were to be witnessed, and thousands of rupees changed hands in gambling. As we waited upon the Lord in our meetings, it was laid upon some of us to go out and witness for Christ at the races. Accordingly, a band of us went, preaching men and singing women armed with the Word of God and a good supply of English and vernacular tracts. Among those who stood up and spoke was an officer of the British Army, who up to the time of his conversion, three years ago, was a ringleader in races, balls, and other worldly amusements. He was well known to many whom he addressed, and it was very impressive to hear him urge his former companions in frivolity and gaiety to turn from the broken cisterns of the world and sin and come to the fountain of living waters.

May I mention that a note of warning is needed for all young men coming out to India on account of the special temptations and perils which await and assail them here? Let me urge ministers, Sunday-school teachers, and others, to give to the young people whom they know who are sailing for India, letters of introduction to one or other of the missionaries, and also to write to the missionary direct. In this way many a moral shipwreck may, by the grace of God, be prevented.

The China Inland Mission.

THOROUGHLY in earnest, enthusiastic in spirit, and hopeful in tone: so may we summarise the characteristics of the anniversary meetings of this Mission, held on Tuesday week, in the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park. The proceedings of the afternoon by meeting were opened by the reading of Psa. lxxviii. Mr. Robert Scott, and prayer by Rev. D. B. Hankin.

Sir GEORGE WILLIAMS, who presided, spoke of the high honour it is to carry the Gospel to those who know it not. Our brethren and sisters in China have been greatly owned of God, who has been pleased to bless their labours in an ever-increasing measure. We, who are compelled to remain at home, should value highly the privilege of supporting by prayer and liberal gifts those who are gone forth among the heathen as ambassadors for Christ.

Mr. B. BROOMHALL submitted a statement showing that the total income for the last year was £32,178 14s. 6d., an increase in this country of £7682 over the preceding year; but the income in China, the colonies, and the United States had fallen somewhat, so that the total increase of income for the year was £5944. The first five months of the present year have shown an increase of £2385 over a similar period last year. As to the staff, the deaths in 1893 were five, and, while mourning those who had gone, the Council is profoundly thankful that so few have been called home. The Mission has now 220 stations and out-stations, with 456 missionaries, including wives of missionaries; also 118 associate missionaries working under the direction of the Mission. There are 366 native helpers, of whom 105 are not supported by the Mission. Sixty-one new workers entered China during last year, fifty as members and eleven as associates. Five of these were from America and four from Australia. There were 821 baptisms during the year, an increase of 148 on the previous year. Of the 390 missionaries from England, thirty-two are self-supporting, others are supported by friends, associations, churches, Sunday-schools, etc., and 255 are provided for entirely by the Mission.

Mr. W. B. SLOAN read a letter from Mr. Hudson Taylor, in which, after telling of his experiences in the United States en route, he gives the facts as summarised above, and promises a full report shortly.

Rev. YUNG-KING YEN, M.A., congratulated the China Inland Mission on having sent during the last twenty-eight years about half as many missionaries as all the other societies put together. He thanked God not only for the large number of missionaries sent forth, but also for the fact that the Mission had led the way into remote and previously untouched districts. Another point which had interested him, as a Chinaman, was that the C.I.M. missionaries had identified themselves with his people, not only in dress, speech, and habits, but also in appealing in matters of difficulty to the native officials rather than to foreign Consuls. Other missions were now discovering that while this method involved certain hardships to start with, it was the true way to the hearts of the people.

He had heard it said that some considered that the progress of the Gospel had been slow. Well, the English and Americans are a fast, quick people, and to them it may seem slow; but the Chinese are a plodding people, and from their point of view it was marvellously quick. In 1842 there were six Chinese Christians, in 1889 there were 37,287 Chinese Christians, a growth which among such a conservative and slow people seemed remarkably rapid.

Turning next to his own special theme—the Opium Question—the speaker deplored the serious hindrance it is to Mission work. It seemed so strange to him to hear some people in this land defend opium as a beneficial thing. No Chinaman, who knows what it really does, ever speaks well of it. The benefits are nil; it is a curse, and nothing but a curse. This is universally admitted in China. Rev. Arnold Foster had collected a number of native books against opium, and being anxious to hear all that could be said, instructed his native teacher to "go into the stores and buy some books on the other side." The Chinaman (himself an opium smoker) replied, "Teacher, no one would say it was good." Mr. Yen trusted that in his mission to this land, in denunciation of the opium trade, he would be supported by the prayers of God's people.

THERE IS NO OTHER SIDE,

Mr. MONTAGU BEAUCHAMP, B.A., opened by reading Isa. xliii. 17-20, a passage which had often cheered the little company of workers in far off Si-chuen. Proceeding, he recalled his early experiences in Shan-si, where on one memorable occasion 250 were baptized in two days. Perhaps some, like himself, had been a little doubtful as to the wisdom of this wholesale baptism; but what had been the result? Of these 250 there are now 200 in full fellowship. Of the other fifty some had died, some had moved off into other districts, and a few had backslidden. Thus the result must be regarded as most satisfactory. After touching very briefly on the anti-foreign riots, and recalling Dr. Griffith John's letter (given in our own pages) as to his hopes in regard to the prime mover in this agitation, Mr. Beauchamp passed on to speak of recent labours in Si-chuen. Producing a detailed map on a large scale, of the district around Pao-ning, he told how systematic endeavours had been made to reach every one of the numerous market cities in the district. This had been pretty thoroughly done—some nearer towns having been visited four or five times while the more remote had been visited but once. Besides preaching all day long to crowds in the market, conversations had been held in the evening in the tea shops and at the inns; moreover, a native Christian who accompanied the itinerant evangelists had done sticking up texts and Gospel placards in public places where many would read, and perhaps be led to serious inquiry. He, the speaker, believed that these itinerations had been used of God to the conversion of many. He spoke highly of the value of the service rendered by the native Christians, but held that great care should be taken not to offer them money for preaching the Gospel. When this is done the wrong sort of people are apt to be attracted. When they are compelled to speak by the love of Christ, there is a real power about them; and besides no one can say that they are merely "rice Christians."

Miss G. MUIR rejoiced in the good tidings coming from other provinces, but in Kan-suh, where she had been labouring, the work seems yet in the initial stage. The people do not understand. They seem hard and indifferent. Besides, the opium is a tremendous obstacle; eight out of ten men and six out of ten women smoke opium. Many "like to hear about Jesus," but when they learn it involves giving up opium they draw back. The cost seems to them too great. Still, the workers know they are sowing seed which ere long may be found in rich fruit. Mrs. Stott, now in Cheh-Kiang, where there is much blessing, said to Miss Muir when they met in China: "Don't be discouraged; twenty years ago it was the same here. I used to walk the streets and lament that I could not get the women to listen. Our time has come. Yours will come, too." So in returning shortly to Kan-suh Miss Muir is going in faith and hope. Many, she trusted, will pray for the workers in this far-off province, that the breath of God's Holy Spirit may kindle the cold hearts, and cause the good seed to spring up in abundant fruit.

Mr. OWEN STEVENSON told of pioneer work in Yun-nan, where God has been pleased to give increase and blessing. It had been his privilege to open fresh stations in several cities, the latest being K'uh-tsing; and though difficulties had occurred at first, real work has been done, and already there are a few native believers in each of the five cities occupied in Yun-nan. Naturally, in such pioneer service there had been trying and lonely times; and the speaker described very touchingly how, alone in a strange city, suspected by all around him, he got into low spirits, when, casting himself on God, he realised, in a marvellous measure, the presence of Jesus, so that his soul became full of joy, and his heart was inspired to fresh service.

THE EVENING MEETING.

In the evening the proceedings were opened by Rev. C. G. Moore, who read Acts viii. 26-40 and offered prayer. Mr. THEODORE HOWARD, who presided, called for special praise in view of the way God's hand had been manifested in preserving the lives of the missionaries, in opening fresh doors, and in winning souls to Himself from among the heathen.

Rev. W. W. CASSELLS would like to begin his address with "a big Hallelujah." His testimony must be, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." In the matter of health, of funds, of baptisms, and of access to the people, God had been with them. He himself had travelled thousands of miles, under all manner of circumstances, and had suffered no injury. Indeed, he had not had a day's illness in the nine years he had been in China. Similarly God had wonderfully helped in providing funds—just when needed—in the most unexpected ways, and often when the usual source seemed to have unaccountably failed. Again and again as some special need arose, the exact amount required would come to hand. Nothing could be more comforting than thus to learn that one is in God's care.

As to the work in Pao-ning he (the speaker) had baptized in six years a hundred converts from gross heathenism. The way the Gospel has won triumphs in little out-of-the-way villages has been very cheering, and some of these believers have lost everything for Christ's sake. The spirit in which they endure finds illustration in the remark made by one threatened with death and beaten with a thousand strokes: "My only regret, as I stood before my persecutors, was that I had not been baptized." "Ah," was the missionary's reply,

"BUT YOU HAD A BAPTISM OF FIRE."

Notwithstanding all that has been done, Mr. Cassells urged that the need is very great, the darkness very dense; and much more must be done for these millions dying in heathendom.

Miss WHITCHURCH spoke of Hsiao-i, Shan-si, where God has given much blessing. Her longing is to get back to these Chinese converts; and glad as she was to come home and see her dear ones, she could not help feeling there is one less witness for Christ in that province, where the witnesses are so few and the need so great. Her hope is that while at home she may be used to call out some fresh labourers. If Christians at home only knew the joy it is to witness for God among the heathen, there would be many pressing forward to this service. The name of Jesus is as powerful in China as in England; but there are vast districts and countless cities where there is no one to tell the people of the Saviour's love.

Mr. H. N. LACHLAN, M.A., followed with a brief account of work in Kiang-si, where he has laboured with Mr. Orr Ewing. Many have been called out; some few have gone back, but the majority are standing in spite of the sore persecution. Here, as in other provinces, the opium vice is a terrible snare and hindrance to the Gospel.

TWO OLD TESTAMENT PICTURES.

Pastor ARCHIBALD G. BROWN began by reminding his hearers that although he had not been in China personally, he has two daughters there, while a third hopes shortly to go to China; so he might claim some concern in that great mission field. After this interesting prelude, Mr. Brown read 1 Kings xix. 19-21, and 2 Kings vi. 1, 2, which he expounded and applied in a fresh and practical way. The first passage narrates the call of Elisha, and finds a modern analogue in the call of Mr. Hudson Taylor, as told in Miss Guinness's remarkable book "The Story of the China Inland Mission." Elisha is found busy at his ordinary calling, he is prompt and ready to obey the call. In killing the oxen he seems to burn the bridge behind him. In feasting the people he indicates his gladness to obey.

Turning to the second passage, we find this young man has become the head of an institution. The mantle of Elijah has fallen on him; he has won the confidence and respect of the sons of the prophets, who look to him for counsel and direction. The place has become too strait for them, and they offer personal service to enlarge it. All this Mr. Brown applied in the happiest way to the China Inland Mission and to Christian service generally; showing how Elisha was called and fitted, and how the young men in the college had learned that no work was beneath them if done for God; how all took a share, "every man his beam," each according to his strength and ability, but each serving willingly. The points we have thus indicated will suggest to every reader very useful lessons in regard to service for Christ.

Mr. G. A. HUNTLEY came next, telling of progress in Ch'en-ku, where seven years ago there were no Christians, and where there is now a native church with a hundred members. Similar work is going on in other parts of the province—Shen-si.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER, who has worked in Ganhwuy since 1885, gave instances showing that God is giving much blessing in this province. He referred also to cases in which men and women seem to be possessed by evil spirits—somewhat analogous, he believed, to the demon-possession in our Lord's days on earth.

Dr. HARRY GUINNESS, who mentioned incidentally that ninety students and deaconesses have gone from the East London Training Institute to China, pointed out that, notwithstanding all that has been done, the need of the millions of China perishing without light is overwhelming, while the workers are terribly few compared with the population around them. He made a strong and pressing plea for more volunteers for China.

BOMBAY OPIUM DENS.

In July, 1893, the Bombay Government made a show of closing up the licensed opium dens, in consequence of the strong public feeling manifested in England and India. But it was afterwards discovered that a large number of unlicensed dens were in existence. Messrs. A. W. Prautch, Man Sukh Lal, and Thos. M. Hudson made investigations into these tolerated dens, and published the result of their inquiries in two articles in The Bombay Guardian of Jan 6 and 20, the latter entitled, "Further Fraud by the Bombay Opium Department." In this article, the signatories asked for an impartial inquiry, conducted by others than officials, into the serious charges made.

No such inquiry was ordered, but Dhamji Lakhmichand, a Bombay opium-dealer, instituted proceedings for defamation against the missionaries. The nominal prosecutor stood at the back of the court, while the real movers in the matter sat by the side of Lord Colin Campbell, the counsel for the prosecution, and instructed him at every step of the proceedings.

The result of the case against Mr. A. W. Prautch was that he was sentenced to pay a fine of two hundred and one rupees, more than half of which was to go to the opium-dealer. Mr. Prautch refused to compromise with evil by paying the fine, and was sent to prison for one month.

On the evening of Friday, May 18, when Mr. Prautch was liberated, a meeting to welcome him was held at the residence of Rev. W. E. Robbins, Grant-road, Bombay. The meeting was in the open air, and the ground was lighted up with coloured paper lanterns with a very pleasing effect, which was heightened by a full moon.

The meeting was opened with prayer and the singing of "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow," after which Mr. W. E. Robbins, who presided, read letters of sympathy from those who were unable to be present. Rev. E. F. Ward proposed the following resolution, which was seconded in a Hindustani speech by Abdul Aziz, a convert from Islam of many years' standing:—

That we sympathise most heartily with Mr. Prautch in the personal inconvenience and suffering he has so nobly borne during the imprisonment he has just undergone for his plain speaking of the truth in exposing the Government opium traffic. Our confidence in Mr. Prautch as a faithful man of God, and a true and worthy successor of the Apostles in the Christian ministry and in missionary work, is strengthened and increased. We feel sure that he will not in any way lower the standard, and we hope that his future work for the cause of personal and national morals will be as zealous and successful as the past. We hope that in his visit to England he may be much used of God to the enlightenment of the British people as to the evils arising from the connection of the Indian Government with the opium traffic; and our earnest prayer is that this warfare may be carried on with increasing vigour until the final victory—of the certainty of which we have no doubt.

This was carried without one dissentient. The next speakers were Rev. Gangadbar Kale, of the American Methodist Episcopal Marathi Church; Mr. R. H. Madden, superintendent of Bombay Seamen's Rest; Nyam Khan, a convert from Islam; Rev. W. J. Stephens, of Grant-road Church; followed by Mr. A. W. Prautch.

Miss Leonard proposed a second resolution, which was seconded by Mr. Alfred S. Dyer, who said:—"The iniquitous opium traffic is usually discussed by the official class in India, and by their organs in the press, as though it were an Indian question only. I cannot be a party to such a limited consideration of the subject. The opium traffic with China exists because it was forced upon that country. The opium traffic to this day is in fact a war carried on against the people of China by a nation professing to be at peace with them. It is a crime on a stupendous scale, continued in cold blood. To gradually cease from this great sin is a proposal which no Christian man should listen to for one moment. God's people must say to the British Government—Thou shalt not. God's people can consistently entertain one proposition only, that of total and immediate prohibition."

Messrs. Man Sukh Lal, Thos. M. Hudson, and others briefly spoke.

A telegraphic despatch reached London last week stating that Man Sukh Lal, who was put on trial after Mr. Prautch, had also been sentenced to a month's imprisonment in default of meeting the fine, which he declined to pay. Mr. A. S. Dyer, Editor of The Bombay Guardian, was arraigned last week on a similar charge of defaming the Bombay opium-dealer; up to the time of going to press, no news has reached us as to the result.

A movement is on foot in Bombay to send Rev. A. W. Prautch to this country on a mission of information, so that British friends may know exactly the attitude of certain of the officials in Bombay towards the baneful opium traffic.

THE GOSPEL IN ITALY.

The report for last year of the work of the Evangelical Church of Italy, formerly called the Free Italian Church, is a deeply interesting pamphlet. Every page presents some phase of the conflict with Romanism and ignorance, and many remarkable incidents are narrated. The compiler, Rev. Cav. Fera, in the introduction, mentions two events which are full of encouragement to Italian Protestants. The first is that the municipality of Rome has accepted the gift of a bust of the lamented Alexander Gavazzi, and has decided to place it on the Janiculan Hill, among the Defenders of Rome. That is to say, one of the Fathers of the Evangelical Church, five years after his death, is to have erected in his honour a public monument in the Eternal City, still Roman Catholic and formerly belonging to the Popes! The other event has taken place in Florence, where a committee of eminent citizens has been formed to erect a statue to Pietro Carnesecchi, one of the Reformers of the sixteenth century, who was of a noble historic family in the town, and burned by the Inquisition!

Particulars are given of the progress of evangelistic work in various centres of Italy. Pastor Pietro Mariani, of Bari, points out, and of course without regret, that Evangelicals live under a fierce public light at the present time. If a member of the church commits the slightest fault, some one is sure to address him, with a look of surprise, in such terms as these: "How is this? You an Evangelical, and act like this?" Describing a case of conversion, the pastor says: "A young workman, very perverse, on being converted, remembered having stolen from his master. He went to him to confess his fault, giving back the stolen object in Jesus' name. The master was affected to tears by this act, and not only pardoned him, but said:

'YOUR SAVIOUR SHALL BE MINE TOO.'

And he is now a zealous member of the congregation. In general each member of the church is a Christian worker, labouring in his own special sphere, holding family gatherings from house to house."

One of the converts at Florence is Pietro Petroni, a young priest of Lucca, who was attending the Florentine University with a view to a professorship. In a statement of his experiences, Signor Petroni says:—"A Bible, given me by a poor sick man, imparted the first impulse towards conversion. In Buggiano, near Pescia, this young man was seriously ill. He wished to be confessed by me, the Lent preacher, and from a scruple of conscience, desired to get rid of the Bible, as a prohibited book, and to give it to me. I took it, and disdainfully threw it among a lot of other books which I never read. In tidying up my study, and seeking for one or another book, this Bible somehow always came into my hand. I was struck by this circumstance, but it did not then weigh upon my mind. Having to go on a journey, and wishing, among other serviceable books, to take the four Gospels translated by Martini, I took instead, and without noticing it, this Bible translated by Diodati. It was in this way I began to read it. The first words which I read were these: 'There is one Mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus.' I thereupon ceased to recite the Roman Breviary. The worship of Mary was still in my heart, though I did not find 'Mother of God' in the Bible. Other words which comforted me were: 'Being justified by faith, we have peace with God.' This was like manna to my heart, agitated by remorse for sin.

"In reading this Bible, I experienced joy, but did not as yet reflect deeply. A sermon I heard in the Evangelical Italian Church touched me, as also the simplicity of the service and the sweet melody of the hymns. I thought myself already converted. In the absence of Cav. Fera, on a visit to the churches, I went to Signor Lenzi, who gave me a book on the Virgin Mary. Precisely here, in the worship of Mary, lay the difficulty in the way of my conversion. I would willingly have found Mariolatry in the Bible. So I read the book eagerly and with profound sadness, and fell asleep. In my dreams, I saw nothing but demons.

I SEEMED LIKE ONE POSSESSED.

Hell appeared to be before me if I abandoned Mary. Reflection and further knowledge of the Bible helped me to overcome this difficulty, but the help of God was still wanting. I proposed always to read the Bible, and to go and hear the Gospel, but in plain clothes and by night, like Nicodemus. My heart was not yet changed! What brought spiritual life into my soul was the reading of the Psalms, and I was forced out of Babylon by the words of Christ: 'Come unto Me!' 'Abide in Me!'

"Little by little, through praying to Christ, there sprang up a repugnance to pray to Mary. Meditating on the love of Christ, I felt the love of Mary diminish. At last I resolved, under the compulsion of the words, 'Come out of her, and be not partaker of her sins,' and became convinced that I could no longer remain a Papist. Out I came, and laid aside my church robes, and found occupation with good Christian people. With them I witnessed a good confession, but, wishful to enter the Christian ministry, I asked and obtained the favour of joining the Evangelical Italian Church, where first my heart had opened to Gospel truth. My mother left me, but before doing so, wished to sew ever so many pictures of Mary to my various articles of dress, and place them above the beds of the house. She never ceases to implore me to return to the bosom of the Romish Church, and urges as a principal means, that I wear a medal of Mary around my neck. I hope the Lord who has converted me, will enable me to overcome every obstacle and to convert my dear mother."

As to the work in Rome, Pastor Conti says: "As on the one hand Popery dazzles with its ceremonies and the pomp of its external magnificence, on the other hand, without any mask, it here shows all its ambitious designs, all its greediness of dominion and of riches, and, together with the evil doings of its clergy and prelates, manifests its reactionary spirit, and the materialism of its worship and its traffic of religious things. All this in the popular mind has produced a disgust of religion, and incredulity and indifference. Another fatal consequence of the system is the general ignorance of everything pertaining to religion. If even the priests do not know anything of the Gospel and of the Bible, which most of them have not even read, it is natural that the people do not know anything of it, and therefore no difference is made in general between Christ and the Pope, his vicar, between the Gospel and the Syllabus, between the Word of God and the decrees of councils. Many leading thinkers, of whom some are members of Parliament, believe that the only remedy for the many rampant evils is the pure religion of Jesus Christ."

Pastor Silva's work at Savona has some very encouraging features. He writes:—"The work proceeds enthusiastically, and amid constant revival, and with the happiest success. Sometimes at my evangelistic services, the attendance has been so crowded that the stairs and the street under the windows of the hall have been thronged with people. It is a pity that in Italy it is not allowed to preach in the open air. A newly-converted young man, Signor Bongiascia, walks every Sunday 28 kilometres in order to come to the church, and he is very punctual. The father of a family, named Olivieri, with three children, was abandoned by his wife, because he became an evangelical. Several working people were dismissed by their employers because they frequented our meetings, and several shopkeepers lost customers for the same reason. Our landlord was excommunicated by the bishop because he rented us the hall. The Roman Catholic newspaper is against me and evangelisation, and spreads calumnies about the doctrines of the Protestants. The Liberal newspapers are favourable to our movement, one of them publishing my special lectures. In connection with the Roman Catholic Church of St. Francis, the parish priest organised last spring a society of women, under the name of the Anti-Silva Society. The members use every means in their power to prevent their husbands, sons, and fathers from going to the Evangelical Church."

The schools are valuable auxiliaries of the work, which is carried on in the face of determined opposition. Friends of Italian evangelisation should procure copies of the report from the hon. treasurer and foreign secretary, Rev. Dr. McDougall, Presbyterian Church, Florence.

The Evangelist.

"HE IS LIKE YOU."

"Pooh!" said J——; "it is always the same thing. You don't give one a chance. "Here's the Bible—I must swallow it just as it is, or go to the devil!"

He was talking to a new friend, who would not argue with him about certain matters mentioned in the Old Testament, simply because they were outside the point under consideration, J——'s personal right-living and safety.

"So far from advising you to swallow the Bible, whole or in pieces," was the quiet reply, "I should advise you not to touch it. The Bible is not for you, and you are not for the Bible. It is a plain case; let it alone."

"What?" exclaimed J——; "not read the Bible! You are the first religious person who has advised that. You want me to turn over a new leaf" (that was how he put it!) "and yet you say, 'Let the Bible alone.' What do you mean?"

"This. You go to the Bible simply to find props for your unfaith, and, seizing upon portions that are specially meant for those who have ears to hear and hearts touched to understand, you condemn the Book, and indulge in profanity."

"But if," said J——, "the Bible is what men claim it to be, it should meet my case, peculiar even though it be."

"How can that be? When you could only just read, do you think you would have understood, even if you had the desire to do so, a treatise on diseases and their cure?"

"Certainly not; but what is your point?"

"This. You might be reading the treatise, and coming to a chapter on a certain disease and its treatment, you would neither understand, nor desire to understand, the thoughts that were on the page, and yet you might be suffering at the time from the very disease of which the article treated."

"It is a very weak argument; I don't like it, either," said J——, beginning to chafe.

"I cannot argue on the subject," said his friend; "no argument is possible in the matter. My point is this—you go to a certain book with a set of ready-made prejudices, a stock of adverse criticism, and a parcel of cut-and-dried hostile definitions, with no sense of need in yourself; and then you proceed to argue, from your point of view, that the Bible is a book of blunders; that you always thought so; that now you have proved it, and you will have none of it. Don't you see I can have no argument that will meet the case? I can only say, do not trouble to read the Book now. Wait till you want to know."

"But that is very unsatisfactory, I think," said J——.

"It may be, I cannot help that," was the reply. "It can hardly be more unsatisfactory than your way, can it?"

J—— was piqued. He disliked this indifference to his criticisms—he had hoped to shock and surprise, at least; in some circles he shone as the unanswerable critic. He had a loud voice, and his assertions were sweeping. But he never gave, and was seldom asked for, his authority for them.

"You are not using your opportunity," he said now. "I thought you good people liked to get conversions."

"To what?" was the question.

"Well, the usual thing, I suppose; you ought to know."

"No, I do not know, for there are many kinds of conversion. Some are converted to hymn-singing; others to some special form of worship; yet others to a particular sect; many even to a certain preacher; others to mere church-going."

"Oh, I think I begin to see light," said J——. "You do not, then, claim everybody who goes to church?"

"The only man whom God can claim is the man who claims God," was the reply. "There is no question of anything else. And the only man who can claim God is the man who desires, more than life, to live after God's own heart, and to do God's will."

"Well, that man must believe in the Bible?"

"He believes God first; God in his soul; God in his life, God in all. It is not difficult, then, to believe God's Word."

When J—— got home that night he found a letter for himself on the table. He tore it open—he loved her letters—it was from his promised wife.

He read with a smile until he came to these words: "You are so much cleverer than I, and you read so much, that I notice all you say. I am now beginning to read So-and-so's book, 'On the Theology of the Moment.' He is like you, he disputes the truth of the Bible."

J——'s hand shook, and he laid down the letter. The words, "He is like you," burned themselves into his brain. He did not wish for such identity. Fool, that he called himself, to have breathed a word of his scepticism to the woman who was to be his wife. He hated a woman, and a young one, too, who could discuss such a thing as religion, or her own soul, or modern doubts, in cold blood. Besides, he did not know who he was to dispute the truth of the Bible! How bold the words looked! How little they seemed to touch all he had begun to feel since receiving this letter! He wrote off to his friend, and asked, among other things:

"What shall I say to E—— to undo my folly?"

"Do not think or talk about the Bible at all. Do not let the question of its veracity or divine origin once come up between you. Why should you? But, go to God, open your heart to Him, and ask Him for help, and light, and love—if you feel you need them."

That was all the reply J—— received, but after having been with his wife-to-be, and noting the glib manner in which she handled the question, using his own tone in argument, he felt there was a great need in himself and in her, for conclusive teaching and guidance.

He did not know how to pray, but he breathed out his soul for help. After that came the answer, teaching him something of his insignificance, much of his folly and unworthiness. Then he asked that he might be less unworthy, more deserving God's care. The answer to this came in added humiliation, a desire to know how he might walk so that he could please God a little (God being still to him a kind of Moloch, who must he propitiated).

Then he went to the pages where the life and death of Christ are outlined; he read how He sought in all things to do the will of the Father, Himself being the expression of that will. After this J—— saw himself an alien from God, and then he knew, for the first time, the meaning of needing God, and of coming to Him for everything that should make a Christ-man of him here and hereafter. And E—— saw Christ living in her lover, and she, too, had to "draw nigh to God" to find the beautiful reality of God drawing nigh to her.

"How different it is from all I dreamed," wrote J——. "I see now why you would not and could not argue with me, why you sent me to God Himself instead of to the Bible. You knew I should never be ready to read the one unless I had learned, by his teaching, to know Himself. Many, I find, are awakened by some truth in Scripture; I was like Lydia, it needed God's own hand to open my heart. And I always tell E—— that the first written words that drew, or sent me God-wards, were hers, when she compared me with a man well known for his unfaith, in the words, "He is like you."

STAY WITH ME, SAVIOUR.

Stay with me, Saviour, every step I go,
'Mid blinding tears of sorrow's deepest woe;
When for my weary feet no rest I see,
And strength is failing—Saviour, stay with me.

Stay with me, Saviour, let me ever feel
Thy touch of love a broken heart can heal;
When from my clinging grasp my loved ones flee,
O, Mourner's Friend, dear Saviour, stay with me.

Stay with me, Saviour, when bright hopes decay,
And soul-sprung flowerets droop and fade away;
When on their tear-damp stems no buds shall be,
And Faith is dim—my Saviour, stay with me.

Stay with me, Saviour, when on Jordan's brink
I trembling stand, and from its waters shrink;
May rays divine, across Death's troubled sea,
Light up the darkness—Saviour, stay with me.

Stay with me, Saviour, till the blissful morn
Of Immortality shall on me dawn;
Till 'mid Heaven's glory all earth's shadows flee,
At Home for ever—I shall be with Thee!

ENGLISH WOMEN IN PARIS.

It was fitting that the company gathered at the Mansion House last week to celebrate the anniversary of the Homes for Young English Women in Paris was mostly composed of ladies. The work of the Homes is among young women, and it is in every way desirable that their sisters at home should take a practical interest in such a greatly-needed and greatly-blessed effort.

The Chief Magistrate of the City presided, and briefly introduced the esteemed founder, Mrs. Lewis, who gave a résumé of the rise and progress of the work. In her own womanly and sympathetic way she described the position of our lonely young countrywomen in the Gay City. They are mostly daughters of professional men, who are compelled by circumstances to earn their own livelihood. Thanks be to God, no English girl need now go to Paris without being assured of a friendly welcome at the Home in Avenue Wagram, and a helping hand in her pursuits as well as comfort and support in sickness. Mrs. Lewis said that during the past twenty-one years some 9000 young women had passed through the Institutions, and most of these have been practically helped. The work of the Y.W.C.A. in the Rue St. Honoré was referred to. It is specially for shop assistants and apprentices. It was somewhat startling to hear from Mrs. Lewis that no salary is given to the apprentices, and no provision is made for their housing after the work of the day. The house in the Rue St. Honoré is therefore a place of refuge for these young people, where they can sleep and have their meals on Sunday; and its operations are invaluable. Then there is the Home for Governesses and Artists, Washington House, which has done splendid work. An American gentleman, Dr. Evans, has kindly taken an interest in this part of the work, and is purposing to devote himself to its interests. The work of the other Homes will in this way be relieved, and Washington House will be utilised in giving greater accommodation to those working in shops.

Another deeply interesting chapter in the story told by Mrs. Lewis was that relating to the children of English mothers in Paris who were in a position of need. M. Galignani gave an orphanage and £300 annually towards its support, but this annual gift has now lapsed, and there is not a penny of endowment for the orphanage, which costs £1000 a year. But the need of it is so great that the thought of curtailment cannot be entertained. A number of the children have been adopted. Very touching facts as to these little people without natural guardians or protectors were related. Mrs. Lewis made an earnest appeal for special help at this time to wipe off a debt of £2500 incurred during the last two years, when she has been absent a good deal and unable to gather funds. All the property of the Homes belongs in perpetuity to the English people, and the responsibility lies on them to sustain a work which means salvation to many a friendless girl in a strange and alluring city, and life to many an orphaned deserted child. Nothing could exceed the earnestness of Mrs. Lewis's plea for the Institutions she has fostered and laboured for these past twenty-one years.

Mr. Wm. Fowler very warmly advocated the work of the Institutions, which he had visited from time to time, and which ought to be generously supported. Mr. Payne, hon. sec. to the directorate of the Homes, seconded Mr. Fowler's appeal, and urged that the deficit should be wiped off as a birthday present to the Institutions. They are, to a considerable extent, self-supporting, and in furthering the work we are helping those who are seeking, as far as possible, to help themselves. Another warm advocate of the work was found in Rev. Mr. Kingston, who could also speak from personal knowledge of the work, and could testify as to its exceeding value. The work appeals to our chivalry as men, to our patriotism as Britons, and to our compassion as we think of the poor children. The work is all the more needed, that it is carried on in a frivolous, godless city like Paris.

The collection was £112. The Lord Mayor, in reply to a vote of thanks, said he wished it had been £1012.

ASCOT RACES.—Prayer is desired for mission work at Ascot Races. Volunteers have been secured at Guildford Convention. Appropriate tracts would be acceptable, addressed to Mr. A. E. Sidford, Bracknell, Berks.

MELBOURNE MEMORANDA.

[From our Own Correspondent.]

The Central Mission of the Wesleyan Church has, for a considerable time past, been carrying on a series of pleasant Sunday afternoon services in Wesley Church, Melbourne. Rev. A. R. Edgar is the leader of the movement. He is a large-hearted, broad-minded, powerfully-built man, with a strong sonorous voice, who deviseth liberal things for the people. He has large audiences at his forenoon and evening regular services, and well-filled pews in the afternoons. Some popular subject—one might say a humanitarian topic—is generally dealt with by some specialist; and women as well as men occasionally occupy the platform. Hymns are sung that are generally well taken up by the audiences, and sacred pieces are rendered by singers who are drawn from all denominations, and who are glad to give their services in such a cause.

For some time past a missioner has been set apart for special work in the Presbyterian Church of Victoria. Rev. John McNeil is constantly engaged holding services throughout the colony, and occasionally visits one of the other colonies as well. He has recently been working in the north-eastern district of Victoria. Lately I visited a pretty diggings township, Chiltern, in that part of the colony, and heard a grand account of the mission there. The results were cause for great thankfulness and praise. From comparative indifference on the part of many there has taken place a most decided seeking after the truth, and many have made a good confession for Christ. As Rev. Mr. Caldwell, the minister, told me he was thoroughly in sympathy with the missioner, it can readily be understood how successful the work was in this neighbourhood. He was rejoiced at the "refreshing" that had taken place, and said the thank-offerings of the people testified to the fact that their hearts were thoroughly touched.

We hear that the other John McNeill is in South Africa, and may be expected here in a short time. We shall probably see the two namesakes working together.

Another Presbyterian minister has also been conducting special services for his brother ministers. Rev. C. H. Irwin, of Carlton, spent a week at Warrnambool about a couple of months since, holding meetings for Rev. Gray Dixon. The meetings were well attended, and much good work was accomplished. In the beginning of this month Mr. Irwin gave the same brotherly service to Rev. Thomas Nisbet at Hawthorn Presbyterian Church, with most gratifying results.

Ever since the Assembly meetings in November last the "intoxicating drink" question has been stirring the Presbyterian Church, and several letters have appeared in regard to this matter and the Communion wine question in the Presbyterian Monthly Messenger. These indicate the need there is for enlightenment. It seems strange that the colony should be so far behind the mother country in regard to general information on this subject, notwithstanding all the efforts of the temperance organisations in our midst. One fact that appears in the advertisement columns of The Christian, re the thousands of congregations in Great Britain using the unintoxicating wine at the Lord's Supper, appears to be altogether unknown or ignored. As in London, years ago, some Presbyterian abstainers used to observe the Communion among the Baptists who had the unintoxicating wine, and several ultimately joined the Baptist body, so here the same thing is sometimes done, while others pass the cup but take the bread at the Presbyterian service.

The teaching about the Kingdom of God and the return of our Lord continues to be picked up by one and another here and there. The Seventh Day Adventists, the Baptists, the Brethren, and several other bodies hold these doctrines, and teach them more or less; while there are also a few of the preachers among the Congregationalists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and Wesleyans who understand the Scriptures in regard to these points and proclaim the glorious Gospel. Many are impressed with the belief that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Rev. Mr. Hussey, of Adelaide, paid Melbourne a visit recently, and delivered some interesting addresses on these subjects. One of his closing addresses was delivered in the hall of the Hawthorn Baptist Church, where, besides a number of the ordinary congregation, were representatives from other denominations in the neighbourhood.

During these times of depression throughout the colonies, a number of creameries and butter factories have been started, and in many cases have proved the salvation of the farmers. It is interesting to know that several of these have been worked on Sabbath-keeping lines, and have proved most satisfactorily that even this industry can be worked, in a hot country, without Sabbath labour.

In New South Wales a leading barrister, Mr. Field, has been for some years past engaged in open-air preaching in Sydney. In fact, he has been sued for obstructing traffic. However, he has carried on his work, and set a grand example to the Church at large. He was recently in Albury (a N.S.W. border town, close to Victoria), engaged in some criminal cases, and took the opportunity of visiting the Endeavour Society held in the town. He also engaged the Temperance Hall for a night, and held a special service. Though quite an impromptu affair, it was very well attended. The local Protestant ministers were present. A large number of singers filled the platform, and assisted in rendering the service a good success. The address by Mr. Field was a good Gospel exposition, and was much appreciated by the audience, among whom were seen Jews and Roman Catholics, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, and others.

PLAGUE SPOTS OF LONDON.

By Chas. Cook.

II.—PICCADILLY BY NIGHT.

Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of the daughter of my people.—Jeremiah ix. 1.

Can anything further be done as a witness for God, or as a help to our fellow men and women in the above neighbourhood? Two or more sisters from the Salvation Army are nightly at work here.

A worldly acquaintance said to me, "There is nothing on the Continent half so bad; so gross and glaring is the immorality nightly to be witnessed." It is computed that there are a thousand fallen women to be found nightly between Leicester-square and Bond-street. Things are tolerably quiet till about 11.15, when the neighbouring music-halls let loose hundreds of profligates of either sex.

The restaurants of the neighbourhood are then crowded till closing time; while many of the fallen men and women promenade Piccadilly and Waterloo-place till as late or early as 3 a.m., at times making night hideous with the noise and blasphemy.

A few weeks ago I was asked by a medical man to visit Piccadilly with him, and setting forth on our tour of observation, we soon found that things were as bad as they had been represented.

It is an open secret that there are several well-known restaurants which, whilst open ostensibly for purposes of refreshment, are practically places where "men about town" may keep or make assignations.

One or two evening papers have spoken out plainly, and have asked why the police do not report on the matter; certainly what takes place nightly in a certain restaurant should at once be known to the Chief of Police in order that it may be stopped.

My friend had prepared me for what I could not have believed had I not witnessed it. We entered a large supper-room and called for some light refreshment. There were about thirty women present, either alone or in couples; by 11.30 not a seat was vacant, as men and women poured in from the closed music-halls. When I say that many were in full evening dress, and that if a gentleman came in alone, or with a male friend, immediately there seated themselves at the table one or two women, the reader will understand the tendency of the situation.

It is said no female may come in alone, but this is not true; two seated themselves at the table where we were, seeking to enter into conversation with us.

A young fellow scarcely eighteen came in and sat down, called a waiter, and gave him an order. A handsome woman, though old enough to be his mother, magnificently attired in white satin, at once sat down opposite to him, and sought to attract him by many artifices.

I wondered who his mother might be? Perhaps some Christian woman who would have thanked us for taking "her boy" from the clutches of this "strange woman," but then we should have been arrested for "disorderly conduct." My medical friend assured me that many of these women had been under his care in hospitals, and he had known them to be walking the streets of Piccadilly a few days after their discharge. One could but sympathise with and pray for these poor fallen sisters, but I confess I felt more pity for the many very young men who were being lured to their destruction.

"For she hath cast down many wounded; yea, many strong men have been slain by her. Her house is the way to hell going down to the chambers of death."—Prov. vii. 26-27.

My friend assured me that these women pass off the scene after three or four years. What became of them he could not say, but they are not seen in the vicinity of Piccadilly. No one would deny to this class and their supporters the right to entertainment in a public restaurant, yet these places should not be used to attract the young and the unwary; or even as a rendezvous for men of the baser sort. At present this is what is being done; and surely it is the province of the authorities to see to it. If, as has been asserted, the police are in many cases bribed, then it is for the heads of the force to see to it. If they are ignorant of these matters, then are they almost as culpable for their negligence. Christian men look at the matter from a higher plane. It is first an offence and an iniquity against God, and secondly a national disgrace.

Who can measure the influence for evil of these thousand women congregated within a radius of half a mile? From this centre immorality spreads like a plague, till many a quiet country home has experienced a moral blight—and even worse—and physical and moral wrecks have become new centres of contamination.

The music-hall of the day is said to be quite different from what it was. Now, we are told, it is refined and moral in the extreme, that no one need mind taking his wife or sister with him. There may be such a music-hall in London, but it certainly is not in the neighbourhood of Leicester-square. There are three notorious music-halls near here, and I have always understood they were largely frequented by "women of the city" for their own particular purpose.

That I might speak from personal knowledge, I recently visited one of these places, accompanied by the editor of this paper. The building was crowded; the two promenades, the charge for which is 3s. and 5s. respectively, were also full, and the majority of the women were evidently of the class mentioned above, elegantly attired, many of them prepossessing in appearance, and pursuing their avocation with an ardour worthy of a holier cause.

These places are not only plague spots in our city, and a disgrace to our country, but they are an abomination to our God; and as such we bear witness against them, though with diffidence, with humility, and with godly fear. Let any common-sense man spend an evening in Piccadilly, and he will have no need to read the latest literary production to be convinced of "the descent of man"—at least, morally and spiritually.

THE STEPNEY CRECHE.

On behalf of Mrs. Hilton's Créche and branches at Ratcliff a bazaar was held on June 12 to 14 at Morley Hall, South Hackney. Mrs. Hilton was happily able to be present the whole of the time, and to take active part in all the arrangements. Many kind friends had helped to supply the articles gathered for sale.

The Countess Aldenburg Bentinck intended to open the bazaar, but was prevented, and kindly asked her friend Lady Howard de Walden to take her place. After singing by the Home children, and prayer, Lady Howard de Walden opened the bazaar. On the second day Lord Russell of Killowen and Lady Russell performed the like ceremony.

We trust our readers who have long taken a practical interest in Mrs. Hilton's work, especially those who have not had the opportunity of contributing articles to the sale, will have her in remembrance at this time.

VOLUNTARY MISSION WORK.

Sir,—Referring to your paragraph in The Christian of June 14, concerning mission expenses, and inquiring is there no society or mission where the secretary and officials are unpaid and office rent nil? allow me to name the Foreign Evangelisation Society for giving help to continental workers. It meets in committee in a private house monthly, and has a secretary and financial secretary, but not a penny is expended for salaries, office rent, or even postage.—Yours faithfully, Don. Matheson.

THE REVIVAL OF 1859.

THANKSGIVING IN GLASGOW.

ON Monday, at noon, the large hall of the Christian Institute, Glasgow, was well filled by an audience who were evidently deeply interested in the Lord's work. Most of the directors of the Evangelistic Association and some well-known ministers were on the platform, and Dr. ELDER CUMMING was in the chair. After several hymns had been sung with deep feeling, and a few had engaged in prayer with moving earnestness, the chairman explained the object of the meeting, which was this—to recall with gratitude to God the times of refreshing which had been vouchsafed to them. Personally, he had seen the work in Ireland in 1869, but it was in 1874, when Mr. Moody was here, that he was led to throw himself heart and soul into revival movements.

THE SPEECH OF THE DAY

was that of Dr. HOOD WILSON, of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh. He is now well up in years, but still speaks with marvellous animation. He, too, was in Ulster during the great revival, and watched with deepening interest the workings of God's Spirit there. He was called home to Edinburgh, because of the revival breaking out in an india rubber works near his church, where hundreds of girls were meeting for prayer, and where many conversions were taking place. The meeting was begun by "the best girl" in the establishment, a respectable, churchgoing, though an unconverted girl. He was soon in the thick of a great movement, which shook Edinburgh to its centre. He paid frequent visits to the Wynd Church, Glasgow, where Rev. Robert McColl, and his powerful coadjutor, Robert Cunningham, "the Briggate Flesher," were so blessed in the conversion of souls. A fortnight he spent in the village of Ferryden, opposite Montrose, in Forfarshire, which was swept by the revival wave, until almost every adult in it was brought to Christ. The two books the fishermen took to sea with them for reading were the Bible and Bonar's "Life of McCheyne." He often saw one woman who had been a notorious drunkard before her conversion, and who told him that after that, whenever the drink crave came upon her, she took to bed and remained there until she had prayed it away. Then she got up and went about her usual duties. In the fishing villages on the coast of Banffshire, great wonders were done, and he knew the men who, when they came to be "out-and-out" for Christ, devoted half a night's fishing to the work of foreign missions. The blessings of the revival of 1874, he said, were very much confined to those who had been brought up in Christian homes, Mr. Moody reaping what others had sowed. Mr. Wilson read extracts from the report of the work of grace at Cockenzie, a fishing village near Edinburgh, in March of this year, and pointed out how much they resembled the accounts given regarding the previous great revival. About 100 had professed conversion in that village alone, which had now quite a changed appearance.

Rev. J. MORGAN, of Fountainbridge, Edinburgh, who followed, went to the very beginning of the Great Revival of 1869, and told the story of the Fulton-street prayer meeting in New York. He traced the wonderful history of the Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, and closed by urging all present to pray for another great revival which, he said, "must come down from above, and cannot be worked up."

Mr. MCKEITH, Glasgow, whose long and earnest labours among the young have made his name a household word in the West of Scotland, told how spiritual prejudices had been swept from his mind as he sat in the Wynd Church beside a cultured lady from the West-end, and saw her melted into tears and true penitence as "the Briggate Flesher" told in simple language the story of his conversion.

Rev. J. RIDDELL, of the Wynd Church, brought up to mind the fact that the 1869 revival began in Scotland in a rope-walk at Port Glasgow; Mr. TOBB, missionary, gave from memory one of the appeals at the close of an address by "the Briggate Flesher," which in its pathos was touchingly powerful. Rev. J. B. STUBROCK, of Paisley, referred to the simple preaching of Mr. Reginald Radcliffe in Aberdeen, which so moved the University students and led to the formation of a large prayer-meeting among them, from which had gone forth many ministers and missionaries; and to Mr. Moody's first visit to Paisley, which had been the beginning of all the evangelistic activity which now characterised the town.

Lord OVERTOUN, who occupied the chair during the second hour, wound up the Conference by a few bright reminiscences of the times of refreshing through which he had passed, and some earnest counsels to all present to wait more believingly on God for similar seasons of Pentecostal power. The two hours of this meeting went past all too quickly, and many were heard as they left expressing the wish that another thanksgiving meeting would soon come round.

In many places on land and sea God had men ready for the crisis, and none more so than the late Admiral O——, who, in 1859 and 1860, when captain of H.M.S. P——, was chief of the little squadron surveying the Hebrides. The captain supplied the crew with papers, such as The Revival, and little hymn-books. Every morning and evening we had a religious service, conducted by the captain; and on Sunday afternoon the younger men attended a Bible-class in the chart-room. It was at this class we received instruction from as rich a spiritual teacher as ever paced the deck of a ship. These exercises were but the prelude to a great awakening, affecting the Navy, and reaching farther.

On October 3, 1860, the ship was caught in a hurricane beside the lonely and rocky island of St. Hilda. There were infidels on board—loud-boasting men, who used to say, "We shall never believe there is a Supreme Being unless we see and touch Him." In the midst of the mighty tumult of the raging element, with the ship frequently on her beam-ends, and all hands crying piteously to God for mercy, D—— W——, the leading infidel, went to the quarter-deck to see if the captain was also afraid; and seeing the brave Christian commander calmly standing, issuing orders, and with upturned face at intervals in prayer to Him who holds the waters in the hollow of his hand, D—— W—— was convinced of his error. Going forward, he said, "Lads, I believe now there is a God; the captain is not afraid." D—— W—— became a believer in one living and true God, and it was a triumph of grace to see him afterwards take part in the religious services.

These meetings originated by one of the sailors coming to the writer of this narrative to inquire if a nightly prayer meeting were commenced on board would the Holy Spirit come in power, as they so frequently read about in the pages of The Revival. We assured him that God had promised to be with "two or three met together in his name." And never were these words verified more than in the case of the five men who met for prayer in H.M.S. P——. For six months these prayer-meetings continued, and almost every man in the ship's company was brought under the saving power of the Gospel of Christ, and yet the original five were unconverted men seeking light from on high.

The ship was paid off, and for over thirty years those who were privileged to do duty in such a "floating heaven" (as the ship was called by some) had not met. During a mission tour in 1893, we met a yacht captain in a Scotch port who had been in the P——, and he evidenced a saving change, and seemed a man of the higher Christian life, keeping himself unspotted from the world. An old officer of the P——, now occupying an honourable and useful position in an English port, invited me to his place to speak about old times in the P——, and another, Captain S——, R.N., who served his country well, and is still in active service, asked to meet in London. Both officers spoke in bright hopefulness of the religious life in their old ship, and admiration of their old chief, whose example they were privileged to follow. In the early part of this year another Christian officer, shipmate of Captain S——, and friend of the Admiral, came to Naples, and during his stay the services were a special time of refreshing.

TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON.—A Foreign Missionary Society has been formed among the students of the above college, with the object of establishing a mission station and college in Africa, for the purpose of training converted natives, educationally and mechanically, for missionary work among their own people. Information as to the most healthy district suitable for this work, or any other suggestions, would be thankfully received by the Secretary, Foreign Missionary Society, The College, Dunoon, N.B.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

ON Monday afternoon the annual meeting of this valuable Mission was held in the Mansion House.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN made an opening statement as to the work:—During the past eighteen years we have assisted 60,676 discharged prisoners to make a fresh start in life. Instances have not been few in which the men and women have thanked Mr. Wheatley or his workers for the way in which they have been helped. No effort is spared to convince them that the help they need most of all is the help of Him who alone is able to keep them from falling. An average of some 6000 are now being assisted by us annually on their release. Moreover, we are specially concerned with the welfare of wives and children of men undergoing imprisonment. Poverty in its worst form stares them in the face, as they are left entirely unprovided for through the imprisonment of the bread-winner. So convinced are we of the necessity of helping these poor women and children, that we have now an increased number of female visitors constantly engaged in visiting them in their homes. They ascertain how these wives and children can best be assisted, and relief is then given accordingly. Further, during the past year we have received 511 juvenile offenders into our four boys' homes. It will be seen that we are fully alive to the fact that the best way to prevent crime and the increase of the criminal classes is to save the boys. A year ago our liabilities were heavy, and there was a sum of £1000 due to Mr. Wheatley, which he had advanced from his own pocket to save the work from coming to a standstill. Owing to the efforts made by some gentlemen, we reduced the deficit by the close of the year to £500.

Mr. ALDERMAN and SHERIFF DIMSDALE, who presided, dwelt on the value of the Institution as relieving suffering wives and children, as saving boys likely to develop into criminals, and as aiding men who have done wrong to retrieve character and position.

Mr. W. WHEATLEY described the modus operandi of the Mission in getting hold at the prison gate of men and boys on their discharge, and before they are assailed by fresh temptation. After touching on the sufferings of the families, Mr. Wheatley expressed the hope he would yet be able to open a Home for the little ones. The Mission is at present "working scantily," i.e., it is straitened in operation; much more might be done were larger funds provided. Last year 500 boys were admitted into the Homes, and 90 per cent. of these are doing well.

Mr. ALDERMAN and SHERIFF MOORE, in moving the first resolution, bore strong testimony to the genuine results of the Mission. Mr. T. A. DENNY, who seconded the resolution, made a warm and hearty plea for the Mission, and offered £50 if the balance of the £500 needed were made up.

Mr. MONTAGUE H. CRACKANTHORPE, Q.C., and Sir T. FOWELL BUXTON, moved and seconded a resolution to the effect that the Mission deserves the heartiest support on account of the proved usefulness of its operations.

The total received in cheques, cash, and promises at the meeting amounted to £220 5s. The £500 mentioned is, however, urgently needed, and, it is hoped, will be speedily secured.

UNITED MISSION, COVENTRY.

GOD'S people here are filled with praise because of the wondrous blessing which has been given during the past eight days through the labours of Mr. Henry Varley. The great need of this city has been felt for years, and for the past seven or eight months many of the Lord's people have specially prayed that some man of God might be sent into it to preach the Gospel, and to revive the hearts and lives of believers. Each evening last week the Corn Exchange has been well filled, great power accompanying each address, and many each evening have stood up to confess their faith in Christ. The afternoon Bible readings have been well attended, and much owned of the Lord in blessing. One evening when Mr. Varley gave his lecture to men only, the Corn Exchange was packed, some 2000 crowding the building, and never will the meeting fade from the memory of hundreds. In the evening many were turned away unable to get in, but an overflow meeting was arranged at Christ Church, close by, which was addressed by Rev. H. Stanley Mercer. The Mission closes on Thursday (21st), after which Mr. Varley goes to Plymouth to conduct a mission there.

A MISSION TO THE SOUDAN.

The Soudan, or Great Desert of Africa, is an unevangelised region towards which many eyes have been turned during recent years; and at last it seems likely that ambassadors of the Cross will soon reach Lake Tchad, and proclaim the Gospel to the dense population upon its shores. Some months ago three young men left England as the pioneers of the Soudan Interior Mission, intending to enter Africa from the West Coast. Entrusting themselves implicitly to God, they landed at Lagos, and after a short stay two of them started for the interior. The names of these young men are—Walter Gowans, Rowland Bingham, and Thomas Kent.

These earnest youths, all of whom have travelled somewhat, two of them having resided in Canada, spent a period of preparation for their Gospel work in the home of Mr. J. C. Hindle, Bethel Naioth, Tithebarn-road, Southport; and many friends in England have taken an interest in their bold enterprise. At Lagos they were received with much kindness by C.M.S. and W.M.S. missionaries, but they had soon to taste the African fever. One after the other they were laid low; Mr. Bingham was brought to death's door, and as he made but slow recovery, was left in charge of friends, while the others pressed forward into the interior. Several others are expected to leave England in September to reinforce the mission.

It is impossible not to admire the faith of these young men. One of them writes: "At Lagos it is said to be impossible to get to the interior so far as we intend to go, especially with the means we have; but we are still confident of success. We believe that God is going to do impossible things; for all things are possible with God, and all things are possible to him that believeth."

MISS MACPHERSON'S FAREWELL.

A lively and interesting scene presented itself last Thursday morning at Euston, when travellers, hurrying to and fro, intent on luggage and other prosaic cares, must have been puzzled to observe one of the waiting-rooms filled with children—the little girls in warm cloaks and red hoods, the boys in jerseys and mufflers—all in charge of a number of ladies evidently well accustomed to such responsibilities. The occasion was the setting forth of the sixty-eighth party of juvenile emigrants from the Home of Industry—the second for the present year.

Miss Macpherson, who has for some time been feeling much the need of rest and change, goes at the head of the party, accompanied by Mr. Joseph Merry. The children number about seventy, chiefly little ones to be adopted; but quite a number are fine sturdy lads and big useful girls, who will be likely speedily to make their way on the other side. A large number of loving friends were present to see the party off, and commend our sister very warmly to God in prayer.

Here are a few illustrative cases showing the circumstances from which these little ones have been saved:— Ada, aged seven, is a bright little girl, whose mother died two years ago, and the father a few months since. She is the grandchild of one of our former old widows. Has a married sister, very poor, and two aunts, with a lot of children, struggling in extreme poverty. Has a brother already doing well in Canada.

Elizabeth, aged 10. Her father is dead; her mother is in poor health; the child very delicate. Through the early part of winter there was not much hope, apparently, of emigration, but now she is growing strong and hearty, and bright. This case shows the value of training. She was very disobedient, but is now so different—giving pleasure and repaying the care taken of her.

Edith and her little brother (Frank, another brother, went out with the first party this year). Father died only about three months ago. A delicate young mother, left with five—a small baby and another little one of three years. Very superior family. Sad indeed if they had gone to the workhouse.

Rose, and brother and sister, eleven, six, and nine, whose mother died lately. Father with no work, home all gone, nothing but workhouse before them.

Rose and Florrie, aged eight and nine. Mother dead; father in wretched health, quite unfit for work even if he could get it. Turned into the street and dreading the contamination of a lodging-house; children nearly starving. Alice, aged six, is an orphan; two elder sisters getting on nicely in Canada.

We feel sure that many will follow Miss Macpherson and her party with constant prayer; while the workers "holding the fort" in Bethnal Green will not be forgotten. Mr. James Merry is taking charge of the work.

THE BLIND IN TURKEY.

Attention has from time to time been called to the neglected condition of the blind in Turkey. They are very numerous, and though willing to work they are driven to beggary, because no one is disposed to organise employment for them. There are many handicrafts at which they might work, but it is essential that someone should aid and direct them.

At a meeting of representative gentlemen in Constantinople last month, a school for the blind, to be conducted on Christian principles, and to impart technical instruction to its attendants, was held to be a pressing need, and Mr. Charles W. Riggs, M.A., son of the well-known missionary of the American Board, was indicated as a proper person to undertake the work. Mr. Riggs has for thirteen years been a professor in the Central Turkey College at Aintab, and is himself blind. He is on a brief visit to England, preparing a primer in Braille type, in the Turkish language, and making known his plans, and proposes shortly to visit the United States to lay his scheme before friends there. A good beginning can be made with an income of £300 or £400 a year; and it is hoped in due course to draw some help from the people of Turkey.

One reason why efforts to educate and help the blind of Turkey should be made without delay is, that at present the scheme is not likely to be opposed by the Government, while it is impossible to say how long this favourable attitude will continue. Communications to Mr. Riggs should be addressed to the care of Mr. L. Shadwell, editor of Progress (a periodical for the blind), 30, St. Charles-square, London, W.

BRIGANDAGE IN ALBANIA.

From time to time the attention of the English people is called to the lawless condition of some parts of Southern Europe. No more vivid picture of the actual state of things has been given for a long time than is to be found in the journal of M. Kyrias, formerly a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society in Albania. He was seized by brigands in the district of Ochrida, hurried to the recesses of the mountains, and there held for ransom till the sum of 700 lira was raised by his friends (it is interesting and instructive, by the way, to note that more than half of this sum vanished before it reached the brigands); the Government being either unable or unwilling to furnish the amount of ransom or to secure the release of the prisoner. M. Kyrias' captivity lasted throughout six months, during which time he was treated with every cruelty and indignity by the ignorant and superstitious Albanian boors who had charge of him. Constantly dragged from place to place for fear of discovery, M. Kyrias was overwrought and underfed, abused and beaten, until life became a burden. For forty days he was blindfolded, lest he might afterwards betray the hiding-places of his captors. With the same object his ears were stopped with wax. So terrible were his sufferings during these winter months, that his health and strength were permanently broken down.

Some time after his release he read a narrative of his capture and adventures before the magistrates at Monastir, and it has been recently published in full in the Sunday at Home. The record is a startling revelation of a condition of things which might have been thought impossible in Europe; but the brigands declare themselves to be no worse than the society around them. M. Kyrias died a few months since.

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.—The council of the Evangelical Alliance, as already announced, have received and accepted an invitation to hold the forty-eighth annual conference at Tunbridge Wells. The meetings will commence on September 25, and close on the 27th. Among those who have already promised to take part in the proceedings are the Dean of Canterbury, Archdeacon Richardson, Hon. and Rev. E. V. Bligh, General Sir Robert Phayre, Sir William Willis, Dr. E. E. Jenkins, Rev. Talbot Greaves, Rev. Professor Radford Thomson, Rev. Dr. Clemance, Rev. W. H. Barlow, Rev. J. G. Train, Rev. F. B. Meyer, Rev. Charles Spurgeon, and Rev. Horace Noel. The conference taking place this year so near to London, it is expected that there will be a large and interesting gathering in this attractive part of Kent.

Letters to the Editor.

SIR ARTHUR BLACKWOOD MEMORIAL.

Sir,—May I add to the letter of my friend, Rev. J. Tanner, which appears in your current number, an appeal to civil servants?

Even civil servants who differed from Sir Arthur Blackwood on many points could admire the courtesy, the simplicity, the gentleness, and the high tone and dignity which characterised him. What civil servant ever more deserved a memorial of respect and regard; and what memorial more suitable to Sir Arthur than this bed at the Mildmay Hospital?

But if such a memorial may well be supported by the Civil Service as a body, how much more should it excite the keen interest of those who were in full sympathy with Sir Arthur's spiritual life, and have again and again benefited by his writings or his words?

Civil servants in the Post Office have already recorded their estimate of Sir Arthur in the lifeboat they have promptly subscribed for. Let not other civil servants, to whom by his earlier years in the Treasury and his interest in the service generally he as much belonged, fall short in their tribute of esteem.

Those who would learn the secret of his life should obtain that admirable notice of his early days, "How he was won for Christ," published and sold at the Mildmay Conference Hall, N., price 6d., the profits of which are also devoted to the proposed hospital bed. A Civil Servant.

P.S.—Subscriptions from civil servants would, I am sure, be gladly received by Mr. Henry Hill, Dilston House, Upper Norwood, secretary of the Civil Service Prayer Union.

IMBECILES AND LUNATICS.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent Mr. John Fraser writes upon a subject which for almost twenty years has much interested me, and with your permission I should like (as one who knows) to tell him and your readers of the change which has taken place in the method of dealing with those who are under the cloud of a diseased mind. While it was quite true, in the early days of my experience, that in our asylums any religious influence and even the reading of the Bible was regarded as prejudicial to recovery, I can now give the assurance that this is no longer the case. It has been proved that the "ministry of healing" through the power of the Word meets the need alike of those who are afflicted in mind or body. Cases are known to me where after passing through a period of great darkness of soul, not only has the reading of the Scriptures been the means used to restore joy and peace, but such has been the blessing given, that the peace of God which passeth knowledge, unknown before the affliction, has been vouchsafed in answer to prayer.

We have many noble women who have consecrated their lives to the nursing of our sick and suffering in our hospitals and asylums. There is still a wide field open to those who possess the gifts of tact, patience, and sympathetic love, specially required by those who care for the diseased in mind. I hope Mr. Fraser's letter may be the means of calling them to this service. The labour is arduous, the disappointments many, but the needed strength and grace are promised: the fellowship of the Master here, and afterwards his "well done."—Yours faithfully, F. M. C.

Bishopstone House, Bedford.

FRETTING.

Dear Sir,—One of your readers thanks you for that first paragraph in "Notes and Comments" last week about "Fretting." It came like an arrow straight from Him whose word is profitable for reproof as well as teaching. I had been much tempted of late to give way to this through vexatious things about me. I see more clearly now the sinfulness of this in a child of God. There are three "Fret nots" in the same Psalm. Verse 5 was the favourite verse of Dr. Livingstone.

A Grateful Reader.

MRS. MARK GUY PEARSE writes from 11, Bedford-place, W.C., on behalf of the large mothers' meeting connected with Craven Chapel (West London Mission). The approach of summer makes the question, "Where to spend our day in the country," one of urgent moment. Last year a lady at Highgate entertained them at her residence, a gracious act which was both appreciated and rewarded. It is not everyone who can invite a hundred, but many could receive a dozen or a score, and more could supply the means if unable to entertain them themselves. From any such Mrs. Pearse would be grateful to hear.

OXFORD NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

THE annual meetings of Mansfield College were held last week, which included an address to the students by Dr. Barrett, chairman of the Congregational Union. The annual report recorded a year of quiet and steady progress. The Livingstone Society has been formed, consisting of University men, so as to create an interest in the work of foreign missions, and the Rural Mission Society has continued its labours among churches around Oxford. Great regret was expressed at the cessation of Dr. Dale's official connection with the College through ill-health.

The Rector of Church Handborough, near Oxford (Rev. W. Wynne Willson), is a well-known worker in Jewish missions, and is greatly valued by Evangelical Churchmen in Oxford. Last week a mission church was opened in his parish as a further help to a scattered population. This is but one of the fruits of his comparatively recent coming to the village.

Last Thursday a very successful sale of work was held in the grounds of Wycliffe Lodge, in aid of the Jerusalem Mission Hospital of the London Society. This effort represents a "forward movement" among friends of the Jews in Oxford, which will produce increasing fruits as time goes on.

Last Sunday's University preachers were the Bishops of London and Ripon, who had crowded audiences, consisting chiefly of many of the visitors just now in Oxford. It is hoped that the rumour of the appointment as vicar of this Church of an extreme High Churchman, will prove untrue.

Canon Christopher, the venerable rector of St. Aldate's, has celebrated his golden wedding. At a largely-attended meeting he was presented with a cheque for 250 guineas and a congratulatory address.

IRISH NOTES.

A METHODIST new church and schools are now in process of erection at Cork at a cost of nearly £6000.

The 125th Methodist Conference commenced its annual session in Dublin on Tuesday under the presidency of Rev. Hy. J. Pope, of Manchester, and has been very largely attended.

The rapid growth of the missionary spirit in Ireland may be inferred from the fact that while two years ago there were only four or five men preparing for work in the foreign field in connection with the Presbyterian Church, now there are twenty-eight,

The annual meeting of the Belfast Branch of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children was held on Wednesday week in the Council Chamber of the Town Hall, Belfast. Amongst those who were present was Rev. Benj. Waugh, of London, founder of the society. The report was very encouraging, and showed the need for the operations of such an organisation in a city like Belfast.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

DR. STALKER, of Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, has been unanimously called to succeed Dr. Walter Smith in the pastoral oversight of the High Church congregation, Edinburgh.

Lifeboat Saturday was observed last week in Glasgow, when immense crowds lined the streets through which the procession passed, and a large amount of money was collected by those who volunteered for this work.

On Saturday, the Directors of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association formally opened the McQueen Macintosh Fresh Air Home for Children at Peaton, Cove. The Association now possesses four homes, which are crowded all the summer with children from the big city, who greatly enjoy their fortnight at the coast. Already this year 1686 children have had the benefit of this philanthropic scheme.

Dr. Smith, of the Free Church, Corsock, who died last week, was one of the few remaining ministers who "came out" at the Disruption. He was greatly respected throughout the Church for his noble Christian character and zealous labour. He was for some time Jewish missionary at Perth, and an intimate friend of the Bonars and McCheyne of Dundee, whose memory is so dear to the godly in Scotland.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For an eight days' mission, to be held by Mr. Henry Lakin, at Garswood, near St. Helen's, June 23 to July 2.—For blessing on a mission at Reading, being held by Mr. W. Day; also a mission at Cowley, near Oxford, from July 1.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

THE Y.M.C.A. Missionary Union has been formed in Glasgow.

The Ayr District Union reports fourteen affiliated Associations, mostly doing vigorous work.

The jubilee has, as was expected, given a great impetus to the Y.M.C.A. Bible Reading Union.

The South African branches of the Y.M.C.A. have received an important addition to their ranks by the appointment of Mr. William G. Sprigg as general secretary to the Cape Town Association.

THE Ipswich Y.M.C.A. are arranging a picnic at Woolverstone Park on a large scale, to celebrate the jubilee. The associations of the district sub-division, of which Ipswich is the centre, have been invited to join, and a large gathering is anticipated.

In celebration of the jubilee, a special service was held in Bristol Cathedral on the 12th, when Dean Pigou preached an excellent sermon. A most successful breakfast meeting and garden party were held the following day, the latter at the residence of Mr. Thos. Owen, M.P.

A meeting in the interests of young men's work will be held on the afternoon of the 27th inst., at Mildmay in the South Tent, under the presidency of Sir George Williams. Addresses will be given by Dr. Karl Fries, Stockholm; Mr. Christian Phildius, Berlin; Mr. J. J. Virgo, South Australia; Mr. David McConaughy, India; and other representatives of Y.M.C.A. work from different parts of the world.

The summer gathering at Callander, promoted by the West of Scotland Ramblers' Alliance, in which the Y.M.C.A. has a large share, is a move in the right direction, and may develop further on the lines so successfully followed at Chatauqua. Association men throughout the country should give it their cordial support. The cost will not exceed thirty shillings, exclusive of fares, bringing the camp well within the range of men to whom the holiday at Grindelwald is a far-away dream.

The report of Hazelwood Home of Rest, at Ryde, refers with regret to the retirement of Mr. Jacobs, who has been succeeded by Mr. T. W. Morphey. The numbers of visitors received during the past twenty-one years has been 20,910. The average for the past few years has been just under 1400, but this number was not reached last year on account of the inability of the managers, through impaired health, of bearing the severe strain of providing for more than the ninety-two the Home will accommodate.

The Hackney Association is arranging a fortnight's holiday in North Wales, July 28 to August 11. One week will be spent at Bettws-y-Coed and the other at Llanberis. From these centres excursions may be made to the following:—Conway, Llandudno, Capel Curig, Blaenau Festiniog, Toy Railway, Harlech, Barmouth, Aberglaslyn, Beddgelert, Nantfrancon Valley, Pass of Llanberis, Snowdon, Carnarvon, Menai Strait, Anglesea. Particulars may be had of the secretary, Mr. F. L. Porter, 275, Mare-street, N.E.

The annual conference of general secretaries was held at Shaftesbury House, Margate, from June 8 to 14. Valuable papers on various phases of work were read at the morning conferences by Mr. Robert Burn, Mr. Robert McCann, Mr. T. J. Bowne, and Mr. W. Hind Smith. Some of the foreign delegates to the jubilee were the guests of the secretaries during the week, and proved a veritable benediction to their British brethren. Public meetings were held in the town in connection with the local ministers and workers, and it is believed that great interest was awakened in the work of the Y.M.C.A.

THROUGH INDIAN VILLAGES.

MR. F. W. HALE, writing to the members of the Prayer Union connected with West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, describes a tour through Indian villages. Leaving Agra in company with missionary and other friends, he pitched his camp in several centres. He says: "The work in the villages is very interesting. The people welcomed us heartily, and crowded around to listen, waiting any length of time. At Mirnahar I could not keep silence, so there, after two native preachers had spoken, I delivered my maiden speech. It was, of course, ridiculous to think of saying much after only three months' study of Hindi, but with a little prompting, and a few explanations, I got through.

"At the next village, Navada, I repeated my little address to a large crowd, the listeners being the most considerate imaginable. At Rohta we had splendid meetings, the people following us with cries of 'Come again soon.' We visited in all about twenty villages, more than a thousand people heard the Gospel preached, and, as a rule, they heard it gladly. The tour has given me an idea of the glorious possibilities of such work, and has set my heart on fire with a new missionary zeal. I long more than ever to master the language. Pray for me and for my future in India."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

THE Chicago C.E. Union proposes to furnish religious papers every week to 600 barbers' shops.

A new society has been started in connection with the Sittingbourne Church. At the inaugural meeting thirty members were enrolled—viz., eighteen active and twelve associate.

On Tuesday evening, June 5, the local societies at Langholm, Dumfriesshire, held their third quarterly united meeting in the Free Church. Rev. G. Orr presided. Rev. J. B. Morgan delivered a helpful and stirring address. The meeting was largely attended.

A rousing young people's meeting at Calcutta, India, was lately attended by about 500 persons, and songs were sung in Hindustani, Bengali, Malay, Chinese, English, German, and Swedish. There was a delightful reunion, and much enthusiasm was awakened by the reports that were given of work done.

The steady increase in the number of German societies in the United States was shown by the reports given at the second annual convention of the North American Union of German Endeavour Societies. Very many phases of the work were presented at the convention, two of the most noteworthy addresses being on prayer and on the connection of the pledge with work in the direction of good citizenship.

The Y.P.S.C.E. in connection with Upton Baptist Chapel, Lambeth, was formed last October, and now numbers ninety-seven members, showing an increase of fifty-four. Seven of these have joined the church, and ten associate members have joined the active ranks. We have seven committees at work, viz., the look out, prayer meeting, social, pastor's, Sunday-school, missionary, and temperance. An open air mission has just been started, the meetings being held after the Sunday evening service. One of our young men has lately sailed for Africa, to take up work for the Master in connection with the Zambesi Industrial Mission.

JEWS IN WHITECHAPEL.

MR. H. EHRLICH, the well-known missionary to Jews in East London, has issued his thirty-second annual report of missionary work at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel. Though his endeavours are obstructed and beset with difficulties from time to time, he sounds a note of praise in view of the grace and goodness of God. Recounting the trials of the year, he says:—"The fever raged very severely among the Jewish children; great stagnation prevailed in the boot and tailoring trades, in which the poor Jews are chiefly employed; and we were surrounded with sickness and starvation. We were met on every hand with the cry: 'Do help us with bread; our children are dying'; and we responded even beyond the means at our disposal. During the coal strike last winter it was heart-breaking to find children and parents huddled together for warmth, but without food or firing."

Speaking of his district, Mr. Ehrlich says it is becoming more than ever crowded with Jews of many different nationalities. "In some streets the stranger might fancy he was walking through a Dutch town; in others that he was in a part of Poland. It is a great mercy that all these can hear the Word of Life in their own tongue. It is thus our mission hall is becoming a centre of light in this dark and benighted neighbourhood. Never a day of the week passes there without the sound of praise and thanksgiving ascending on high to the Giver of good to the children of men."

Work among children is a special feature of the mission. "These poor little waifs and strays of an alien race have less sunshine in their lives than others; their only sitting-room is the door-step or kerb-stone; their playground the street with all its debasing surroundings. It was pressed on us some years ago to open the mission hall doors to them, which was done, and a Band of Hope formed, at which they were taught to sing Sankey's hymns. Now the courts and alleys resound with these lively strains, and those who were once children, but now have houses of their own, do not forget the songs of their youth, but solace themselves with 'Hold the fort,' 'There is a fountain,' etc. The bigoted Jews became alarmed at this teaching, and took counsel how to stop it, even appealing to the Chief Rabbi, and did many things to annoy and hinder our work. But happily it has not impeded our efforts; indeed, we have greater numbers in attendance at the hall than ever."

Mr. Ehrlich does a great deal of work with a very meagre supply of funds. Those who can help in any way should address him at 95, King Edward-road, South Hackney, N.E.

PERSONALIA.

Bishop Hodges, of Travancore, is staying for a time with his father at Carlisle, his health not being robust.

Bishop Stuart has been doing most valuable missionary deputation work in Durham and Northumberland.

Dr. Theo. E. S. Scholes, of the Congo Training Institute, Colwyn Bay, has left for West Africa, to promote the objects of the Institution.

Signor Capellini, of the Military Church at Rome, has been laid aside for a brief space, suffering from an accident, whereby his right arm was badly cut.

Mr. Walter Douglas was to leave Australia by the P. and O. steamer on May 19, and is expected in England in a few days. His address will be, care of Dr. McKilliam, Blackheath.

Bishop Hornby got a cordial reception on revisiting Sunderland last week. His health is far from restored, and among his own friends doubt is entertained as to his ability ever to return to Nyassaland.

Mr. Charles Inglis, who preached in the Circus, in Newcastle-on-Tyne, last Sunday, with manifest blessing, is speaking this week in Dundee and Aberdeen. He is to hold special meetings in the Pavilion at Hastings next Sunday.

Rev. Michael Bartram, the new President of the Methodist New Connexion, has been a minister for over thirty-one years. He has been much used of God in winning souls, and has been closely associated with revivals at Longton and other parts.

Dr. Saumarez Smith, Primate of Sydney, received a warm welcome from the C.M.S. committee last week. In a brief address he explained the character and operations of the Australian Board of Missions. According to his view, it is not necessarily subversive of the Society system.

Rev. Thomas Lydiatt, pastor of the Baptist Church, Jackson-street, Birkenhead, has found it necessary to resign his ministry at this important centre, owing to a throat affection. There is still consolation in the fact that Mr. Lydiatt will continue in his position as superintendent of the Liverpool Evangelisation Society.

Miss Frances E. Willard sailed on Thursday, per s.s. Teutonic, for New York, accompanied by her secretary, Miss Anna Gordon. Lady Henry Somerset, whose guest Miss Willard has been during her stay in England, accompanied her with other friends to Liverpool, while over sixty members of the National Executive and other members of the B.W.T.A. bade her farewell at Euston station, presenting gifts of flowers and fruit, and singing the hymn, "God be with you till we meet again," as the train left.

MISSIONARY PENCE.

The power of the penny in helping to solve the great problem of evangelising the world is being slowly recognised. In various quarters systematic efforts are being made to utilise the enormous possibilities of regular daily or weekly gifts of a penny. As one of the earliest of such agencies the Missionary Pence Association continues its useful work. There are, however, thousands of others who could help, either by joining as members and gathering as many pennies per week as possible in addition to their own, or by contributing an extra gift at the rate of a penny a day for three, six, or twelve months. Many may be encouraged to assist by the fact that the M.P.A. has been the means of raising upwards of £500 in pence, and that this sum has been shared amongst all the leading missionary societies.

The secretary is Mr. W. Roger Jones, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., who will give further information or receive contributions or applications for membership.

PAU.—Having spent the last winter in Pau, Basses Pyrenées, France, I should like the readers of The Christian to know what a good work is being carried on by Miss Cash and Miss Durnford, at their own home, Place Mulôt. These two Christian ladies open their salon every Sunday afternoon for maids and nurses who may be staying in Pau. This winter the attendance has been very good, people of several nationalities, including many Roman Catholics, and much good has been done. E. C.

HOWARD STREET GOSPEL MISSION.—Our Thursday evening open-air service is always well attended, and we have now commenced Sunday outdoor preaching. About twenty of our workers went out on Sunday night and soon had between 200 and 300 people around them. For over an hour the people were held by the Gospel, told out by those who were once living in sin and disobedience. We are believing that many precious souls will be born again through these open-air meetings. We ask the prayers of your readers. J. Soames.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. H. W. Brown has been evangelising at Nebraska City. The meetings, which were held in the Opera House, were crowded to overflowing.

Messrs. Hilton and Tullar have been greatly blessed in Galt, Canada. Seven meetings were held each day. Large numbers professed faith in Christ, and many more expressed a desire for a Christian life.

Messrs. McNeill and Burke, by latest accounts received, had begun, under happy circumstances, a short mission at Port Elizabeth. Much interest was created by the preaching of one and the singing of the other evangelist.

Messrs. Whittle and Stebbins held a stirring series of meetings in Pittston, Pa., in May. The services were very large, and the churches were crowded to their utmost capacity. Very great interest was manifested and good work done.

Rev. A. P. Graves, D.D., spent several months of revival effort in Florida, visiting nearly a score of towns and cities. In Tallahassa, which he last visited, the daily attendance was quite large, and a great blessing rested on the people.

Enfield.—The twelve days' services, conducted by Messrs. B. and F. Weaver in the tent, Brigadier Hill, Enfield, were brought to a close last Friday. Great blessing has been given; souls have been born again, and Christians encouraged to renewed consecration.

Messrs. Loney and Miskimmon, of the Irish Evangelisation Society, have for the past five weeks been conducting tent meetings in St. Johnston (Londonderry). A number have professed conversion, and believers have been blessed. The mission closed on Sabbath.

Pennsylvania.—Interesting Gospel services have been held at Wilkes-Barre, in this State, having special reference to "Memorial Day" for the veteran survivors of the Civil War. Among those taking part were Mr. Moody, Mr. Sankey, Major Whittle, Mr. Stebbins, and others.

Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a successful tent mission at Heydon, Essex. The attendance has been very good, especially during the last fortnight. The Lord has greatly blessed the word both to the unsaved and to the building up of believers.

Mr. J. Manton Smith is evangelising alone, now that his former colleague, Mr. Fullerton, is in the pastorate of Melbourne Hall, Leicester. Mr. Smith has been conducting a Mission at Colebrooke-row Church, Islington (Rev. H. Norwell), where, with cornet, song, and bright addresses, he has held large audiences.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in Dalkey Church, Dublin, by Rev. Canon Harley, of Cork. Similar services have been held in Carryduff Presbyterian Church, near Belfast, by Mr. Geo. D. Leathem, and others, and in Ballybay Methodist Church by Rev. Geo. D. Rea, of Ballintra.

Mr. John M. McAuliffe has closed a week's meetings in the village of Ebrington, Gloucestershire. The services attracted considerable interest, and there were confessions of Christ from some of the village people. Simple Bible readings were given to Christians, and services held for the young.

Mr. Wm. Smith, evangelist, has concluded a fortnight's mission in Beech Park Hall, one of the stations of the Belfast Town Mission. The meetings grew in numbers and power from night to night. Believers were greatly quickened, and a number of persons made decided profession of having been converted to God. W. Maxwell, Secretary.

Coasting Mission.—Services have been held on board the s.s. Good News, at Penzance, Newlyn, Mousehole, and now at Porthleven. The cabin has been crowded each evening, many being unable to get in. Children's services have been held at each place, always more coming than we can find room for. The people have given us a warm welcome, begging us not to leave, and to come again soon. The testimony meetings on Sunday afternoons for the Christian fishermen are times of refreshing to all. A. M. G.

Mr. Thomas Payne, who has done good work at Star Hall, Manchester, is now open for evangelistic engagements. His address is 34, Grosvenor-street, Manchester.

M. WEITZECKER, who has spent seven years in mission work at Léribe, has been interesting audiences of French Protestants in the progress of the Gospel in South Africa. He has depicted the Basutos in their cannibal heathenism, and in their present clothed and civilised condition, thousands of them being members of Christian churches. He relates with special joy the conversion of a chief who had used every means to escape the influence of the Gospel, but who was at length conquered by the Saviour, for whom he has borne powerful testimony

OBITUARY.

MRS. GALBRAITH, BRIGHOUSE.

We have already mentioned the falling asleep of this sister, whose loss is deeply regretted in the district. As the wife of the minister of the Congregational chapel, her Christian life and influence endeared her to all with whom she came in contact. She lent her best services to all the various local organisations for the promotion of truth, peace, purity, righteousness and temperance. She was the president of the Brighouse branch of the Women's Christian Temperance Union. Her influence in the Sunday School was most marked, and she had gathered round her a large class of young women. She entered heart and soul into any movement having for its object the uplifting of the poor, the feeding of the hungry, the relief of the sick, and the bringing of wanderers to Christ's fold.

REV. ADAM CAMPBELL, PETTY, N.B.

On Thursday morning Rev. Adam Campbell, Free Church minister of Petty, passed to his rest, in his eighty-seventh year. Mr. Campbell was a native of the parish of Tongue, in the north of Sutherland. At the time of the "Disruption" he "came out," and finished his theological studies at Aberdeen. He served as a probationer for some years in several Highland charges. He afterwards filled the pulpits in Avoch and Petty, and received calls from both these parishes. He selected the latter, and although, as stated at his jubilee services in April last, he received many calls from other places since, he continued to minister to an attached and loved congregation in Petty for the past forty-three years. The deceased had never taken a prominent part in Church or theological controversy, but when such points arose in his Presbytery, he was never afraid to express his views with clearness and decision. While not "advanced" in Church polity, he had broad and liberal sympathies, and kept himself abreast of all the varied questions raised in the Church Courts within recent times. His pulpit strength lay on the side of doctrinal and expository preaching. He was a good mathematician and classical scholar, and delighted in his Hebrew Bible and Greek Testament. He seldom preached without saying something fresh in his exposition of Scripture.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—As one deeply interested in the spiritual welfare of Ireland and the spread of the Gospel amongst the R.C. population, I venture to raise a note of warning to those who may be intending to visit that country shortly, for the purpose of evangelising the people and preaching the Gospel in the open air.

Some years ago many earnest Christians, full of zeal and burning to proclaim the truth to the R.C., crossed over to Ireland and attempted to preach. They were ignorant of the customs of the people, their manner of speech, or the different tenets of their faith. They were consequently unable to make themselves understood or even meet the simple points raised by inquirers. The result was disastrous. They were maltreated and opposed with such determination and violence that within a very short time nearly all were obliged to return to England.

The door of utterance is now being gradually opened in Ireland for preaching the Gospel, but unless we are to have a repetition of the same disaster, and the work, now carried on successfully, hindered perhaps for years, or stopped altogether, as has already happened, it is essential that those who go should have had some training for the work. They should be thoroughly versed in the ways of the people, and sufficiently acquainted with simple points of controversy to be able to put the truth in a way that could be understood by the people, as well as meet the questions or objections of anyone in the crowd. The preacher must be able to answer these questions right off, for they will certainly be put to him, and if he can reply well and promptly, he will have gained the ear of his audience and get an attentive hearing; otherwise, he will be shouted down, and possibly have his head broken into the bargain.

I would earnestly implore those who purpose visiting Ireland, either from England or Scotland, to ponder this matter well. No one would think of attacking Mohammedan countries without some preliminary training. The R.C. religion is even more subtle and difficult to deal with, mixed as it is with so much truth, and to do this effectively needs men specially trained for the work, as well as of spiritual power.

Notes and Comments.

Our Sovereign has endeared herself to the nation by her true womanliness in family life, as well as by her dignity as Queen. Hence her people rejoice with her in her joy as they have wept with her in her sorrow. News of the birth of a great-grandson and heir in succession to the Throne has been received with much enthusiasm. The young mother, H.R.H. the Duchess of York, has, as is well known, taken a very warm interest in Christian work, co-operating with Dr. Barnardo, the Ragged School Union, and other institutions on behalf of the poor. It will be observed that there are now alive three direct heirs to the throne.

Hardly have the sobs of the widows and orphans caused by the Great Western Colliery disaster at Pontypridd died out, when the same district is again plunged into grief by a fearful explosion at the Albion Colliery, Cilfynydd, whereby about 250 men have been launched into eternity. The taking away of these bread-winners will cause keen distress, which will bring many appeals to Christian workers. Mr. T. M. Wintle, of the Undenominational Christian Mission, Pontynoile, near Pontypool, writes to us:—

I have been visiting among the homes of the bereaved ones, and find many in urgent need. I shall be glad to distribute amongst them at once any help our readers may send me, pending the organising of the permanent relief fund generally raised in these cases.

Lawlessness has shown itself in a hideous form by the assassination of the President of the French Republic. Anarchical wickedness and fanaticism appear, not only in countries where a repressive rule prevails, but also in states where every demand of democracy is admitted and indulged. In France and America, as well as in Russia, the hand of the murderer has been raised against the national representative of law and order; and a spirit of hatred of God and man has been exhibited. As a ruler, M. Carnot deserved the esteem he enjoyed; an entire nation will weep with his sorrowing widow. Frenchmen of all parties and creeds are to-day in mourning, and we condole with them, and pray that God will overrule the evil deeds of men, and hasten His Kingdom in France and throughout the world.

The times of the Gentiles began with the Babylonish monarchy, the head of gold; they are ending with the last development of the Roman Empire, the people, the miry clay or earthenware. Vox populi, vox Dei is its motto. But though the reigning powers have mingled themselves with the seed of men, they do not cleave one to another, as iron is not mixed with earthenware. Notwithstanding optimistic views which are much in vogue, we think the more sure word of prophecy leads us to expect distress of nations with perplexity, the winds and the waves roaring; for God will overturn, overturn, overturn, until He come whose right it is, and He will give Him the Kingdom, and the Power, and the Glory.

To the question of our friend Mr. Coote, page 24, we reply, that Jesus is not, in itself, a name of humiliation; it is, as we said in the note referred to, the name of God manifested in flesh; it signifies Jehovah-Saviour, and was given because He should "save his people from their sins." In accomplishing our salvation, He cried, "I am a worm, and no man; a reproach of men and despised of the people" (Psa. xxii. 6; comp. Dan. iv. 17, 25, 32, R.V.). What so fitting as that the very name under which He became "the Lowest of Men" should be the Name given Him above every name?

Jesus' Name! Thou highest Name!
Jesus' Name! Thou Pearl Divine!
Jesus! the Name high over all!

Indeed, it will be found that under whatever name He was humiliated, under that name He is glorified. If He was led as a lamb to the slaughter, He is the Lamb in the midst of the throne. If the Son of man was lifted up as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, God has committed all judgment unto Him because He is the Son of man. "God hath made this same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ." "He hath exalted the Low Tree, and made the Dry Tree to flourish." "Behold, My Servant shall be exalted, and extolled, and be very high."

If we were to expunge all the hymns which speak of our Lord as Jesus, we should lose many of the most elevating and most reverent of the songs of Zion. With regard to singing of Jesus as our Brother, we are assured, by the Holy Spirit in the Word, that "He is not ashamed to call us brethren." And we do not think that He would find irreverence where only loving reverence was meant. The alteration of which has been suggested if not actually made, does not seem to us an improvement. The hymn as it stands could scarcely have been written from that beginning. May we not in correcting one fault commit another? Any view or doctrine carried beyond its Scriptural limit becomes an error.

Jesus, the very thought of Thee,

Lord Jesus Christ, the thought of Thee,

With reference to a letter in another column on "The Lord's Second Coming," we think it needful to offer the following remarks:—We are persuaded that the Lord's return is near. But we confess that we are not in momentary expectation of it; nor do we think that the Spirit in the Word teaches that our Lord yearns for a "universal momentary expectation" of his coming. To hope and to patiently wait for the salvation of the Lord, as did Old Testament saints; to look for the Saviour the Lord Jesus Christ, to wait for the Son of God from heaven, to hope and watch and be ready, as New Testament saints are exhorted and encouraged and commanded to be—that is one thing; to be in "momentary expectation" of his coming is another. We are to hold fast the pattern of sound, i.e., healthful, words; we are to hold fast the pattern of sound (healthful) doctrine; and in order to this we must be wise as far as, but not beyond, what is written.

Jesus has promised to return, therefore we expect Him; but He has not told us the day or the hour or the moment, and He has warned us against fixing a day or hour in our own minds; therefore we have no basis for expecting Him this moment. A waiting, hoping, watching readiness is compatible with the calm unhurried service of the living God. But in urging a "momentary expectation," which has no absolute word of God to rest upon, there is, we fear, the danger of unsettling the mind and of unfitting for present duty.

That our Lord Jesus Christ is the wisdom of God, that there is a knowledge of God obtainable through Him which cannot be obtained in any other way—a knowledge also of man and of life, is a truth which can never be too strongly insisted upon. Against all the claims of "philosophy falsely so called," it ought always to be opposed. In the Hulsean Lecture, by Dr. Hort ("The Way, the Truth, and the Life"), expression is given to it in these luminous words:—

The range of the truth in which the Lord here promises to give his disciples entrance, is limited only by the necessities of their free action. Wheresoever they have need to move, there they have need to know, and there He promises that they shall know . . . His own nature must be so inwardly at one with the nature of man, and of every world in which man can move, that in the knowledge of Him must be folded up the knowledge of all things. He cannot be less than Himself the truth.

Experience proves to every humble disciple of Jesus, that to follow Him is "not to walk in darkness, but to have the light of life."

In a very suggestive article in the July issue of The Clergyman's Magazine, Rev. R. J. Weatherhead, vicar of Seacombe, Cheshire, writes on "Keeping up our Greek: in special reference to the New Testament." Rendering Luke xxii. 19 as "This do as My memorial," he sees in the sacred ordinance no less a memorial before God than a reminder to men. He says:—

This is "the token of the covenant," and the words used long ago of the token of another covenant may be used of this: "I will look upon it, that I may remember the everlasting covenant" between Me and you (Gen. ix. 16). And thus, when we look at them more closely, we find bound up in the very words of institution that precious idea of a memorial before God, so well expressed in that most beautiful of our Communion hymns, "And now, O Father, mindful of the love."

In another note on verbal distinctions, the writer calls attention to the Apostle's exhortation to "supplications, prayers, intercessions," words more or less tautological to us, but in the original the first suggests our wants, the second to whom we are coming, the third the confidence with which we may come—the three most important thoughts in prayer.

Dr. Barrett declared, in an address which he gave at New College, St. John's Wood, that in his ministry he had learned that the secret power of the Cross of Christ was its expiatory efficacy as the Divine sacrifice for human guilt. The preacher knows that only in the truth that Christ has died for his sins, for their free and full remission, has he himself rest of heart and satisfaction of conscience, that this constrains and wins himself, and he knows also that only as he is faithful to the declaration of this truth is he assured of having been a faithful ambassador. There are other aspects of the truth, no doubt, but all stand in vital connection with this truth of Christ crucified.

When Dr. Barrett also pleaded that there should be some place in sermons for those serious aspects of truth which show the sinfulness of sin, and the consequences of sin, he touched a point on which the Scriptures are continuously emphatic and urgent. The wickedness of sin, and the judgment to come, and the misery of the impenitent, are alluded to, and pressed upon the attention, with patient love. And we cannot find a better method of leading men to genuine repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ. The spirit of lawlessness, which is the very essence of sin, needs to be rebuked and checked by the authority of Him who will reward every man according to his works. There are obligations for moral beings, and it is our duty to declare them; there are consequences of sin, and we must not hide them.

The Pope's Encyclical appealing for the reunion of the churches ought to be called his command to surrender at discretion. He is right, all else are wrong; he is the centre of peace, all else are troublers; he is the saviour of society, all else are a danger. He wants all to come back to the one faith, which is his faith. He says specially to the Protestant nations, that, having forsaken him, there remains to them no rule of faith nor authority, so that some go so far as to deny the divinity of Christ and the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, and end by falling into naturalism and materialism. Now, the Pope cannot but know that one of the grounds of Protestantism is the objection felt by Protestants to the dishonour done to our Lord by the Church he represents. They believe in only one Mediator and Intercessor, and that He is divine. As to this jealousy for the Scriptures, when did the Popes show any care for the Bible until Protestants compelled them?

In the latest issue of A Voice from Italy, issued in connection with the Waldensian Church Missions (118, Pall Mall, S.W.), Rev. A. Meille analyses the Pope's Encyclical on the Study of Holy Scripture. He says:—

Those who fondly hoped that the Encyclical marked a new departure in the attitude of the Church of Rome towards the Bible must recognise that, on the contrary, all the old positions are maintained without a single exception. At the very outset oral tradition is placed on the same level as the written Word, as being equally with it a revelation of God. "The Church" is declared to be the only custodian and rightful interpreter of the Bible.

There is not the slightest promise in the whole Encyclical of the Bible ever being given into the hands of the people, who must remain satisfied with such fragmentary portions of it as they can find in their mass books or hear read from the steps of the altar. And as for the priests, they themselves are not to be allowed to study the Scriptures in an independent manner.

Then the text-book to be placed in their hands is the Latin Vulgate version, and recourse to what is curiously called "the previous languages" is only to be allowed in special circumstances. No one is permitted to expound the Scriptures in a way contrary to the meaning attached to them by the Church or the unanimous consent of the fathers.

Signor Meille draws attention to the fact that the Pope repeats with approval the well-known sentence of Jerome, the translator of the Bible into Latin, who said that "to be ignorant of the Scriptures is to be ignorant of Christ." Apparently without seeing the logical force of such a statement, the Pope goes on to say: "In the Scriptures we can see a living and breathing image of Him who delivers us from evils, encourages us to all virtues, and scatters everywhere the appeals of Divine love." We endorse with much heartiness Signor Meille's remark:—

If the Scriptures be of such paramount importance, if they alone give us the knowledge of the only Mediator between God and men, is it not the most inexplicable contradiction on the part of a Church that calls itself Christian not to place the Scriptures at once in the hands of every man, woman, and child?

Alas! there is no sign, no promise, of such a thing being ever done, and the condemnation of all the versions that have been issued of late in France shows that, if there is one thing in which the Papacy is determined to persist, it is the denial to the people of the Word of God.

Rev. P. T. Forsyth, in a suggestive paper in The Expository Times on "Mystics and Saints," has contended for the position "that mysticism is mostly rational in the affinities of its theology. Indeed, its religion is at bottom simply a variety of the rational process. Its true antithesis is not rationalism, but history." The great value of the paper, to our mind, is the distinct assertion of the need of an historic Saviour, who has lived and died for us, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us. The emphasis is laid on the act of faith in an "historic person," "the certainty which rests on a moral Being like our central selves." "Opposed to all mysticism is the faith (but not the uncritical faith) in an historic personal Saviour, intercourse with whom is the standing condition for ever and ever of all that is properly to be called religion. The judges of Christian truth are not, in the first place, reasonable men, but redeemed men. If our Protestantism mean anything distinctive, it means that." This is according to Paul, "The word is nigh Thee."

"I sought the Lord, and He heard me, and delivered me from all my fears." Fears, like the deadly exhalations which rise from marshy ground, rise from the depravity of our nature, shut out the light of truth from us, chill our hearts, and weaken all our powers for service. Any trifle may become an occasion for fear. "To-morrow" is full of fears—temptations that never assail us, sorrows that never come, losses that never fall, troubles that never arise. "The fear of man which bringeth a snare," seems to hang like a pall round some souls. What will someone think, or someone say, or someone do? The Psalmist had been fearful, but prayer had delivered him, as it will deliver everyone. To draw near to God is to enter into a refuge. Courage, hope, confidence spring up when we are with Him. His light chases away shadows, and his Spirit makes us bold.

The self-suppression of the Apostle to the Gentiles, as revealed in 1 Cor. ix. and x., is a profitable study for all workers. The grace which made him zealous to the point of white heat, made him self-sacrificing and self-subduing to a degree never equalled by any anchorite. Claiming his right to live of the Gospel which he preached, he nevertheless surrendered his right. His "reward" was to make the Gospel without charge, "so as not to use to the full his right in the Gospel." Many who are disposed to contend for "their own" would be richer if they took Paul's line of things. Then again, he asserted his right to eat and drink freely; nevertheless, out of a regard for the feeble and imperfectly instructed, he refrained. He pleased all men in all things, not seeking his own profit, but the profit of the many, that they might be saved. How poor is any right of our own when compared with the salvation of the many!

The Bishop of Manchester has been making a thorough visitation of his diocese; he has been busy for nearly a year, and has had personal conferences with nearly a thousand of his clergy as well as with other workers; institutions have been overhauled; and he has catechised more than 200,000 scholars in the primary schools. On this intimate knowledge he has based his visitation addresses, in which he pleads for more concentration of effort. "It is better to make the few holy than the many good." Then the few will gain the many. His desire for restoring the "Holy Eucharist to its true significance and to its place of paramount importance" does not command our sympathy, but we pass on his warning that it is in the neglect of the young that the leakage from the Church has its spring. Far more care should generally be everywhere taken of young persons, and especially should there be unremitting and painstaking efforts to retain in young converts the simplicity that is in Christ. Were more time given to do this there would be less possibility of evils creeping in which stagger and discourage the young.

Mrs. Josephine Butler is calling her friends together for prayer on the mornings of July 12th, 13th, and 14th, the days on which the Conference of the British, Continental and General Federation for the Abolition of State Regulation of Vice, will be held in London. This movement was cradled in prayer, and all the phases of its development have first passed through the cleansing fire of devotion. No addition to the ranks of its workers of those who had no sympathy, or only an imperfect sympathy, with its original spirit and motive, has been allowed to interfere with a full-hearted acknowledgment of dependence on God for wisdom and grace. We trust that these devotional meetings, which will be held at 10 a.m. in one of the smaller rooms of St. Martin's Hall, will be attended by a goodly number of those who believe in placing in God's hands "The issues of the great conflict for justice and mercy."

Reformers in Prison.

Last week we stated that Mr. A. S. Dyer, Editor of The Bombay Guardian, was on trial for the publication in his journal of matter reflecting on an opium agent in Bombay. A cablegram states that Mr. Dyer has been sent to prison for a month, in default of paying the fine imposed. He has two companions in durance vile, sentenced for the same alleged offence: Man Sukh Lal and Mr. T. M. Hudson; while a fourth, Rev. A. W. Prautch, has already endured his sentence of a month's imprisonment.

The Bombay magistrate who has sent these four Christian reformers to gaol no doubt considers that the evidence justified him in the harsh act; but from our examination of the evidence we are certain that no unprejudiced British jury would have made such a sentence possible. These friends, in their indictment of certain Bombay officials, acted on evidence which appeared to them to be complete, and there could be no possible impugnment of their motives. We are glad to know that, in reply to a deputation which waited on him on Friday, the Secretary of State for India expressed sympathy, and undertook to telegraph instructions ordering that Mr. Dyer's health should be carefully looked after.

The path of the ardent social reformer, who runs counter to strong vested interests, must ever be a thorny and riskful one; more especially in a land like India, where public opinion is feeble on such questions, and rule is administered in a more or less autocratic spirit. Mr. Dyer and his friends may, in the intensity of their desire to free their city from the opium scourge, have committed some technically legal offence, though of that we are not sure. But we are certain that in the time of stress they have the deepest sympathy and moral support of their many well-wishers in this country.

A School for Workers.

A remark which fell from Rev. T. Richardson at the recent great Thanksgiving Meeting in Mile End, made a deep impression on us, and led us to inquire into the grounds of it. He said that for thirty years the East-end of London had been a scene of exceptional Christian activity, and that it does more than any other district in London in the way of producing, training, and sending forth workers into all the fields of the world. We believe him to have been well within the mark. Of course, the facts are always under his eyes, and he speaks from personal knowledge.

In the first place, the parliamentary borough of the Tower Hamlets has a population of more than 450,000, that is to say, within that comparatively small area, there is a larger population than that of Birmingham. Thirty years ago its condition was very dark, and its needs great. Here was a world for workers to win; and certainly they have materially changed it in moral features, and in social and religious life. To those who have had long and intimate knowledge of it, it is a transformed place. The people, consisting mostly of working men and traders, are accessible to such as go in the right way, and in the right spirit; whereas richer neighbourhoods are shut up in respectability, and poorer neighbourhoods are depressed with hopeless pauperism and crime. We do not mean that there is no poverty, but Mr. Charles Booth's books have shown that the East-end is not so poor as the South; it has some manifest advantages for the diffusion of the Gospel of which Christians have made good use.

Working men and women labour indefatigably for their neighbours by open-air preaching, by visiting, by temperance societies, and other means specially adapted to their needs. The Bible and Prayer Union also, which had its origin in the repeated requests made from the pulpit of St. Benet's, Stepney, "that every person attending that church should read the whole Word of God consecutively," has its ramifications in every part of the world, and in every class of society. To name only one well-known worker, who received his training for home work on this ground, Mr. Manton Smith was early associated with Mr. Richardson. A daughter of Mr. Richardson is also in the foreign mission field.

Dr. Barnardo found in the East-end the material to work upon, and the sphere for his philanthropy, which has largely created a new way of looking upon waifs and strays, and along with Miss Macpherson's emigration efforts—another East-end work—has taught us what is the best thing to do with our friendless children. Miss Steer, again, has found the place for the "Bridge of Hope."

Mr. Charrington has gathered thousands of humble people together in Christian fellowship, many of whom, having only a sad and shady past to look back upon, are glad to feel that they can enjoy fellowship without being too curiously looked at. Known to some devoted workers, they yet remain unknown to the crowd. The mere outside appearance of Mile-end-road last week, when Mr. Charrington was welcomed home, showed the warm hearts of the people. Further illustration might be found in other large and active East-end churches.

Dr. Grattan Guinness located his college here; he could not have done better. To go about in this neighbourhood is an admirable preparation for open-air preaching in India and China; to nurse the sick is an apprenticeship for medical missionary work; to gather the poor and needy and forgotten into societies is to acquire skill for handling any bodies of men and women anywhere. Two of the best qualified workers we ever saw sent into the Indian field had learnt their lessons about Mile-end-road. It may be taken for granted that a young man who never did any work for Christ before he went to college, will not be of much use as a minister; and, similarly, Christians who do no good at home will not do any abroad, and vice versâ.

Every town has its training ground, its school for workers. The "wynds" of Edinburgh and Glasgow, the "chares" of Newcastle, the "crofts" of Sheffield: these are the kind of college which Christ's disciples cannot dispense with. J. P. G.

Our Glorious Inheritance.

By GERTRUDE COCKERELL.

How we Christians revel in the beautiful promises contained in the Word of God, and how glad we are of the blessed "alls" in such statements as the following:—"All the promises of God in Him are Yea, and in Him Amen, unto the glory of God by us" (2 Cor. i. 20). "All things are yours; whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come, all are yours" (1 Cor. iii. 21, 22). The gracious Lord has made over to us by deed of promise, bearing the signature of his blood, "all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of Him that hath called us to glory and virtue; whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these we might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust" (2 Pet. i. 3, 4). Have we, as individuals, entered upon our glorious inheritance? Here and there is to be found one rich in this world's goods, yet going about ill-fed, ill-clad. To all intents and purposes he is nothing better than a pauper.

What shall we, then, say of the thousands upon thousands who are suffering the pangs of spiritual starvation, and are clothed in the "filthy rags" of a righteous self? Have such any practical appreciation of the riches of their inheritance in Christ Jesus? "According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness." God has given. Have we taken? It is only as we take the promises one by one, that in any practical sense we are inheritors. Certain it is that no part of the inheritance shall be ours in blessed realisation, save that upon which the sole of our foot shall tread.

I wish now to address my remarks to those children of God who, in much fear and trembling, are standing on some promise. Never did the realisation of your particular promise seem further off than at this moment. Remember, that "the darkest hour is that before the dawn," and that "man's extremity is God's opportunity," that so you may not "cast away your confidence which hath great recompense of reward," because of the fiery trial which stands between you and the realisation of the promise.

There are two conditions that make the realisation of any promise possible: "faith and patience" (Heb. vi. 12). And here let me remark that there are certain broad principles of action underlying all God's dealings with mankind. What has been, is still, and ever will be. History repeats itself in us as individuals. A careful, prayerful study of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews would throw much light upon this subject, and if we ask God to make living to us the characters and circumstances there depicted, we shall probably see that God's particular dealing with us is not unprecedented.

I cannot do more than briefly touch upon one or two examples. To Abraham had the promise been given of a son. Imagine what our feelings would have been as weeks and months and years rolled by till Time across the promise wrote, "Impossible." And when, at length, God vindicated the faithfulness of his word by giving Isaac, and to the eye of sense the promise of a numerous seed seemed possible of fulfilment, the command went forth to slay "the child of promise."

Again, take Joseph's case. That cruel deed of envy that made the boy a slave seemed for ever to cut him off from the possibility of earthly prowess, and the realisation of his early dreams could not possibly have seemed further off than when those prison doors were closed upon him. Yet each day was bringing him nearer their fulfilment, and the hardship, the discipline, and the experience gained at so great cost were fitting preparations for him, destined to be second only to the king.

And now for a practical application of my subject. I propose in relation thereto to call the land of promise, Canaan; and the land of lowering skies, of blasted hopes, of practical disinheritance, Egypt. Our eyes are upon a particular promise, and its realisation in tangible form seems so cheeringly near, when lo! we find ourselves in the land of Egypt, with what appear to us insuperable obstacles, and immeasurable distance between us and the realisation of the promise.

Not until the eye of sense fails to detect in aught it sees the fulfilment of the promise is its fulfilment possible. Would we remember that "we walk by faith, and not by sight," what agony of suspense, of anxiety, of soul-travail should we be spared. Faith, however, at the very moment of our acceptance of a promise as our own, demands the receipt, "Believe that ye have received." Each promise is planted in us as a tiny seed, and till the time of fruit-bearing is one long test of faith and patience. Oh! the discipline and preparation necessary before we are prepared to enter our particular land of promise. Though we be lord of all, yet before we are in practical possession of our inheritance we differ nothing from a servant.

Well is it for us if we cheerfully accept our servitude; if we, like the Great Captain of our salvation, are "made perfect through suffering," and "learn obedience by the things we suffer!" I ask you, was our blessed Saviour more a conqueror when He rode in triumph through the streets of Jerusalem, than when that dread mysterious cry escaped his lips, "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?"

It is in Egypt that we die to the "of course" spirit, which takes all manner of blessings as a right. It is there we learn our nothingness: it is the place where we are brought to nought; where all our props, religious or otherwise, give way; it is the place where death-forms flutter to and fro; where the tangible becomes intangible; where certainty becomes uncertainty; where foundations that are not in Christ collapse. But the blessed lesson of "having nothing" is learnt, and He who has led us into Egypt will as surely call us out.

As I think of the thousands upon thousands who are in this Egypt I feel a strange yearning that they should know my God and theirs, that they should believe through all and in spite of all that "He is faithful that promised"; so should we all be strong to "endure, as seeing Him who is invisible," and thus be "faithful unto death." Like Abraham we must step out in simple faith upon our terra incognita in the shape of some new promise, and as doubts and fears arise, as assuredly they will, we should just praise the Lord that his word is true and "abideth for ever." What, "praise the Lord," you say, "in adverse circumstances? How can we sing the Lord's song in a strange land?" Reader, our Egypt is no "strange land" to the suffering Son of God, who "made Himself of no reputation;" "took upon Him the form of a servant;" was content to do nothing of Himself, and to perform his works in the power of his Father. He has purchased the land of Egypt as truly as the land of Canaan.

What matters it, then, if there the very heavens and earth dissolve with fervent heat? if what we prize we lose? if what we desire eludes our grasp? Is it a thing impossible to "praise the Lord" while waiting for the manifestation of the promise, to "rejoice in tribulation"? to present a cheerful, peaceful aspect to the enemies of God? Is not praise simply our acknowledgment that "He doeth all things well," as well as a proof that our minds are stayed upon God and God alone, through the written Word, illumined by the Holy Ghost? Praise ye the Lord!

BORDIGHERA ORPHANAGE.

The Asilo Evangelico of Vallecrosia, near Bordighera, now known under the name of the Boyce Memorial Home for Orphans and Destitute Italian Children, has not of late been useful to the measure of its capacity.

The number of our children has much diminished, and, by reason of lack of funds, we are about to reduce the number of attendants. In 1893 we were only able to receive seven children out of thirty applications! How happy would we have been had we been able to receive the whole of this little party, and teach them that they had no need to seek admittance elsewhere! This year we have already had a dozen applications, to which we have had again to reply in the negative, two cases alone excepted. We do not yet know how the Lord will provide for these two children; but we are persuaded that we have been guided by Himself in receiving them, and that He will provide in some way or other.

The children sent to us consist mostly of street arabs, over whom not the slightest supervision has been exercised. Sometimes they enter the Home ignorant of the alphabet, idle, and having contracted bad habits. In these boys we have the joy of seeing amendment, which shows that there is good in them, and encourages us to hope that they will leave us reformed characters. The youngest children have six hours of lessons daily, and two hours of work; others, four hours of lessons and six hours of work; and the most advanced have two hours of lessons and eight hours of manual labour in shoe-making, tailoring, or carpentry. Though they get but little recreation, they enjoy, thank God, excellent health.

We have much to encourage us in regard to our work, and we deeply regret our inability to extend it. Our faith has been exposed to severe trials, when (as has happened more than once) at the end of the month we have not had the means to pay bills! We are in debt as regards our receipts for the past year, 1500fr., equal to £60, and before the end of June we shall have a deficit of £100 sterling, so far as we can at present see. But God can provide and deliver us from all our fears.

A. B. Tron, Director.

Villa Violetta, Bordighera, Italy.

THE ROYAL SEA-BATHING INFIRMARY FOR SCROFULA, at Margate, founded in 1791, for the scrofulous poor of all England, is one of the many excellent institutions which have of late been much circumscribed in their operations through lack of funds. During last year only eighty beds could be worked, leaving 140, or two-thirds of the entire number, unoccupied. Communications should be addressed to the secretary, at the offices, 30, Charing Cross, London, S.W.

THE NECESSITY OF ATONEMENT.*

The thesis which Mr. Varley has addressed himself to maintain is one so important if true, so inextricably and uniquely bound up with God's honour and man's weal, that any coldness of manner in the advocacy of it might almost admit of judgment going by default. No such issue need be feared as regards the composition with which we now deal. Mr. Varley has an intensive grasp of his subject, and writes as one must write who is bound in spirit, and on whom necessity lies not only to make the reader see, but also to feel, the truth. It is, indeed, a great theme, "interwoven with the very warp and woof of the inspired volume," and who can fail, whose lips this live coal has touched, to speak thereon with cogency and warmth? What powder is to shot, that passion is to thought, where faith is life and disbelief utter ruin.

The need for words that burn on such a topic can scarcely, in these days, be overrated. Each age has its own battle which it behoves the faithful to fight, even though they may have to go without the camp to fight it. The offence of the cross is as subtle as sin; and as many-complexioned as are the arts of Satan. It is only too possible to hide the cross with flowers, and to betray "the atonement" with the kiss of sentiment. That this is being largely done, Mr. Varley has the eye to perceive. A forgiveness not grounded in atonement, and preached without reference to it, is the paste-gem substitute for the jewel itself. But Divine forgiveness does not stand alone; nor is it like a building whose support is in or of itself. Atonement bears this glorious edifice up, and atonement only. The worst of all sentimental errors (quoting from the pamphlet) is that "which makes the sinner's salvation to depend merely upon the exercise of the Divine forgiveness. This unjust statement leaves out of view the rights of the victim, the claims of law, the conscience of the sinner, and the righteousness of God."

It adds greatly to the popular value of this work that the reasoning is largely concrete. A philosophy of faith is possible enough provided facts be the stones; and if, instead of romancing, we keep to the realities of existence. By a forceful application of David's trespass and restoration it is shown how absolutely atonement inheres in the very nature of things, and how inadequate any mere Divine forgiveness, considered in itself, could have been to have met the requirements of the case. But for the atonement of Christ, the provision of God's love, "David's just condemnation" (and that necessarily) "had still been sounding through the serried hosts of the eternal world."

The inadequacy of the mere forgiveness theory is further shown by a reference to character. Character cannot be forgiven. The nature of things imperatively forbids it. Were it not so, the expulsion of the fallen angels from Heaven would have been a superfluity. But the evil in the grain cannot be forgiven, it can only be condemned. Man's own relations with man prove this. The employer cannot forgive the servant of thievish propensity. We can understand acts of forgiveness repeated, "but let the employer be compelled to awake to the truthful conviction that the servant's character is that of a thief, he not only cannot close his eyes to the fact and keep on forgiving him, but he ought not. The eternal condemnation of the fashioned character of the sinner is perfectly just." Divine forgiveness, therefore, must have a deep basis laid for action. It is not the simple problem which sentimentality has made it. Not only must sins be atoned for; but in the death of the adorable Sin-bearer provision must be made for dealing with sin, sin in the concrete, sin as an evil, defiling, all-polluting grain in the nature. And Christ's death makes provision for this—provision for the abolition of sin—provision for the putting off of the body of sin by the sacrifice of Christ; for He not only "bore our sins in his own body on the tree," but He "was made sin for us, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." Hence Christ's death has not only in view atonement of sins, but the abrogation of sin's hold on those who believe. We are not saved by a process of amnesty which, as it were, goes on for ever to meet a condition of evil which, inasmuch as it is in the blood, is for ever showing itself in the life. But we are saved because that is destroyed wherein we were bound. The evil nature is judged, condemned, and put away in the body of his death; and in union with Him a new nature is implanted, a new character is formed, a new creation is effected. "Blessed deliverance! Here is the glory of regeneration! Here is eternal freedom! Enduring character and everlasting holiness!"

Atonement is no theological figment. It is related to sin as by a causal bond. Deny it who will, the necessity for atonement is deeply infixed in the consciousness of man. Rationalism in such a matter as this not only collides with the inspired Word, but it does violence to what we may describe as the soul that is common to the race. For wrong-doing "compensation should be rendered and atonement made." In the greatest of all connections, the salvation of the sinner, there are many that scout this, and do it—can it be believed?—in the name of advanced thought. But if they themselves were to be grievously wronged, what would become of their theory? It would be forgotten. The soul common to the race would show its quality in them instantly, and with no uncertain sound would they make their demand for atonement known. In reality, the principle involved is not one which admits of denial. All law is based upon it, and government of every kind would be impossible ignoring its necessity. What the convicted sinner wants, and can never be blessed till he finds, is atonement. The need can be questioned by no man when the period of finding comes. That it is questioned by any man, be he scholar or otherwise, is due to the fact that sin has blinded his mind so that he has no sense of his evil, or sees it as through an inverted telescope—a mere speck. Happily, there are still those who inquire for the old paths, and who stand in the good old way—men of vision, who can expound sin's nature and the necessity of Christ's glorious atonement. Among these Mr. Henry Varley holds an honourable place.

WORK AT ASCOT RACES.

Dear Sir,—It seems as if the crowd at Ascot were regarded as hopeless, but much proof was forthcoming that such is not the case. A few brethren and sisters came to the aid of a handful of local workers, and we were indeed like conies, a few feeble folk. But God's strength was manifest in our weakness. Mr. W. Day's banner, with its striking Scripture passages, was read by thousands, and its power in many cases testified to. A sporting paper gave an exaggerated account of an assault upon it in dragging it to the ground.

One man who came to sell comic songs was convinced of sin through the spoken Word, and returned home at the beginning of one day's carnival. Besides telling out and singing the Gospel message my wife and I, with an evangelist and some young men, distributed nearly a thousand tracts.

In the pouring rain my wife spoke to a young man from the Midlands, who was staking some money with a bookmaker. He came to hear the preaching of the Gospel, and under conviction returned with us homewards. Sobbing and shaking, he told me his piteous tale of gambling and flight. To see the one prodigal returning home to the Father was reward for enduring a day's pelting rain. Visitors and friends rejoice and give God the glory, for the spirit of hearing, and the protection of our God amid the raging of some opponents and blasphemers.

It was intensely saddening to see the large number of young men and women eagerly gambling, and our beautiful neighbourhood is banefully affected the whole of the year with the covetous spirit. I have seen numbers of men and lads gambling and card-playing in the public ways, whilst journeying to preach at various villages near. It would be a great relief, amid pressing engagements, if some of God's stewards would send me the £5 for expenses incurred.—Yours faithfully, A. E. Sidford.

WAPPING.—Mr. W. Bacon, of the Congregational Hall, Old Gravel-lane, St. George's-street, E., writes:—"It would be a great blessing if a band of men of God would unite for persistent open-air work in Wapping for the next few Sunday evenings, commencing at 5.45. There is no spot in London, perhaps, more in need of the Gospel than this, and we are almost alone." Mr. Bacon is open to arrange for the delivery of a series of warning addresses (free of charge) in and around London, where it is known that spiritualistic meetings are being held. Address, 38, West-square, Southwark, S.E.

eremiah, Priest and Prophet.

THE SWELLING OF JORDAN.

(Jeremiah xii. 5.)

But I, amid the torture and the taunting,
I have had THEE!
Thy hand was holding my hand fast and faster,
Thy voice was close to me:
And glorious eyes said, "Follow me, thy Master,
Smile as I smile thy faithfulness to see."

MRS. HAMILTON-KING.

BETWEEN the incidents referred to in our last apter and the subject of the present one, a most rible calamity had befallen the kingdom of Judah. the face of urgent remonstrances, addressed to n from all sides, King Josiah led his little army wn from the mountain fastnesses, where he dwelt fely, to attack Pharaoh-Necho, who was marching by the coast route to participate in the scramble the spoils of Nineveh, then in her death-throes. e two armies met at Megiddo, at the foot of Car-l, on the extreme border of the plain of Esdraelon, ich has so often been a decisive battlefield. The ue was not long in suspense. Josiah's army was ted, and himself mortally wounded.

"Have me away, for I am sore wounded," said dying monarch, and his servants bore him from war chariot to another in reserve; but he died er a few miles drive, at Hadadrimmon. His ath was the signal for such an outburst of grief roughout the land, that it became in after years e emblem of excessive sorrow. Zechariah could d no adequate expression for the anguish of Jeru-em when the people shall look on Him whom ey pierced and mourn, than that it should be e "the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley Megiddon," when the land mourned, every nily apart. It has been compared to the grief of hens, when tidings came that Lysander had stroyed her fleet; and to that of Edinburgh on e evening of Flodden. Jeremiah composed an gy on the death of his king and friend, which s not been preserved, and at once the fortunes of dah were overcast with darkest gloom (2 Chron. xv. 20-27; Zech. xii. 11).

The next king, Josiah's son Jehoahaz reigned t three months, and then was led off with a ring his nose, like some wild beast, to Egypt, where died. Necho instituted his brother Jehoiakim his stead, as his nominee and tributary. But e four last kings of Judah reversed the policy of siah. They did evil in the sight of the Lord, and Jehoiakim it is recorded that he wrought abomi-tion (2 Chron. xxxvi. 1-8).

At the death of Josiah, the large party that voured idolatry again asserted itself. The refor-ation promoted by the good king had never uck its roots deeply in the land; and the vigour th which he had carried out his reforms now led a corresponding reaction. The reformers fell der the popular hate, much as the Puritans did the days of the Restoration; and Jeremiah espe-lly came in for a large share of it. He had e friend and adviser of the late king, and had not rupled to denounce in the most scathing terms the olatry and licentiousness of his age. He had ered terrible predictions of coming disaster, ich were beginning to be fulfilled. There were e mutterings of a coming storm of hatred and rder. Unbeknown to him, his countrymen were vising devices against him, saying, "Let us stroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us t him off from the land of the living, that his me may be no more remembered."

The symptoms of this rising storm were less ely to reach him, because he had been commanded itinerate among the cities of Judah, as well as the reets of Jerusalem, and had probably started on a olonged tour throughout the land, standing up in e principal market places, and announcing every-ere the inevitable retribution that must follow on e breach of the Divine covenant (xi. 8). The issue that tour was profoundly disappointing. A con-iracy was found among the men of Judah and e inhabitants of Jerusalem. They turned back the iniquities of their forefathers; each city had tutelary deity, each street its altar to Baal. d the conviction was wrought into the prophet's art that intercession itself was useless for a ople so deeply and resolutely set on sin. They d clearly sinned the sin unto death, for which ayer is in vain (xi. 14; 1 John v. 16).

Disappointed and heart-sick, Jeremiah retired to s native place, Anathoth. He was unsuspicious danger, as a gentle lamb led to the slaughter. Surely among his brethren, in the house of his father, he would be safe, and able to find the sympathy and affection for which his sensitive heart hungered, but which evaded him everywhere else. But it was not to be. In this also he was to be like the Lord Jesus, who came unto his own, but his own received Him not; but led Him to the brow of the hill on which their city was built, that they might cast Him down headlong. There was treachery in the little village. The sacred tie of kindred was too weak to restrain the outbreak of fanatic hate. The priestly houses had winced beneath the vehement denunciations of their young relative, and could bear it no longer. A plot was therefore set on foot, and under the show of fair words they conspired to take the prophet's life. He had not known of his danger but for Divine illumination: "The Lord gave me knowledge of it, and I knew it; then Thou showedst me their doings" (xi. 18).

Stunned with the sudden discovery, Jeremiah turned to God, with remonstrance and appeal. Conscious of his own rectitude and the rectitude of God, he was for a moment caught in the outer circles of the whirlpool of questioning, which has ever agitated the minds of God's oppressed ones, concerning the unequal distribution of earthly lots. "Righteous art Thou, O Lord, when I plead with Thee. Yet would I reason the cause with Thee: wherefore doth the way of the wicked prosper? wherefore are all they at ease that deal very treacherously?" (xi. 20, xii. 1, R.V.)

I.—THE APPEAL OF THE MALIGNED AND PERSECUTED SOUL.

(1) He was Conscious of his own Integrity.—Without doubt, Jeremiah was profoundly conscious of his unworthiness. He must have had as deep a conviction of sinfulness as any of the great prophets and psalmists of Israel. None could have lived as close to God as he did without an overwhelming sense of uncleanness. What Job felt, and Moses, and David, and Isaiah, must have been constantly present to his consciousness also. But in respect to this special outburst of hatred, he knew of nothing for which to blame himself. He had not hastened from being a shepherd, nor desired the woeful day, nor taken pleasure in the disasters he announced, nor spoken in the heat of personal passion. The sins of the people had procured the evils he predicted; and he had only sought to warn the reckless mariners of the rocks that lay straight in their course.

When we are reviled and hated, we should carefully search our hearts to see if we have given any just cause to those that hate and persecute us. The only suffering which comes within the circle of Christ's beatitude, is that which is inflicted falsely, wrongfully, and for his sake. The man who endures griefs, suffering wrongfully, alone can claim to be following in the steps of the Master, and to be offering a sacrifice which is acceptable to God. He only can count on God's delivering aid.

The bursting storm should lead the captain to see that there is peace amongst his crew, and amity with the other ships of the fleet! We have no right to complain of the wrong-doing of others, unless we are sure that, so far as we are concerned, we have given no just cause. But if we have done so, there is no option but to agree with our adversary quickly, though it involve leaving our gift at the altar. Every moment of delay aggravates the case, and increases the difficulty of reconciliation. The course of justice is so rapid, from the adversary to the judge, the judge to the officer, and the officer to prison (Matt. v. 22-25).

(2) He was Perplexed at the Inequality of our Human Lot.—Every word of good Asaph's complaint in Psa. lxxiii. might have been appropriated by Jeremiah. He had never swerved from the narrow path of obedience; at all hazards he had dared to stand alone, bereft of all the comforts and alleviations that come in the lot of men; he did not scruple to bare his heart toward God, knowing that to the limit of his light he had done his bidding. But he was hated, persecuted, threatened with death; whilst the way of the wicked prospered, and they were at ease who dealt very treacherously. Surely it was in vain that he had cleansed his heart and washed his hands in innocency. It was too painful for him. His feet were almost gone, his steps had well-nigh slipped.

It is the question of all ages, to be answered only by remembering that this world is upside down; that the course of nature has been disturbed by sin; that the prince of the power of the air is god of this world; and that the servants of righteousness fight, not against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, the wicked spirits in heavenly places.

(3) He was Anxious for God's Character.—There is a touch of apparent vindictiveness in his cry. "Let me see thy vengeance on them; pull them out like sheep for the slaughter, and prepare them for the day of slaughter." We are disposed to contrast these words with those that Jesus breathed for his murderers from the cross, and that Stephen uttered as the stones crashed in upon him; and we think that there is an alloy in the fine gold, a trace of dross in the saint.

It is possible to adopt the suggestion that the prophet was predicting the fate of these wicked men or that he was the Divine mouthpiece in this solemn pronouncement of coming doom. But a deeper and more correct conception of his words appears to be, that he was concerned with the effect that would be produced on his people if Jehovah passed by the sin of his persecutors and intending murderers. It was as though the prophet feared lest his own undeserved sufferings might lead men to reason that wrong-doing was more likely to promote their prosperity than integrity and holiness. Josiah was the one God-fearing monarch of his time, but he was slain in battle; he was the devoted servant of God, and his life was one long agony: was it the best policy then to fear God? Might it not be wiser, safer, better to worship the gods of the surrounding peoples, who seemed well able to defend their votaries, and to promote the prosperity of the great kingdoms that maintained their temples? As Jeremiah beheld the blasting influence of sin, how the land mourned, and the herbs were withered, and the beasts and birds consumed, his heart misgave him. He saw no limit to the awful evil of his times, whilst God seemed indifferent to its prevalence. Therefore he cried for vengeance—not for the gratification of his own feeling, but for the sake of Israel.

(4) He also Rolled his Cause on God.—So might xi. 20 be rendered: "On Thee have I rolled my cause." Ah, this was wise! And it is our only safety in times of great soul-anguish. The Divine Sufferer did this on the cross. "When reviled, He reviled not again; but committed Himself to Him that judgeth righteously." In his steps we must plant our feet. When men malign and plot against us, when friends forsake, when difficulties like Atlantic breakers threaten to engulf us, we must roll all anxiety off ourselves upon the blessed Lord, our burden-bearer, and leave them with Him. The care ceases to become ours, and rests on Him. He will see to all for us with a love so strong and tender and true, that we need have no further cause for fear. Roll thyself, thy burden, and thy way on to the Lord.

II.—THE DIVINE REPLY.

"If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? And if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustedst, they wearied thee, then how wilt thou do in the swelling of Jordan?" God stooped over his life, and said: "Do you not remember when I first called you to be my prophet that I foreshadowed the loneliness and isolation, the difficulty and persecution, which were in store? Do you not remember that I told you that you would have to be a brasen wall against the whole people? Have you already lost heart? Are you so soon discouraged? Has the first brush of opposition mastered your heroic courage? You have as yet run with footmen, presently you will encounter horses; you are now in the land of comparative peace, your native village, where those surround you who have known you from your childhood, and yet you are dismayed; but how will you do when a tide of sorrow comes upon this land, as when the Jordan leaps its banks, and swells over the low-lying land around, and drives the wild beasts from their lair—how then?"

Does not God ever deal with us thus? He does not put us at once to contend with horses, but tests us first with footmen. He does not allow any one of us with frail and fainting courage to meet the overflowing floods of Jordan; but He causes us first to be tested in our homestead—the land of peace, where we are comparatively secure amidst those who know and love us. God graduates the trials of our life; He allows the lesser to precede the greater. He gives us the opportunity of learning to trust Him in slighter difficulties, that faith may become muscular and strong, and that we may be able to walk to Him amid the surge of the ocean. Be sure that whatever your sorrows and troubles are at this hour, God has allowed them to come to afford you an opportunity of preparation for future days. Do not be discouraged, or give up the fight, or be unfaithful in the very little. Do not say you cannot bear it. You can!

There is sufficient grace in Him; appropriate it, use it, rest upon Him. Be very thankful that He has given you this time of discipline and of searching; and now, taking to yourself all that He waits to give—the grace, and comfort, and assurance—go forward! He cannot fail you. What He is in the lesser He will be much more in the greater. The grace He gives to-day is but as a silver thread compared to the river of grace He will give to you to-morrow. If you start back now, you will miss the greater discipline that will surely come; but in missing it you will also miss the greater revelation of Himself that will accompany the discipline. Be true to God! Trust in God, and remember that when He brings you to the swelling of Jordan—not necessarily death, but some awful flood of sorrow—that then, for the first time perhaps, you will meet the ark and the Priest whose feet, when they dip in the margin of the river, will cause it to part, and you will go over dry-shod. When Jordan overflows its banks, God brings his chosen people to the brink, and it is then that He cleaves the path through the heart of the river, and they are not touched by its descending torrent.

It is a solemn question. You have failed in the quiet sequestered home-life: how will you do in the turmoil of the city, with its terrific temptations? You have succumbed when there was everything to help you: how will you do when all is against you? You cannot bear the transient troubles of an hour with patience: how will you do in those that wear the life out with ceaseless pain? You cannot live well: how will you do when the moment arrives for you to die. "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?"

IN TIME OF NEED.

When all around the way
The shadows seem to lie,
When morning-beams delay,
And darkness lingers nigh—
Thy Face, thy Name, thy Word I plead,
O Christ, my Hope in time of need!

I cannot see the road;
The storm-winds round me sigh;
The floods have overflowed,
And waves are surging high;
But Thou my trembling prayer will heed,
O Christ, my Refuge in my need!

Let me not doubt thy love,
Thy pity, and thy power!
Thou who art throned above
Hast known Earth's shadow-hour.
Thou for my faith dost intercede,
O Christ, my Strength in time of need!

Nearer than cloud art Thou,
And closer than the thorn;
Shine through the darkness now,
O Light, more blest than morn!
O Shepherd kind, my footsteps lead,
Thou present Help in time of need!

Oh, be at rest, my heart!
What though the path be dim,
Nor life nor death can part
His needy ones from Him.
Shall He not prove, whate'er befall,
My Lord, my Rock, my All in All?

ARTILLERY LANE MISSION.—Owing to the rebuilding of the premises in Steward-street, Spitalfields, which were recently occupied by this Mission, the work is now temporarily carried on at Fournier-street (late Church-street), Spitalfields, corner of Brick-lane. Mrs. Finn, who has been superintendent of the Mission for over twenty-one years, wishes it to be known that the Artillery-lane Mission, which carries on lodging-house and rescue work, in addition to providing both spiritual and material help for the poor in one of the most densely populated parts of East London, is not connected with any other Lodging-house Mission. Communications should be addressed to Mrs. S. Finn, 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham.

DR. BARNARDO'S ANNIVERSARY.

CHILD-RESCUE ILLUSTRATED.

"The crowd of the rescued is thicker around me than ever before, while the stream of hungry and homeless outcasts, yet to be rescued, flows on without surcease or diminution at our doors," so writes Dr. Barnardo in his new report. None who were present at the remarkable demonstration given in the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon will question the first statement; while, alas! the second is obvious enough to all who walk our streets with open eyes. Yes, there are thousands wan and weary, homeless and hopeless, waiting to be rescued; and for these Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and similar institutions, must be maintained—they cannot be left to perish. But thousands have been and are being rescued—this fact was abundantly evidenced before the magnificent gathering that thronged this West End Hall on the occasion of the twenty-eighth anniversary of these Homes.

As one viewed the great orchestral galleries, filled to the uppermost tier with bright-faced, merry children, heard their sweet voices burst forth in song, and remembered that these were but representative of the 5000 now under Dr. Barnardo's care, and of the yet vaster host—some 24,000—who have passed through the Homes, the impression grew on one's mind that here surely is an undertaking prospered of God, an undertaking which ought to be cherished and supported by every lover of children, every lover of his country, and specially by every lover of the Lord Jesus Christ. There they were before us—happy, well cared for, and in training for usefulness in this life and in hope for the world to come: but—and the question kept pressing hard—were there no such Homes to receive them? Where would they be to-day, what suffering and sorrow, what penury and pain would they now be enduring but for these Homes?

WHAT WOULD HAVE BECOME OF THESE,

Nor were the children the only witnesses to the value of the work. Deeply interested as all must have been in these serried ranks of the rescued, it must have been generally felt that the long rows of trim servant-maids—now in situations—spoke volumes for the Homes in which they had been trained, and in which they evidently continue to take the warmest interest. As the Director pointedly remarked, "That is what we make of our girls; is it worth doing?" Results in boy rescue were also exemplified in companies of fine useful young men, some indeed of riper years, who, having passed through the institution, are now doing well.

The programme of the spectacle may be epitomised in the words,

WORK AND PLAY.

The Doctor believes that "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," while "Jill" benefits by the same prescription. They play, that they may be bright and lively children; but they learn to work too, that they may become self-reliant and useful citizens. Thus from a burden on the State, which, unhelped, they must have been, they become a strength and gain to the nation at large. The importance attached to these two, work and play, characterised the whole agenda of the meeting. Both were illustrated, for both are deemed essential to the development of child-life.

A passing reference must be made to the sweet singing of the large children's choir, aided by the boys' band of the Stepney Homes, and led by Mr. J. Frank Proudman, to whose tuition they did credit. The pieces rendered were pretty and pleasing, but special appreciation was shown to two action songs—"Bees and Butterflies," in which the singers fluttered paper fans in imitation of flitting wings; and "Dolly Dimple," sung by the girls, who, evidently with great delight, produced each one at the right moment a tiny doll to illustrate the words being sung.

After the opening hymn, Canon Barker besought the continued blessing of God on the Homes, those in charge, and the young inmates.

The Right Hon. Lord Brassey, the Chairman, delivered his presidential address, which he wisely cast in the form of a condensed summary of the report. He said: "In the world as we find it there is ample scope for every kind of philanthropic agency; and where we have the great advantage of the personal services of an earnest worker and skilful organiser, and contributions are forthcoming from benevolent supporters, ever increasing in amount, and in this year of depression reaching

THE ARTS AND CRAFTS.

Dr. Barnardo came forward, at the close of t President's address, to begin his promised "Seri of Object-lessons of Industries and Pastimes." Fir however, he read a telegram just to hand fro H.R.H. the Prince of Wales. "Warm congratulatio on the work done, and wishing increasing prosperi to the Homes." Proceeding, Dr. Barnardo sai "No apology is needed for our object-lessons. Tho who supply the funds have a right to know what being done. The best way to reclaim a waif is teach him or her how to be useful. How do we it? Thus"—and a bugle blast brought rattli down the stairs a host of lads carrying benches a all manner of implements, which they quick arranged on the area in centre of the hall. moment more and companies of young workm were on the scene, ready at another signal to fall with hammer and saw, needle and bristle. #### THE RAW MATERIAL.

"You have seen," said Dr. Barnardo, "my bo at work as they are now: what were they a sh time ago? You shall see," and at a signal the filed slowly and heavily, as all untrained, a drea procession of lads, boys, tiny girls, and older gir in all their rags and misery and wretchedness, ju as they come to the Homes, as I have seen the in the reception-room at Stepney Causeway. "Y see them," added the Doctor, "face to face, yo brothers and sisters in their sadness, and just as have gathered them within the last few days. have brought them before you to ask the questio What shall we do with them? What shall we for them? It is for you to answer. We cann help them without your help." Truly it was a pi able object-lesson, though doubtless necessary the completeness of the exposition.

In happy contrast came the next picture of li this time from Ilford. A party of some sixty lit girls, in bright dresses, went through a series musical flag-drill evolutions in a style which evinc aptitude, intelligence, and prompt obedience.

Canon Fleming, who has taught himself how speak so as to be heard even in the Albert Ha moved a resolution expressing a grateful sense the Divine blessing vouchsafed to these institutions, and pledging the meeting to continued and practical sympathy. He maintained that the children behind him were for these Homes. Of all the obligations in life there are none greater than those we owe to the children. To do them good we must love them, and that love keeps us from becoming more selfish than we are. He protested against the use of the term "arabs" for these unhappily suffering children. They are our children, the children of our Father in Heaven; and it is not his will "that one of these little ones should perish." Such institutions as this exist to "rescue the perishing"; but they do more, they preserve them from perishing. "I am here to say, 'God bless Dr. Barnardo's work!' and to congratulate him on the wonderful spectacle he has given us of rescue work."

An unexpected pleasure was now enjoyed by the kind sympathy of Madame ANTOINETTE STERLING, who sang with wondrous tone and feeling two beautiful though simple ballads of child-life.

the suffering poor, and, moreover, He loved the children; and both of these were

NEW THINGS IN THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

In caring for the poor and the children we do but follow the example and obey the command of our blessed Lord. A work of this kind is one of the finest evidences of the supernatural origin of Christianity. Philanthropy and sociology are but outcomes of Christianity, without which they must wither away. For these reasons the speaker claimed for Dr. Barnardo's Home large and liberal support. "What," exclaimed he, "would it mean for this city if these doors were closed, and these thousands of homeless wanderers left unhelped?"

Resuming his object-lessons, Dr. Barnardo showed how girls are trained in the Village Homes for cooks, parlourmaids, chambermaids, nurses, and sempstresses. For a short space the area was filled with busy domestics, who certainly seemed to promise the fulfilment of the requirement,

"WANTED, AN ACTIVE SERVANT."

A drill exhibition followed by "four companies of Prizes were then distributed to 320 young women and young men formerly in the Homes and now in situations. These had kept their places, with credit to themselves, for periods varying from one to ten years. The prizes were given by Lady BRASSEY, who, said her husband, had the greatest possible pleasure in making this distribution.

Messrs. T. A. DENNY and HOWARD WILLIAMS moved and seconded a vote of thanks to Lord and Lady Brassey. An exhibition of "naval cutlass drill" followed, and, after a rousing hunting song, the children sang, "The sweet story of old," and the proceedings were concluded with "God Save the Queen."

Many readers fully interested in these noble institutions were, doubtless, unable to be present to view for themselves these glimpses of child-rescue work. I trust the perusal of this account will stir such as deeply as the various object lessons stirred the great audience in Albert Hall. Let it be remembered that to feed, clothe, house, and train 5000 children demands large supplies. If these "ever-open doors" are to remain open to the really

BABY LIFE IN BABYLAND.

Next came the second part of the Director's report in the appearance of a numerous detachment of tiny dots from Babies' Castle at Hawkhurst in charge of nurses. A novel feature, which very greatly interested and pleased the ladies, was the introduction of a number of cots, into which some of the tiniest cleverly climbed and being disrobed were put to roost. Most of them, however, declined to remain beneath the coverlet, but excited by the unusual surroundings stood upon the pillow, holding on by the rails and gazing about in infantile astonishment. At the other end of the area, some were intent on toys, and others romping in round games; exactly as I have seen them at home in the "Castle" itself.

A procession of trades, including fifteen useful crafts, next filled the area, showing what the lads at Stepney are taught, and how they expect to earn their living in days to come. In our illustration the artist depicts the procession, together with some of the other scenes which were enacted before the delighted spectators.

Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D., who seconded the resolution, dwelt on the fact that our Lord, when He came to earth, cared for the poor the outcast, our own Boys' Brigade," as to which there may be differences of opinion. Dr. Barnardo was careful to insert in the programme an explanatory note, disclaiming the idea that this may foster a military spirit.

After another interlude of song we had "the Maypole on the village green," a number of little girls enjoying fun and frolic with the festoons.

Then came, with solid tread, a large party of sturdy fellows, accoutred and ready for Canada. It is hoped that the funds will enable these to start this week for Manitoba. To look at them was to be assured they were well chosen and of the right stuff to make good colonists. 300 boys will be sent to Canada as soon as possible. Already 6808 have been placed out, and this party will bring the total of young emigrants to 7100. Roughly speaking, the cost is £10 each.

The collection was the next event on the programme. Several donations were announced, the total promises and gifts reaching the sum of £1350, while last year it amounted to £4308, a very serious fall, due in some measure probably to the lateness of the time fixed for taking the collection. Many had left and others would be fagged out. It is to be hoped that these will send in their gifts and make up the difference speedily.

destitute, funds must be amply furnished on behalf of the great family now in the Homes, and of the vast number yet unrescued.

Mr. James B. Wookey, one of the Deputation Secretaries of the Homes, is this week beginning at Aberdeen a somewhat lengthened tour through Scotland in the interests of the institutions. He is accompanied by a band of musical boys. We bespeak for him the best sympathies of our readers, as he describes and illustrates the manifold nature of Dr. Barnardo's invaluable work.

MALAYSIA.—In this island of the sea we maintain a W.C.T.U. organisation, composed largely of the missionaries, and do real work. We are educating a goodly number of children on the subject of temperance, which gives us great hope for the future. We have long felt the need of doing rescue work, and a Home has been opened in charge of Miss J. M. Hebinger, of the Deaconess Home, Chicago, assisted by a Christian Chinese woman. The local Union is co-operating as heartily and substantially as possible. Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell visited us a short time ago. Communications may be addressed to me, (Mrs.) C. C. # NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JULY 1.—EZEKIEL I.

In this Divine vision Ezekiel's ministry was inaugurated. It was the thirtieth year of the independence of Babylon, or perhaps of Ezekiel's life. The river Chebar, now Kabur, joins the Euphrates 300 miles north of Babylon. It is when we are in captivity that we see visions of God.

Ezekiel's Vision of the Cherubin (4-14).—"A stormy wind came out of the north, a great cloud with the fire flashing continually" (R.V.). In the midst of the dark storm cloud there was the blaze of intense light, amid which were the forms of four living creatures—the cherubim. They were erect as men. Between them they were to represent animate creation. Their faces represent intelligence, courage, patient labour, and soaring aspiration; their wings, obedience and reverence; their hands, active and efficient service; their feet, the solidity and steadfastness of their motion; their colour, either intrinsic purity or the Shekinah symbol of the Divine presence. These glorious beings obey each prompting of the Divine will. (12) What a lesson there is here for us to go under the Divine impulses, to turn neither right nor left. (14) And to be instant with the swiftness of lightning.

The Wheels (15-21).—Each wheel intersected the other at right angles, and one of these stood beside each living creature. Their height, colour, rings or felloes, their eyes indicating their intelligence, the coincidence of their movements with those of the cherubim, as though animated by the same impulse that controlled their motions were marvellous to behold, and indicate perhaps the providence of God with which redeemed intelligences co-operate in the execution of his will.

The Firmament (22-28).—Above the heads of the living creatures was a firmament, dazzling in appearance, and on this the likeness of a throne. Before the throne the living creatures stood, their bodies veiled by their wings; and heard the voice of the Man upon the throne, perhaps saying, "Well done, good and faithful servants"; because where the Spirit was to go they went; thither was their spirit to go. And they went and returned like lightning.

MONDAY, JULY 2.—EZEKIEL II.

The Prophet's Commission (1-10).—The prostrate soul is that which God can teach and use. At the same time, when we are accepted in Christ, we may stand before Him, whilst He speaks to us as his friends. "Son of man" was a title to remind the prophet of his lowly origin, and yet how good that God speaks to men by men. (3) Children may be rebels, but they do not cease to be the objects of Divine solicitude. God sends after them, though impudent and stiff-hearted. (5) God's justice shall be vindicated even though his Word is rejected. How near He comes to men who have forfeited all claim. (6) We are often called to live amid words which are briars and thorns, and people who are scorpions. It might seem perilous, but there is no need to fear if we are engaged upon the King's business (Luke x. 19). (7) We cannot control success, but we are responsible to deliver God's message. (8) We need to guard against infection from those to whom we speak, lest we become rebellious like them, and that we may not become so let us feed upon the Word of God. Let us specially consider his warnings against sin. Nothing makes us so strong to minister and endure as perpetual feeding upon the roll of the Book. Ancient rolls were generally written on the inside only. In this case each side was full, and sad indeed were the tidings it bore.

TUESDAY, JULY 3.—EZEKIEL III.

The Prophet's Commission (1-14).—There is always an inner sweetness in doing the will of God, even though its outworking be bitter to the flesh. (4) We have no right to speak our own words. The Spirit of the Father will speak in us (John xiv. 10). Oh for the words which the Holy Ghost teacheth (1 Cor. ii. 13). (6) The publicans and sinners are easier to reach than those who have been cradled in pious houses, and dandled on the knees of godly ancestors, but who have not accepted the Gospel. (9) However great the difficulty of our life, his grace is always sufficient. (11) We are not responsible for the results of our message, it is our duty to proclaim it, simply, earnestly, lovingly, and in the power of the Holy Spirit. (12) Let us yield to the upbearing grace of the Holy Spirit (Acts viii. 39). We are here permitted to hear the sounds of the other world. The cherubim move to the music of their adoring songs. Blessed be the glory of the Lord. They seem to have gone behind Ezekiel as his rearguard. God besets us behind and before. (14) In bitterness, because of the sins of his people. But the blessed impulse of the Spirit bore mightily upon him.

His Arrival at the Chebar (15-27).—These solemn warnings of the responsibility of his office were given in the land of captivity, at Tel-abib, the chief colony of Jewish captives. If we would help and comfort people, we must sit with them and share their griefs. (17) We must give time to listening to the Divine voice, or we shall never be able to speak it. (18) Well might the Psalmist pray to be delivered from blood-guiltiness! Alas! how many souls are being lost through our neglect! On the other hand, it is of no use going to people unless we are distinctly led or sent. (19) The message is ours; the results are beyond our reach. (20) Many seem to be righteous till God permits them to be tempted. How carefully should we watch for each other's souls! (22) Sometimes God calls his servants apart to speak to them. We must have fresh revelations. (24) The prophet was shut within his house to teach him the necessity of dealing alone with God for strength and wisdom. We may find the same glory in the house as the plain. (26) Nothing is more to be dreaded than God's silences, by which He indicates the uselessness of further remonstrance and appeal.

WEDNESDAY JULY 4.—EZEKIEL IV.

The Siege (1-8).—Whilst Ezekiel was in Babylon with the first batch of captives, the remainder of the nation in Jerusalem was passing through the last stages of the famine or siege. The symbolism of this chapter, depicting to the captives the course of events, was evidently wrought out in vision, as the eating of the prophetic roll. (1-3) This tile must have been a sun-dried brick. The iron pan represented the investing army. (4) This word always means to bear the punishment due to sin (Num. xiv. 33; Lev. xix. 8; Isa. liii. 11). The prophet was the type of the great Sin-bearer. (5) It is not clear what these numbers refer to. 360 years is the time between the erection of Jeroboam's calves and the year of the Babylonian captivity. But the passage is chiefly interesting, because it establishes the day for a year system of calculation. (7) The uncovered arm denotes preparation for action, as though the prophet were here engaged in the siege, as in the previous verses, in representing his people. What a contrast between Ezekiel and Christ, in the matter of sin-bearing; each is said to bear them, but Christ bears them away. Ezekiel did not deliver his people.

The Famine (9-17).—These were the coarsest kinds of grain, only eaten by the very poor. Their mixture and stinted supply (10oz.) all pointed to the dire extremity of the famine. (11) About 1½ pint. (12) The Arabs employ dung for fuel; to use human dung would indicate the direst necessity. For a few it would mean uncleanness, equivalent to the Hindoo breaking of caste. (14) As a priest Jeremiah had been taught to be more careful in his diet. But clearly the prescriptions of the Levitical code must be subservient to great moral considerations. (16) Bread is the staff of life. God gives it. And when it is withheld, we should search and try our ways to see what controversy God has with us.

THURSDAY, JULY 5.—EZEKIEL V.

The Fate of the Jews (1-4).—The Eastern is very proud of his beard. Its destruction on the part of Ezekiel indicated the cost to God of the fate of the beloved city. A third of its inhabitants destroyed as by fire (see 12); another third by the sword; and the remainder scattered to the winds of heaven. The balances remind us that God does nothing at random, but ever acts judicially and thoughtfully. (3) The remnant that ultimately escaped under Gedaliah (Jer. xl.) are probably alluded to in these words, but of these only few survived.

The Sins and Fall of Jerusalem (5-17).—Here is the poetical counterpart of the previous verses. Jerusalem was meant to be the source of religious influence to the world. (6) See R.V. "She hath rebelled against my judgments in doing wickedness more than the nations." The position of privilege assigned to Jerusalem made her fall the greater. The measure of our privilege is that of our responsibility. To whom much is given of them much will be required. (7) "Because ye are turbulent more than the nations," etc. (R.V. 8) If God be for us who can be against us; but if God be against us who can be for us? (9) This included the siege of Titus, and perhaps those coming scenes in which Jerusalem is to play so terrible a part. (10) Moses' threatenings are repeated with a terrible addition (Lev. xxvi. 29; Lam. ii. 20; iv. 10). God is as true to his threats as to his promises. He cannot pass over presumptuous and high-handed rebellion. (11) Take heed of 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. (15) The existence of the Jewish people, as an execration and byeword, has indeed been "an instruction" to the world. There is no greater marvel in the world to-day. On the one hand they are a standing witness to the inevitable results of apostacy, on the other to God's faithfulness to his everlasting covenant. (17) The beasts are referred to in Deut. xxxii. 24, 2 Kings xvii. 25.

FRIDAY, JULY 6.—EZEKIEL VI.

Desolation (1-7).—The mountains are addressed as having been the principal scene in the idolatries and abominations of the chosen people. God makes a desolation wherever we make an idol. (4) The impotence of the idols was demonstrated, as not able to deliver their votaries, that lay slain at their base. (6) What the people trusted in for defence would cause their awful ruin.

Mercy (8-10).—There is a very touching note here. God speaks of Himself as having been broken with his people's sin; like a husband by his wife's infidelity, or a parent by his child's persistent sin. But God comforts Himself by anticipating the time when the scattered remnant should remember Him and turn again to his love and fear. Nothing will give sinners one day such poignant anguish as to remember how ill they treated the tender love of God. Then they shall look on Him they pierced and mourn. Self-loathing will bow them to the dust. Ah, broken heart of Christ, smite our hearts and break them, that streams of penitence may flow. (10) There is a reason and purpose in all God's dealings with us.

The Accomplished Indignation (11-14).—These were expressions of extreme grief. Diblath was on the Dead Sea, at the extreme border of the wilderness (Jer. xlviii. 22). Wandering from God brings desolation and misery into the soul. The close walk with Him is the happy one. If you would fly from Him, fly to Him.

SATURDAY, JULY 7.—EZEKIEL VII.

The previous prophecy continued, now addressed to the whole land.

The Imminence of Evil. (1-13) The thought of this paragraph is the nearness and certainty of destruction. The nearness of the end is a familiar thought with inspired writers (1 Pet. iv. 7). The night is far spent, the day is at hand. (4) Our sins bring their inevitable recompense in their heart. (5) One supreme blow would suffice to stagger the land and inflict God's vengeance. (7) It was no mere echo and reverberation among the hills. (11) The power of the Chaldeans, by which Israel's chastisement was to be inflicted, had blossomed in proud insolence, and was ready to do its terrible mission. (12) He who had bought an estate would not enjoy it, and he who sold one need have no great regret, as in any case he must soon have lost it.

The Futility of Resistance (14-22).—In graphic words we have the anguish in the city, and the no less anguish of the fugitives mourning plaintively. (19) The silver and gold idols flung in the streets would not appease or stay the ruthless hate of the invader any more than the metal would feed their own gnawing hunger. How often is money the stumbling-block of iniquity! (20) God had set his temple among them, but they had used it for their abominable idols which they erected there. For this cause He would treat it as a polluted thing, and heathen soldiers would enter the holy place reserved only for the priests.

The Chain of Captivity (23-27).—When captives were led off to a foreign land, a chain was passed from neck to neck. Those who had burst the bonds of God's holy law would be bound with chains. The silken bond of love is a thousand times better than that of iron law. (26) Thus God answered the idle boast of Jer. xviii. 18. (27) There is a Nemesis in life, an exact correspondence between men's sins and penalty. No salvation is to be found save that which is offered in the wounds of Jesus.

VILLAGE MISSION WORK.

Dear Sir,—I have recently spent a week in the work of the Gospel in a cluster of villages in and around Burgh Heath, Epsom, Surrey. I think we have in the earnest labours of Mr. Hodson, Christian and fruit farmer there, an object lesson of what can be done in the villages of England by faithful men resident in villages and engaged in the business of daily life.

At Burgh Heath I found a day school wherein the village children are taught by certificated master and mistress, both of whom are Christian workers. On Sundays this school-room is used as a mission room, and Gospel services are held. On one of the week evenings some fifty or more converted men and women came together for Bible study and prayer. At Banstead a resident missionary is working among the people; he gathers fifty to eighty people to a Gospel service on Sunday evening. In this village Mr. Hodson wishes to erect a new mission room, which is much needed. At Ashtead, another large village, there has recently been erected under his stewardship a most compact and neat new mission room where services are conducted weekly by Gipsy Smith.

In each of these village centres, (and their influence extends for miles around), there are Sunday-schools for the young, tent and open-air gatherings, indoor sermons, etc. I commend this work to the prayers of your readers, and their practical sympathy.—Yours sincerely,

John M. McAuliffe.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 8.

PRESENTATION IN THE TEMPLE.—Luke ii. 25-38.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 32.

THERE was a double purpose in this visit to the Temple. First, the ceremonial purification of Mary, which the law required forty days after the birth of a son (Lev. xii.), and secondly, the redemption of the child. The law claimed the first-born for God (Exod. xiii. 2), but when the service of the Levites was accepted in place of that of the first-born (Numb. viii. 15-18), it became necessary only to pay a ransom price for the child (Numb. xviii. 15, 16). The offering presented by Mary (24) was that allowed in cases of poverty, another testimony to the condescending love of the Son of God.

No such ceremony of presentati on or dedication is enjoined in the New Testament. Yet Christian parents should not fail, either publicly, or in their own home, to recognise their child as God's gift, and to give him back to God for his service. See the example of Hannah with Samuel (1 Sam. i. 27, 28).

SIMEON (25-35) occupies the greater portion of this lesson. Attempts have been made to identify him with the rabbi Simeon, son of the famous Hillel, and father of Gamaliel, but without success.

His beautiful character (25).—"Just" may describe his conduct before men; "devout" his spirit before God. The two should ever be united. To separate one from the other is to destroy both. The best basis for righteousness before men is devotion to God. "Waiting" with an expectation that was intelligent, because enlightened by the Divine Word (Isa. xl. 1); confident, because careful examination showed him that the time for the appearing of Messiah was at hand; and eager, because he was conscious of the need which Christ was able to meet. Only the sad can appreciate consolation. The power of his piety was "the Holy Ghost." We have clearer teaching as to who the Holy Ghost is, and as to the work He does. Let us not be less subject to his influence.

The revelation made to him was a very striking one (26). Two experiences are sure to every man. He will see death, and will see Christ. Everything depends upon the order in which these two are seen. To see Christ first is to make death what it was to Simeon—a peaceful departure. If He is never seen until after death, how terrible must be both visions! Be sure that you now see Christ by faith.

The song of Simeon is remarkable (1) because of the manner in which he speaks of death (28, 29). Godet says that "Simeon represents himself under the image of a sentinel whom his master has placed in an elevated position, and charged to look for the appearance of a star, and then announced it to the world. He sees this long-desired star; he proclaims its rising, and asks to be relieved of the post he has occupied so long." If, like Simeon, we receive Christ as our consolation and salvation, and take Him into the arms of our faith, our death will be like his (2 Tim. iv. 6). Remarkable (2) for the clearness of his views of the work of Christ. He sees not only his own personal Saviour, but One whose salvation is intended for all people. It was no more than prophecy had foretold, but much more than the bulk of the people believed. He was free from the narrow Jewish prejudices that blinded the eyes of many.

His Message (34, 35) was full of the spirit of prophecy. He foresaw and foretold the suffering that should precede the glory. How perfectly the word was fulfilled! Christ Himself was constantly spoken against. Recall some of the terms of reproach hurled at Him. And in his followers the same was true. "Among Pagans the Christians were charged with cannibalism, incest, and every conceivable atrocity; and Suetonius, Pliny, Tacitus have no gentler words for Christianity than an execrable, extravagant, and malefic superstition."—Cambridge Bible. Mary's share in the suffering of her Son had its climax when she saw Him die. "Fall and rising again" may refer to the same persons. For the humbler in order to exalt; wounds in order to heal. Or, the words may refer to different persons. To some He was a stone of stumbling and a rock of offence. But their treatment of Him was a revelation of their own evil thoughts. The Cross is the condemnation, because it is the revelation, of sin (See 2 Cor. ii. 15, 16).

In the mouth of two witnesses it was established that the prophecy was fulfilled (Mal. iii. 1). Anna (36, 37) must have been about a hundred years old. Her character was irreproachable, her delight was in communion with God. Her message was to "those who looked for redemption," etc, an indication that in spite of prevailing corruption they were a good number who were looking for a true deliverer.

LIVING FOR SELF.

THE last time I wrote to you we were in the midst of Spring, and I wondered how you were enjoying all the beautiful sights and sounds that were springing fresh from the hand of God. We are nearly in the heart of Summer now. Soon the holidays will come, and you will then have little to do beyond a simple enjoyment of God's gifts of flowers, sky, sea, cool breezes, shady lawns, and cheering sunshine. And yet that does not seem as if it were all you should enjoy! There is, above and beyond all these, another gift of God, and to remind you of it I will tell you a true story, and then you will understand.

Some years ago there lived in a beautiful part of the North of England a young lady who was surrounded by wealth; who had great beauty of face and form; she was very clever, and sometimes thought she was happy. She lived quite for herself—she never thought of God; never read of Him; never thought of his love: cared nothing whether He loved her or not; in short, she knew nothing of Him. But she did know the fashions; the last book that had come out; the last fine thing that had been said or done by the "smart" people. There was nothing in the world of worldliness to which she belonged that had not been tasted by her.

"Was she quite happy?" I hear you ask. Well, I think I should be wrong if I said she was not quite happy sometimes, in her own way. But it was such a poor sort of happiness, only she did not know that, poor rich girl! Her life was a great, big capital I—it was a useless life; but she loved it. She knew no other.

Yet God loved her with an infinite pity, a mercy, a patience which could be only his. She became seriously ill, and her physician said she must die. He knew nothing of her, but he soon found she did not know God. He saw that she had lived an empty, foolish life, and he pitied her, and longed for her to know God. One day he said to his young patient: "There is one thing I should like to say to you, 'God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' Jesus said, 'Come unto Me. . . and I will give you rest.'"

When the doctor had gone, the young lady was very angry with him. Then, as she saw that it was foolish to be angry with one who had not meant to annoy her, she began to be astonished. Why had he spoken so to her? No one had ever done such a thing before; and yet, if God had given his own Son for her salvation, why had it not been forced upon her attention? She had a vague sense of knowing something about such things, but she had never thought much about them. "Is it right that I should 'believe' in Him?" she asked herself. "Surely it cannot be that I shall 'perish' if I do not! But I am really very weary, very sad, very lonely; and I do long for 'rest,' and he said Jesus would give it."

The words the doctor had spoken clung to her; she repeated them to herself and saw there was more in them than had at first seemed possible. In the long night they came to her; they brought her whole life before her, and she saw what a selfish, poor, empty thing it had been.

Then she saw God giving his Son because He loved her, and the Son offering her rest. Did that mean death? "Oh, God," she cried, "I cannot die! I have lived such a vain life—I have pleased only myself; I am tired—tired of that old life—I want forgiveness and rest!"

The doctor came again, and he told her that every spot and stain on her soul would be washed away by Jesus Christ if she came to God for healing. But already her prayer had been heard. She was able to grasp the truth of God's love for her; she was glad to lay herself at his feet, and to give herself to Him. She knew she had pardon, peace, and rest.

"And did she die, as the doctor thought she would?" I think I hear you ask. No. She became God's new-born child; she walked in his ways; she forsook her selfish past, and lived for God; she succoured his poor, and was very happy. Do you understand why I have told you this story? Look into your own heart—you will find the answer there. Then look away to Jesus, He knows all. He will give you rest and joy, and the power to serve Him in all your life.

ONE FAMILY.

"The eternal God is thy Home."—Deut. xxxiii. 27.

"ONE family we dwell in Him";
How sweet the old words sound!
What bliss, unknown to seraphim,
Is in the sentence found!

The God eternal is our Home,
And Jesus is the Door
By which we pass, and cease to roam,
Saved to go out no more.

Provision here is freely found,
A larder richly stored;
Here dainties of a king abound,
And load a Father's board.

Our Home has music, skilled and rare,
The harps of purest gold;
Glad songs, unmingled with a care,
Are from its banquets roll'd.

"One family we dwell in Him"—
What love should mark each deed!
As each the other seeks to brim
With love we all so need.

"One family we dwell in Him"—
Let jars and janglings cease;
No jealousy the eyes must dim,
Here all must live in peace.

Divided sects and factions here
No longer hold aloof;
All party quarrels disappear,
We dwell beneath one roof.

"One family we dwell in Him"—
Preserved by one high dome;
Loving, as love the seraphim,
God—God Himself, our Home.

OUR VILLAGE CHILDREN.

THE Mission Van working specially among the children of the villages is now busy with the summer work. The new report shows that last year the following places were visited:—Burwell Reach, Newmarket, Worlington, Mildenhall, Thetford, Brandon, Fornham, Old Newton, Stow Upland, Woolpit, Stowmarket, Finborough, Framsden, Cretingham, Debenham, Pettaugh, Helmingham, Mendlesham, Brockford and Wetheringsett. The experience of the year before led us to see that it was advisable to spend several days in a village, making it a centre for the work, and not to pass on too quickly.

On entering a village our first concern was to find one who would put up our horse and give us some information. There was seldom any trouble in this, and then a suitable place was sought for the meetings. Sometimes the children gathered around the van in the field where it rested. At other times we drew on to the common and preached to those who assembled, and on other occasions on the lawn of some friend's garden. Generally a meeting place was sought for evening meetings. Sometimes the church or schools were thrown open to us; at one place the Trade Hall. At others the mission room, and at Brockford an old barn, fitted up for the purpose.

With respect to our treasurer's account we are thankful to God and praise Him for sending in funds to meet expenses, and for the increased interest which so many friends take in this much-needed work. Our expenses this year will be considerably increased owing to the publication of our monthly paper. No worker receives any remuneration. Mr. Hewlett is enable to give his whole time to the work, without burdening it with expense, by the liberality of the Children's Special Service Mission. The Mission has again supplied large quantities of Gospel literature. The treasurer of the Mission to Village Children is Mr. H. Morris, 4, Eliot Hill, Blackheath, S.E.

WHAT IS THAT IN THY HAND?

By Mrs. EMMA E. HORNIBROOK.

"What is that in thy hand?" was the Lord's question to Moses. "A rod"—simply a shepherd's crook. Perhaps it had been a long time in his possession, as men become attached even to an old stick. Perhaps it was newly fashioned. However this might be, it formed a part of the routine of Moses's daily life; a thing to be taken up and laid down at will, as occasion required. In his desert experience he could not have got along without it.

"Cast it on the ground." Moses did so, and it became a serpent, from the face of which he fled in terror. "Put forth thine hand and take it by the tail," was the command which called for such an exercise of faith. It was not, "Strike it on the head!" which Moses would have understood, but take hold of it by what must have seemed to mortal sense the wrong end. So holding, it might have squirmed around to fasten its deadly fangs on the hand that dared to clutch it. The hand was stretched out at God's bidding, and the venomous reptile was changed into the rod. But not the rod of Moses; from thenceforth it was transformed into the rod of God.

If the history or a crook could be written, what material for adventure, romance, trial, and deliverance would not this supply? Stretched over the Red Sea the waters divided. It brought streams from the flinty rock, budded and blossomed when other rods were dry, and in the grasp of Joshua proved a power for conquest. The lesson we learn from this is, that the same thing, at different times and in different ways, may become a curse or a blessing; an evil principle or a power for good.

God asks for what is in our hand; what we have, not what we have not. "The pen is mightier than the sword," but many will bewail in eternity that they ever held a pen between their fingers. With the hissings of atheistic blasphemies, of scepticism, of immorality, clothed in graceful shapes in popular novels of the day, it has slain its tens of thousands. It is truly said that Satan is no infidel; he is as sound in his views as the most orthodox believer. But his dupes are "led captive by him at his will."

And yet what mighty conquests has the pen achieved! Taken up at the bidding of God, used for Him, there is not a more powerful instrument in the world to-day. The human voice has done much in bringing the message of salvation to perishing millions; but the pen, in its transcriptions, translations, exhortations and illustrations, has done more.

And then what more beautiful gift was ever bestowed on man or woman than musical genius, and a voice of rare clearness and compass? Yet see how even this talent has been perverted. Some of the most eminent musicians have sunk in a slough of intemperance, from which no warbling of cantatrice or peal of organ could win them. It would be well if all learned the secret of Haydn, who, in view of his grand conceptions, would kneel down and ask God to enable him to praise Him worthily.

But what is sacred song doing for the world to-day? The singer has a part in the Gospel service as well as the preacher.

At a Gospel meeting in Philadelphia last year, after my address, testimony was invited. A man stood up and offered to sing some verses of his own composition, if the lady at the harmonium would accompany him to a familiar tune. I was wicked enough to let a feeling of pity possess my mind for a moment. I knew that every third person you meet imagines he or she can write poetry, while not one in a hundred really can.

My unbelieving fears were reproved. In a voice which might once have been sweet as well as strong, but which had lost its melodious ring through constant use and hard living, the man rendered some verses, beautiful in thought, clear in expression, perfect in rhythm. Perhaps his "own composure," as I once heard a child designate such a performance, was more of an inspiration to me than my address was to him.

We learned that he had been a professional singer at low places of entertainment, and had sung at every variety theatre in Philadelphia, taxing his powers for comic strains while drifting hopelessly to ruin. When parting from his sole surviving parent, he exclaimed, "Mother, if there is a hell for the drunkard, your son is going there."

Soon after this he was led to enter that very Gospel Hall, and before the meeting was over, was on his face before God, crying for mercy. The love of drink subdued, the love of drink taken away; it was for that he agonised.

God heard his cry, and laid a saving hand upon him. For many years the man had been an honest mechanic, as a Christian, "blameless and harmless, a son of God, without rebuke," a faithful husband and tender father. He led the singing at men's meetings, and was valuable for his talent of adapting verses to special occasions.

"What is that in thine hand?" A needle, a yard measure, a carpenter's tool. Remember who used one before thee, growing "in wisdom and stature, in favour with God and man." Consecrate your natural gifts, your business, to Him. Let Him take the oversight and command. Remember the oft-quoted lines of George Herbert:

> Who sweeps a room but for his cause,
> Makes that and the action fine.

SOCIETY OF THE HEAVENLY FOOT.

Dear Sir,—Since last writing you I have left India, the labours of the Opium Commission in that country having come to an end, and it is now six weeks since I landed on Chinese soil; in the British island of Hong Kong. It has been my privilege to spend these six weeks, except when travelling, always under the roof of missionaries' houses, and even when travelling by river steamers often to have missionaries as companions. Hong Kong, Canton, Shanghai, Hankow (which lies 680 miles up the river Yang-tse-Kiang), and Tientsin have been my halting places, and everywhere I have received the warmest welcome. In this country, at all events, there is no difference of opinion amongst missionaries as to the effects of opium; Americans, Germans, Swedes, and Britons all alike condemn it. And this is almost equally true of the Chinese, both heathen and Christians. As regards the latter, a contrast will perhaps best bring out the significance of their unanimity.

The practice of binding the feet of Chinese girls whose parents wish them to be considered "ladies" is well known. The inhumanity connected with it is very great; the poor little creatures who are to be endowed for life with the much-desired "lily feet" suffer untold agonies during many years, and medical men tell of many complaints directly or indirectly caused by the practice. In some, at least, of the recently-formed Christian churches, converts are taught from the first that this fashionable, yet inhuman, practice is inconsistent with Christian standards of right, and converts are required to cease binding their daughters' feet before being admitted into the Church. But in many of the older communities of Christians, formed before the attention of missionaries had been specially directed to the evils of the system, this is not the case, and a movement is only now being set on foot to extirpate from the native church this barbarous custom. Such is the case at Shanghai, where an American lady missionary has had the subject much laid on her heart, and has been the means of starting this new reform.

During my visit to Shanghai I was present at a meeting of native Christians, belonging to the ten different missions at work in that important centre, to discuss the subject. Rev. Dr. Muirhead, of the London Missionary Society, who has been in China forty-seven years, Archdeacon Thompson, of the American Episcopal Mission, the lady missionary already referred to, and two native pastors addressed the meeting, pointing out how inconsistent is such a cruel practice with the humane precepts of the Christian religion, and how it mars the handiwork of Him who made the human frame, and who found everything that He had made "very good." Most striking of all was the earnest, modest speech of a Christian Chinese woman, an assistant in a mission hospital, a speech from whom was a novelty, even more startling to Chinese ideas than the proposal to form an association for the discouragement of the practice, under the name of "The Society of the Heavenly Foot." The modes of action to be adopted were referred for further consideration to a meeting of native pastors and elders to be held the next week.

I had the opportunity, the following Sunday afternoon, of explaining the objects of my mission to China to another crowded gathering of native Christians, and asking their prayers on behalf of the efforts that are being made for the deliverance of their country from

THE AWFUL SCOURGE OF OPIUM.

Similar opportunities have been given me in each of the centres so far visited, and I am assured by the missionaries that the result has been greatly to quicken the interest and excite the hopes of the Chinese Christians on the subject. They, as well as many of the missionaries themselves, have been ready to despair as they have watched the rising tide of this evil habit, threatening to engulf their country in ruin, and to reduce China, in the words used by Dr. Griffith John, to "a nation of imbeciles." But there are no more simple, unquestioning believers in the power of prayer than the Christians of China, as everyone who has read Miss Gordon Cumming's "Wanderings in China" is aware, and the knowledge that thousands of British Christians are working and praying for China's deliverance from this plague has led them afresh to feel their own responsibility. I am thus supported in the responsible mission that has brought me to China (the main object of which is to find out a way of securing the co-operation of the Chinese Government with our own for putting an end to the opium traffic), by the consciousness that it is the subject of earnest prayer in many a Christian home, in China as well as in England, that such a way may be found, and that the hearts of both Chinese and British statesmen may be disposed to favour this end.

To return to Shanghai. The question of action as regards opium was referred to the same meeting of pastors and elders to which the foot-binding question had been relegated at the previous meeting; in both cases there was apparent unanimity on the part of the Christians. But there was, in fact, a wide difference between the sentiment on the two subjects. As regards opium there was no difference whatever. Not merely every Chinese Christian, but almost every heathen Chinaman, regards opium as the greatest curse of his country. But about foot-binding there are great differences even amongst the Christians, and Archdeacon Thompson found himself severely taken to task for attempting to interfere with so harmless and even beneficial a habit! It will evidently be long before the dictates of humanity prevail to drive out even from the Christian Church in China the life-long torture of girls for the sake of this artificial beauty. Yet Chinese Christians are everywhere themselves the first to insist that no member of the Church shall be admitted or retained who indulges in the use of a drug which the professedly Christian Government of India carefully prepares for him in the most attractive possible form!

One of the favourite arguments of the Chinese in defence of foot-binding, especially when a foreigner condemns the habit, is a form of the familiar tu quoque. Foot-binding, they say, is far less injurious (and much more fanciful, I suppose they think) than the waist-binding in which English ladies indulge. Recently, at one of the mission schools at Hankow, in connection with which the lads have formed a distinct society, they had a discussion on the question, Which is more injurious, foot-binding or tight-lacing? and the unanimous conclusion was that the latter was much the worse! I could not help thinking, when I heard this story, of certain grown-up schoolboys whom I heard debating for several months before the Royal Commission on Opium in India, the question whether opium-eating or alcohol-drinking is the greater evil, and unanimously coming to the conclusion that the latter (which does not bring in so great a revenue, and did not appear to be seriously threatened) is much the worse. And I reflected that human nature is much the same in Chinese lads and in Anglo-Indian statesmen.—Yours truly,

Tientsin, May 8. Joseph G. Alexander.

THE HOPE TRUST, EDINBURGH, has had a successful winter's work. Its agents have been visiting 223 towns and villages, extending from Orkney in the north to Whithorn in the south. In each place reached the agents have as far as possible delivered two lectures, one for children and another for adults. Each lecture has been illustrated. The lectures and views have been very favourably commented on by the people and the press, and the interest manifested in the Protestant question shows that the Covenanting spirit still exists among the Scottish people, and that they are not prepared to hand over to ritualists or Romanists their religious liberty, purchased for them with the blood and tears of their noble forefathers

REV. DR. JAMES STEWART,

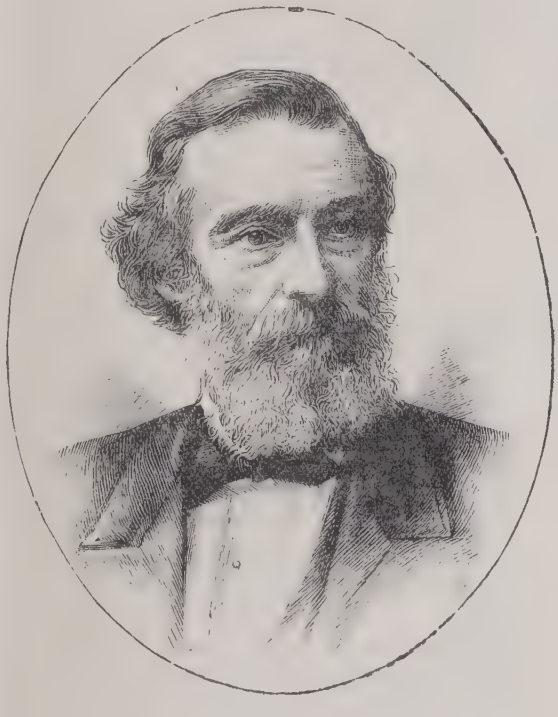
OF THE LOVEDALE MISSION INSTITUTE, SOUTH AFRICA.

THE head and chief organiser of the greatest Mission-Institute in South Africa was born at Edinburgh a little more than sixty years ago. His father, who at one time occupied a small farm at Scone, near Perth, was an elder of the Free Church there at the time of the Disruption, and an active promoter of the cause. On one occasion, when the late Dr. Andrew Bonar, then of Collace, was preaching in his barn, the light having failed, young Stewart came to the rescue, and ever after Dr. Bonar used to salute him as "the boy who held the candle." As a lad he took part in the work of the farm; but, having higher views, he grudged what seemed a waste of time; but afterwards, when Lovedale Institute had to work a farm of 2000 acres, he was thankful for his early training.

Travel and exploration was the fancy of his boyhood, and when he experienced the great change, the idea of missions came into his mind. After completing the usual period of University and theological study for the ministry, he was occupied for a time in travelling on the continent of Europe as a tutor to two young gentlemen, and thereafter as assistant to various clergymen. Owing to domestic circumstances, he was not prepared to go out at once to the mission-field. But an accident which caused the death of his stepmother, who had been a true mother to him, set him free from all family ties, and he then turned his thoughts resolutely to Africa.

His first effort was in connection with what is now known as the Livingstonia Mission. It was to establish it that he made his first offer to the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church, and undertook his first journey to the Zambesi to meet Dr. Livingstone. The Free Church was not prepared at that time to take up the scheme. But so zealous was Dr. Stewart that, by interesting friends outside, he got a special committee formed, under whose auspices he went out to survey the field. On this journey he was absent two and a-half years. It was found that the state of the country rendered some delay necessary before work could be commenced. Eleven years elapsed before the undertaking was resumed. Dr. Livingstone wrote of him to Dr. Candlish:—"From all I have observed of Mr. Stewart, he seems to have been specially raised up for the work, and specially well adapted for it; to such a man I would say boldly, Go forward; and with the Divine blessing you will surely succeed." On returning, after a short stay at home, in the course of which he completed a course of medical study and took a degree in medicine, he was asked by the Foreign Mission Committee of the Free Church to proceed to Lovedale, in South Africa, and take up the work there. He agreed to do so on condition that should any chance occur of carrying through the Livingstonia scheme, he would be at liberty to take up that work. In 1875 the opportunity did occur, and in 1876 Dr. Stewart again visited Central Africa, the first mission party having gone there the year before, under the guidance of Mr. E. D. Young, R.N.

In the interval of these visits to Central Africa, the work at Lovedale made extraordinary progress. It may be stated that upon leaving Scotland he had been married to Miss Mina Stephen, daughter of an eminent shipbuilder at Glasgow and Dundee, a lady whose warm sympathy with mission work, sound judgment, and great activity, have been a source of great benefit to her husband and of strength and encouragement to the mission. The founder of Lovedale (so named after the late excellent Rev. Dr. Love, of Glasgow), Rev. Mr. Govan, was still in the field when



Dr. Stewart arrived, but gave up the charge into the hands of his successor.

Lovedale developed so quickly under Dr. Stewart, that it now constitutes a little village, having no fewer than twenty-seven separate buildings connected with it. When it began, there were in the school eleven natives and nine sons of European missionaries; and when Dr. Stewart arrived, there were forty or fifty residents in the place, and about as many day-scholars. At present there are 530 boarders and 270 day-scholars; in all 800. The chief aim is not to educate or civilise, but to Christianise. The conversion of individual souls to Christ is the success which is most desired. On the roll of the church are 151 communicants, besides which there are 129 catechumens. One of the agencies is the Native Missionary Association, the members of which go out on Sundays to the villages lying from two to ten miles around Lovedale, making known the tidings of grace and salvation.

In the practical business of education, Dr. Stewart made a great venture in 1870 when he introduced the payment of fees. This was done quietly and cautiously, and it has proved highly successful and beneficial. The purely native payments for last year amounted to £2180. A few sons of missionaries, magistrates, and others, take advantage of the institution, and, including their payments, the whole receipts from that source were £3160. In regard to pupils, there is no restriction arising either from colour, race, or denomination. Kaffir, Fingo, Zulu, Baralong, and ten other tribes mingle here in peaceful fellowship. The course of education at Lovedale is very comprehensive; it begins with the letters in the station school, and rises to a full equipment of theological knowledge for native missionaries. For a full course, nine years are required.

The pupils represent missions of the Episcopalian, Wesleyan, London, United Presbyterian, French, Moravian, and Berlin Missionary Societies, as well as the parent Free Church. The pupils are encouraged to keep up connection with their respective churches. An important feature of the mission is its daily manual labour. All must work in some form. It may be on roads, watercourses, fields, or gardens, or in the library, the bookshop, or the printing office; but the rule admits of no exception, because the design is to show that Christianity and idleness are utterly incompatible.

Some idea of the magnitude of the operations carried on may be derived from the fact that last year the postal business in both directions amounted to 53,000 letters, papers, and book packets. Two small newspapers are published, The Christian Express and The Lovedale News. There is a telegraph office and a good library of 8000 volumes.

Lovedale supplies a large proportion of teachers to the missions of all the churches, perhaps half or two-thirds of the whole, and a somewhat similar proportion of native preachers. William Koyi and Shadrach Mgunana, who went to Livingstonia, were admirable Christian men, but both, alas! were cut off after a very brief period of devoted labour. Interesting extensions of Lovedale have taken place. Blythswood in the Transkei deserves particular notice. When the Fingoes were settled there they expressed a wish for a seminary like Lovedale, and promised to contribute £1000. In point of fact they raised £1500, and Dr. Stewart, according to promise, raised a similar amount among his friends in Scotland. The like sums were raised later, making in all £4500. The same good work is carried on there under Mr. Maclaren as in the parent institution.

To provide the requisite buildings and equipments for so great a work, and the part of the annual expenditure which is derived from subscriptions and donations, much labour has been requisite, and much anxiety is often felt. The burden has devolved chiefly on Dr. Stewart. At his time of life it is a burden of which he might surely be relieved; and it would be an unspeakable comfort to him if some friend or friends of missions were to give or bequeath to Lovedale a contribution of such magnitude that the necessary work might be comfortably carried on without the present distraction and anxiety.

We have no space to dwell on the invaluable service of Dr. Stewart to the Livingstonia Mission when it was finally started, nor of his equally important aid in organising the mission at Mombasa, formed under the auspices of some members of the Imperial British East Africa Company. His visits to his native country, too, have been of signal use, not only in disseminating a knowledge of missionary operations, but also in stimulating enthusiasm for the work, and securing the services of suitable agents. In 1892, while on a visit to this country, he was appointed by the General Assembly of the Free Church to fill for the following session the chair of Evangelistic Theology, a duty which he discharged with great ability and acceptance at Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen. His name has been mentioned oftener than once in connection with the Moderatorship of the General Assembly, and with so general approval that there can be little doubt of his one day being called to that honour. For ability, zeal, wisdom, humility, and Christian devotedness, he stands very high at home, and if possible higher in Africa, where doubtless his name will have an honourable place in history, as one of the greatest benefactors of that continent, at a most interesting and momentous period of its history.

FOR WAKEFUL HOURS.

The following beautiful lines were given by the late Robert Charlton, of Bristol, to a young French woman, a member of the Society of Friends, who suffered from sleeplessness:—

When, courting slumber,
The hours I number,
And sad thoughts cumber
My weary mind;

The thought shall cheer me—
Thou, Lord, art near me,
Whose ear to hear me
Is well inclined.

My soul Thou keepest
Who never sleepest;
In gloom the deepest

Thine eyes behold me;
Thine arms enfold me;
Thy Word has told me
That "God is Love."

WORKING MEN'S MISSION, Collingwood-street, New Cut, S.E.—The Brothers Young have completed seventeen years of Gospel labour. Originally consisting of but one small hall in Collingwood-street, the Mission has, under the blessing of God, extended its influence and effort from the notorious New Cut to the densely-populated neighbourhood of Walworth and Bermondsey, and has now three stations or mission halls. The mission services, outdoor and indoor, were last year held as usual, numbering in all 830. The temperance crusade has been carried on with unflagging zeal, and a good work has been done among the young. Copies of the report may be had from Messrs. T. and J. Young, 33, Nelson-square, Blackfriars-road, S.E.

NORTHAMPTON.—A union of representatives from the various Christian Young Men's Societies and Bible classes has been formed at Northampton for the purpose of strengthening the societies and classes, and for united action generally in the interest of young men from a Christian standpoint. The union intends taking some special steps to draw into the Christian churches the large number of young men not connected with any place of worship. The Union is at present composed of delegates from Wesleyan, Baptist, Congregational, and Primitive Methodist societies and Bible classes, and the Y.M.C.A. The secretaries are Mr. A. Holton, 52, Lower Hester-street; and Mr. Will Ashmole, 11, Alexandra-road, Northampton.

THE STOCKWELL ORPHANAGE.

A MEMORIAL TO THE LATE C. H. SPURGEON.

An interesting addition has been made to the many existing memorials of the life-work of the late Mr. Spurgeon. A fine hall has been built at the entrance to the Orphanage grounds in Clapham-road, and at one end of the hall a life-size statue of Mr. Spurgeon has been placed. The statue is in terra-cotta, and is a product of the genius and skill of Mr. George Tinworth. The famous preacher is represented in the attitude of addressing an assembly, with one hand resting on the back of a chair and the other uplifted, pointing heavenwards. The sculptor has been singularly happy in catching the preacher's expression, which is a mixture of gravity and geniality. Altogether Mr. Tinworth has achieved an undoubted success, and the many thousands who will, in future days, gaze on the sculptured presentment of the great preacher will get a faithful conception of him as he stood on his platform pulpit. As a background to the statue there is a chaste architectural design; into this Mr. Tinworth has introduced several panels on which are represented, in relief, various aspects of Mr. Spurgeon's many-sided work.

Wednesday last was "Founder's Day" at the Orphanage, and there were meetings as usual afternoon and evening. The afternoon was pitilessly wet, and the flags at the entrance in Clapham-road drooped as if in keeping with the chastened character of the occasion. The new hall was crowded, however, with a company that followed the proceedings with eager and attentive interest.

Big as was the blank caused by the absence of the illustrious founder, the Spurgeon family was well represented. Mr. Spurgeon's veteran father, Rev. John Spurgeon, presided, and spoke with wonderful vigour. Dr. James Spurgeon and his two nephews, Charles and Thomas, were also there to take part in the engagements of the day. In his introductory speech, Rev. John Spurgeon naturally dwelt on the great qualities of his departed son, while paying a warm tribute also to the high service rendered by his other son, Dr. Spurgeon, in connection with the College, the Orphanage, and other departments of work.

The veil which covered the memorial statue and its appendages having been drawn aside by Pastors Charles and Thomas, short but admirable addresses were given by them in succession. They were there partly as representing their widowed mother, who would have been the fitting person to unveil the memorial, but to whom such a task was impossible. It was deeply affecting to hear the filial expressions of love with respect to both parents uttered by the twin sons. The Tabernacle pastor, who got a specially hearty reception, commented in some detail on the high merits of Mr. Tinworth's work, and the skilful manner in which he had carried out his happy design.

Perhaps the most eloquent speech of all was that of Prebendary Barker, of Marylebone, who could scarcely find words and phrases strong enough in which to express the high estimate he placed on the character and life-work of the departed servant of God. In his earlier days, Mr. Spurgeon was wont to say some severe things about the religious Communion to which the Prebendary belongs, and no greater tribute to the matured character of the great preacher and philanthropist could well be conceived than the glowing and unqualified eulogium passed on this occasion by the representative of the Church of England. Dr. James Stalker, of Glasgow, followed as the spokesman of Presbyterianism. He was not so rhetorical, but quite as hearty as the previous speaker, in his tribute to the memory of the departed. Scotchmen, he said, have never been very tolerant of external authority in religious matters. They will have nothing to do with the Pope, and will hardly look even at the Archbishop of Canterbury; but for many a day the opinion of Mr. Spurgeon was almost as potent in Scotland as the Confession of Faith. One of the leading elements in Mr. Spurgeon's power was his gift of reaching the popular ear. Nowadays we have ministers who are seeking to influence by their writings the learned and the cultured sections of society; but books that successfully address the average man, in language he can thoroughly understand, are the rarest products of the religious press. At the same time, added Dr. Stalker, Mr. Spurgeon had far more learning than most people give him credit for. His Commentary on the Psalms especially evinces a very wide range of scholarship. In closing, Dr. Stalker expressed the warm and deep interest that many in Scotland are taking in the career of Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, and the hope that he may be empowered to fulfil all the great responsibilities of his position.

Rev. David Davies, of Brighton, having, as a Baptist pastor, added his tributary stone to the cairn, Dr. James Spurgeon briefly, but earnestly, pleaded the claims of the Orphanage, which needs £10,000 a year for its due support.

Another meeting was held in the evening, when Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and other friends spoke.

MR. CHARRINGTON'S RETURN.

There have been many demonstrations in the East End, but for spontaneity and the measure of its enthusiasm nothing has excelled that which took place on Tuesday evening last week, to welcome Mr. F. N. Charrington, L.C.C., and the superintendent of the Tower Hamlets Mission, back to his labours in Mile End. Elaborate preparations had been made at the Great Assembly Hall. The exterior was gay with flags and ornamental devices, and the interior was a scene of almost indescribable beauty.

Mr. E. H. Kerwin, Captain Hamilton, Mr. E. P. Telford, and Mr. Thos. Richardson journeyed to Cannon-street Railway Station, to meet Mr. Charrington. At St. Mary's, Whitechapel, it was proved beyond a doubt that Mr. Charrington has the warm sympathy of East-Enders. It is estimated that ten thousand persons gathered, whilst the way to the Great Assembly Hall was literally blocked with a dense mass of humanity. Cheer after cheer rose as Mr. Charrington and the four gentlemen already named stepped into the carriage and pair, and, headed by the Crusaders' band, slowly made their way to the Hall, through the throngs of people. Phœnix Orders and temperance friends with their banners marched in the long procession. Opposite the London Hospital the horses were taken from the carriage, which for the rest of the journey was drawn by willing hands.

Mr. J. Williams Benn, M.P., L.C.C., presided over the meeting in the Hall, being supported by a host of friends. Mr. Kerwin said that numerous letters had been received from friends congratulating them on Mr. Charrington's return. On behalf of the thousands that had gathered, he tendered hearty congratulations to Mr. Charrington that God in his mercy and love had spared his life. While Mr. Charrington had been away, the work had been carried on as usual, and God had abundantly blessed the efforts put forth. No less than 108 had joined in membership. Then the Children's Hall had been fitted up, and was nearly ready for opening. In conclusion, Mr. Kerwin welcomed Mr. Charrington amongst them, and trusted he would be spared many years to carry on the work he had commenced.

Mr. Charrington, who met with a tremendous ovation, thanked God that he was home once more. He also thanked Mr. Kerwin and all the friends for the work they had done during his absence for so many months on the other side of the world. He followed with some of his experiences abroad. He spoke of the large amount of drinking going on in the colonies; he had used his opportunities to the utmost for good among those he came in contact with.

Mr. R. C. Morgan added his testimony to the great work accomplished by Mr. Charrington and his helpers, and as one of its oldest friends, he could look back and remember Mr. Charrington when a young man, and the bold stand he had made for Christ. He hoped that God would abundantly use him in the future.

Mr. J. S. Harrison, Mr. Thos. Richardson, and Mr. Geo. Nokes also spoke, and the Chairman eulogised Mr. Charrington's work, both at Mile End and on the County Council, saying that although many of his colleagues at Spring Gardens did not agree with his methods, they all acknowledged the sincerity of the man.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

OPENING MEETING.

Under very favouring circumstances outwardly, this long-established Conference opened its public sessions on Tuesday morning. The crowd was not so great as we have often seen it. The multiplication of these Christian conferences throughout the country must of necessity relieve somewhat the strain on Mildmay, which was wont, a few years since, to be the only great gathering of the kind in the south of England. The well-accustomed figure of Sir Arthur Blackwood no longer fills the chair at Mildmay, and to regular attenders of the Conference that is a big blank indeed. One is almost inclined to say that, as a model chairman, we should not look upon his like again. The happy memories of him in that capacity make the post a difficult one for his successor; but an excellent choice has been found in the person of Lord Polwarth, whose well-known spirituality of character and catholic sympathies fit him for the presidency of such an œcumenical gathering.

After the audience had sung two verses of Dr. Pennefather's familiar hymn—

Jesus, stand among us,
In thy risen power,

the opening petitions were offered, according to time-honoured custom, by Rev. W. H. Barlow, vicar of Islington.

The Chairman read a part of Rev. vii., and proceeded to give some introductory words, which he began by a warm and touching tribute to the memory of his predecessor in the chair. We mourn over the loss of such honoured servants of God, but the Master has need of them; and we are glad in the satisfaction of our Lord, as He gathers to Himself, one by one, those who have served Him here. The subject of the Conference this year Lord Polwarth thought to be very appropriate to the circumstances of the time. We come here with many and varied needs, and great is the provision of God in giving us of the might of his Spirit, the love of his Son, and the fulness of Himself. God is ever working out with infinite calmness and tender grace the purposes of his redeeming love in the lives of his people. The great works of God are all silent, e.g., the dew or the sunlight. Oh to think of the might of God, put forth not to crush but to revive and refresh us. May we realise that might, as God is in the midst of us in Conference. Not the speakers but God Himself must bring the blessing that will profit and will abide. "God the Comforter," oh, the blessed tender expression; He will give us of his comfort in these gatherings, according to our need and our faith.

Another song was sung, and the first address was given by

PREBENDARY WEBB-PEPLOE.

Having read from Eph. iii. 14-19, he said that his special province was to open out the subject in its general bearings. The task is almost a superhuman one. We are to speak of the whole family of God, in heaven and on earth; but before we understand the expression "the whole family of God," we must understand how sinful men got into that family. All are not yet in the family, and may not take our blessings; we speak to-day specially of the chosen children of God. Let us think of the Apostle's expression "For this cause." We must go back in the Epistle and see that he is speaking of God's provision in Christ for those who would take Him as a Saviour. He concludes that the whole world is under disobedience, and therefore under the Divine wrath. But—the huts of man are often distressful, while those of God are always delightful—but God in his great mercy provided a perfect salvation; and in its acceptance we are changed from strangers into sons. Further on the Apostle compares us to stones in the building of Christ, and to branches of the Living Vine. Because of our adoption into the family—"for this cause"—we may claim of the Father, through the Son, by the Spirit, what we will according to our need. The writer sees a glorious vision of what we might enjoy of the power and privileges of the household of faith. As the family of God we ought to claim certain privileges, possess certain powers, and attain to certain possibilities. While that is so, all may not know their high calling, so we need to comprehend, "with all saints," what our blessings are. As soon as we truly believe in Christ we are constituted a saint: even such sinners as were in Thessalonica. Do we apprehend our saintship—our being set apart for God in every spark of our vitality and every possibility of our powers?

Then Paul reminds us of the provision that is ours, and says that it is "according to the riches of his glory." What do we mean by glory? It is a remarkable word. These abstract words, such as faith, love, joy, glory, are never defined for us in the Scripture. Glory may be said to be the possession and manifestation of certain qualities which are inherently excellent and comparatively wonderful. There are two kinds of glory—one communicable and the other incommunicable. Human position, power and wisdom can be passed from one to another, but even in human beings there is the incommunicable glory of character. Speaking with all humility, we would say that we cannot believe even God can communicate to us his absolute and inherent glory. But He can communicate to us the glory of his power and grace and wisdom. But He can also do what man cannot do—communicate the attributes of his character. What do we understand by the glory of God? We cannot see it unless we die, and then we see a little of it; but we must absolutely die if we would absolutely see it. We turn to the person of Christ, "the glory as of the only begotten of the Father full of grace and truth." The glory of God is seen "in the face of Jesus Christ." We cannot dwell on his divine majesty, but look at the riches of his glory (Rom. ii. 4) seen in the goodness and longsuffering of God. Again we are told that in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge (Col. ii. 3). In Eph. i. 7 and ii. 7 we have the riches of his grace, and in chap. iii. "the unsearchable riches of his grace." Every need is met. It is the glory of God to have sent us such a Saviour with such a wonderful provision. Do we not well to bow and adore?

Again we read of the riches of the glory of his mercy; that we have to tell out to others; and in the chosen vessels of his grace God finds "his inheritance in the saints." Again in Col. i. 27 we are told of "the riches of the glory of this mystery"—Christ in us the hope of glory. These are only a glimpse of the meaning of the mighty words as to the measure of the Apostle's hopes for his fellow Christians.

What, then, does the Apostle ask for the Church? Oh, the shallow weakness of the exposition that makes the prayer all one, with no distinction or gradation of blessing. The teaching of Christ ever shows a progressive truth. Actively or objectively there may be no difference between the indwelling of the Holy Ghost and the indwelling of God Himself. But the Apostle prays that as we advance in spiritual things we may have a growing comprehension of our privileges. We confine ourselves just now to the one thought—the strengthening with might by his Spirit in the inner man. It is the third person of the Trinity that we are directed to here as the Giver of blessing in this dispensation. Even in these latter days some need to be told that there is such a person as the Holy Ghost, who is the channel of all blessing in the Church to-day. In our confirmation classes how few seem to realise or understand this truth. The Spirit is the great Worker, even in the material creation; but in the spiritual domain God the Holy Ghost, has deigned to do what He very seldom seems to receive credit or thanks for on the part of those who are the object of his working. As the Son came to earth and became incarnate, so the Holy Ghost was content to be sent forth to dwell on earth; and for eighteen hundred and sixty years He has borne resistance, grieving, being wounded and hurt, that He might bring blessing to men. Wondrous patience! Again, as the Son was sent of the Father, the Holy Ghost was willing to be sent. We send our servants; and the Holy Ghost is willing to serve the Father and the Son for our sakes, waiting patiently for admittance into the soul.

As to the sphere in which He works, it is called "the inner man." What is the inner man? The best way to discover would be to remember the contrast suggested by the words, "the outer man"—suggesting the physical frame. Paul speaks of "the old man," meaning the old nature that ever, and to the last tends to corruption and sin. "The new man" is the Divine nature implanted in us which cannot sin. Between the two there is the hidden man, the ego or personality—what Mr. Moule calls "the regenerate spirit of man." It would seem to include the affections, the mind, the heart, and the strength. When the Holy Ghost comes to take possession of a man, He enters into the spirit department of man, which may either be void or filled with an evil spirit. He casts out the evil spirit and enters; working outwards in each department of our being. He seeks first our affections, then reasons with the mind and convinces us as to duty and privilege. The personality responds and He has got the will. The activities of the spirit are devoted to Him.

Then He has the body which, notwithstanding its corruption and mortality, may be and always is a slave to the bad or the good; and if the Holy Spirit takes possession of the heart, the soul, the mind, and the strength, the body yields and lives out the holy will of God. What a privilege to think that all the members of the body can be subdued, and that we may receive strength in the inner man. Then the outer man will soon follow, and the whole body will be the Lord's. Who will consecrate all to God to-day, and say, like Thomas, "My Lord, my God, take all I am for evermore."

After silent prayer, Rev. J. Wilkinson led in audible petition, his desires being in the direction of confession of sin in the frequent grieving of the Holy Ghost.

Before the requests for prayer were read, the Chairman said that some ladies had suggested that a telegram of congratulation on the birth of a prince should be sent to the Duchess of York, who, with her mother, once attended a Mildmay Conference. Prayer would be offered by many that the infant prince may become the subject of divine and saving grace. Among the special subjects of prayer mentioned by Colonel Morton, were Miss Maria West, who is passing away to her rest not far from Mildmay; thanks for the holy life of Miss Daniell, the soldiers' friend, who died on Monday afternoon; prayer for upper-class schoolboys in camp at the seaside; and for the suffering Stundists in Russia. These petitions were presented in brief prayer by Dr. Baedeker.

THE CLAIMS OF MILDMAY.

At this point in the meeting the Chairman made a brief but important statement as to the needs and claims of the work carried on at Mildmay. We come here (he said) not only to hear precious truths concerning God and his Christ. We are brought to the centre of many and manifold Christian operations for the good of souls, for the health of the sick, for the training of those who would give themselves to the service of God. I am sure friends will not forget during these days to minister of their earthly substance to the service of the King in connection with the Mildmay institutions. As we realise that God has taken away those who in the past have been the chief leaders of the work here, we must feel the burden that rests on those who are carrying on the work. We would extend to them our heartfelt sympathy in the most practical way. I desire to commend all the institutions that go to make up Mildmay to your cordial sympathy and support.

A new voice at Mildmay was heard in

who gave the second address. He said the possibilities of our lives as Christians are marvellous if they are only opened to the reception of the wealth of God's provision. We may know something of the infinite resources of God, but it is important that nothing should be allowed to interfere with the mightiest manifestation of God's power in and through us. God stands at the door of the believer's heart and seeks to disturb the self-complacency and blindness that often take possession of those who bear his name. How possible to be self-deceived as to our position. We need "the spirit of revelation" in the full and perfect knowledge of God. How easy it would be for us to let go our hold on things which grieve the Spirit, and hinder the putting forth of his might if the eyes of our heart were but opened, that we might know the riches of his inheritance in the saints, and the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe. When Paul had seen such a vision he counted all else but loss. Shall we not covet above all things such a view of the Lord Jesus Christ as we have never had before? As illustrating this point, the speaker told of an eagle held in captivity that was set free one day. For a time the bird did not seem to appreciate its liberty, till the light of the sun that had been veiled burst forth in glory. The effect was marvellous. The eagle stretched its wings, soared upward, and was soon nothing but a speck in the blue sky. So would a real vision of Jesus Christ lift us up far above the things of earth. Mr. Mantle proceeded to dwell on the need, in order to blessing, of soul contrition, of a breaking down; of a withering up of self-complacency; of poverty of spirit, and of expectant looking up to God for this self revelation. The secret of abiding blessing and fruitfulness is to yield to God all that is transient and destructible, that it may be consumed, and that the power of God may have free course within us.

Prayer by the Bishop of Jamaica concluded the first meeting of the Conference.

The Evangelist.

A LIVING SAVIOUR.

BY THE LATE C. H. SPURGEON.*

Our Lord Jesus Christ has passed through great changes, yet He has remained always the same. He was once God in the full glory of illimitable splendour; then a babe upon a woman's lap; then a carpenter's son, working and toiling in a quiet village; then a teacher, and preacher, and miracle-worker; then a sufferer, with his visage more marred than any of the sons of men; then bound, accused, scourged, condemned, crucified, dead, and buried. A wonderful change this, is it not—from pure Godhead to the grave? Then He rose again, and rising, He revealed Himself in his glory to his disciples, meeting with them by the sea and in divers places, until at last He ascended, and a cloud received Him out of their sight; and now He sitteth, in supernal majesty, at the right hand of the Father, waiting till He shall come to judge the earth with righteousness and the people with his truth.

I do not know how to finish up my sermon better than by telling you the old story of Robbie Flockhart, which I have told in this house before, but not to this present congregation. The story shows the blessedness of Christ's death and resurrection. Robbie Flockhart used constantly to preach in the streets of Edinburgh, and he told this story. He said, "I had a friend in the army, and he committed some offence in war time for which he was condemned to be shot. So he said, 'Robbie, I have to die to-morrow, and as I have a little money, I have made my will, and left it to you.' 'Thank you,' I said. The next morning, instead of being taken out to be shot, the soldier received a free pardon; so," said Robbie, "he got his life, and I lost my legacy, for a testament is not of force while the testator liveth; he must die to give effect to his will. And," said Robbie, "our great Testator is dead, we know that He died, they nailed Him to the cross; therefore his will stands good; let us go and take the legacy He has bequeathed to us. But," added Robbie, "that story is not enough to set forth Christ's work for us. Some time after, another friend left me a legacy, and he did die." There were some lawyers who got hold of the money, and Robbie never received a penny of the legacy. He said, "If my friend had been alive, I should have got it; that is to say, if he could have died, and then afterwards have been alive again, he would have seen that I received the legacy. So, the first time I lost my legacy because the friend who left it to me did not die, and the second time I lost it because the friend who left it to me did die, and did not rise again. But," said he, "see the glorious safety of the believer's legacy from his Lord. He who died, and so made the will of effect, has risen again, and He will see that no lawyer, honest or dishonest, shall ever interfere with the legacies that He left to his people. Not even the devil himself shall prevent the heirs of everlasting life from obtaining the heritage which Christ has left them in the new covenant which He has sealed with his blood."

Beloved, the mercies of David are sure, because your David lives; He died to purchase these mercies for you; He lives to claim them on your behalf. He died to cleanse you; He lives to apply that cleansing to you, and to see that the work is fully done. Come to God in the name of Him that is living, and was dead; I entreat you to come unto Him. How happy should I be if all in this congregation came to Christ! You who have come, come again, looking unto Jesus; and you who have never come before, oh, that this night might be made memorable by your coming to Him who ever liveth to save the sons of men! Dreams of happiness, and thoughts of joy, flit across my mind as I stand here, and think that perhaps—nay, great Lord, I drop the "perhaps," for it will be so—you will yield yourself to Jesus to-night, He will give you "the sure mercies of David," He will enter into covenant with you, and then each one of you will say—

> Now will I tell to sinners round,
> What a dear Saviour I have found;
> I'll point to thy redeeming blood,
> And say, "Behold the way to God."

As I remember the day when I first saw Christ on the cross, and trusting in Him, soon began to tell the story to others, and many thousands have come to Jesus by the simple telling of the old, old story, so I feel to-night as if some young man here will come and trust in Jesus, and then will go and cry to others, "Look and live." It may be that some mother here, finding Christ herself, will be a blessing to her children; and that some father, believing unto life eternal, will bring his sons and daughters to the Saviour's feet; and if so, I will be for ever happy, and the Lord's name shall be praised and magnified for ever and ever! Amen.

HOME OF REST, BROMLEY, KENT.

In this Home, which is connected with the Y.W.C.A., poor women and girls from London are taken in for rest and change. Will not some Christian ladies help their poor sisters? Seven shillings will support a girl in the Home for a week. The treasurer is Mrs. Dennes, Thirlmere, Bromley, Kent.

Many who work among the London poor may be glad to make use of this Home for their poor friends. Last year about thirty young women came from different parts of London, and all returned to their work greatly benefited. Young women paying for themselves are allowed a lower rate when in special need. Inquiries may be addressed to Miss Johnson, Ebberlee House, Bromley, Kent.

THE PROTESTANT GOVERNESSES' HOME, BRIGHTON.—The object is to provide a small free temporary home at the seaside for poor Protestant governesses and gentlewomen needing change and rest, or waiting for engagements; to give pecuniary help and clothing, thereby throwing a little sunshine across the paths of those who have been reared in comfortable and refined homes. Owing to their culture, ladies shrink from making their circumstances known, suffering most acutely the pinch of poverty silently and frequently alone. The distress is deep and widespread. Miss Clementina Kingdon, 22, Chatham-place, Brighton, is hon. superintendent.

BRIXTON HILL RESCUE AND PREVENTIVE HOME.—In the report of the seventh year's work, the ladies who have the oversight of this Home thank God for his manifest blessing upon their efforts during the past year. Twenty-seven girls were received; seventeen were sent to situations, seven went back to their parents, and three were placed elsewhere; moreover, twenty-three babies have been cared for before being sent to nursing homes. The greater number of girls admitted into the Home are maternity cases, and the bulk of these are servant girls. The committee urge ladies to exercise greater care and consideration than is shown in regrettable cases when servants are not properly looked after, or are left alone in the house during the absence of the family. While in the Home the poor girls work well in the laundry and otherwise. The lady superintendent is Miss Stacy, 143, BrixtonHill, S.W.

THE GOSPEL ALL-NIGHT MISSION IN THE STREETS OF LONDON is the designation of an agency having for its object to raise the fallen, to rescue those who are in danger, to present the Gospel to policemen, cabmen, and all classes met with during the late hours of the night. Mr. James Pye, the missionary, says in his new report; "Twenty-one years of work in this mission have passed by. I rejoice to bear testimony to the goodness and overruling care of God in blessing the work that has been done during the past year, and cheering the hearts of those who have been engaged in it. How can we do less than urge our plea for the fallen? Let it not be feared that by Christian kindness and pity she will be taught to forget the hideousness of her life, and like a petted child glory in her wantonness! We have to guard our hearts against disgust and severity, and learn to forbear angry rebuke, rather than to restrain an undue glow of generosity. Some say that these women are too gross and brutish to feel their position very keenly, but anyone who has laboured among them can testify both to their vivacity and deep seriousness at Gospel meetings. I have been startled and harassed to hear their earnest cries and groans for mercy." Mr. Pye's address is 22, Ifield-road, Fulham-road, S.W.

FROM THE NEW HEBRIDES.

Rev. Oscar Michelsen, writing on May 2 from Aneityum, New Hebrides, says: "While in New Zealand I was busy interesting the congregations in our mission on Tongoa, and Mrs. Michelsen was much sought for to give addresses on Dr. Barnardo's work in London. We left Sydney on April 23, accompanied by eight other missionaries and missionaries' wives. After a somewhat rough passage of seven days and a half we reached Aneityum, the station originally occupied by Dr. Geddie. Before landing, to attend the Synod, we received the sad news that Mrs. Watt, of Tanna, had died on April 26, after only half an hour's illness. Mr. Leggatt (who is a nephew of Mr. Watt's) and Mrs. Leggatt will go over to Tanna and spend some time with Mr. Watt. On landing we found that, with few exceptions, all the missionaries were present. Then we learned that Dr. Lamb's station on Ambrim had been accidentally burnt. He had lost all his medicines—indeed, every thing.

"The brethren and sisters from the North having arrived a few days before us, we found that much of the business of our meeting had been gone through. My proposal of 1889, of establishing a training institution for the purpose of preparing native teachers and pastors, had, I was delighted to find, been maturing during my absence, and in other hands. It was unanimously decided that such an institution be established, and that the instruction be done in English. The time allowed will be not less than four years. Rev. J. Annand, M.A., was unanimously appointed principal. He is a man particularly fitted for the post. A fine Christian character, and a scholarly man of some twenty years' experience in this mission field, he knows not only the material he has to work upon, but also the people to whom the teachers and pastors will be sent. It is understood that most of the students will have their wives with them. And they, too, will find in Mrs. Annand a lady eminently suited to do her part in the institution. Mr. Annand will have a married man as assistant, who, if possible, should be a carpenter. It is expected that £500 will be required for the first year. We made no definite arrangement for obtaining that sum, but left it open for churches and individuals to have the privilege of contributing. The expenses for future years will depend on the number of students.

"No steps were taken towards getting a mission steamer, as the present arrangement with the Australian New Hebrides Company is very much cheaper than a private mission steamer. The only fear is that they may not be able to keep up their trade with the islands without some subsidy. New South Wales is the colony that will benefit most by a trade with these islands, but their Government, which made a small start in that direction some years ago, has long since withdrawn assistance.

"I shall not see my people before I post this. Very sad news has, however, reached me from my station. Influenza is raging in my district, and a terrible number of the people are ill, and many very dear to me have fallen asleep. 'Billie,' whose letter is given in my book, was very ill when Mr. Smaill passed Tongoa. Pray for us, that the Lord may keep us in health, and that we may be guided and blessed in our efforts to restore the people to health, and that affliction may be sanctified to them. Other sad news is that the Queensland Government will no longer respect the petition from my chiefs, in which they prayed that no recruiting be done on Tongoa. They have started again, it seems, and several of my people have gone away. When a native goes to Queensland, I do as a business man does at New Year with bad debts, I 'write them off.'

"My two little darlings whom I left with my sister in Norway were well when I last heard. It was a terrible trial to part with my other two children in New Zealand. It was harder than all the shooting scenes on Tongoa. My great comfort is that I have left them all for Jesus' sake, and He has graciously led them to happy Christian homes."

"OUR BUBBLE," Dr. Barnardo's new paper, is emphatically the "little ones' own." The coloured pictures make it bright and attractive. We hope many of our young readers will become subscribers from the first. (1d. weekly. Dean and Son.)

LIFE AMONG FACTORY GIRLS.—2.

THE BETTING CURSE.

We will go now inside the factory itself, and hear what happens. One of the clerks comes rushing into the girls' "room." "Now girls, here's your chance; you're bound to win on this horse," he shouts. "Who's ready with her tanner?—you'll all get 7s. 6d. apiece." Out comes the money—two girls can't afford sixpence, so they join and put threepence each, and the man sweeps up the coins and hands them over to the bookmaker, with whom he is in league. In another room the week before out of eight girls seven had won on a horse. Not that they knew anything about the animal, "they would not know a racehorse from a costermonger's donkey," perhaps; they simply bet as they were told by the clerk or foreman placed over them, and it is with these latter, therefore, that the sin lies. Have we, I ask, brought before employers of labour as much as we might their responsibility on this point? Personal experience leads me to the conclusion that it is in those works chiefly where the employer's supervision is slight that this villainous work is carried on. Surely, surely, as Christians, we are bound to make strenuous effort to bring these things before employers, and till we do so mere outcry against such practices is only childish bluster. Before we leave the factory I would bid you, reader, take a glance at two girls, both of whom belong to my own Sunday class, and both of whom, alas! have taken to a regular practice of betting. They are busy arranging some plan with the others, and the girl with us explains that a birthday tea is to be held, and these girls have been sent out to get threepennyworth of rum to give the tea the flavour of which they are only too fond. Is it exaggeration to say that in these ways, such as the mixing of rum in tea, the holding of clubs, etc., the seeds are sown of those national curses of drink and gambling?

Let us go now from the factory to one or two homes near by, and if the scene was sad before, it is ten times sadder here. In one house, where lives the mother of another girl in my Sunday-school, every article almost, down to the blinds from the windows, and the clothes from the children's backs, has been pledged to get money for betting. In a street we enter we are told by one who sees these things daily that for the last four or five years a woman has gone up the street regularly every week, taking the bets from the women who live there; in another street to which we have been directed there is a shop, innocent enough to all appearance, but in reality a "stall," under cover of which a woman bookmaker carries on her work.

One more scene, reader, of this sad chapter of life, and we have had enough. Stand with me for a moment by a deathbed. There lies a young, well-educated, refined woman, whose life, to judge by her circumstances, should have been a very happy one. Hear her story. She had had a comfortable home, little children, a good husband, and then she had taken to persistent betting, and to betting she had added drink, and now the end had come. She had well nigh ruined her husband, her home was destitute, and she had drunk herself to death.

Those who heard her last words, "Can't someone tell me how to die?" heard in them the awful finish of the story, which some of those young girls we have seen to-day have already begun. Here we close. We have had together a few glimpses of girl life in some of its sad conditions. Thank God it is not always of this sort. If time allowed we could take a peep into a tiny mission-room not very far from where we have been to-day, and see there at night a few earnest Christians—"factory girls" themselves, gathered together busied in telling a handful of rough street girls, almost children, the eternal story of the world's redemption and God's love. It is a work of their own prompting, as is also the one hour a week that they spend together on Saturday evenings, when they gather for solemn prayer and intercession.

It is quiet work like this which I believe will tell most. It is leaven such as this which still sheds a ray of hope when evil seems to gain the day.

> "And when the fight is hot, the battle long,
> Steals on the ear the distant triumph-song,
> And hearts are brave again and arms are strong."

To enter that roughly-furnished little room, swept and tended by these girls; to see them early on a cold winter's morning lighting the fire and preparing breakfast for the Sunday classes; to sit among them at night, forgetful of the poor surroundings and the dim uncertain light of malodorous paraffin lamps; to hear them pleading with their younger sisters for purer and lovelier lives; this is to have an experience for which, my reader, if you are not nobler and better I am sorry for you.

Isabel Mary M. Kenward.

JEWISH NOTES.

RUSSIA.

Good tidings reach us from Russia. Mr. Nelam, the agent of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews at Berditschew, writes of a visit which he paid to the town of Krementschug, in the government of Kiew, for the purpose of distributing the New Testament. The Chief of Police at first insisted that the distribution should take place in the synagogue, and not at the hotel in which Mr. Nelam was residing, but at length this demand was withdrawn. April 24 was the day fixed for the distribution, prior to which the matter became known among the Jews, many of whom called on Mr. Nelam, making inquiries concerning the Gospel. One inquirer remained conversing till four in the morning.

On the appointed day an officer and four police attended to superintend the distribution. The whole courtyard of the hotel, as well as the street opposite, was crowded with Jews clamouring for Testaments. Into this dense throng Mr. Nelam pushed his way, not without warning as to the risk he was incurring, but though at one time the crowd assumed a somewhat threatening attitude, no serious mishap occurred. The distribution lasted for several hours, and no less than 2500 Hebrew, 700 Jargon, and 400 Russian New Testaments were given away. After Mr. Nelam had dined, many found their way into the hotel for further conversation. "Now began question and answer until it became dark, and it was time for me to leave. One Jew said that the Gospel was a very beautiful book, but it was a great pity it had come into the hands of the Gentiles, as it would have brought forth blessed fruit among the Jews." Many urged the missionary to remain with them, but this was impossible. On returning to his headquarters at Berditschew, he found the Jews there impatiently awaiting him.

But we have also received sad tidings. Through the death of Mr. Dresin, by whose mediation the Mildmay Mission to the Jews has enjoyed such freedom of action in distribution work in Russia for the last two years, the link between the Mission and the Greek Church has been suddenly snapped, and matters are now in a critical state. Prayer is asked that God may overrule this apparently untoward event for the furtherance of the Gospel.

AMERICA.

During the first six weeks (from April 12 to May 24) of their visit to America, Rev. John Wilkinson and Mr. Adler have been incessantly engaged in giving addresses, sermons, and Bible readings to Jews and Christians in New York, Boston, Providence, and Worcester. On May 22 and 23 a Hebrew and Christian Conference, the first of its kind, assembled at Boston, when addresses were given by various Jewish and Gentile ministers and workers. The result was the formation of a council for the distribution of the New Testament among the Jews throughout America. Mr. Wilkinson urged the Christians present to take up this work at once.

After the conference, many ministers and others expressed their gratitude to God for increased light on the Scriptures and on Christian life and work, and stated their belief that God had directed this new movement, and that the visit of Messrs. Wilkinson and Adler would be used of God to open up a new era in Jewish missions in America. The two missionaries have since returned to England.

SOUTH AFRICA.

From Bloemfontein, Messrs. Day and Malbert proceeded to Kimberley and Beaconsfield, the two great centres of the diamond industry. Contrary to their expectation, they found only about fifty families of Jews there, large numbers having migrated to Johannesburg. Besides visiting, and distributing Testaments, they held two public meetings, which were well attended. On April 9, the evangelists left Kimberley and proceeded to Riversdale, a town three days' journey further south, having heard there were very many Jews there. They were astonished on arrival to find only five or six Jewish families, but the readiness with which one Jew listened to their message showed that they had indeed been guided to that out-of-the-way spot. Whereas the Jewish population of South Africa has been spoken of as 80,000, there are probably not 25,000 altogether.

From Riversdale they proceeded to Cape Town, calling at Heidelberg, Swellendam, Montagu, Robertson, and Stellenbosch, on the way. At the last-named town they conferred with the venerable Professor Hofmeyr, and two other professors of the Theological Seminary of the Dutch Reformed Church, as to placing work among the Jews on a permanent basis. Arriving in Cape Town on April 30, they held well-attended meetings, both for foreign and English Jews. At a meeting for the latter, which was held in the hall of the South African General Mission, quite thirty young Jews were present—bright and intelligent lads. Messrs. Day and Malbert left Cape Town on May 30, and arrived in London on June 18. A. S. D.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

We have received a copy of the thirty-eighth annual report of this mission of mercy, and are glad to refer our readers to some of the facts and incidents contained in it. It appears that upwards of 1400 young women and girls were admitted to the Homes and Open-all-Night Refuge in 1893, and from a careful inquiry as to their birthplace it was found that 196 towns and villages, etc., in England were represented; 12 were born in Wales, 12 in Scotland, and 12 in Ireland, while 18 were born abroad; and it is not too much to say that no better justification is needed than this summary affords for appealing to sympathisers in every part of the United Kingdom to subscribe to this good work, which has really assumed national proportions.

One of the most cheering, and also promising, features noted is the steady increase in the number of "preventive" cases—young women and girls of respectable character snatched, as it were, on the very brink of moral ruin, and saved from falling into sin. More than one-half of those admitted last year belonged to this class, and the report dwells with satisfaction upon this encouraging feature of the Society's operations. Included in the report is an illustrated account of the work of the Training Home at Parson's Green, Fulham, where systematic lessons in cooking, needlework, etc., have been given by a qualified teacher. The industrial character of the training is seen in the fact that, in addition to all the work of the Home—the making and mending and ordinary household duties—about £160 was earned last year by the inmates in the laundry attached to the Home.

There are also detailed accounts of the work of each of the seven district Homes as well as the Open-all-Night Refuge; and many instances of recovery from sin are recorded. Some of the life-histories noted contain elements that would form the materials for a romance; proving that truth is really stranger than fiction. It is encouraging to find that the income of the year has not suffered to the extent that has been felt by some other societies. There has been no curtailment of operations, and no applicants have been refused admission for want of funds; but it is stated that there are necessary works which cannot be deferred much longer.

The primary object of the work, to win souls for Christ, has been kept steadily in view, and a large staff of voluntary helpers, both ladies and gentlemen, have been zealously at work, by which means thousands of Gospel services, Bible, temperance, and other classes have been held during the year with blessed results.

We are reminded by the report that 960 meals have to be provided every day throughout the year, in addition to all the expenses of maintaining the Homes and the work generally. We therefore trust that all our readers who can do so will help this mission of mercy to poor young women and girls. Mr. W. J. Taylor, 200, Euston-road, N.W., is the secretary, who will be glad to send a copy of the report to any address upon application.

ALCOHOL IN SWEETMEATS.—Steps are being taken in America to put an end to the sale to children of sweetmeats containing alcohol, which hitherto has gone on unchecked.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Meetings have been held in Portsmouth, under the direction of Commander Key. Ryde and Southampton were also visited by Mr. Wilson M'Cree, the secretary, in the interests of the Society.

CHRISTIANS IN CONFERENCE.

DUNDEE AND ABERDEEN.

Two Conferences on the Inspiration of the Scriptures, the Jews, and the Coming Again of Christ were held last week in Dundee and Aberdeen. The people of Scotland are being roused on these vital questions in a most encouraging manner.

The Dundee Conference was opened in the Kinnaird Hall on Tuesday morning, when Mr. James E. Matheson occupied the chair. Dr. Bullinger spoke on the numerical proofs of the inspiration of the Bible, entering largely into important and interesting details. Very appropriately Mr. Carr, of New York, who has taken a wonderful hold upon the people of Scotland, followed with an address on the Divine principle and purpose which run through the Scriptures. In the afternoon Dr. Neatby was listened to with deep interest as he spoke on the interpretation of the Scriptures. Addresses were also delivered by Mr. H. D. Brandreth, the convenor, and Rev. James Smith, of Dufftown, who has been an invaluable speaker at all the Scotch gatherings. The evening meeting was very largely attended, and much blessing followed the addresses. Mr. Charles Inglis here made his first appearance in connection with these Conferences. Rev. Aaron Matthews, the well-known Jewish missionary, also spoke of work amongst the Jews, and described some most encouraging results.

The second day at Dundee was opened by an impressive address on the coming of Christ by Dr. Neatby. Rev. James Smith followed on the same theme. At the afternoon meeting Rev. C. M. Grant, of Dundee, delivered an important address on the Second Advent. In Scotland, he said, there was much ignorance concerning this blessed hope. He had never heard a sermon on the Second Advent until he preached one himself; he had heard sermons on texts which directly asserted the fact that Christ was coming again, but the preachers never came within a thousand miles of the real subject of their texts. He believed the Church was beginning to recover this lost hope. He held that they would never read the Scriptures rightly until they read them in the light of the actual, literal, and historic coming again of Christ. Dr. Bullinger, speaking on the same subject, said this was an age of education. Men and women were being trained to stand up for their rights, but it was time someone stood up for the rights of Christ.

The speakers at the last meeting were Mr. Carr, Dr. Neatby, and Mr. Charles Inglis. The close of the meeting was very impressive, several rising out of the audience and giving testimony to the new hope and the new light which they had received as the direct result of the meetings.

The meetings at Aberdeen were held in the hall of the Y.M.C.A. on Thursday and Friday. The speakers were virtually the same as at Dundee, and necessarily the same ground was traversed as at previous conferences.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

The Bible League Convention at Weston-super-Mare, June 18 to 22, proved an undoubted success. A special feature was the presence of two leading experts in archæology, which has now so much to say on questions concerning the authorship and date of the Biblical books. Every fact adduced by Mr. Pinches, of the British Museum, was in distinct confirmation of the statements of Scripture. The lectures delivered by Mr. Newberry, head of the Archæological Survey of Egypt, was of very special interest. His lucid account of the story of Champollin's discovery of the Egyptian alphabet delighted the audience, while in his second lecture on the "Egypt of Joseph," the array of confirmatory incidents made a deep impression.

The morning meetings for prayer, at which addresses were delivered by various ministers and others, gave a tone to the meetings which pervaded even the afternoon lectures. The evening meetings were in every respect a gratifying fulfilment of the anticipation created by the announcements of the subjects and speakers. The increasing attendances as the Convention proceeded testified to the deep interest that had been excited. Addresses were delivered by Revs. Talbot Greaves, E. L. Hamilton, F. E. Marsh, G. D. Hooper, A. A. Isaacs, and John Urquhart, General Sir Robert Phayre, and Messrs. W. H. Seagram, H. D. Brown, J. R. Mackenzie, and others.

TRAINING INSTITUTE, GLASGOW.

The public closing meeting of the Bible Training Institute was held in the Christian Institute, Glasgow, on Thursday evening. Lord Overtoun presided, and there was a large and sympathetic audience from all parts of the city.

Mr. Anderson, the superintendent, gave a report of the work since the start of the Institute eighteen months ago. During the first session eighteen students were enrolled; five of these returned to business, one is engaged as an evangelist at home, and eight returned to complete their course. During the session that is being brought to a close thirty students were enrolled, of whom nine enter upon work at home as evangelists or missionaries, three go abroad as missionaries, and fifteen or thereby propose to return next session to complete their course.

The course of study extends to two sessions of ten months each, and embraces synoptical outlines of the books of the Bible, exegesis, doctrinal outlines, homiletics, Christian evidences, training in practical work, vocal musical tuition, and blackboard illustration. The practical work consists of special meetings lasting from one to four weeks, and a great variety of occasional meetings. These have been held in connection with the churches of all the leading denominations, viz., E.C., Free, U.P., Baptist, Congregational, E.U., and Wesleyan. Special missions and meetings have also been held for sailors, policemen, postmen, railwaymen, lodging-houses, poorhouses, etc. Very gratifying testimonies have been received from those who sought the help of the students as to the value of the work done. A march and open-air meeting has been held in Sauchiehall-street on Saturday evenings during the greater part of the winter, in all weathers, and this effort has been attended with much blessing. There were also forty-two non-resident students. They consisted of ladies and gentlemen engaged in voluntary Christian work, missionaries-elect for the foreign field, and missionaries at home on furlough. Evening classes for those engaged at their ordinary callings during the day were also held. 236 members were enrolled during the last session with a very good average attendance.

Lord Overtoun said he believed that this was destined to be a great work for Scotland. Many had felt a great need for such an Institute in the north. There needed to be soldiers trained and disciplined in order that they should act together and use aright the weapons placed in their hands, when the interests of their country were at stake. So it was with the Christian soldier. He must be trained to use his weapons, which were the Scriptures, and engage in offensive and defensive warfare. Each resident student paid £20 per session of ten months for board and tuition, but that did little more than meet one-third of the cost. Lord Overtoun presented diplomas to the following students, who have completed the course of study and gained the requisite number of marks, viz.:—Mr. Paton, of West Kilbride; Mr. Bayne, of Auchterarder; Mr. Colquhoun, of Greengairs; Messrs. Ellis and Holliday, of Bradford; Mr. Stewart, of Auchterarder; and Mr. Mercer, of Belfast.

Mr. W. A. Campbell gave a short address, and thereafter Dr. Stalker said he confessed he was a little doubtful at the outset as to the wisdom of this movement, as he did not see the precise need for it. Now, however, he saw there was a sphere which this Institute was calculated to fill, and he was hopeful of much success and blessing from it. He went on to emphasise the fact that the old Gospel is not an antiquated Gospel. The work that goes furthest and is deepest and most permanent is that which is based on the simple elements that lie at the foundation of the Gospel—God, eternity, sin, and salvation.

IN A SUSSEX VILLAGE.—In the pretty village of Beeding mission work has for the last nine years been carried on by Mr. George Smith at his residence, "The Towers." He has converted his drawing-room into a mission hall, and with the help of his daughters and some friends engaged in evangelistic work. Meetings have been held regularly every Sunday evening, and the work has extended to visitation and helping the children. Such work as this is worth preserving (for it has been abundantly blessed), and it is, therefore, with something of anxiety that the writer notes the possibility of the property changing hands, as it has been advertised for sale by auction at Tokenhouse-yard on July 3. Someone may be led to seize this opportunity for combining Christian work with a pleasant country retreat. F. C.

THE GOSPEL IN SWAZIELAND.

The South Africa General Mission has eight missionaries working in Swazieland. One of them, Mr. A. W. Baker, writes of a recent tour:—

Makoti, one of the converts at the Mahamba kraal, is an important man in the locality, but very humble and satisfactory. Perhaps fifty years old, of middle size, dear old Makoti said, "Yes, I love Jesus; He takes care of me [or, more literally, 'keeps me going'] every day." On Sunday afternoon, April 1, Makoti and two other converts held up their hands as a lifelong pledge against Kaffir beer. When they came out of the meeting one of Makoti's wives began to taunt him with, "What a foolish thing you have gone and done! What will you do when the beer-pots are standing all around you, and everybody else is drinking?" Listen to this glorious answer:—"I have asked the Lord to wash the taste of the beer out of my mouth, so that when I see it I shall have no desire for it."

While sitting at the Mahamba kraal one evening, at sunset, waiting for the people to come home from their gardens, one of three old women sitting close by drew my attention to a child singing. I turned round, and saw just behind me a pleasant-faced young woman with a baby boy of about three years. The laddie was singing in his broken baby fashion, "Alleluia, umkulu umbuso ka Jesu" ("Hallelujah! great is the kingdom of Jesus"). The mother, with beaming face, said, "You see, we are teaching our children to love Jesus. He will be a teacher when he grows up." God grant that mother's desire!

These women and girls gather round Miss Harris and love her in their quaint fashion. So great is their fear of offending their superiors that they dare not do anything new before the King has shown the way. All appeals for open confession of Christ are met by, "We dare not until the King has shown the way." And yet at the close of one of my meetings, one of the big girls came up to Miss Harris as we were leaving, and said, "We do love your God, and we are listening with our hearts as well as our ears."

We paid a visit to the old Queen Dowager, still the principal power in Swazieland, although losing it daily now that the young King is nearly of age. The money chest (treasury), with nearly five thousand sovereigns, was sent to the young King just before my visit, part of the proceeds of the innumerable concessions granted by the late king. Her Royal Highness, very stout in figure, had a pleasant, dignified face and a broad intelligent forehead. I saluted her with "I come to pay my respects to the She-Elephant of Swazieland." With a pleasant smile she bent forward and extended her hand, which I immediately clasped, dropping upon one knee in true knightly fashion. Then I spoke of the Water of Life. Up to a point the Queen listened with close attention; then an old Induna, one of three seated on our right, eating boiled squash, gave a sign that the interview had lasted long enough. I pleaded for a short prayer, and she evidently was willing, but the Chamberlain was inexorable. Now the three Indunas clamoured for a shilling each. I had taken care to carry only one, and that, I said, was for the She-Elephant. Instantly out shot the two Royal palms and closed over the coveted coin.

For fifteen miles before I reached our station I could see the villages all along the hillsides crowded with people all ignorant of the Gospel, and still unreached, being quite beyond the radius of our sisters' visits. There is a splendid opening for another station about ten miles north of our present station, and worked in conjunction with it. The sale of strong drink to the Swazies is prohibited, but it is obtainable by them all over the country. We paid a visit to the King's kraal, but we were refused an audience, because it was too late in the afternoon, and the chief Induna was away.

On Sunday Mr. Baillie and I went in to Bremersdorp and held two services, one for English and another for Dutch. It was a drizzling wet day, but we had two fair attendances, and arranged for a regular weekly service for the future. The Landrost, who was present at the English service, asked us to take lunch with him, and in the Dutch service we had manifest signs of blessing. In the English service the subject was, "Every one of us shall give account of himself to God."

THE MAN who is not ready to preach the Gospel everywhere, is not fit to preach it anywhere.—Dr. A. T. Pierson.

MISSIONS TO IRISH ROMANISTS.

IN the Dublin Visiting Mission, we have such an organisation as the honoured founder of the Irish Church Missions intended, when he used to say "You must have the whole battery at work to be really successful," a band of truly consecrated men and women for visiting from house to house; meetings "Controversial" and "Gospel" every evening to which they can invite the Roman Catholics; handbills telling the places of meeting and the hours, with plain questions on the back, answered by texts from the Bible; daily schools for the children of converts to attend; and, last but not least, the Homes for boys, girls, and little ones, always full. All are taught by godly men and women, who are well versed in the peculiar doctrines of Rome, and in the true art of winning the Roman Catholics to see the wide difference between receiving salvation by faith only in the finished work of Jesus, and seeking it in the endless performances of Rome, to the exclusion of God's work. Few English people would believe that there are thousands in Ireland who have never seen a Bible or Testament; who go down unto death unmoved: one said a short time ago, when dying, "I gave myself to my priest, and paid him well to save my soul; and if there is any mistake, it is he that will suffer, not me."

For years the Irish Church Mission schools have worked with God's blessing; multitudes of boys and girls have been delivered from Rome through the teaching of the "Hundred Texts," now very generally adopted in England and elsewhere. The Roman Catholic children carry home what they learn to their parents, who gain from them many a truth of the forbidden Book of God. It is lovely to see the joy with which, urged by the little ones, the parents venture out to the evening meetings. The visitors meet their superintendent each morning at the mission house, and after prayer, go out two and two, visiting every room in each house. At one of the evening classes, a visitor noticed a stranger; she went and welcomed her, and invited her to the Sunday-school for adults, where she has attended regularly ever since. On inquiry, the visitor found it was a controversial handbill, which had been dropped into the area of the poor house where she lived, that showed her where the meetings were held; she had some family trouble, and she came to the meeting with a heavy heart, but was greatly comforted by hearing the blessed words of Jesus Himself. Seeing that the quotations on the handbill were from the Douay Testament, she longed for one; it was lent to her, and from the questions she asks I know that she reads it diligently. She has brought me three shillings, earned by her mangle, which she said she had saved through having given up drink since she came to Jesus.

One worker writes:—"God has given us wonderful blessing, far above our highest anticipation. I have never seen such a change in the people in so short a time before." Another writes: "We have had such blessed times, both selling and preaching to crowds in a very Romish place. I find it difficult to give details in a few words. We have wonderful opportunities, teaching salvation by faith only in the precious blood; Jesus only the Way, the Mediator, and Intercessor; the need of reading the Scriptures to know these truths as taught by Christ and his Apostles. One man told me his daughter picked up and brought home one of our controversial bills, which he studied, and it opened his eyes to see what Rome's teaching is, which he never knew before." ## PUYALLUP INDIAN RESERVATION.

IN reviewing the brief time we have been permitted to labour among the Puyallup Indians for the Master, our heart is full of encouragement and thankfulness. Notwithstanding the difficulty arising from the language and Indian ways and customs, we can report forty-two accessions to the Church; and a Christian Endeavour Society organised with a membership of forty. This last has been taken up by the young Indians in the most enthusiastic manner.

Will friends who send me papers note address at foot? Several friends still address me in Tacoma. The great depression now passing over America, in addition to the serious local depressions on this Pacific coast, is seriously affecting our Indian people and work. (Rev.) J. M. PAMMENT.

FOREIGN AID SOCIETY.

ARCHDEACON SINCLAIR presided over the annual meeting of the Foreign Aid Society, which was held last week at 10, St. James's-square, W., by kind invitation of Lord and Lady Kinnaird. The report, read by Rev. A. W. FREEMAN, stated that, in completing its fifty-fourth year of usefulness, the Society had great cause for thankfulness that God has blessed its endeavours. On every hand light is spreading on the Continent, and the reports from the Protestant Churches were never more encouraging. A pasteur writing from France says they are looking for a reformation; millions of Frenchmen have practically severed themselves from Rome, and France awaits a religious crisis. In Belgium the Word of God runs very swifty. Remarkable conversions take place on all sides, not only of Romanists, but of atheists and notoriously evil livers.

In the course of some encouraging remarks, the CHAIRMAN said that there is a very curious theory that the bishops of any country can refuse to be reformed, yet the people must remain under them. Another is that foreigners must not meddle with the religion of other countries. Our own reformation did not follow these lines, for it sprung from other sources than episcopal, and we received invaluable aid from the reformers on the Continent, while for a century afterwards we were in close relationship with the Continental Churches. The Church of France at that time with which they were in communion was Protestant, and continued so until the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, when war was declared against property, morality, and liberty of conscience. At that time we gained by the Huguenot immigration, and are bound to keep up a friendly relation with the Church which is the real inheritor of the true Church of France. This Society is endeavouring to fan the embers of Protestantism in France, Switzerland, and Belgium. It was founded by Richard Burgess and Felix Neff to help the Sociétés Evangéliques, the idea being to assist the native organisations, and not import workers. This work is an expansion of the hereditary sympathy which the Protestants of England should have with the ancient Church that helped them so much in their own struggle.

Lord KINNAIRD said that if we do not evangelise the Continent, the Continent will make atheists or Papists of Englishmen. He urged parents when travelling not simply to show their children the picture galleries and old monuments, but to give them an opportunity of seeing the difference between Evangelical and Romish Christianity working side by side. One of the most important movements growing from this was the College founded in the Vaudois for training Evangelical ministers, and from which some 300 to 400 have issued, who are now preaching the Gospel successfully in Italy.

Miss BURGESS, daughter of the founder of the Society, followed with an earnest address. Pasteur J. Pfender, director of the Société Centrale de France, also spoke.

FRENCH IN LONDON.

THE thirty-second anniversary of this Mission, in connection with the French Reformed Evangelical Church in Bayswater, took place on Friday afternoon last in the grounds of Grove House, Regent's Park. There was a large gathering, including representatives of almost every country in Europe, and of every evangelical section of the Church of Christ at home and abroad. The Hon. Henry Noel occupied the chair.

The substance of the annual report, given by Rev. J. M. H. Du Pontet de La Harpe, showed that the services in the church are well attended, and the other operations much appreciated. The visiting in houses and hospitals, the distribution of Holy Scriptures and tracts, and the care of the poor, gave satisfactory results.

Addresses highly appreciative of the work, and expressing full sympathy with it, were delivered by the chairman, and also by Sir George Williams, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, and by Revs. J. J. Coxhead, Dr. Newman Hall, and E. A. Stuart.

THERE ARE WAYS in which it would be well for us all to carry our childhood with us, even into old age, if it were possible: in its trustfulness and openheartedness and willingness, not only to love, but to show that we love as well. This last alone would cure many a heartache of to-day.—Anon.

SAILORS IN GRAND CANARY.

REV. WILLIAM ANDERSON, of Edinburgh, writes from the Sailors' Institute, Port Luz, Grand Canary:—

"Being on the retired list of missionaries after fifty years' service in the West Indies and Old Calabar, West Africa, I felt last autumn that it would be prudent, if practicable, to escape the rigours of a Scottish winter in some more genial cline. Under the guidance of a kind Providence I was brought hither, and I have spent four months here very pleasantly, to my great benefit as regards bodily health, and I think I can say to soul health also. I have felt it to be a great enjoyment and privilege during my stay to be able to aid in some small degree the worthy conductor of the Sailors' Institute, Mr. E. W. Searle, in his important work among the seamen and others who come from time to time to this port.

"Port Luz is a busy place, as is amply shown by the official lists of vessels, crews, and passengers which entered the port during 1893. These were as follows:—1719 steamers, 872 sailing vessels, in all, 2591. These were from many nationalities, English, Spanish, French, German, American, Austrian, Belgian, Dutch, and Norwegian. The crews numbered 76,614; the passengers 70,413; in all, 147,127. These figures indicate a large field for Christian effort. Mr. Searle is indefatigable in his efforts to promote the present and eternal welfare of all who enter the port. He is ably supported by his wife in his evangelistic labours. On Sabbath days and week days he is occupied in visiting the shipping, and conversing with and preaching to the men as opportunity offers, and distributing tracts.

"Divine service is held in the Institute each Lord's day afternoon and evening; the services are quite undenominational. Bible readings are held on Thursday afternoons, and a few visitors to the island, chiefly ladies, attend these meetings, and some of them have declared they have been comforted and stimulated thereby. Other meetings are held during the week which are appropriately called 'Pleasant Evenings.' At these, everything is done that can be for the harmless amusement and improvement of those who attend. At the last pleasant evening at which I was present, there was a magic lantern and exhibition of the principal scenes in Bunyan's 'Pilgrim's Progress.' This was followed by an appropriate address by an old minister, who urged his audience to navigate carefully the sea of life, so that they might in due time be safely moored in the haven of eternal rest and joy. The company seemed deeply interested in both the exhibition and the address. Tea and coffee are provided when required, and this cannot but have proved in many instances a blessed protection from the temptations of the drink shops at the port. Many wanderers have been brought to all appearances to their right mind by the kindly and faithful dealings of our excellent friends at the head of the Institute.

"Friends wishing to aid the work may communicate with Colonel Morton, Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, N., or with Mr. E. W. Searle himself at the Institute."

LIVERPOOL STRANGERS' REST.

AFTER extensive alterations and repairs, a successful reopening of the Strangers' Rest, 24, Park-lane, Liverpool, recently took place. There was a large gathering of the workers and friends of the Rest, and many others who came to join with them in prayer and thanksgiving. Mr. R. Heber Radcliffe presided. Rev. J. Denton Thompson, Mr. F. S. Arnot, and others took part in the meetings. Mr. Heber Radcliffe gave a short account of the work of the Rest from the time it began, eighteen years ago. Rev. Denton Thompson addressed the meeting on the power of the Holy Spirit, its conditions and consequences, taking for his text Acts ii. 8.

The work of the Rest is carried on by a band of voluntary workers, but the need of a Scandinavian who would visit the emigrants in the ships and at the railway stations when they arrive, distributing the Scriptures among them, and inviting them to the Rest, is much felt. At present the funds do permit of engaging anyone to undertake this work. Mr. T. A. Leigh, 19, James-street, Liverpool, is hon. treasurer.

THE GOOD TEMPLARS in Wilts have established a County Cycling Club for Temperance mission purposes.

EVANGELISATION FOR CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—In your issue of April 12 the attention of your readers is drawn, in a prominent paragraph on "the problem of missions," to "the fact, so often overlooked, that the Church's responsibility is not for the conversion of the world, but for its evangelisation. The distinction," it is added, "is an important one." Further on it is said, "Our work is not the conversion of every individual, but the declaration of the Gospel of God's grace." With your permission I offer a few observations on this view of the Church's work. I do so very respectfully, for I am well aware that they will appear strange to not a few earnest friends of missions. I trust that no prejudice—which is judging before hearing—will prevent their calm consideration.

There may be some dubiety as to what is meant by "responsibility"; but there can be no doubt that it is asserted that the conversion of the world is not to be the work of the Church; that such is not the will of God; and, therefore, that the Church is not answerable for it. Is it so? Let us examine it in the light of Scripture.

The work of a servant is to fulfil the will and to obey the command of the master? What is God's will? What is his command? A knowledge of the will will lead to an intelligent obedience of the command. That knowledge we have in many explicit declarations. Let these suffice. In our Lord's own words, John iii. 17, "God sent his . . . Son . . . that the world through Him might be saved." John xii. 47, "I came . . . to save the world." In the words of his Apostles, 1 John iv. 14, "The Father sent his Son to be the Saviour of the world." 2 Pet. iii. 9, "The Lord is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Titus ii. 11 (R.V.), "The grace of God hath appeared, bringing salvation to all men." 1 Tim. ii. 4-5, "Who [God] willeth that all men should be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth; for there is one God, one Mediator also, between God and men (Himself) man, Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all—the testimony (to be borne) in its own times." In this last passage we have both the end in view—"that all men should be saved"—and the means by which it is to be accomplished: the testimony to be borne of "the Truth—one God; one Mediator—Christ Jesus, a ransom for all."*

The bearing of the testimony is the command to the Church. We have it in such express terms as these: Matt. xxviii. 19 (R.V.), "Go ye, therefore, and make disciples of all the nations"; Mark xvi. 15 (R.V.), "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to the whole creation."

If "the salvation of the world" be the end designed by "the testimony to be borne," does it not mean "the conversion of the world"? But the world is composed of individuals, and in the second part of the quotation with which this paper is opened, the negation is applied, not only to the world at large, but to each individual hearer of the Gospel. The home missionary as well as the foreign missionary, the private Christian, in dealing with an individual soul, is to remember that his aim is not to be the conversion of that soul, but "the declaration of the Gospel of God's grace." Can this really be meant? Or is it to hold good only of those dealt with among "the heathen" abroad?

It may be said in reply, as we believe has been said at more than one conference, "God did not intend the Gospel for the regeneration of the world. The work of the present dispensation is the election of individuals to eternal life." In support of this, Acts xv. 14 is constantly quoted, "to take out of the Gentiles (or heathen) a people for his name," with much emphasis on "out of"; as if the argument of James turned on selection. The contrary is the truth. It is the material, not the selection from it that he emphasises. Out of the Gentiles, ἐθνῶν, God was going to take λαὸν, a people for his name! A most astounding announcement to Jewish Christians. And then he shows that this was only a fulfilment of prophecy, "that the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles (heathen) upon whom my name is called." Why, this much-quoted passage rightly understood tells against the view it is quoted to support.*

Whether this will be admitted or no, we cannot doubt that in "declaring the Gospel of God's grace," either at home or abroad, those good friends, notwithstanding their professed views, do so, that it may be believed; or, in the words of the great Apostolic Missionary, "for the obedience of faith," and that means conversion.

"Seeing, then, that the will of God is the authoritative and infallible standard of duty to man, it follows that it must be the duty of the Church to seek with heart, and soul, and mind, and strength, not only to evangelise, but to 'disciple,' to convert, and so to SAVE THE WHOLE WORLD."†

We are quite prepared to hear strong objections to the conclusion now arrived at, and regret that the necessary limits prescribed to any paper in your columns compel the postponement of the answers to them for another week. We shall then endeavour to meet the two most frequently advanced; the one that the Gospel is to be preached among all nations, "only for a witness," and the other, which is brought forward in your issue of April 12, that the failure of missions hitherto is a conclusive proof that the conversion of the world is not the Divine purpose.

There is one other which we will notice at once—viz., that such a view is irreconcilable with the premillennial advent of our Lord. That it is not so will, we think, be seen by the following extracts, to which others might be added, from the writings of one well qualified to speak, seeing that he held strongly that view of "the blessed hope—the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ." Again we quote Mr. Spurgeon:—

"Despite the gloomy notions of some, we cling to the belief that the Kingdom of Christ will embrace the whole habitable globe, and that all flesh shall see the salvation of God; for this glorious consummation we agonise in prayer." "David was not a believer in the theory that the world will grow worse and worse, and that the dispensation will wind up with general darkness and idolatry. Not so do we expect, but we look for a day when the dwellers in all lands shall learn righteousness, shall trust in the Saviour; shall worship Thee, alone, O God, and 'shall glorify thy Name.' The modern notion has greatly damped the zeal of the Church for missions, and the sooner it is shown to be unscriptural the better for the cause of God. It neither consorts with prophecy nor inspires the Church with ardour. Far be it driven."‡

Commending to the calm consideration of the friends of missions these observations, not offered without much thought and prayer, and begging them to suspend any judgment till the second portion is before them.—I am, yours sincerely,

June 18. D. McL.

THE NAME OF JESUS.

Dear Sir,—I have carefully read through Dr. Robert Anderson's book entitled "For His Name's Sake," and am sure it has been issued none too soon. In your note upon the book in your last number, you say you have no objection to sing of the Lord Jesus as "Brother;" but is there any Scriptural authority for the use of such a familiar expression in speaking of or addressing our Lord?

Again, in reference to Phil. ii., does not the emphasis rest upon the fact that "Jesus" is the name of humiliation? How then can it possibly be the name referred to as the "Name which is above every name," seeing that that Name has been given Him not in his humiliation but because of it; given Him, that is, in his resurrection glory?

I am yours truly,

Algernon C. P. Coote.

THE LORD'S SECOND COMING.

Dear Sir,—Is it not time that the Lord's servants, who minister by word and pen, in the Church and in the world, were proclaiming, with no uncertain sound, the fact that our Lord Jesus Christ is coming; yea, more! that his return is imminent?

That this glorious event will soon take place there can be no doubt. If only we are simple, content to set aside "authorities," and learn, on bended knee, the Holy Ghost's interpretation of the written Word of God, we must be convinced of the fact that the second advent is very near. Surely, there cannot be any doubt that the cry has gone forth, "Behold the Bridegroom!" and to-day it is being re-echoed in every corner of the land. The wise but sleeping virgins have been aroused, and are alive to the fact that He is coming; yet I question if there be that universal momentary expectation for which He must greatly yearn.

I should like to know if at this advanced period of the present dispensation, this truth will be pressed at Keswick, Mildmay, and other centres of true ministry. It is inseparably connected with, and has an important bearing upon, every other truth. It is an incentive to holiness and an impetus to service. I long for the time when The Christian will sound the alarm to its many readers. I am certain a grave responsibility lies upon every servant of Christ who is silent on this subject. If they do not know it, they ought to; if they are uncertain about it, they will have to answer to God for it. God has made it so plain, and if his servants obscure the light, woe betide them! Transcendent thought! our adorable Lord might be here to-night "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." Let us mount our watch-tower, and bend our ear for the faintest whisper of his blessed voice, that when the glorious moment comes we may receive Him with unmingled joy.—Yours, very truly, Wm. Bramwell Dick.

THE LATE W. P. LOCKHART.

Dear Sir,—May I ask if, among the recollections of the Revival days which have been lately stirred, any of your readers can remember anything about Mr. W. P. Lockhart's work in Scotland from 1860 onward?

He was one of the many whom God used at that wonderful time, and any reminiscence, however simple, of his part in that glorious period—a period of which he ever spoke with reverent enthusiasm—would be most helpful in the record which is being compiled of his labours.—Yours faithfully,

Mary Lockhart.

NORTHAMPTON TEST CASES.

Dear Sir,—We have reason to believe that the appeal of the bookmaker Abrahams to quarter session was prompted by very responsible individuals. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of the news of its abandonment which has just reached me. Turf betting enclosures sanctioned by the Jockey Club are now admitted to be common gaming houses.—Very faithfully yours,

John Hawke.

CHRIST CHURCH.—A meeting was held last week in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, to celebrate the first anniversary of the Endeavour Society in connection with Rev. F. B. Meyer's flourishing congregation. Representatives of kindred branches in other parts of London were present in strong force. Inspiring addresses were given by the Pastor, Rev. W. Knight Chaplin, Mrs. Pearsall Smith, and Mr. H. L. Fulkerson sang sacred solos. The secretary read an encouraging report.

PEOPLE'S BETHEL MISSION, BRISTOL.—For the past fourteen years a good work has been carried on in one of the most needy parts of Bristol. The district in which the Mission is placed is densely populated. During the past few years, owing to street improvements, the tenants have been driven into the Bethel Mission district, and the work has grown considerably. During the past winter 4000 free meals were distributed, principally to children, whilst a large number of sick and poor have been visited and relieved. In order to further extend this work, two houses adjoining the Mission were secured; but the pastor (Rev. J. Elliot) could not commence operations owing to the premises being mortgaged, and the Mission not being able to do without the rents accruing. The sum of £580 is required to pay off the mortgage, and another £150 to make the necessary alterations, and fit up the premises. The work carried on is very extensive. A large number of services and classes for religious instruction are held on Sundays, whilst open-air services are conducted. A Band of Hope, girls' sewing class, savings bank, and medical mission are amongst the many agencies connected with the chapel.

* This last passage, we are quite aware, is not to be read in the sense of a divine decree that all men should be saved. "There will be a dreadful hell as well as a glorious heaven, and there is no decree to the contrary. The word 'wish' gives as much force to the original as it really requires, and the passage should run thus:—'Whose wish it is that all men should be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth.'" So said the eminent servant of God, whom the whole Church yet deplores, who tenaciously held, if any man did, the sovereignty of God in the salvation of sinners, C. H. Spurgeon. Thus read, it is almost synonymous with the passage quoted from Peter, "The Lord is willing that all men should come to repentance."

* If it be objected that the preposition "out of" ἐκ, necessarily involves selection, we cannot admit it. Take only one example exactly parallel, where that meaning is evidently not intended (Matt. iii. 9), ἐκ τῶν λίθων τουτων, rightly translated in both A.V. and R.V., "of these stones"; "children—of these stones!" "the Lord's people—of the Gentiles!"

† Deus Vult, or the Will of God for the Conversion of the World, by Rev. C. F. Childe, M.A. (Seeley & Co., p. 16), a pamphlet of thirty-two pages, well worthy of a careful perusal, to which the writer of this paper, without pledging himself perhaps to every statement it contains, expresses his obligations.

‡ Italics the present writer's. He is unwilling to allow these extracts to go to press without gladly acknowledging that many who held the views deprecated by Mr. Spurgeon are among the most zealous supporters of missions. This will be noticed in the second portion of this paper.

MISS MEREDITH BROWN'S WORK.

BY permission of the Duke of Argyll, the annual meeting of the Shaftesbury Institute Mission was held on Wednesday week in the grounds of Argyll Lodge, Campden Hill, under a large marquee erected for the purpose.

The Marquis of LORNE, who presided, introduced the proceedings with a few hearty words on the value of the work Miss Meredith Brown is doing. Rev. O. P. WARDELL YERBURGH, as rector of the parish in which the Institute stands, testified to the actual results, and to the remarkable influence exerted amongst the roughest and most reckless class. Dr. SCHOFIELD addressed himself to the questions: Why such a mass of sin, sorrow, and suffering should be permitted to exist in the West-end? and why workers like Miss Meredith Brown should find it hard to secure the needful support to carry on the work? Gen. Sir JOHN FIELD followed, commending service among the poor. Dr. PENTECOST also urged in eloquent terms the strong claims which such a work must have on the Church at large. Madame Riechelmann sang beautifully:—

There are lonely hearts to cherish,
While the days are going by,
There are weary souls that perish,
While the days are going by.

Miss MEREDITH BROWN gave an animated "spoken report" on life and work in West London slums. Poverty and wretchedness may be found in the West-end as well as in the East-end, and, indeed, the state of things in some streets around Lisson Grove can scarce be paralleled in Whitechapel. "What strikes the stranger most when visiting the neighbourhood for the first time is the swarms of children flying about, knocking against, or tripping up, passers-by, and causing the greatest discomfort. Reared from infancy amid scenes of swearing, fighting, and the use of indescribably horrid language; taught to do evil, and to break the laws of God and man, is it any wonder that they grow up wild and unruly? It is to influence the young lives for Christ, as well as to help the mothers, that we opened our Infants' Slum Nursery, and the Junior Classes for girls from eight to fourteen years of age. 'I was only ten years old,' said one of our girls, 'when my ole gal 'ad me in the public-house. Drink was given me, and I knew nothin' more till I found myself at 'ome next mornin'. I 'ad no bringins up as I knows of; you was brought up gentle; we was dragged up by a rope. Rows, fights, swearin': it was our life. I never se'ed nothink else.' Unquestionably, the chief cause of the poverty and crime is drink."

Some account followed of the factory girls of Marylebone, and of the work done under great difficulties among them. The Women's Night Shelter has been the means of restoring to many a mother her lost and erring child; it has given a helping hand to the friendless, lonely stranger; it has provided shelter for thousands who, except for its open doors, would have passed the night in Hyde Park, or under some archway. The Women's Labour Home is also doing most valuable work. Special attention was called to the Slum Day Nursery, the Girls' Training Home, and various classes and meetings. The work among men by means of the Labour Home and Night Shelter was also described. All who wish to know something of this work should visit the Institutes, Lisson-grove, N.W., or the Girls' Training Home, 20, Clarendon Gardens, Maida Vale, and see what is going on.

MR. HENRY VARLEY IN COVENTRY.

THE united mission in Coventry, noticed in our last, was brought to a conclusion on Thursday. It has been the means of bringing much blessing to the city. Immense audiences have been attracted, and the Gospel has been proclaimed with great clearness and impressiveness. The closing days were marked by much power, and on several evenings as many as fifty confessed Christ. The afternoon Bible Readings also proved most useful; many believers were much strengthened and taught, and many learned to study and prize the Bible more than ever before. A special characteristic of the addresses was the appeal to the heart through the intellect; difficulties were met, doubts were reasoned out, the unreasonableness and sin of unbelief were clearly shown, and the whole position of the sceptic undermined. Great regret was expressed at the departure of Mr. Varley for Plymouth, but it is hoped that the work will still go on, and many sheaves be gathered in during the near future.

FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME SOCIETY.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday week, at Morley Halls, Regent-street, W., Mr. T. A. Denny presiding. Some 200 servants who have passed through the homes, and are now in service, met together at tea in the large hall previous to the meeting.

From a statement made by Mr. C. S. Thorpe (the secretary) it appeared that the year had witnessed favourable progress, and that in each of the three homes conversions had resulted from the kind and Christian influence brought to bear. The number of those who had passed through the homes during the year was 951, making a grand total for the fifty-eight years of 50,699. He gave an instance of the great value the Society was to young women who came to London and were friendless. With regard to the rewards, he said the largest number were claimed since 1885, there being forty-nine Bibles for keeping the same situation for one year. Three testimonials and volumes of "Those Holy Fields" were awarded to those who had been in one situation five years, and three silver medals for staying nine years in one place. The total rewards since 1857 were 1556 Bibles, 254 testimonials, eighty-two silver, and twenty-five gold medals.

The chairman said that many people complained that it was hard to get good servants, but was there no cause of complaint that it was hard to get a good mistress? Good mistresses made good servants, and he urged those before him never to think that service was degrading, for the Lord Jesus Himself came to serve. He warned them against being tempted to leave a good place for higher wages; there was something better than high wages.

Lady Hope then gave some practical counsel, and distributed the prizes and silver medals. Rev. Percival Smith and others also addressed the meeting.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.

THE first anniversary of the opening of this Society's new institute for the port of London was held at the headquarters, St. George's-street, London Docks, on Wednesday last week. Mr. W. H. Seagram presided, and spoke words of encouragement respecting the work. Rev. G. J. Hill said, that from the opening day blessing had attended the work. During the year 996 services in German, Scandinavian, and English (chiefly the latter) had been held, with, at the lowest estimate, 40,000 attendances. Sunday-school, Band of Hope, Christian Harbour Lights meetings, and other temperance work had been carried on; 200 open-air meetings, in front of the Sailors' Home and in Leman-street, had been held; the reading-room and library was attended by upwards of 15,000 sailors; 1000 letters had been written there, and many for those who were unable to write. Several hundreds had signed the pledge, and many conversions had taken place. He concluded by citing numerous instances of men who, visiting the Bethel, had been induced to lead sober lives, and were now a credit to themselves and respected by the crews to which they belonged. Herr Grasdorff, Mr. W. A. Beckett, Mr. Taylor, Mrs. Hill, Rev. H. D. Wilson, Mr. H. W. Maynard, Mr. Freese, and Mrs. Maynard also spoke.

TENT MISSION AT HARLEY HOUSE.

ON Monday evening, June 18, the three weeks' Tent Mission concluded with a most successful missionary gathering, when Mr. McCracken made an eloquent and rousing appeal on behalf of the nations lying in darkness. The tent was densely packed, and the impression created by the speaker's pourtrayal of heathen needs was evidenced by the fact that at the close sixty-five persons sent in their names for collecting-boxes for the "Regions Beyond Helpers' Union."

Mr. McCracken has accepted an invitation to hold a fortnight's Tent Mission in Old Ford, which will begin on Sunday afternoon, July 1.

"NORTHFIELD ECHOES."

THIS is the title of a new serial to be published monthly from Mr. Moody's home during the summer months, with special reports of the various conferences held in June, July, and August. The first issue, which has reached us, contains a number of interesting contributions, chiefly relating to Northfield, fully and finely illustrated. There are also addresses by Mr. Moody, Mr. L. D. Wishard, the late Dr. Andrew Bonar, and Mr. J. R. Mott.

We shall be happy to execute orders from British readers for the four copies, June to September, at 4s. the set, or single copies, 1s.

FIRST FRUITS IN THE GARENGANZE.

THE following extracts from a private letter will interest many:—"We are continually encouraged in the Lord, and signally so just of late. Through the goodness of God I am able to tell of the conversion of a fine young lad, who has been 'Elwin's boy' for the past eight or nine months. He confessed Christ after the reading which we had with them every evening. He is still going on well. Last month a young woman, Nang-amba, called me after the evening meeting, and told me she was very unhappy on account of her sins. She confessed herself a sinner, but now trusting Jesus for salvation. These are the first two it has been my joy to point personally to the Saviour. The seed has been long and faithfully sown by others in Kwanjulula.

"There are others about whose salvation we feel confident. A boy named Salwimbo gives us good hope. We long to see him saved. He is a good boy, and we would not like to say he is not converted; but there is always danger in forcing a confession. The above two came forward of their own free will, which, in Africa at least, is the more satisfactory way. At Dehilonda, Mr. Swan has had three or four lads confess Christ." "FRED. T. LANE."

"Chishuje, Bihe."

A later letter announces that Mr. Lane is very ill with fever; but, inasmuch as no telegram has come to hand announcing a serious issue, it is fully expected that he has recovered.

IKWEZI LAMACI MISSION.

IN a recent letter from this centre of Gospel light and Christian civilisation in Natal, South Africa, Mrs. Aitchison reports very interesting progress. Brick houses are a sure sign of native energy well developed, but only in exceptional cases can time be devoted to the making of bricks by hand. So in her last letter Mrs. Aitchison expressed a hope that friends of the Mission would provide a brick-making machine, saying, "It would be a powerful civiliser, creating a wish among the natives for proper dwellings, and these would go far to do away with objectionable customs."

Mrs. Faulkner Bird (48, Cowper-street, Leeds), one of Mrs. Aitchison's correspondents, writes to us: "I have ascertained that a brick-making machine, capable of turning out 8000 bricks a day, can be had for £34, packed and delivered in London for shipment. I shall be most thankful to acknowledge contributions towards this, and if £29 be given by the end of September, I will (D.V.) give the remainder."

In a recent letter, Mr. Aitchison, after speaking of the profit and stimulus derived from a perusal of THE CHRISTIAN, says: "I should like to tell you how we try to use THE CHRISTIAN ALMANAC. We place it in the school-room, and all the natives who can read English are encouraged in the morning to look at the text for the day, and afterwards to talk it over among themselves. In the evening, all who join us at family worship repeat the text with us. Slight though this incident may be, I feel sure that those who compile the Almanac will like to hear of its use in promoting a knowledge of God's Word among the heathen."

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For special mission conducted by Messrs. Dykes and Bourne at Joseph-street Chapel, Woolwich, July 1 to 13.—For blessing on Mr. J. J. Browne's fourteenth annual visit to Burslem Wakes.—For great blessing on Mr. McCracken's Tent Mission at Old Ford.—For a week's mission, to be conducted by Mr. W. R. Lane, July 2 to 7, at the Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton Park, N.E. PRAISE.—For much blessing received at Mr. McCracken's meetings at Harley House.

ANTI-VIVISECTION.—The official return under the Vivisection Act states that during last year 4046 experiments were performed upon living animals, 2183 of them without anæsthetics. On Wednesday last the annual meeting of the Victoria-street and International Society for the Protection of Animals from Vivisection was held at St. James's Hall. Bishop Barry presided, and expressed his belief that great progress had been made in bringing the question to the minds and consciences of Englishmen. The advocates of the practice made emphatic general statements, but did not give details. The great contention of the opponents of vivisection was that animals had rights, given to them by the same Almighty hand which had made man; and it was curious to observe that the school which maintained that animal life and human life were the same, held that animals had no rights. He defined cruelty to be the infliction of pain upon the helpless, not for their benefit, but for our own. Resolutions were passed, reaffirming abhorrence of vivisection on moral, humane, and scientific grounds.

THE BAYSWATER SUMMER MEETING.

It has been the custom for some years to hold, in connection with the Association, a drawing-room meeting in the summer. This year the friends were asked to meet at the rooms in Queen's-road, W., and the gathering was held on Thursday last. Dr. Parker Young, who presided, explained the object of the meeting, to arouse interest, and to lay the needs of young men on the hearts of the Lord's people. Mr. Walter Wild, secretary, read letters of apology, and gave a few facts as to the work. Rev. E. Grose Hodge, in the course of a useful address, mentioned that he had been at the meeting held nine years ago in the late Mrs. J. D. Allcroft's drawing-room when this association was founded. Dr. Schofield, who followed, gave an outline of the work carried on, referring especially to the evangelistic meetings, and five open-air services held weekly. Mr. C. Russell Hurditch closed with a vigorous and sympathetic address. Mr. C. M. Baker also took part. Afterwards the friends inspected the rooms.

BRIEF NOTES.

The second anniversary of the Association of Dubuque, Ia., was celebrated in all the Evangelical churches in the city.

Mr. Edward Marsden, an Alaskan Indian, has been addressing meetings under the auspices of the Cincinnati Association. He is a very interesting speaker.

Dr. L. W. Munhall and Chess Birch are conducting a very successful revival of evangelistic meetings at Carthage, Mo. Much is expected for the Association as a result of these meetings.

The work at Coatesville, Pa., is reported to be in first-class condition. The average attendance at the men's meetings is 160. The junior department has lately been organised, and has stimulated much interest among the boys.

The Association at Galt, Ont., has been greatly helped through a series of union evangelistic meetings held in the town by Major Hilton and Mr. Grant C. Yullar, a large proportion of the converts being young men. Noonday meetings were conducted at some of the foundries, and a strong interest was thus aroused.

Few only of the delegates to the Jubilee Conference, those who, coming from a great distance, desire to visit the principal centres of interest in this country and on the Continent, remain now away from their homes; and from all parts come congratulations upon the success of the gatherings, and expressions of the hope that they will result in rich blessing upon the Associations everywhere, and in a wide extension of the work.

The French National Council of the Y.M.C.A. desires to supplement the efforts of the various home missions and of the churches. This can be effectively done by helping the churches to enrol their young men as evangelists, charged with the mission of winning young men to Christ. It is impossible to estimate the future of the Gospel in France were we able to make each of our 120 branches of the Y.M.C.A. bands of voluntary workers. To do so, it is necessary, first, that our agent should not be impeded for the want of funds; second, that we should help the six district councils of our work to have a travelling secretary; third, that we should help with wise discretion, for a short period, the rising associations.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A new branch has been formed, under hopeful auspices, at Queenborough.

An institute at 17, West Hill-terrace, Wandsworth, that is doing a good work under Miss Rainsford and Miss Seaman, is about to be joined on to the Y.W.C.A.

The Bromley Association have a Home of Rest, intended for poor women and girls, whose poor homes and long hours of work make such an opportunity of change and rest a great boon.

At the annual meeting of the Ipswich Association, it was reported that the Felixstowe Holiday Home had to refuse ninety applications during the year. Miss Garratt read the report of the Suffolk Branch, which showed 958 members, an increase of 150 for the year.

The Y.W.C.A. Institute, 8, Rutland-square, Dublin, has been moved to more commodious premises, at No. 26 in the same square. The work has spread since this Institute was opened eight years ago. It was the first house taken by the Y.W.C.A. in Dublin; now there are five houses belonging to the Association in different parts of the city, all doing well, and filled. It is hoped that the friends of the Association will soon send in what is required for the expense of moving, a little papering and painting, and some new carpets, beds, etc.

A meeting of secretaries and superintendents of London institutes was held at the Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on Thursday last, to consider proposals for evening educational classes in the coming autumn. The Hon. E. Kinnaird explained that the London County Council will continue their offer to teachers, and it was hoped that other institutes would arrange for classes in dressmaking, cookery, hygiene, etc. Various suggestions were made by those present. Mr. S. Millar then introduced the subject of the proposed "Y.W.C.A. Own Choir." Answering the question whether there is a place for such a choir, Mr. Millar showed its possible usefulness to individual members at annual Y.W.C.A. meetings, garden parties, and in missions. The usual tea and monthly conference followed.

IRISH NOTES.

A conference has been held in Cork under the auspices of the Daily Prayer Union. The last meeting was deeply solemn; many pleaded that they might realise the fulness of the Holy Spirit.

The rapid growth of Presbyterianism in Belfast is apparent from the fact that while in 1841 there were only twelve Presbyterian churches in the city, now there are thirty-seven, and the Extension Committee have the erection of ten others in prospect.

The Methodist Conference has been in session in Dublin during the past eight or ten days, under the presidency of Rev. Henry J. Pope, of Manchester, who was accompanied from England by Revs. Dr. Rigg, F. W. Macdonald, Silvester Whitehead, and Mr. H. B. Harrison. The various reports presented to the Conference with regard to the Lord's work were most cheering. In many places the Roman Catholics, and even their priests, whom Mr. J. Townsend French stated that he loved, were beginning to show a disposition to listen to the preaching of the Gospel in a way they never did before. The spirit of inquiry is abroad amongst them, and it is impossible to foretell to what extent it will grow. The spirit of the Conference was most earnest and hopeful.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, is to receive a hearty call from the congregation at Trinity Free Church, Glasgow.

Rev. Alex. Lee, of Nairn, has been released from his charge, that he may act as travelling secretary for the Sustentation Fund of the Free Church, and also as the agent of the committee for the Highlands and Islands. He is a man of warm Evangelical sympathies and aggressive zeal.

Rev. Dr. Whyte's young and gifted assistant in Free St. George's, Edinburgh, who has won golden opinions from all classes in the congregation for his pastoral zeal and able preaching, has been called to First Free Church, Thurso, as colleague and successor to the venerable Dr. Ross Taylor.

A series of meetings on the spiritual life were held last week at the Bridge of Allan. Several well-known speakers were there, and the attendances in the tent and museum were large. Christians from many parts of Scotland acknowledge that they have been refreshed and quickened by the addresses.

A return has been submitted by the Chief Constable to the Glasgow Town Council showing the number of shops and other places of business open in the city and doing business at any time on Sunday, June 3. The total this year was 2596, compared with 2547, 2630, 2421 and 2428 for the four previous years.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, of the Children's Special Service Mission, finished a week ago a most successful ten days' mission for children in the village of Camelon, Falkirk. Night after night large numbers remained to be spoken with at the second meeting. About 150 gave their names to the workers. On Friday evening last upwards of 100 of these met to be formed into a Christian Endeavour Society, and to be carried on by Rev. John Muirhead, the Free Church minister in the village. This is an exceedingly interesting outcome of the Mission.

In a recent letter Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of the Orphan Homes, says: "It has been our privilege during the past fortnight to help quite a large number of needy children, and the vacant places left by those gone are being speedily filled up. We shall require three more houses to enable us to take in two new children each day of the year, and we think with this the needs of our country will be met. The estimates in for the building of the consumptive homes show that it will take £4000 instead of £3000 to build an hospital to hold twenty patients, and £6000 one to hold thirty. We are waiting the decision of the friends who promised the £3000 to build one of the homes as to whether it is to be a home to hold thirty or twenty."

M. A. MABILLE.

The French Mission at Lessouto, South Africa has sustained a great loss by the death of M. Mabille, whose work at Moriah, in company with the late M. Eugene Casalis, Rev. R. H. Dyke, and others, has often been described in our columns.

MR. MUMFORD, CLAVERING.

The church at Clavering, Essex, has suffered an irreparable loss in the removal by death of Mr. Mumford, its senior deacon and treasurer. He had been a member of the church over sixty-eight years, and deacon for fifty-six years, in which office he served with a constancy and devotedness that never waned. His presence and generous support will be greatly missed, while on account of his high character and extended and faithful service he will long be held in grateful remembrance. His loss will be the more severely felt, because the church, in common with so many more in the country districts, has suffered greatly by agricultural depression.

MDME. LA COMTESSE A. DE GASPARIN.

French Evangelical Protestantism has lost one of its most spiritual exponents by the death of Mdme. la Comtesse Agénor de Gasparin. Of Swiss origin, she filled a worthy place in French society during the lifetime of her distinguished husband. Since his death, over twenty years ago, she has lived in retirement at Geneva, now and then delighting a large circle of readers with her poetical and prose writings. If her imaginative productions have enjoyed a widespread popularity, her religious books, so sincere and refined in substance and form, have been no less welcome to spiritually-minded Christians. Some of these, including "The Near and Heavenly Horizons," have been translated into English. We hope shortly to give a further account of the beautiful life and varied work of the Countess, whose loss is universally lamented in Protestant circles in France and Switzerland.

REV. E. D. WICKHAM.

The death is announced of Rev. Edmund Dawe Wickham, at the advanced age of eighty-four. Coming of a Somerset family, he was educated at Winchester College, at the same time as Lord Selborne, Lord Sherbrooke, Anthony Trollope, and many others who were distinguished in after-life. He was third in seniority at the gathering of Old Wykehamists assembled at Winchester last year to commemorate the quincentenary of the college founded by his ancestor, William of Wykeham. From Winchester he went to Balliol College, Oxford, where he was contemporary with Archbishop Tait. Holding Evangelical principles, his first ministerial charge was at Godstone, Surrey, and for the last forty-three years of his life he was vicar of the parish of Holmwood, Surrey, only resigning the living on account of old age in January last.

MISS DANIELL, THE SOLDIERS' FRIEND.

Many are aware of Miss Daniell's illness, and, therefore, will not be surprised to hear that it has pleased the Lord to take her home. She went most peacefully yesterday (Sunday) afternoon, and during a short interval of consciousness a few hours before, we had the happiness of hearing, and also seeing in her smiles of peace, the testimony to her rest and joy in the Lord whom she has so devotedly served.

I am sure much prayer will be made that this great bereavement may be a time of blessing throughout her work, and that her death may speak to the thousands in the Army who know her name.

The funeral will take place, D.V., on Friday, at five o'clock, in the Military Cemetery. Mr. Webb-Peploe will be with us to commit her to her last resting-place, where her mother was laid three-and-twenty years ago.

DUBLIN FREE BREAKFASTS.—The report for last year says that 24,500 breakfasts, consisting of half-a-pound of buttered bread and at least a pint of tea, were given on Sunday mornings to the poor who visited the Christian Union Buildings. "Many of those who avail themselves of the charity come Sunday after Sunday, but there is a large number who only occasionally are in need of a breakfast. To present the Good News simply and clearly is our chief aim and object. To this end a devoted band of workers and teachers attend week after week, winter and summer, all the year round. Sweet Gospel songs are sung by an efficient choir, and a Gospel address is delivered by chosen speakers." During the winter months penny dinners to the number of 25,182 were sold to the poor. Treats were given at times to young and old; and when hearts were softened by kindness the Gospel of God's grace was preached. The work is carried on by a committee, the secretary of which is Mr. R. Cotter, Christian Union Buildings, Lower Abbey street, Dublin.

Notes and Comments.

Correspondents of the late Sir S. A. Blackwood, who will kindly allow the use of his letters or papers in a biography, are requested to forward them without delay to his widow, care of Mr. L. Heather, 190, Ebury-street, London, S.W. All letters, &c., should be accompanied by the name and address of the lender, to whom they shall be carefully returned.

From whatever cause, the attendance at Mildmay last week seemed slightly less than usual. The numerous conventions might well account for a much larger deficiency, if it actually occurred. The speakers whose voices are familiar at Keswick were in the ascendant, and some feared lest Mildmay should lose its distinctive character. But their addresses were in general accord with the Mildmay platform, and that of our old friend Rev. Marcus Rainsford was like a flagon of old wine of the Kingdom, a refreshing breeze from Hermon, and streams from Lebanon; it recalled memories of Barnet, Willow Park, and the earlier days of Mildmay. We regret that print must fail to convey the unction and the savour of this and some other utterances.

After-meetings for practical dealing with hindrances to Christian experience and work, on the second and third evenings, were a new and useful feature. Mr. Meyer (who is peculiarly at home in such meetings), Mr. Webb-Peploe, Mr. Hopkins, Mr. Hubert Brooke, and Mr. Macgregor took part in conducting them.

In our last we called attention to the imprisonment of Mr. Dyer and Man Sukh Lal, for protesting against and exposing the evils of the opium dens in Bombay. We then spoke of their being "sent to prison, in default of paying the fine imposed." The semi-official organ, The Times of India (Bombay, June 14), now to hand, shows that the sentence is more severe than at first supposed. The following is from the report of the trial:—

The Magistrate: I fine the accused, Man Sukh Lal, the sum of Rs.250, and order that out of that fine Rs.200 be paid to the complainant as compensation.

The Accused: What is the alternative sentence?

The Magistrate: There is no alternative sentence; but if you do not pay the fine, you will be liable to imprisonment for contempt of the Court's order, but I may point out that the fact of such imprisonment does not relieve you of the payment.

On this Mr. Maurice Gregory remarks: "It is probable that Alfred Dyer's sentence is on the same lines. Under this tyrannous decision the magistrate will be able to keep on sending these men to prison for the rest of their natural life, if they continue to refuse payment of the fine. That they will not pay the fine, we are certain. The old anti-slavery workers would just as soon have paid a fine into the pocket of Legree as our friends in India will pay a fine into the pockets of a notorious furnisher of opium-dens."

The Evangelical Alliance is likely to secure and maintain a closer contact with Christian people by means of the Quarterly Record which it has started. The excellent monthly paper, Evangelical Christendom, is sent free to subscribers of a guinea per annum, and also has an independent circulation. The new quarterly paper, which will present an epitome of the contents of the parent magazine, will be supplied to all subscribers. We trust that the new venture will not only bring friends at home and abroad into more intimate touch with the operations of the Alliance, but do something to secure fresh adherents to its platform of Christian union in work for Christ.

In the July issue of his paper, The Catholic (Office: 18, Bachelor's-walk, Dublin), Father Connellan publishes a translation of a Confession, attributed to St. Patrick, lately found in a ninth-century manuscript in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris. There is much that is very beautiful in the document: not a word, however, about confession to a priest, prayer to the Virgin Mary, or the invocation of saints. A very thorough introspection is combined with much glorying in God and confidence in his love. The long catalogue of sins includes the following:—

I have sinned through slothful vanity and lethargy of mind.

I have sinned through feigned humility and falling away from loving God.

I have sinned through pretending to be what I am not, and through ministering to my own comforts.

After thus rebuking an impoverished and complacent service of God, St. Patrick shows his trust in the Gospel in its simplicity by exclaiming:—

If now thy vengeance upon me shall be as great as my own sins multiplied upon me, how shall I bear up against thy judgment? But I have Thee for my High Priest, to whom I confess all my sins, and to Thee alone, my God, do I confess my sins, for to Thee alone have I sinned, and before thy face have I done evil.

Those who work among Roman Catholics will do well to note this, and other contents of Mr. Connellan's excellent monthly.

The Thinker gives, in its review of "Current Dutch Thought," a notice of what Dr. J. A. Cramer has been writing on "Luther's Influence upon Social Life." He is of opinion that, in the struggle of our age to maintain the right of personality, we once more see the self-same principle at work as in the ecclesiastical Reformation. In the right of personality is summed up the whole social movement of our day. The movement may be variously characterised, but the idea at the root of the whole matter starts from this thought of personality. Luther brought the right of personality to the front in its full significance by asserting the personal need of peace with God. He never sought to pose as a Church Reformer; he sought peace for his heart.

Dr. Cramer, of course, admits that Luther's appearance has been fruitful of consequences for social life. When the quickened and sanctified sense of personality came into active operation, a new life awoke, which conspicuously exhibits itself in the advancement of science, trade, and industry in Protestant countries. To-day, even in Romish countries, the individual man attains more and more to his rights. Yet on all hands "the basis of religious faith is being departed from, and an army is being organised, which, led by skilful leaders, and blinded by passion, in the name of freedom strives against that which alone can make man free—faith in Christ, the Son of God." We doubt whether Dr. Cramer attaches adequate importance to Luther's positive teaching on the social side of Christianity; all the same, we are heartily at one with him in maintaining that in the soul's personal relation to God, in personal faith and obedience, is the root of personal renewal of nature and the pledge of national progress.

In these days of competition, when there is such serious danger of men making shipwreck of faith and of a good conscience, it is refreshing to read these calm words:—

I had several offers of business that appeared profitable, but I did not see my way clearly to accept of them, believing they would be attended with more outward care and cumber than was required of me to engage in. I saw that an humble man, with the blessing of the Lord, might live on a little, and that where the heart was set on greatness, success in business did not satisfy the craving; but that commonly with an increase of wealth the desire of wealth increased. There was a care on my mind so to pass my time, that nothing might hinder me from the most steady attention to the voice of the true Shepherd.

This young man of twenty-six grew in grace and in influence to the end of life. Always poor, he nevertheless made many rich; and being dead, he yet speaketh. A similar resolve to keep free from "outward care and cumber" would preserve many a life from the worldly blight which threatens them.

Mr. Pugh, an energetic minister at Cardiff, has a method of overtaking the growing population of that large town which deserves special mention. He erects a tent or a wooden hall in the first place, in which to gather a congregation. As soon as he has got fifty members he organises them, and leaves them to work in their own way. In four years sixteen such places have been erected. The plan has two or three aspects worthy of attention. (1) The cheapness of the building, which saves the weary delay in collecting large sums of money for a costly building; (2) the speed with which the work is done, it bearing some proportion to the speed of growth in the population; (3) the faith in God, which leaves the young congregation to make its own way. We sincerely trust that there is a fruitful seed here, which will bear a great harvest amidst our crowded town populations.

The Paris correspondent of Evangelical Christendom communicates some striking facts as evidence of the waning power of popular infidelity and of the growth of a better state of feeling towards the Gospel. Atheist lecturers, who had counted on a grand success in their hall at Montmartre, waited on their platform in vain for hearers. They had hoped to prepare numerous youths to deny the existence of a God, in view of certain fêtes, but no one came. A second attempt had a similar result. The director of the Mission Intérieure, after giving in a hired theatre a number of lectures on such subjects as "Have you seen God?" had no one to embrace the opportunity of replying to him. A Marseilles professor pronounced the lectures "clear, simple, sound, and powerful." He was filled with admiration for the courage that dared to sound in the people's ears the well-nigh obsolete words—immortality, rightccousness, order, authority. He thinks it is rarely met with "in these cruel present times." True description of the age in his country, where men are mentally pilloried and socially martyred for the sake of Jesus.

Sir M. Monier-Williams says, in his book on Hinduism (London, S.P.C.K.), that Hinduism is not a feeble system which must necessarily melt before the missionary, but one which calls for the highest powers to combat its errors. It is no use representing our adversaries as weaker than they are. While much ground has been won for Christ, he thinks that a large accession of well-trained men, thoroughly conversant with the systems against which they have to contend, and prepared to live as well as preach the simple story of the Gospel, is urgently needed. And far more. Nothing less, he adds, is demanded of us Englishmen, to whose charge the Almighty has committed the souls and bodies of two hundred and ninety millions of his creatures, than that every man amongst us, whether clerical or lay, should strive to be a missionary, according to the standard set us by the first great missionary, Christ Himself. Let no lower standard of our duty satisfy us.

These are glorious words. May God increase the number of Christian Englishmen who shall go abroad to trade, not that they may make a fortune, but that they may live and preach Christ.

There is, we are glad to believe, great sensitiveness of feeling in America as to the opinions of England touching American institutions and life. Our kinsmen care for our love and respect. We ought to care for theirs; we do; and, therefore, it has grieved us that the Nation had just cause for writing in the following strain:—

The impossibility of imagining Mr. Gladstone in Lord Rosebery's place on Wednesday of last week is the best measure of the essential difference between the two men, and of their comparative fitness to lead the reforming party in English politics. Mr. Gladstone has had many popular ovations, but he never went out in the face of a Derby throng, to lead back his winning horse and be madly cheered by thousands of men in whom the coarser passions were running riot.

We sincerely hope that there may not be cause for such observations any more.

Mr. Godkin, when writing in the Annals of the American Academy, on the problems of municipal government, states it as his opinion that "nothing can take the place of character in city government—no laws, or checks, or charters; that, in fact, the main difficulty in getting good municipal government is the difficulty of getting good men to take the offices. The main trouble in New York is that the official class is a low class, without either social, business, or pecuniary responsibility. The office-holders, too, are nearly all banded together, to make the meddling of the better class with the city affairs difficult, or tiresome, or unprofitable." We remember seeing a letter from Dr. Cuyler in this time of distress, saying that the article most wanted in the American market was confidence. Here, in the social life of to-day, we have illustrations as plain as the sun, that honesty is worth more than millions of money.

It is now one hundred and forty-eight years since that devout and obedient servant of Jesus Christ, John Woolman, of New Jersey, wrote this weighty sentence, the truth of which is being verified in manifold ways every day:—

I saw in these southern provinces so many vices and corruptions, increased by this trade and this way of life [slavery], that it appeared to me as a dark gloominess hanging over the land, and though now many willingly run into it, yet in future the consequence will be grievous to posterity.

That gloominess has not yet lifted and cleared away. The bitter fruits of slavery are still seen in race-hatred, in violence, and in national unrest. Surely this should be a warning to England, with her sins of opium-trading, her intemperance, her legislation of vice, her racing, and her commercial gambling. God will inquire concerning all these things. That many should "willingly run" into them may seem to take away from their guilt, but the opposite is the truth.

When our Lord opened his mouth and preached the Sermon on the Mount, He began by dealing with the inner life of the soul. All the beatitudes are pronounced on graces which are visible to the eye of God, rather than to the eye of man. The true blessedness is within, not in circumstances; it is spiritual, not carnal; it is in dispositions, not in gold. The "practical" teaching of the Sermon on the Mount agrees exactly with the doctrinal teaching of our Lord when He insists on the necessity for the second birth. How can anyone possess such an inner life and blessedness as Jesus commends unless he has been born again? Meekness, mercifulness, peaceableness, endurance of persecution, hungering after righteousness—these spring not from the soil of unregenerate humanity, but from the power of the Holy Spirit. When Jesus was repeating, "Blessed, blessed, blessed," over and over again, many a one must have said, "As I am, that blessedness never can be mine." Out of the sense of need arises the cry for help. The sermon which searches the heart prepares the way for filling the heart.

That God is the Burden-bearer of his people is expressed in many a passage of Scripture, and to the common number the R.V. has added one more—Psalm lxviii. 19, "Blessed be the Lord, who daily beareth our burden." And this is not inconsistent with the old rendering, "who daily loadeth us with benefits." For no greater benefit can be laid upon us than to take a burden off from us. But how different the sensations!

The School of Suffering.

God is able to make all grace abound toward you.—2 Cor. ix. 8.

When we are passing through the School of Suffering in the companionship of Jesus, who was Himself the "Man of sorrows," we are breathing a more rarefied atmosphere than falls to the lot of common folk. We ought to come out of the furnace of affliction with conscience more highly sensitised, will more subdued, patience more perfected, the dross of earthliness burnt out, and the fine gold of the Kingdom shining like an aureola of light about us. Experience, however, teaches us that too often the very reverse is the case, and those whose sunny temperament and high spirits have made the sunshine of the home too often leave the sick-room irritable, fractious, and self-absorbed. Those who know much of the trials of invalidism from personal experience, will agree that special forms of temptation assail the sick-room, so that it becomes to their occupants, as the wilderness was to our Lord, a very battlefield!

We must not suppose, however, that the patient is the only sufferer, or the only one who has to confront the fiery darts of the Evil One. The nurses who watch by sick beds and are in constant attendance on sick folk have fully as much need to fall back on the promise before us as the sick ones themselves. It is not easy at all times to possess our souls in patience when shut up in a room with whimsical, exacting people, who seem to think by virtue of their affliction that they have a right to demand the lion's share of attention, and appear to think themselves the pivot upon which the whole world—or at least the world which is confined within their own four walls—turns.

It needs a great deal of grace to bear patiently with such; to be perfectly just to them in thought as well as deed; considering ourselves lest we also be tempted, in the day of our tribulation, to be fractious and irritable and self-absorbed; to be tender and pitiful and compassionate, willing to bear as far as possible their burdens, to think about the Son of Man, who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister. And it needs a double portion of grace to be willing to be taught to exercise the sweet graces of hopefulness, cheerfulness, and above all self-forgetfulness. When vitality is at a low ebb, nerves all unstrung, when in fact the whole body is sick and faint, and our utter weariness makes us an easy prey to an uncontrollable restlessness, it may help us to remember that it was at the time of Christ's bodily weakness through fasting that the devil sought to gain an advantage over Him.

Opportunities for triumphing over self are of continual recurrence to both nurse and patient in the sick room; this is in an especial manner "a road in which there is room to deny ourselves," and which if patiently walked in shall indeed "lead us daily nearer God." There may be real heroism in waiting for a cup of tea in order to let the nurse or attendant have another hour's much-needed rest when the patient has been tossing feverishly from side to side through the long night watches, seeking rest and finding none; and also real heroism on the part of those in attendance in getting up to attend to some trifling want on the part of the sufferer which will in no wise affect the course of the disease, but merely afford a temporary relief; when the feet are weary of running hither and thither, and the head aching with the atmosphere of the sick room and longing for a few hours of undisturbed peace. Such acts as these the Master assuredly counts among the "inasmuches" which shall in no wise lose their reward, and for which one day we shall thank God even if they have been experiences gained indeed in the school of suffering.

Then, too, when we have passed through a season of suffering ourselves, how much more tenderly can we sympathise with those similarly affected. With what delicate comprehension are we able to minister to them, instinctively using the gentle tone and exercising the watchful care and thought that we found so soothing; and understanding well how to avoid those little awkwardnesses of behaviour and uncongenial topics of conversation which we found so indescribably jarring and trying when our frame was worn and our nerves unstrung. To emerge from a sick-room with refined sensibilities, that make us more exquisitely scrupulous about the feelings and peculiarities of others, would yield a rich harvest of increased opportunities; and if from these personal experiences of ours we can endorse our Saviour's "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted," and can comfort them with the comfort wherewith we are comforted of God, even now shall we begin to realise a foretaste of the weight of glory which St. Paul assures us is the guerdon of those who for the present endure this light affliction, which is but for a moment.

The Living Creatures—The Cherubim.

"The likeness of four living creatures. And this was their appearance—they had the likeness of a man." "And I knew that they were the Cherubim."—Ezek. i. 5; x. 20.

"When Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory."—Col. iii. 4.

Some of God's plainest revelations are regarded even by his people as the most obscure portions of his Word. The very Book of the Revelation of Jesus Christ is almost, if not utterly, neglected by a large majority of Christians, on the ground of its being unintelligible. If it be so, it must be because our ears are dull of hearing, not because of any obscurity in the book itself, because it is God's own unveiling of things which in John's day "must shortly come to pass," and which have been in course of procedure ever since.

In like manner the Cherubim are regarded as difficult of comprehension, although God has given visions of them in order to fill his servants with hope in the darkest and most sorrowful epochs of their history.

The principal appearances of these ideal and symbolic forms* were—(1) at the gate of Eden, when our first parents were driven out; (2) over the mercy-seat, when the law had been given and broken; (3) by the river of Chebar, when Ezekiel was sent to the captives of Israel, a people hard of face and stiff of heart; (4) in the midst of the throne in heaven, when John was shown in vision the tribulation that his fellow-servants should suffer in the world.

In order to understand what the Cherubim represent we must refer to the Scriptures in which they are most fully described. Ezekiel and John call them the living ones: "and this was their appearance, they had the likeness of a man." But combined with the human form was that also of the heads of the animate creation—the lion, chief of the wild beasts; the ox, representative of the domestic animals; the eagle, king of birds. Thus, man, and the animate creation† which fell with man, and became subject to death because of sin, are symbolised at the beginning of each great era of history by the Cherubim whose chief characteristic is life,—they are "the living ones."

But if the Cherubim represent creation, it must be redeemed creation; for it is from death that God through Christ redeems the creation of which man is the head: "I will redeem them from death." "He hath redeemed us to God by his blood"; "the blood is the life." This consideration harmonises the two chief explanations of the Cherubim, and the only two which are worthy of mention—(1) That they represent the Church, and (2) that they represent Creation. For, taking the Church to include all the redeemed from Abel (or, indeed, from Adam) to the last who shall be saved, then the Cherubim represent redeemed mankind, with whom and for whose sake the creature is restored. "For the earnest expectation of the creature waiteth for the manifestation of the sons of God. . . . For we know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body" (Rom. viii. 19, 23).*

Let us now consider what would be the thoughts and ideas conveyed to the minds of those who saw the Cherubim.

I.—AT THE EAST OF EDEN.

Our first parents, driven from their native garden-home, saw, as often as they returned to the precincts of their lost Paradise, forms like themselves (perhaps with the addition also of the lower creation) dwelling† at the east of the garden—the side toward the sunrising. They also saw a revolving fiery sword, which turned every way to keep, to guard, the way of the tree of life.

What impressions would these appearances produce upon the minds of the ejected sinners? In front of the Cherubim the flaming sword forbade their return. But beyond the sword and within the garden were the Cherubim, the likeness of themselves; "This was their appearance, they had the likeness of a man."‡ What could they think but that thus God was giving them an unspoken promise that they should return to dwell abidingly in Paradise? And the position of the Cherubim toward the sun-rising might suggest a glory even greater than that which they had lost.

But first the sword must be removed. That sword awoke against Jehovah's Fellow, and on that very day He said to Adam's lineal descendant, the dying thief, "This day shalt thou be with Me in Paradise."§ This is well expressed in the following verse of Mrs. Cousins' well-known hym:—

"Jehovah bade his sword awake,
O Christ, it woke 'gainst Thee;
Thy blood its flaming blade must slake,
Thy heart its sheath must be:
All for my sake, my peace to make:
Now sleeps that sword for me."

II.—OVER THE MERCY-SEAT.

The Cherubim at the east of Eden were an intimation of the fact of redemption; but the living and hungry sword, turning every way in eager search for a victim in whose blood its fire should be quenched, kept before the mind of the beholder the unsatisfied righteousness of God, which inexorably demanded an expiation that had not yet been made. But when God spoke to Moses as a man speaketh with his friend, and gave him in the Mount the pattern of the tabernacle of meeting, whose original was in heaven, the manner and results of an accomplished redemption began to be foreshown.

For within the veil was the ark of the covenant, covered by the propitiatory or mercy-seat, which was sprinkled with atoning blood; and out of the golden substance of the mercy-seat were beaten two Cherubim, whose faces were toward each other, and bent downward to the blood-stained mercy-seat. What did it mean? What could it mean but that the typical expiation was a pledge that a real and sufficient expiation should be made; that, as the Shekinah dwelt between the Cherubim, so God would dwell in unbroken fellowship with his redeemed creature, man, and that redeemed man should ever gaze upon the blood by which he was redeemed—should never cease to meditate upon the Lamb that was slain, and who hath washed us from our sins in his own blood.

When Solomon's temple was built, the ark of the testimony (of course with its covering mercy-seat overshadowed by the Cherubim) was placed within the oracle; and then two greater Cherubim were made of olive-tree, with their faces toward the house—i.e., looking towards the place where the congregation gathered outside the veil. So that now there were two golden Cherubim apparently gazing upon the blood-sprinkled mercy-seat, out of which they themselves were formed (representing their oneness with Christ the true Mercy-seat); and two others, with outspread wings, and faces toward the congregation, as if telling out the story of redeeming love and grace.

What a picture of the Church's life and work! Always meditating on a redemption by which unbroken communion with God is secured to believing men, and always telling out to others the truths thus learned within the veil.

III.—BY THE RIVER OF CHEBAR.

Ezekiel, before being sent to preach to the rebellious house of Israel, was made to see a vision of the Cherubim.

We cannot now dwell upon all the wonderful particulars of this glorious vision. We may note the Pentecostal one-accord, in their wings joined one to another; their unquestioning obedience, in that whither the Spirit was to go they went—thither was their spirit to go; the irresistible power, lightning speed, and unerring result of their movements,—for they ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning; and, lastly, their reverence to God when they stood and let down their wings, recognised and rewarded by the voice from the firmament that was over their heads.

This was an anticipatory vision of God's ideal Church in the dispensation of the Spirit. For the appearance of the likeness of a throne, with the likeness of the appearance of a Man above upon it, together with the Spirit filling and guiding the living creature on earth, speaks unmistakably in unison with the words of the Evangelist in comment upon those of the Lord Himself: "He that believeth on Me as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water. But this spake He of the Spirit which they that believe on Him should receive, for the Holy Ghost was not yet [outpoured], because that Jesus was not yet glorified." The vision of the Man Christ Jesus upon the throne above the firmament, and the Spirit working unhindered in an obedient living creature standing complete in all the will of God, is the very ideal of the New Testament Church on earth.

IV.—IN THE MIDST OF THE THRONE.

The fourth and last principal allusion to the Cherubim is in John's apocalyptic vision, where they are seen in the midst of the throne and round about the throne. Linked with man were the representative heads of the lower creation, as we have already seen; intimating not only the restoration and harmony of creation, but also that man's nature should be enlarged by the strength and majesty of the lion, the patient and laborious endurance of the ox, the keen vision and swift flight of the eagle; and, because these are the representatives of all creation, therefore that to man's nature should be added all the faculties and powers distributed through all the lower creatures.

* The Cherubim were evidently ideal forms, and not actual existences. Ezekiel and John saw them in ecstatic vision; Solomon carved them on the temple walls, and made models of them in the oracle; Moses embroidered them on the veil and curtains of the tabernacle, and beat them out of the gold of the mercy-seat. At the gate of Eden we may well conclude that they were also ideal representations, although we are not informed in what manner they were presented to the eye of the exiled family of man.

† And not only the animate creation: for Solomon adorned the walls of his house which he built for God not only with carved figures of Cherubim, but also of palm-trees and open flowers—representing the strength and beauty of the vegetable kingdom (1 Kings vi. 29, 32, 35).

* We believe that all other attempts to expound the Cherubim will be found to rest upon a partial view of some one or more of the conditions attaching to the redeemed creation as above defined.

† The literal meaning in Gen. iii. 24 is, "He caused to rest [or abide, or dwell] the Cherubim." It is the same word as used of the Shekinah, or cloud of the glory, when resting upon the tabernacle (Exod. xxiv. 16).

‡ We are not told whether at this their first appearance the forms of lion, ox, and eagle, were added to the man. John's vision was an advance on that of Ezekiel; though in both the faces of the lower creatures were represented. The Cherubim over the mercy-seat and in the oracle of Solomon's temple are generally represented as merely winged human forms; but we are not aware of any reason why these should not have contained the same four forms as did those seen by Ezekiel and John; and if these, then also those in Eden.

§ "Jerome speaks about Christ removing 'that flaming wheel and fiery sword which were at the gates of Paradise,' and entering in with the thief."—Dr. H. Bonar.

These Cherubim represent, as I think, the Church—the redeemed—in their kingly, as the four-and-twenty elders represent them in their priestly, character; for together they praise Him who was slain and redeemed them to God by his blood, and made them kings and priests; which are the very terms of the Church's praise in the opening of the Book. (Compare Rev. i. 5, 6; v. 8-10.)

Just as in Ezekiel's vision is presented the Church on earth, filled with the Spirit and doing the will of God, in fellowship with the Man who is on the throne above the firmament, so in John's vision is shown the Church in heaven (for God "hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus"—Eph. ii. 5, 6). There we are already in God's purpose; there we shall reign with Christ not only through the thousand years, but after and beyond the thousand years we shall hold sovereignty in companionship with Him over the universal and everlasting Kingdom of Christ and of God.

If the above view of the Living Ones be true,* then it is evident that in these symbols the whole history of man is sketched by the hand of God—his fall, redemption, service, glory. Occurring, as they do, at the commencement of the greatest epochs of the world—the Fall of Adam; the Exodus; the Times of the Gentiles; the Christian Dispensation—these most ancient and most far-reaching of all symbols, so far from being abstruse or difficult, give us the very A B C of the designs of God toward man; the outline of his eternal purpose; the line of circumference within which all dispensational lines are drawn; the eternal truth respecting man, apart from which dispensational truth cannot be fully or rightly understood. ## SUDBURY GIRLS' HOME.

On Friday afternoon a very pleasant function took place at the Girls' Home, Sudbury. If the Earl of Shaftesbury could look now upon the Home which he opened twenty-two years ago, he would be delighted with the progress made. It is emphatically a Christian home, where the old Gospel truths are taught, and side by side with the one thing needful the girls are instructed in all that pertains to this earthly life. The particular occasion last week was the distribution of the prizes to the successful competitors in the cookery classes, held in this Home and in the sister institution at Ealing. The Cooks' Company of the City of London supplied the cost of two teachers from the National School of Cookery, and gave the prizes and rewards. Mr. F. D. Matthews, Master of the Company, presided, and gave away the books to the girls. Thirty-six girls competed, and all passed, eight of them qualifying for prizes. The master was supported by several members of the court, including Mr. Francis Hammond, who is also chairman of the committee of those Homes.

How marvellously the work has grown! In 1852 a Home was opened in Broad-street, Bloomsbury, for the poor children of St. Giles; now the work is extended to the whole of England, and from being local has now become national. It is a work of faith, the society has no secured income. It looks to God and his people for all that is necessary. The faces of the girls tell of the happy hearts within, but they were once reared with want and misery and sin. Who will help, that the work may still be carried on? Miss Chipchase, the matron at the Home, will always be glad to see visitors and to receive gifts. The secretary, Mr. Wallen, will be cheered by any help which may be sent to him at 164, Shaftesbury-avenue.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.

In the life of Dr. William B. Robertson, of Irvine, there are some interesting references to the Revival of 1859, in which he was privileged to take a part. He illustrates the fact that religious feelings glorify and refine the roughest natures, by his experience in a mining village in Ayrshire, where during a religious Revival "the women grew to look like Madonnas, and both men and women sung like angels. It was wonderful how the spiritual life transformed the natural man." In declining a call to Glasgow, he gives as his reason that he "cannot forsake a work that God seems to be blessing and has blessed—I may almost say that the Church has been born again within the last few years—veils have been rent from the faces of the sleepers, and dead eyes awakened to the visions of the Eternal Real. The Church that could hardly be built outward has, I believe, been building upward. I could tell of souls awakened, of souls sanctified, and of sanctified souls ascending triumphant to glory."

Thus spoke that man of genius of the Revival of 1859, in which he was honoured to take a part, and to reap the fruits in the quickened life of his people. It is those seasons of revival, which are promised and should be expected, that make earnest men like Dr. Robertson feel that life is worth living. There is a fervour or intensity resolved on the highest aims, a deeper sense of the meaning of life, a determination to subordinate all to God. Men feel that God is working. There is a sense of God's glory. Christ is seen, the sense of sin is keenly felt, the truth of God is grand and rich, a new life seems of pressing importance, the souls of men are felt to be precious, a boundless atmosphere encircles human existence. There is a restlessness, and yet a deep peace; and a strong and invincible hope that truth and God shall win the day.

It is admitted that alternation of energy and languor is not the highest ideal of growth, either in the individual or in the community. And our growth in grace would be a steadily growing thing if the new life in our souls did not meet with checks. But as a matter of fact the life of the Church has not been a thing of steady, gradual growth. Its emblem is found in the tree of the forest—the very rings in whose trunk tell of recurring seasons when the sap has risen at the call of spring, and sunk again before the cold of winter. Its history has been one of successive impulses gradually exhausted as by friction and gravity, and mercifully repeated just at the moment when it was ceasing to advance, and had begun to slide downwards. And if it had not been for the dawning of those times of refreshment from the presence of the Lord, the coldness and worldliness in the Church and around would have killed it long ago. And it is because the Church needs revivals that the prayer goes up to God from devout hearts: "O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years; in the midst of the years make known." And the earnest desires that ascend as prayers from men who wait for God, descend as blessings, like the vapour that is drawn up by the kiss of the sun to fall in refreshing rain. True prayer is closely connected with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, for the promise is: "Call upon Me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and hidden things which thou knowest not."

It is clear from experience that there are variations in the life of the Church, and the only question with which we are meantime concerned is their cause. The cause is in us, and not in God. He waits to pour his fulness into the life of the Church, but man must co-operate with God. God's work on the world through his Church varies according to the Church's receptiveness and faithfulness. There is one feature common to both the natural and the spiritual sphere, the requirement of human co-operation. God gives sunshine and rain, soil and seed, but man must plough and sow. God waits on man's working. He initiates, and yet He waits. On account of the sin and sloth and heedlessness of man, God's work declines, and He seems to withdraw. The law has ever been, "According to your faith be it unto you." And if there is to be a revival of religion, the Church must not only pray, "Awake, put on strength, O arm of the Lord," the Church must awake and put on the strength that God is waiting to bestow. There must be a deepened communion with Christ; the channels must be kept free by which the life of God flows into the Church; and there must be active sympathy and purpose with God in his work.

At times we are tempted to look back upon the work of the great evangelists of past generations, and think that if we could only have them with us again the most glorious days in the history of the Church would return. But could these saintly men come back again it would not be to take the work out of our hands because we are unequal to it, but to tell us that the same Spirit that was with them can still reach the hearts and consciences of men. Their noble qualities, their eloquence, their learning, their courage, their zeal, should be recognised and honoured as God's gifts; but still it was not their power or their holiness that first loosened and then broke the fetters by which the spiritual life of nations was bound, drove the darkness away, and brought in the true light that now shineth; called men from the graves into the upper air and the sunlight of heaven; it was God who did it all. And God has not retired into distant and unbroken self-contemplation, but works always. His power is invariable, and the Gospel has lost none of its ancient power. What is necessary is that we should bestir ourselves to lay hold of God, and to work more earnestly and lovingly along the line of his purpose, with confidence in the success of his cause.

The prayer of the devout soul must ever be that God would show his work in the midst of the years. The Christian lives in hope of a glorious future that God hath promised; but his deepest desire is to see a revival of God's work before he leaves for the better home in the better land. No sincere man, as he looks out on the state of things, and thinks of what God has promised to do, and is waiting to do, would say, I shall be pleased if the years to come, be they many or few, are only as fruitful to God and man as the past have been. The most of men, as they look in and back, feel that they have not got all out of life that they expected. But of this they are sure, that their nearness to God has not disappointed them, that his truth and righteousness are real, that the spiritual wealth they have gained cannot be lost. They are sure of these things that constitute the very substance and spirit of life. They know what have been the ruling ideas in their own lives, and they want these to live in other lives, and more fully in their own.

When a fresh sense of God comes upon us, when we are stirred up to live for the eternal virtues which stand out clear and strong before us, when we see a quickening of the life of man by the Spirit of God, we no longer complain of monotony. Life is full of interest. New and beautiful objects appear on the horizon of the soul. The whole world of men comes before us with appeals for sympathy and intercession.

A DIALOGUE IN THE NIGHT.

Tell me, my child, why dost thou lie awake and weep—
While it is mine to give to my beloved sleep?

My Saviour, I am weary of the long, dark night.
Behold, the Lord shall be thine everlasting light.

My sins rise up before me, so many and so black.
Fear not, for I have cast them all behind my back.

Then, Saviour, can I evermore be from them free?
Thou shalt be purified and walk in white with Me.

Lord, yesterday was such a very trying day.
Yet every step I led thee in my own right way.

And now I dread to-morrow and its untried ways.
Hast thou forgotten, I am with thee all the days?

There are so many burdened ones whose grief I share.
For them, as for thyself, cast on Me thy care.

I've dearly-loved ones, Lord, who wander far from Thee.
Once lifted up, I will draw all men unto Me.

Thy words so comfort me, I think that I can sleep!
And all thou hast committed to Me I will keep.

Dear Lord, I wake refreshed, and I am still with Thee.
The soul that trusts my love can ne'er forsaken be.

The sun is rising, a new day with joy to crown.
Walk in the light, thy sun shall never more go down.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

THE SOUL'S "AMEN."

Jeremiah xi. 5.

"Whatso it be, howso it be, Amen!
Blessed it is, believing, not to see.
Now God knows all that is, and we shall then Whatso it be.
God's will is best for man whose will is free,
God's will is better for us, yea, than ten Desires whereof He holds and weighs the key."

Christina Rossetti.

The words of the prophet in chapter xi. 5 are full of deep significance to every holy soul summoned to stand between God and other men. It has also far-reaching meaning for all who are passing through the Divine discipline in this strange and difficult life. Jeremiah was conscious of the special current of Divine energy which was passing into and through his soul. The word had come to him "from the Lord." This is one of three forms of expression that he employs. Sometimes, "the word of the Lord that came to Jeremiah"; sometimes, "thus saith the Lord"; sometimes, as here, "the word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord." Probably he felt that word as a burning fire shut up in his bones, which he could not contain. He must needs give vent to it; and when it has passed through his lips, and he has time carefully to consider it, he answers the Divine message by saying, "Amen, O Lord!"

There is something very sublime in this attitude. Jeremiah, as we have seen, was naturally gentle, yielding, and pitiful for the sins and sorrows of his people. Nothing was further from his heart than to "desire the evil day." In these earlier stages of his ministry especially, it must have been one long effort to stand by himself against the strong current of popular feeling and patriotism which coloured the visions of the false prophets. And yet, as he utters the terrible curses and threatenings of Divine justice, and predicts the inevitable fate of his people, he is so possessed with the sense of the Divine rectitude, so sure that God could not do differently, so convinced that, judged by the loftiest moral standards, the sins of Israel could not be otherwise dealt with—that his soul rises up, and though he must pronounce the doom of Israel, he is forced to answer and say, "Amen, O Lord!"

There is something like this in the history of the redeemed Church. When God has judged her that did corrupt the world with her fornication, and has avenged the blood of his servants at her hand, as the smoke of her destruction arises, the blessed spirits who had been learning the deepest lessons of Divine love at the very source and fount of love, are heard crying, "Amen. Hallelujah!"

In each of these cases it is extremely interesting to see how the sense of justly-deserved and righteously-incurred judgment corrects the verdict of mere compassionateness, and enables the most sensitive and gentle souls to acquiesce in what otherwise had been resisted to the uttermost.

Beside these two instances we may place a third, in which our Lord, in the same breath as He appealed to the weary and heavy laden to come to Him, spoke of the mysteries which were hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed to babes; and said, "Yea, Father, for so it was well pleasing in Thy sight." "Yea" is close akin to "Amen." "How many soever be the promises of God, in Him is the Yea: wherefore also through Him is the Amen, unto the glory of God through us" (Matt. xi. 26; 2 Cor. i. 20, R.V.).

I.—THE SOUL'S AFFIRMATION.

(1) In Providence.—We often seem to be travelling through a difficult piece of mountainous country in company with a strong, wise, and gentle companion, who has undertaken to guide us to our destination. There are foaming torrents, black and hurrying, which we have to ford at the imminent risk of being carried off our feet; there are darksome woods and forests, where suns have seldom penetrated, and where wild beasts have their lair; there are paths paved with flints so sharp, and slabs of rock so slippery, that progress seems almost impossible, except at too great a cost; there are long stretches of dreary desert, where the glare blinds, the sunbeams cut like swords, and the shadow of a tiny retem bush provides a grateful relief; there are steep hills, and paths so narrow that there is hardly room to pass along the ledge of rock, whilst the dark precipice waits to engulf. In earlier days the soul started back horror stricken; in later ones we pleaded for an easier, pleasanter path, and envied the lot of others: but now our life has become one long and deep and constantly repeated "Amen" to the choice of Him who goes beside us, and in whose mind each step has been previously conceived.

Let us guard against mistake. It is not possible at first to say "Amen" in tones of triumph and ecstasy. Nay, the word is often choked with sobs that cannot be stifled, and soaked with tears that cannot be repressed. So it was with Abraham, when he tore himself from Ur of the Chaldees, and waited weary years for his son, and climbed with aching heart the steep of Moriah. And as these words are read by those who lie year after year on beds of constant pain; or by those who have lost the enjoyment of the presence of their twin-soul, or of those whose earthly life is tossed upon the sea of anxiety, over which billows of care and turmoil perpetually roll—it is not improbable that they will protest as to the possibility of saying "Amen" to God's providential dealings, or they will ask, Of what avail is it to utter with the lip a word against which the whole heart stands up in revolt? Is it not, it may be asked, an impiety, a hypocrisy, to say with the mouth a word that is so alien to the sentiments of the heart?

In reply, let all such remember that in the garden our Blessed Lord was content to put his will upon the side of God. What though his body was covered with the dew of anguish, pressed out from it as the juice of the grape by the tread of the husbandman! He did not chide Himself. He knew it was enough if, in the lower parts of the earth to which his human nature had descended, He was able unflinchingly to affirm, "I delight to do Thy will, O my God"; "not as I will, but as Thou wilt!"

Dare to say "Amen" to God's providential dealings. Say it, though heart and flesh fail; say it amid a storm of tumultuous feeling, and a rain of tears; say it, though it shall seem to be the last word that shall be spoken because life is ebbing so fast: and you will find that if the will doth acquiesce, the heart comes ultimately to choose; and as days pass, some incident, some turn in the road, some concurrence of unforeseen circumstances, will suddenly flash the conviction on the mind and reason that God's way was right, the wisest and the best. "What thou knowest not now, thou shalt know hereafter," is the perpetual assurance of the Guide: and this is realised not in the world of the hereafter only, but here and now, on the hither side of the Gate of Pearl.

(2) In Revelation there are mysteries which baffle the clearest thinkers, the most profound theologians, the Johns and Pauls of the Church; paths that lose themselves in mere tracks on the moor; snatches of music and colour which no mortal genius can work out; suggestions of movements in the spiritual world which defy the apprehension of the subtlest and greatest of the sons of men to grasp. The man that tracks God's footsteps loses them in the depths; and the eye that pursues his workings is dazzled by a light above the brightness of the sun; and the argument breaks off with the cry, "Oh, the depth of the riches, both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" It must be so whilst God is God. We are partakers of his nature, as a child is of his father's; but the distance between our capacity of intelligence and the thoughts of God is not to be measured by that between the dawn of a child's mind and the full splendour of his father's power, because this moves in the region of the finite, whilst that is a difference between the finite and infinite. We cannot by searching find out God, or know the Almighty. There is no fathoming line long enough, no parallax fine enough, no mensuration, though the universe itself be taken as our unit, by which to measure God. High as heaven, what canst thou do? Deep as hell, what canst thou know?

But, though we cannot comprehend, we may affirm the thoughts of God. That we cannot understand, is due to the immaturity of our faculties. We are in our nursery stage: our words are the babblings of infancy; our ideas the thoughts of a child. But we can accept, and admit, and acquiesce in, and affirm the things which eye could not see, nor the heart conceive, but which are revealed on the page of Scripture.

There is no doubt that the death of Jesus Christ has fully satisfied the justice of God; and though some phases of his atonement may at times perplex us, yet our soul confidently exclaims, "Amen, Lord!" We are ignorant as to why God chose us; how Christ could combine in Himself the nature of God and Man; or in what manner the Holy Spirit regenerates the soul. "How can these things be?" is the question which often occurs to the devout student of revelation. But when He who has come straight from the realms of eternal day stedfastly affirms that which He knows, and bears witness to what He has seen, we receive his witness and say reverently, "Amen, Lord!"

(3) In Judgment. — God's judgments on the wicked are a great deep. The problems that encircle the question of present or future punishment are amongst the deepest and most awful that the mind of man can approach. Like Moses, we fear and quake when we climb the storm-girt sides of Sinai, and hear the pealing, thunderous curse, to be followed by the lightning flash of fiery indignation devouring the adversary. We may well turn aside from such consideration, and ask if the time can ever possibly come when we shall be able to consider with equanimity the awful suffering which they must incur who have rejected the love of God in Christ. Will heaven have any bliss to us, so long as there is a hell? Will there be any possibility of happiness whilst one sheep is lost, one link absent in the bridal necklet, one stone deficient from the regalia, one voice missing in the chorus? A partial answer at least is given to these inquiries when we hear from the lips of the most gentle of the prophets, anticipating the destruction of his people, for which his eye was to trickle down with tears, "Amen, Lord!"

At present we cannot expect to attain to much of this condition of mind and heart; because our views of the Divine rectitude are so imperfect, our estimate of sin is so slight, our knowledge of the conditions of the universe so inadequate. Did we know more of sin, of holiness, of the love of God, of the yearning pleadings of his Spirit with men, of the all-sufficiency of the measure He has taken for their arrest and salvation, of the barriers erected to stay the precipitate downward course of the wicked, we should probably understand better how Jeremiah was able to say, "Amen, Lord!"

There is a striking thought in Ezekiel xiv. 22, 23, in which God says that when we see the way and the doings of sinners in the light that shall be flung upon their entire life-course from the great white throne, we shall be comforted concerning the evil that He shall have brought upon them. And the prophet goes on to show that God will make us know that He has not done in vain anything that He shall have done. This era has not yet broken; but it is a wonderful conception of the comfort and resignation which the added light of eternity shall bring into hearts perplexed and anxious as they consider the fate of the ungodly. Abraham shall be comforted over the destruction of the cities of the plain; Jeremiah shall be comforted as he reviews the fate of Jerusalem; and Paul shall be comforted as he considers the long alienation of the seed of Abraham from their land, and their exile with wandering foot and terror-stricken heart in all the countries of the world. And we shall be comforted as we behold the destruction of the wicked.

II.—THE GROUND OF THE SOUL'S PEACE.

"Yea, Father!" It may seem at first sight as though it were impossible that the heart of man could ever be induced to acquiesce in the terrible and difficult matters touched upon in the previous paragraphs. As long as mothers love the sucking child, and have compassion on their sons; as long as soul is wedded to soul by the strongest and most tenacious bonds of human love; as long as we can suffer, yearn, fear, hope, pity; whilst memory keeps the records of the past, and love reigns, and the mind holds her seat, it might seem the impossible dream of the imagination that what appears incompatible with the tender human feeling can be consistent with the love of God. "Surely," you cry, "there are things to which I never can assent; decisions I can never reaffirm; sentences I can never countersign; possibilities of which I never can say, 'Amen, Lord!'"

But does not this protest of the soul arise from the fact that you judged such things from the standpoint of pure emotion, or human reasoning, or perverted principles of human action, and that you need to stand in the sanctuary of God, which is the focus and metropolis to which the loftiest intelligences converge, and where we come in contact with the lofty morality and legislation of eternity? And does it not also arise because we wrongly think that our love is more tender, our sympathy more delicate, our compassions deeper, than those of the Father?

When tried and perplexed with the troubles of life, turn from these which will make the brain dizzy and the heart sick, and consider the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, from whom every ray of love in the universe has emanated; and remember that nothing can be permitted or devised by Him that is not consistent with the gentlest and truest dealings which an earthly father could mete out to the child of his right hand, his Benjamin, the darling of his old age. So shall you be able to say, "Amen, Lord!"

When face to face with the mysteries of the Atonement, of Substitution and Sacrifice, of Predestination and Election, of the unequal distribution of Gospel light, be sure to turn to God as the Father of Light, in whom is no darkness, no shadow of unkindness, no note inconsistent with the music of perfect benevolence. He is your Father, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father from whom every home life receives its tenderest touches. Dare to trust Him, and in the strength of that trust to say, "Amen, Lord!"

When peering over the strong barrier of redemption that intervenes between you and the dark fate of the ungodly, when thoughts will force themselves upon the spirit, as the cry of the insurgent mob might penetrate the sacred seclusion of a temple, look away from this and gaze into the face of the Father, which is turned in the same direction, and dare to believe that nothing can happen in heaven or earth or hell which is out of harmony with the love that has inspired parents towards their children; that breathed the love into Mary's heart as she clasped her babe to her bosom; or that yielded the Only-begotten to the horror of the cross for man's redemption: so there shall be a new tone in the voice of the soul that says, "Amen, Lord!"

In other words, we must not look into the dark and perplexing questions that seethe and boil like wreaths of vapour around us. We must look up to the blue sky of undimmed sunshine, our Father's heart. He must be love, beyond our tenderest, deepest, richest, conceptions of what love is. In his dealings with us, with all men, and especially with the lost ones, love is the very essence and law of his nature. Somehow, we repeat it, everything must be consistent with this all-persuasive nature and temper of the Divine Being; and in proportion as you dare to believe in the Father, you will be able to say "Yes," which is a true rendering of the Greek word which in our version is translated "Even so" (Matt. xi. 26).

III.—THE TRIUMPH OF THE AFFIRMING SOUL.

"Amen, Hallelujah!" Jesus as He rested in his Father was able to say, not only, "Even so, Father"; but "I thank Thee, Father": and so there shall come a day when the four-and-twenty elders, representing the redeemed Church, shall see the judgment of the great opponent of the Lamb's bride, and say, "Amen, Hallelujah!"

Mark the addition of "Hallelujah" to the "Amen." Here the Amen, and not often the Hallelujah; there the two—the assent and the consent: the acquiescence and the acclaim; the submission to the will of God, and the triumphant outburst of praise and adoration. Let us anticipate that age when we shall know as we are known, and when we shall be perfectly satisfied, perfectly jubilant, perfectly blessed; when every shadow of misunderstanding and misapprehension shall be dispelled, and we shall join in the hymn of the redeemed Church. "Great and marvellous are Thy works, O Lord God, the Almighty; righteous and true are thy ways, Thou King of the Ages" (Rev. xv. 3, R.V.).

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

At the invitation of Mrs. Frank Morrison, a drawing-room meeting was held on Wednesday week at her residence, 8, Cromwell-houses, in connection with the work of the above Mission on behalf of juvenile offenders, discharged prisoners, and wives and children of those undergoing sentence. Rev. George Plaford (late chaplain of H.M. Prison, Holloway) presided, and referred to the beneficial results which to his own knowledge had attended efforts made for the uplifting of prisoners.

Mr. Wheatley stated that since the work amongst prisoners was commenced, 60,676 had been assisted to make a fresh start in life; over 500 juvenile offenders are admitted into its Homes. Mrs. Ormiston Chant, who followed, earnestly commended the work of the Mission.

A MEMORABLE LIFE.

It is a true axiom that we are the expression of that which is within us; the man whose heart belongs to God is a living expression of godliness: the man whose heart is filled with the things of the world can express only worldliness.

Be filled with the Spirit, and the fruits of the Spirit will be seen and felt in the every day life—love, joy, peace, and all the tones in the beautiful and harmonious gamut of holiness.

There was a German divine who was so holy, so fully yielded to God, so filled with the divine spirit, that he was called "the intoxicated of God." In the light of this, the words "Drunken, but not with wine" occur to us, and we understand, without wonder, something of their meaning.

Before we can be filled with the Spirit of God, our hearts must be emptied of all else—self, the world, everything that is not of God and Christ.

Some would ask, "Is this possible? Can it be that one who has to live in the busy heart of a city, subject to its temptations, its ambitions, its clamours, its exactions, may be filled with God's Spirit?"

And the answer is, Yes, difficult though it may be, and hard of attainment as are all things worthy, it is not only possible, but it becomes less difficult as time advances, and the Spirit of God grows, and is exercised, within us.

James Brainerd Taylor was an example of this, and if many of our young men could read his biography they would be less sceptical as to the influence of the Holy Spirit, and more so as to the soundness of their own hearts and argument. And self-dissatisfaction is a great factor in driving us to God. Taylor had finished his earthly course at the early age of twenty-eight, and yet he had done a life's work the like of which might be coveted by men thrice his age.

Prayer was, with him, the breath of life; at all times he prayed. And he preached, too; before his words men fell as ripe corn falls before the sickle. He was filled with the Spirit, and the Spirit, speaking through him, was mighty to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin. One touchingly beautiful incident in this beautiful life occurred one day when Taylor was driving on one of his preaching journeys.

He had pulled up before a watering-trough, and as his horse drank, another young man drew up, and the horse he was driving tried to jostle Taylor's horse from the trough. Taylor was not in the least disturbed, but soothing the new-comer, he soon had both animals drinking together peaceably. Then he turned to the stranger: "I hope," said the young preacher, "you love the Lord. If you do not, I want to commend Him to you as your best friend. Seek Him with all your heart."

Not another word was spoken. Both men turned and went their separate ways, never again to meet on earth. But the stranger did seek the Lord, was educated for the ministry, and went out to Africa as a missionary.

"Over and over again," said this missionary, "I wished to know who that man was who spoke to me that day at the horse-trough. But I never knew till one day someone sent me to Africa a box of books. Among these I found a little black-covered book; I opened it, turned to the title-page, and then I saw a portrait—a beautiful face. 'Ah!' said I, 'that is the man. That is the man who preached the Gospel to me at the watering-place. To him I owe my salvation.'"

And now, young man or maiden, read what James Brainerd Taylor tells of himself:—

"It was on April 23, 1822, when I was on a visit to Haddam, in Connecticut. Memorable day! The time and place will never—no, never—be forgotten. I recur to it at this moment with thankful remembrance. For a long time my desire had been that the Lord would visit and fill me with the Holy Ghost; my cry to Him was, Seal my soul for ever thine. I lifted up my heart in prayer that the blessing might descend. I felt that I needed something I did not possess. There was a void within which must be filled, or I could not be happy. My earnest desire was that all love of the world might be destroyed in me, all selfishness extirpated, pride banished, unbelief removed, all idols dethroned—everything hostile to holiness and opposed to the Divine will crucified; that holiness to the Lord might be engraved on my heart, and ever more characterise my conversation.

"My mind was led to reflect on what would probably be my future situation. It recurred to me, I am to be hereafter a minister of the Gospel. But shall I be able to preach in my present state of mind?

"I cannot do it, without great overturnings in my soul. I felt that I needed that for which I was then, and had for a long time been, hungering and thirsting. I desired it, not for my benefit only, but for that of the Church and the world.

"At this very juncture I was most delightfully conscious of giving up all to God. I was enabled in my heart to say, Here, Lord, take me, take my whole soul, and seal me thine—thine now and thine for ever. 'If Thou wilt, Thou canst make me clean.'

"Then there ensued such emotions as I never before experienced! All was calm and tranquil, and a heaven of love pervaded my whole soul. I had the witness of God's love to me, and of mine to Him. The name of Jesus was most precious to me, 'It was music in my ear.'

"He came as a king, and took full possession of my heart, and I was enabled to say, 'I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me.' Let Him, as King of kings and Lord of lords, reign in me—reign without a rival for ever!'" That his prayer was answered, his brief but beautiful life amply and gloriously testified.

Meeting one day, as he walked a country road alone, a woman, who addressed to him words of sin, he turned back after passing her, and touching her lightly on the shoulder, he said:—

"I feel that God has given me a message for you. It may be the last time we shall meet on earth. I cannot let it pass without telling you of Jesus, your Saviour. Oh, seek Him! Read his words to one like yourself, and think of the pitiful love of God, who has called you and me to Himself through Jesus Christ!"

The woman was so overcome that she could only weep—words would not come to her lips.

"I felt," said she, telling of the incident long afterwards, "as if an angel spoke to me. For the second time in my life I was covered with shame, and I never rested until I read of that other woman whom the Lord forgave, and whose sin was as mine; if I had not met the man of God that day, with his strong heart and his angel face, I should still be in the way of sin, harder and blacker than ever."

Who will say, after this, that the way of holiness is a hidden path to him? In the midst of fiery temptation a man may see God, as Moses saw Him in the burning bush; as Joseph saw Him when Potiphar's wife tempted him; as thousands have seen Him since, and will continue to see Him if only they believe his word—that with the temptation He also sends a way of escape. More than this, when a man is "filled with the Spirit," he has the assurance that at last his Heavenly Deliverer will even keep him from the hour of temptation.

Meek souls there are, who little dream
Their daily strife's an angel's theme;
Or that the rod they take so calm,
Shall prove in heaven a martyr's palm.

M. B. Gerds.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

The missionaries are still busily engaged upon the study of the language, nor is direct evangelistic effort lacking. The Sunday open-air services continue, the official opposition which they at first excited being at present withdrawn. Medical mission work, too, is undertaken by two of the band. Mr. Neave writes:—"One poor man that we went to see last week was having prayers made for him by a Lama, and candles were burning upon the altar, which contained an image of Buddha. Nearly every household has its altar."

The same writer adds that these poor people are liberal in their offers of remuneration, one promising a horse and another money by way of doctor's fee.

But the missionaries give their services without fee or reward. Concerning the people, Mr. Neave says:—"They have quite won my heart, for, although wild and dirty, never once have I seen them do an unkind action yet."

DR. JOHN G. PATON held last week two crowded meetings in the Laigh Kirk and in the Agricultural Hall, Kilmarnock. His addresses awakened great interest.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

SUBJECT: Ephesians, Chap. iii., Verses 14—19.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 26.

The Might of the Spirit.

Resuming our report of the Conference from our last issue, we note that the gathering on Tuesday evening was well sustained. The various out-of-door and subsidiary meetings, held in the afternoon, proved full of interest, and attracted many workers from far and near.

The subject in the evening was thus stated on the programme: "The Might of the Spirit: The Action, 'Strengthened': The Effect, 'That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith.'" Lord Polwarth presided, as, indeed, he did throughout the Conference.

After a few moments of silent prayer, and the singing of the hymn:

O Lord, "with one accord,"
We gather round thy throne.

The Chairman read Eph. iii. 15-21, and reminded his hearers that when the two disciples on the road to Emmaus invited Him whom they met in the way to tarry with them, they got more than they expected. So we are inviting the Lord Jesus Christ to abide with us in this place, where He has so often made Himself known, and He will, we may be sure, do exceeding abundantly above all we ask or think. Our subject is the strengthening might of the Spirit leading on to "Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith." We want to get new strength—not simply fellowship one with another—strength to go forth to duty and toil, with Christ dwelling in us more richly than we have ever known. The gift we covet most earnestly is that the Spirit of power should rest on us that we may be strengthened to speak and work and live for Him; that these lips may have Christ speaking through them, that we may minister to the burdened, the weary, the heavy laden; that Christ may so dwell in us that all we come in contact with may realise Christ in us.

Prebendary Webb Peploe presented prayer, and the first address of the evening followed.

Truth and Life.

By ROBERT ANDERSON, LL.D.

The circular of invitation issued for this Convention reminds us of the aim and purpose with which the venerated founder of these conferences first called them at Barnet and at Mildmay. Those were bright days of revival in the Church; times to which many of us assign the best days of our spiritual life. God sent forth his light and truth, and showers of blessing fell richly, filling our hearts. Those were days when Christians read their Bible in a way which I fear the generation which has come up since knows little of. But in the midst of that blessing there was a certain danger. The tendency was for the mind to be occupied with truth while the heart and life lagged behind. Hence the early conferences aimed at bringing heart and life into harmony with doctrine. The danger now is wholly different, truth is neglected, disparaged, and denied. Truth is fallen in the streets, and the very foundations of our faith are being undermined by those who claim to be Christian ministers, and are unquestionably leaders of thought. The denial of the inspiration and authority of Holy Scripture has led to the denial of the fall and ruin of man, and of the atoning death of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Now, in turning to the subject before us, I ask you to note the context, and remember who and what they were to whom these words were addressed. I cannot forget that there may be many even in this hall who have been corrupted by scepticism and rationalism, whose faith is in peril through the theories of men. I fear many Christians are asleep as to

THE DANGER OF THE THEORY OF EVOLUTION.

Doubtless within the strict limits of science Evolution is a reasonable theory, the only objection being that all the researches of scientists have failed to discover one shred of evidence to support it. But this theory touches the very foundation of truth. The Bible tells us that man was made in the image of God, and our Lord Jesus Christ "was made in the likeness of men," though He was the express image of the everlasting Father. Surely Christians will be kept from the profanity of this theory when they see that it touches the person of our Divine Lord. What a terrible injury it means to the glory of Him who is "not ashamed to call us brethren"! God keep us from the corruption of science falsely so-called.

Now who and what are they to whom the words which form our theme (Eph. iii. 15-20) are addressed? We have in the context a dual history—man in Adam and in Christ. The Evolutionists talk of slow processes, but you and I go back farther. "He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world." We are "blessed with all spiritual blessings in Christ" (Eph. i. 3), "predestinated" to sonship (ver. 5), "made accepted in the Beloved" (ver. 6). Then verse 7 calls to mind our Adamic origin, "We have redemption through his blood." Redemption implies a previous ruin. Redeemed from what? Chapter ii. gives the answer—

FROM HOPELESS SLAVERY.

God had a covenant people, enriched with a wondrous inheritance of promise. But we Gentiles walked according to the course of this world, with no covenant, no promises, no Christ, no hope, and no God. Such was our state in Adam; but now we turn the page. In Christ Jesus we "are made nigh by the blood of Christ" (ver. 13); for "He is our peace" (ver. 14); and "we have access" (ver. 18), and yet more, "In whom ye are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."

All this is the basis of the prayer that follows (Eph. iii. 15-21). The Apostle is hurrying on to unfold his longings for the saints, but he is checked by the Holy Spirit in order that he may unfold still further the mystery of grace; "to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery." Hence chap. ii. and the earlier part of chap. iii. And now he resumes:—"For this cause I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named, that He would grant you, according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man."

This is his prayer for the saints, and we have to guard against two errors—on the one hand, that of refusing to take our place as saints, and, on the other hand, that of taking it all as a matter of course. The saints here include all who are redeemed by the blood of Christ; and the Holy Spirit is giving expression to the Divine longing on their behalf.

But let me pause a moment on the words—"Of whom the whole family in heaven and earth is named." How do these words come in there? I have pondered over them long, and the conclusion I have formed is this: That at the very outset he wants to raise us to the level of the thought. There is the same connection in Greek between the words "father" and "family" that in English there is between the words "Creator" and "creature." The words are Patēr and Patria. Thus we have a side glance, as it were, at the closeness of the link. The prayer is breathed, not for those who are outside, but for those who are within the circle of the family. You and I are part of the scheme of redemption. And through us, those other intelligences mentioned in verse 10, learn more of the mysteries of grace and of the Fatherhood of God.

Now, do you know anything of this? Remember how in Heb. v. the apostle, when unfolding amazing truth concerning the priesthood of Christ, pauses to say:

"YE OUGHT TO BE TEACHERS,"

yet "we have need to teach you again the first principles of the oracles of God." You need the feeding-bottle and spoon, when you ought to be teachers. You all know persons who seem to have no mind of their own in things concerning business, just as in things spiritual, if you talk about religion, they say they belong to Mr. So-and-so's congregation, and take their belief from him. If you ask their belief, they scarce can tell without going to find what he believes. Sometimes these will ask, when we speak of such things, is it practical? Yield to it, and you will find how practical it is. Surely it ought to have a singularly practical effect on us to learn how our spiritual life is linked with the eternal purpose of God in Christ Jesus. So we have seen in chap. i. 4, that "He hath chosen us in Him before the foundation of the world that we should be holy and without blame before Him in love." And now we see the deep longing that we may be worthy of these things and understand them.

Do these longings evoke any response in our hearts? Do we know such longings, desiring after God with our whole heart, our whole being crying out after God? Not after the "Deity" of the religionist, or after "the great first cause" of the scientists, but after the living God? How are you to know this longing? Get on your knees beside the Apostle and make his prayer your own. How many prayerless Christians there are! Give up "saying prayers" and begin to pray. Oh that the prayer of Jabez (1 Chron. iv. 10) were yours. It was not a prayer recited from a card, it was the cry of his heart, and God granted his request. God cannot deny Himself. He cannot send you empty away, if you so cry to Him. He must fulfil all we have been reading about here. He will strengthen you with might by his Spirit in the inner man. He will bring Heaven into your heart, for Christ is Heaven, and Christ shall dwell in your hearts. So you will be able to comprehend with all saints. The finite to comprehend the infinite—the mystery of God, the mystery of Christ, in whom are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. Yet more, you will become merged in the infinite, being filled with all the fulness of God. And lest some think this mere rhapsody, something beyond us, the Apostle reminds us of heights beyond all this. "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us." The possibilities of Christian life are infinite, and in view of this we may well join in the closing doxology, "Unto Him be glory in the Church by Christ Jesus, throughout all ages, world without end. Amen."

After this address Lord Radstock led in prayer, and a hymn having been sung, Col. Morton read a number of requests for prayer, including a very special plea on behalf of France at this serious crisis. These were laid before God by Mr. Eugene Stock. The Chairman intimated that a communication of sympathy had been sent to the French Ambassador. After another song of praise the following address was delivered:

Christ Dwelling in the Heart.

By Rev. J. C. HERDMAN, D.D.

The part of the subject assigned to me is in these words, "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." This is the core of the subject, the very centre of Paul's marvellous prayer. What goes before leads up to it; what follows flows out of it. "Master, where dwellest Thou?" Isaiah gives the answer, "I dwell in the holy and high place, with him also that is humble and of a contrite spirit."

Now, what is this occupancy of the human heart by Christ? We are very familiar with the truth as to Jesus for us, of Christ in the counsels of eternity undertaking for us, in the fulness of time coming for us; living, suffering, bleeding, dying for us; buried, risen, ascended for us. His obedience unto death for us, his living and dying for us, his intercession within the veil for us. There are grand truths, set forth in the Lord's Supper: My body broken for you; my blood shed for you. This is the basis of solid peace. But there is another truth. Christ in us, which is Christ dwelling in the heart. I have looked through the New Testament, and find that in addition to the one before us there are fourteen distinct passages wherein this truth is affirmed.

Take one, John vi. 56, "He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in Me and I in him." If I accept Christ as my Saviour, there will ensue between Him and me—wonderful, but true. Then John xiv. 20, "At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father and He in Me"; not that it begins then, but that ye shall know it. So in the same chapter, verse 23, "If a man love Me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." Not a passing visit, but a permanent stay. There are two other passages in this discourse—xv. 4 and 5—in both of which a common life is the underlying thought.

Then we have in John's first epistle two references—iii. 24 and iv. 13—which associate the mutual dwelling with the operation and agency of the Holy Spirit.

Then our Lord in his intercessory prayer makes two references to the indwelling (John xvii. 23 and 26). "I in them, and Thou in Me." "I in them." The Lord Jesus Christ desires to be in his disciples even as He is in the Father; therefore in a union complete, delightful, and permanent.

There are five more passages, all in the letters of Paul. Rom. viii. 10:—"If Christ be in you" 2 Cor. xiii. 5:—"Know ye not that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobates." There the indwelling of Christ is stated as a fact in reference to all believers. Then in Gal. ii. 20, we have the fact that "Christ liveth in me," and that means more than giving me life. He not only kindles life, but becomes and remains my life. In Gal. iv. 19, the Apostle speaks of his longing and labouring that Christ should be formed in his children. Once more, Col. i. 27:—"Christ in you, the hope of glory." To be with Christ face to face, not a cloud between, that is glory; but Christ in you is the hope of glory. In going over these passages I feel I am on solid ground. As Dr. Chalmers said, "Be wise up to what is written, but beware of seeking to be wise beyond what is written."

There are two dangers to be guarded against: on the one hand we may water down these mysteries, and strip them of might and meaning; or, on the other hand, we may be so rapt in the splendid vista opened before us as to lose ourselves in a vision of and fail to get hold of truth bearing on character and conduct. Mark that Christ is in us by his merit to justify; by his Spirit to sanctify; by his love to comfort; by his grace to restore; by his fellowship to cheer; and by his wisdom to instruct.

Now, this is not a prayer for the unsaved, but for those who have received Christ, that He may dwell in the heart; "dwell deep" is perhaps the literal translation, implying intensity, continuity, and not a passing interview. Day after day, by day and night, in health and sickness, at the Lord's table and at our own table, in solitude and in society, we may have the Lord Christ dwelling in us, in our thought and confidence and hope, as Cleanser, Purifier, Reviver, Physician, Saviour, and Friend. When He comes, He comes to rule and regulate, to control and guide, to discipline if need be, to conquer our Will-be-Will, to cast out old Incredulity and the other Diabolians from Mansoul. Yield yourselves to Him, and He will come in and abide with you.

How? By faith. That means distrust cast out; it means confidence. Faith is the great receiving grace, the open window that the sun may shine in, the open hand outstretched that He may fill it. Faith is the soul waiting on God, the finger touching his garments; the weary head laid on his breast. He dwells in us, not by the tenacity of high resolve, or the warmth of glowing love, but simply by believing, taking Him at his word, trusting in Him. Faith working by love, purifying the heart, overcoming the world, is the one condition or instrument for receiving and retaining Christ in the heart.

Prayer by Mr. W. R. Lane and the singing of the doxology concluded the proceedings of the first day.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

Lord Polwarth read Revelation i., and the entire assembly repeated the ascription of verses 5 and 6: "Unto Him that loveth us," etc. In the course of some remarks on Eph. iii. 17-19, he said that while loving to dwell on the redemptive work of Christ, the believer should never forget his standing in the sight of God through the blood and righteousness of the Saviour. All other love is small when compared with the love of Jesus Christ, who redeems out of the pit of corruption and makes his own to be members of his spiritual body. Christ's disciples did not learn in a moment all they ultimately came to know; so it must be with us, and by quietly sitting at the Lord's feet we shall hear his words and learn his will. The love of Christ is not so much to be analysed as to be realised, so that we may more than ever live in Christ and He in us.

Christian Advancement.

By Rev. E. H. HOPKINS.

What is the connection between the two clauses, "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith," and "ye being rooted and grounded in love"? If I understand the passage aright, it is this—that if we have the first, we have also the second. The being rooted and grounded in love is the effect of having Christ dwelling in our hearts by faith. Our subject is spiritual advancement—progress in our knowledge of the love of Christ. This is not an intellectual knowledge; rather, pre-eminently an inward experience of that love, and a spiritual perception of it, is indicated.

In what does this progress consist? In growth in the knowledge and the love of Christ: not so much in truth as in love; not so much in light as in the knowledge of his love. We want truth and we want love. How much more common it is to have truth than to possess grace—to have the mind filled with light and have little love in the heart! The Lord Jesus Christ was filled with grace and truth, and spiritual progress consists in a practical growing in the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. If we would know God's love, it can only be by receiving it into our hearts. God claims our whole being, and wishes to sanctify our emotions as well as our minds and wills. He liberates our minds with his truth: "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." He sanctifies our wills with his power; He purifies our emotions by satisfying and controlling them. I take it that this spiritual progress in the knowledge of the love of God consists in every power and faculty of our being, that we may know experimentally the love of Christ that passeth knowledge and that we may be brought to a spiritual perception of it.

What are the conditions? Love is needed in order to know love. Mark the order: First of all, God loved the world—a world that had not a particle of love for Him, a guilty and lost world. That grand fact has been revealed; that which is revealed we behold; that which we behold we appropriate; that which we appropriate we experience; and that which we experience we know. We know the love of Christ when we behold it; but in a deeper sense do we know it since we have experienced it: "that we may apprehend with all saints . . . and know the love of Christ." In order that we may advance in our knowledge of that love, we must be in it, and have inside knowledge.

Being "rooted and grounded" implies having been planted. Every believer is planted in Christ, built upon Christ, and therefore planted and built in love—not human love, but Divine. A tree participates in the ground in which it is rooted; a house built on a good foundation shares the stability of such a foundation. So, in order to understand the love of Christ and grow up into it, we must become partakers of this love—be rooted in it, and receive into our very being the Divine nature and the Divine love.

How is that condition to be brought about? We cannot bring it about of ourselves. God has not only given his Son in love, but He has given love in his Son. Christ Himself was love; and when He dwells in our hearts with Him. Love is then shed abroad in our hearts. For Christ to "dwell in our hearts" is not a mere metaphor, nor does it take place mentally, as some would teach. Such views arise from an impression that real things are visible, and that invisible things are not real. Scripture teaches the opposite. The things that are not seen are eternal, and the things that are seen are fleeting. In his glorified body the Lord Jesus is in heaven: but, nevertheless, when he said, "Lo, I am with you alway," He meant what he said. He dwells in our hearts by faith, and faith must have a fact to rest upon, and the fact is antecedent to the faith. Christ will be to us practically what He is to our faith.

Here is the end of the working of the Spirit—strengthened with might in the inner man, in order that Christ may dwell in the heart by faith. This comes to some of us as a marvellous revelation, and gives a wonderful lift to the spiritual man. Is Christ to dwell in me, speak with my mouth, look with my eyes, and work with my hands? I know no more sublime fact in God's Word, and the Holy Ghost comes to make it real to us. Nothing short of God can satisfy our hearts, or meet the necessities of our being. He who died for us, in wonderful condescension and love, comes and dwells in our hearts by faith!

The Self-Revelation of God.

By Rev. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

The word Love is the very heart of the Christian religion; that which is deepest and most powerful is the love of Christ. I ask you first of all to realise that the love of Christ is the goal of the Divine self-revelation. If you study the Bible you will see that all down the ages God has been striving to make Himself known to his people. He has always been willing to tell us more about Himself than we have been willing to learn; and one of the most staggering and startling things in history is the patience of God in all his dealings with his children. When we read our Bibles, we learn that God's first revelation was under the name of El, conveying the idea of power. The first thought of God that man grasped was that of power. Finding himself surrounded by forces which he could not understand or control, man spoke of God as the Mighty or Powerful One, in whose hands those forces were.

Then we find man worshipping the Creator, calling Him El Shaddai—the Almighty One. When God revealed Himself to Abraham by this name (Gen. xvii. 1), He told him that the power behind nature was to be exercised on man's behalf and not against man. So when He said, "I am El Shaddai," He was beginning that revelation which culminated in the truth that GOD IS LOVE.

Coming down to the time of the Exodus, when God was leading his people to a new trust and new experiences, we have a new Divine self-revelation. Man has never been able to learn anything about God until God Himself has spoken. All through revelation God never calls his people to take a new step of trust, or to venture on Him in a new way, without revealing to them some aspect of his nature and character which entitled Him to the trust for which He called. When He was forming a nation, and committing his revelation not to a family but to a nation, we find that He reveals Himself as Jehovah. I do not think we can understand the reverence and awe and love which God's ancient people regarded as gathering round that name unless we look deeply into the word.

What did He tell them when He said, "I am that I am"? First of all, He revealed Himself as the Absolute or All-Sufficient One, who needed no cause out of Himself for anything that He was or did. Then He revealed Himself as the Self-Consistent and Faithful One—"I will be that I am"; you may trust Me wholly, for after the lapse of ages you will find Me what I am to-day. And in a world like this, where there is so much that is changing, is it not something to have an eternal, immutable, and ever-faithful God? When everything seems shaking, is it not much to know that nothing can shake God, and that when we get to God our souls may be entirely at rest? When He revealed Himself as Jehovah He assured his people that whatever else of his character would be made known would be in a line with what they knew already. What was said of the gods of the nations showed them as arbitrary—one thing to-day and another to-morrow; but Jehovah would be always consistent with that which was eternal and in itself right.

No new name of God was afterwards given, but as Israel came to new difficulties there was a further revelation of Jehovah. For example, Jehovah revealed Himself as Jehovah-Tsidkenu—the righteousness of his people. When Israel were up to realise that she could not live without a righteousness which she had not, Jehovah said,

"I AM YOUR RIGHTEOUSNESS."

Again, when Israel was called to be entirely and wholly the Lord's, and wondered how she could consecrate herself, He revealed Himself as "the Lord that sanctifieth thee,"—that separateth and bindeth thee to Myself. Then, He is Jehovah-Jireh, who would meet all the need of those who would consecrate themselves and their all to Him. He is, moreover, Jehovah-Nissi, under whose banner victory was always to be found; and to those stricken down in battle He was Jehovah-Ropheka—"the Lord who healeth thee." He is also Jehovah-Ro'i—"the Lord is my Shepherd"—who leads his servant wherever He would have him go.

All along, Israel was getting to know better what Jehovah was, and what she was to be as the people of the Lord. So it went on through the years until the Lord Jesus Christ came, and with Him came a new revelation of God when He stepped forth and said, "Our Father." What a burst of glory that was! He gathered up all the Old Testament revelations, saying in effect, All that is in the word Jehovah is true, but it is also true that Jehovah is your Father. The might and faithfulness and eternity are the might and faithfulness and eternity of the Father who pities all who put their trust in Him.

There was one step further when the inspired Apostle wrote down "God is love." This, which is the goal of Divine revelation, the last thing God has told man about Himself, was not given in a word, but in a Person. He did not simply tell us that God was love, but he showed us Christ; and when man saw Him, looked into his eyes, heard his words, witnessed his deeds, and the Godhead that was in Him blazing forth, it was then that man learned to say, and to know what it was to say, that God is love. So, when we speak about the love of Christ, we are really dealing with the last thing God has told us about Himself, and we have to learn that all that we are to know of God is to be through knowing the love of God as it is in Jesus Christ our Lord.

The love of God in Christ is not only the goal of the Divine self-revelation, but it reveals the love of God as grace. There is a distinction between grace and love. It is this: Love has no limits such as grace has. Love may flow up, or to those who are our equals; grace always flows downwards, and the love of God is a love that flows down to those who are unworthy of it. It would do us little good to know that God is love, if it were not for our knowing also that in Christ it takes a gracious form, and flows down to us who are so unworthy of it. It was gracious enough to bridge the gulf between the Creator and the creature. Is it not marvellous that God, with so many worlds to look after, should care for you and me? Yet He does it. The Psalmist saw the countless stars above, and exclaimed: "When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers, the moon and the stars, which Thou hast ordained:

> Then say I, What is man, that he > Remembered is by Thee?
> Or what the son of man, that Thou
> So kind to him should'st be?"

The love of Christ reveals the love of God as big enough to bridge the gulf between the holy God and the guilty sinner. The Creator loving the creature we can understand, but the marvel is that God should love those who have sinned against Him. "God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." God cares even for the wretch who turns his back on his law and spurns the Saviour:—

> How could'st thou be delighted
> With sinners such as we,
> Who, when we saw Thee, slighted
> And nailed Thee to the tree?
> Unfathomable wonder,
> And mystery Divine,
> The voice that speaks in thunder
> Says, "Sinner, I am thine."

It is not only a revelation bridging the gulf between the holy and unholy. It is Christ dwelling in the heart. Think of it! The Holy Spirit coming into contact with the defilement in me, putting up with it, bearing with it in that wonderful patience of his! How it taxes the Christian graces to pass a day or two with people who are known as disagreeable! Have you ever thought how hard it must be for the Holy Spirit to get on with you—to put up with the defilement that is in your heart? Yet, the love of Christ is a revelation of the Divine, and is equal to that; it bridges the gulf between God's purity and my uncleanness, and is willing to come in and dwell there, until at last He presents us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

This love is the guarantee of our salvation. The closing verses of Romans viii. show this: "I am persuaded that" nothing "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Here is the guarantee of our salvation. How do I know I am going to be saved? I do not say "Because I have believed in Christ," but I say, "Because of the love of Christ nothing can separate me from the love of God." If there are here any who have not got perhaps the reason is that they are looking at their experiences and considering their feelings, and not looking at that matchless love of which the Apostle speaks. The love of God, who gave Christ to die, and the Spirit to strengthen me, that Christ may dwell in my heart by faith, furnishes the guarantee that I shall at last stand before Him, and be made perfectly blessed in his presence.

Man cannot adequately speak of the love of Christ. It is grand beyond knowledge, and therefore beyond speech. It is reach above reach above one's grasp; yet it belongs to you and to me, if we are Christ's at all. Have you measured the significance of the word "rooted in Christ"? I think many lose a blessing in reading this, because the idea commonly suggested is stability, a being fixed in Christ. That thought is there, but I do not think it is the main thought. The thought is this: the love of Christ is the soil in which we are planted, and in which we have to grow. We do not measure the possibilities of a tree by what it is, but by the soil in which it is rooted. Who will set limits to what a man or woman may become when rooted in Christ's boundless grace, for "in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge"?

I am afraid many are living as spiritual paupers, because their roots are not going down in the soil of Christ's love, but are being sent abroad to some barren worldly soil. If we are Christ's, we are planted and rooted in Him—sending our roots deep down, and laying hold of the fatness and the sap that is in Him, so that every grace is reproduced in our life. If we wakened up to-day, what a revolution it would make in our lives! You say you cannot help being worried in a world like this. Have you remembered, you are rooted and grounded in Christ, who says,

"MY PEACE I GIVE UNTO YOU"?

He who gives you this peace went through far more trouble than you. You say you have little joy in your life. Have you remembered that you are rooted in Christ, the happiest as well as the saddest of the sons of men? In the life of Christ there was a deep well of joy, deeper than man ever knew, because his will was in a line with his Father's will. So He says: "These things have I said unto you, that my joy [Christ's own joy] might remain in you, and that your joy might be full."

You want power for work. Here is the secret of it—"strengthened with might." We have a Christ who is God, and when we are rooted in Him why should we complain of weakness? If we are weak, is it not in the measure which God has discovered it to us, in order that we may put ourselves into the hand of Him who is omnipotent? If we have not been drawing on this reservoir, why is it? God has some searching work to do with some of us before our lives put on the Divine graces. Some roots which are in worldly soil, will have to be torn up; some hindrances will have to be taken away. Then God will enable us, as never before, to lay hold of the love of Christ, in whom we are rooted; and as we begin to draw it into our being, we shall understand something of what the Apostle means regarding "the love of Christ that passeth knowledge," and ere we are aware of it, we will realise what it means to be "filled unto all the fulness of God."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The lovely summer weather to-day was favourable to a large attendance, and the Conference Hall was well filled for the evening meeting. In his opening words Lord Polwarth drew attention to the thought of family union and family privilege involved in our Lord's words in the wonderful prayer recorded in John xvii.

The special aspect of truth set down for exposition this evening was "The Advancement and Attainment of the Love of Christ." Rev. J. B. Figgis was the first speaker. At the outset he recalled the judicial murder of the Archbishop of Paris by the revolutionary Communists. When he was taken out to be shot there was found in his cell on the four arms of a cross the words "Length, depth, height, and breadth." Who, asked the speaker, can fathom the meaning of these words? They are like the Holy of Holies in the Tabernacle. In 1 Kings vi. 20, we read of the oracle in the temple in which was set the ark of the covenant, which was twenty cubits square and overlaid with pure gold. We may not call this a type, but it will serve as an illustration of the love of Jesus. Is not that love the Holy of Holies to myriads of souls? Every stone of the pavement of redemption ground is a proof of the love of Jesus. Look up or down, to the right hand or the left—everywhere we see the love of Jesus. We need not only a sanctuary, but a city to dwell in. The heavenly Jerusalem described in the Revelation was taken by Mr. Figgis as an embodiment in figure of the all-embracing love of our Lord. We have to tell sinners that if they make their bed in hell it is not because Christ did not love them, but because they rejected that love. If we compare the length of the love of Christ with our own poor life, our fickle service, and it may be our coldness and backsliding, how infinite it is! Throughout the past ages God's people may have been weary of praying, but He has never been weary of answering. How can we plumb the depth of Christ's love? By the line of our own sin and by the line of his fathomless love. Think of the sins and divisions of the Church; add to these the awful reckless sin of the careless world calling to heaven for vengeance. Then look at the pitying love of the Saviour, who came down to earth, knowing from the first that He would die on the accursed tree for the sin of mankind. What of the height of the Saviour's love? In mountain climbing summit rises beyond summit. So with the love of Christ there is ever a higher height.

We come into the school of Christian experience to learn of this love that passeth knowledge "with all saints"—Abraham, Moses, and all those of old time have not yet got to the end of their lesson. If we understood this lesson well we should never fall out with our fellow saints; we should never neglect the other sheep yet to be gathered into the fold; we should never dread the fleeting sorrows of our earthly life: we shall spend eternity itself in completing this lesson. Is all this love of Christ making us lovely and loving? It constrained Paul to self-sacrifice; what is its effect on our hearts to-day? Let us go from this study inspired, impelled, and constrained to yield to this love of Christ which passeth knowledge.

Rev. F. B. MEYER

said the Epistle to the Ephesians is the New Testament Song of Solomon: the fragrant love-letter of God to his children. Love is one of the keywords of that Epistle. In chap. i. 5 we have the love of Christ shown in our foreordination. In chap. ii. 5 that love is seen in his identification with us; in chap. v. 2 it is manifested in the blood-shedding of atonement; in verse 25 of the same chapter the love of Christ makes Him the Bridegroom of the Church. Let us get beyond a vague intellectual knowledge of this love to a definite apprehension that for each soul there is as much of the love of Christ as though there were none in the world beside. This love is illimitable. Jesus Christ, who combines the tenderness and sympathy of man with the infinite capacity of God, loves weary sinning souls with all the power of his gentleness and strength.

This love passeth knowledge, and yet we may know it; that is

THE DIVINE PARADOX.

God is always passing out of knowledge. The scientist soon finds a limit to his researches in the world of nature; how much more the student of the love of God. Much of the sublimity of nature seen in sky or sea or mountain fastness comes from infinite distance and infinite depth. Why cannot we fully know this love? Rom. viii. 39 says the love of God is in Christ Jesus our Lord. We lose more of the Divine love, because it comes to us through one who was Man. It was in Him that it might be tempered before it came to the delicate organ of the human spirit. If not it would prove our destruction. John xiii. 1:—"Having loved his own that were in the world, He loved them to the end." The R.V. says, "to the uttermost"—i.e., to the utmost bound of love. Another text is John xv. 9: "As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you." Here is the arithmetic of Divine love to mankind. Need we wonder that such love passeth knowledge? In Eph. ii. 7 we are told that God the Father is going to make his love to us a specimen of love to all the ages. He will show to the principalities and powers of other worlds the riches of his grace and the manifold character of his wisdom. This love is experienced by "all the saints." Each individual can only have his own view of this love, and therefore it cannot fully be known by anyone. The more saintly we are the more we shall know of this love. It is much more than complacency or benevolence. We may not comprehend it, but we must believe it. We may feel depressed and sin-stricken, but that does not alter the fact that Deity is pouring out the whole torrent of its love through the channel of Jesus Christ. What room for depression here? It is impossible He can let us go. The contemplation of this love has sometimes made godly men to seem "beside themselves." Flavel says in his diary that once in travelling he had such a sense of the love of Christ to him individually that he thought if he were not in heaven he could hardly have more blessedness when he reached that place. He could not sleep that night, but he says he was more rested than on many nights when he slept, and heard and saw in his soul many things that he had not known. Why are we so taken up with the trifles of earth that we cannot see this wondrous vision?

This love passeth knowledge, but yet it may be known in part. As the early settler in America knew little of the wealth of the great Western lands on whose verge he settled, but year by year he increased his holding, so we are settlers on the great continent of God Himself. We ought to know of this love doctrinally. Doctrine is as the bones to the body. Know it also by meditation. Rutherford called his prison "the King's banqueting house," because he found that he was under the banner of the love of God. We should also know this love experimentally. The thread of God's love runs through the beads of our life, if we would but recognise it. Let us reckon up the manifestations of God's love to us and we shall find that the number of these will wondrously multiply in our study. We shall have to throw down our pencils half-way through the sum, and say it passeth knowledge, but we shall know something of it. Know it also sympathetically. Every time we sacrifice ourselves for another we are repeating in our measure the deepest thought of the love of Christ. When we are gentle to those who do not deserve it, or endure shame to rescue the lost, in the glow of our interest and in the outward pressure, we may know that we are seeing more deeply the love of Christ to us.

If we cannot fully know this love, we must, at any rate, believe it. We cannot always trace its windings and turnings, but we can be sure that it is there for us. Do we not need a baptism of love? Oh! the jealousies, the suspicions, the condemnations we cherish towards each other. Of course we say we are dead to all this; but how often, when we want to leave our dog at home, he will come out after us. Let us but get a real baptism of love, and these things will go out of our life.

THURSDAY MORNING.

ADDRESS BY

REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD.

This was the closing day of the Conference. The opening prayers were offered by Principal HANDLEY MOULE, of Cambridge, the chairman thereafter reading a part of John i. and from Eph. iii.

"THE FULNESS OF GOD"

is the blessed climax, he said. In touching briefly on the fringe of this great subject, the Chairman spoke of creation, redemption, spiritual enrichment, and final glorification as various manifestations of the Divine fulness towards mankind.

Rev. MARCUS RAINSFORD, of Belgrave Chapel, was the first speaker. I profess to know nothing, he said, of the fulness of God, but as it is manifested in Christ, and as the Holy Ghost has been pleased to make it known by the Word to the sons and daughters of men. Christ is the measure of all the fulness of God, and Christ is God's free gift to you and me. Let us not forget that we have the whole of Christ to live upon. God never did anything by halves; least of all the salvation He has provided.

In Colossians i. 19 we read that it "pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell." We cannot have more than that. Wherever fulness of Christ is mentioned, it is always associated with the supply that is in Him for the needs of his people. In Col. ii. 9 we read again that "In Him (Christ) dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and ye are complete in Him." We are told in John i. 14 that "The Word was made flesh . . . . the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." There is grace for every need and truth for all our ignorance (v. 16). "Of his fulness have all we received and grace for grace." Grace on the top of grace; grace correspondingly to every grace laid up in Christ. Here we have the source of all fulness—God; the channel through which it flows—Christ; and the rest it seeks—"his body, which is the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 23).

ALL FULNESS IS IN CHRIST.

All human fulness; for He was and is perfect man. All Divine fulness. All creating glory belongs to Him. Godhead and manhood belong to Him, earth and heaven belong to Him. His fulness is as accessible as his love. All this fulness dwells in Him. It is always there. Our thirst will ever find in Him that which will slake it, and we are invited to come and enjoy it without money and without price. It is described in the word Grace. The Holy Ghost has come to communicate to us not of his own fulness, but of what He finds in Christ. This is a much-forgotten fact in our time. He shall not speak of Himself. He has got plenty to speak about. What a blessed thing it is for a weary traveller as his journey is nearly over to get a view of the distant horizon which will soon arrive.

There is no fulness contained in Christ for us, to be revealed and communicated by the Holy Ghost, but there is an adaptation in faith to receive. Where is our faith? That is the point. We have been hearing much of the privileges of the children of God and of the indwelling of Christ. It is awful to hear of these things and not receive them. Better never to have heard of them. What a tremendous responsibility is upon us if, when we are told of all this fulness laid up in Christ for us, we turn aside to the follies and vanities and trifles of the world, and the sinfulness of the flesh and the devil.

I can only give you what I know of this fulness of Christ. I would say, first, that it is the manifestation of the glory of God. When Moses came down from the mount the first time with the tables of the law, we hear of no shining on his face, but when he came down the second time with the story of Him who is the end of the law for righteousness, his face shone so that the people could not look upon him. This fulness is not self-contained. The sun is a beautiful emblem of Christ. I look at it, and it blinds me. I look around on creation—on the sparkling waters, the lovely foliage, the warmth and fruitfulness, and see the fulness of the sun in the happiness of the earth it shines upon. What is the fulness of the ocean? I cannot fathom its depths, or sail over its waters, or reach its distant shores. But I look at the rain and the dew refreshing, fructifying, and beautifying the land. I see the fulness of the ocean in the fruitfulness of the earth. So the fulness of God is not contained in Himself. If I want to know it and to enjoy it, I must see it in the life He has bestowed, in the salvation He has accomplished, in the perfection of beauty and the fulness and happiness of those whom He has loved. We are lost when we look at the glory of God in itself, but it is to be manifested—where? In heaven? In his saints. Are we among them?

Look at the effect of all this on Christ Himself. That is a point we may well study with profit. It brought Him down from his throne to be lower than the least here below; and to die the lowest kind of death—the death on the cross. See its effects in the fruits it secures for his people. There is a word in his last prayer for his people (John xvii.) which I pray the Holy Ghost may open our understandings to know: "I in them and Thou in Me." He brings the very Godhead into manhood. That could not have been in the sense in which He speaks if He had not become man. "That they also may be one in us." Do you take that in? It is not "united to us."

ONENESS IS FAR MORE THAN UNION.

Look again at the effect of the love of Christ bringing down the fulness of God into Himself for his people. It has been said that we have none of the blessings of Christ apart from Himself. God forbid. I do not want any blessing apart from Christ; I hope we have all learned that such a blessing would waste, and would disappoint. There is no blessing worth taking from God Almighty apart from his gift of Christ. If the world only knew this how they would scorn the baubles of earth. We are chosen in Him; blessed in Him; dead to sin in Him; alive to God in Him; justified in Him; sanctified in Him—I have not a particle of sanctification apart from Christ, and I am very sorry ever to hear anything about it. It sends me to look within where there is nothing but emptiness that disheartens and distresses me. All my sanctification is in my Lord as much as my justification. We are raised up together; presented together; and seated together.

Are we mixing faith with all these things? It is a very great snare to listen to precious truth and not take it in. If it is true, why not take it in? If it is a lie, of course reject it. People wonder if they will ever get to heaven. You are there already if you are in Christ. As some one has said, "We ought to be looking down from heaven at the passing things here." I do not think we gain anything by trying to explain these marvellous truths. I do not think the Lord Himself explained them, and therefore I do not believe we can explain all. And we are to be glorified together. If we suffer with Him we shall also reign with Him. Christ has many members in his body, and He cannot do without any of them. The hand cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee." If there is a poor soul here who has but touched the hem of his garment, know that Christ cannot be glorified without you. There would be a deficiency in his fulness, if the least member of his body were wanting.

Let us try and believe what we cannot comprehend. I cannot explain it, and I do not think any one can explain it. A weary traveller faint by the way can refresh himself from the stream, though he is not at all able to sound the depths of the ocean from which it took its rise. The Epistle to the Ephesians was written about the same time as that to the Colossians. The latter tells us what Christ is to his people from God; and what a description we have of that. Ephesians, on the other hand, tells us what his people in Christ are to God. It is summed up in chap. i. 18, where the Apostle speaks of "the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." Have you ever taken that in? Do we know it? We do not make enough of the knowledge. We are made partakers of the Divine nature through the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. There is no true faith that is not grounded on knowledge. Then we read of "the exceeding greatness of his power to usward who believe." Do we believe? Then we shall experience the exceeding greatness of his power.

Mr. Rainsford in the close of his address claimed the privilege of an old man in retracing somewhat the steps of former speakers; dilating on the love of Christ and the might of the Spirit, and adding some piquant touches to the exposition of these profound and wondrous truths.

THE MILDMAY INSTITUTIONS.

Before the second address Rev. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE interposed with a very strong and urgent plea on behalf of the work that centres in Mildmay. He referred first to the two hospitals, one situated close to the Conference Hall, and the other in Bethnal Green. He had gone to the latter on the previous day, and it appeared to him beautiful in every sense of the word—exactly what it ought to be. There is a debt of £900 upon it. He felt sure that many of God's servants and stewards only needed to know what would best be their privilege in the matter. The hospital in the Mildmay grounds is now placed by Lady Hay in charge of the central office, so that funds will be needed for that more than before. There are in it thirty beds, and fifty beds in the Bethnal Green Institution. Then there are the two Convalescent Homes, one at Barnet for the poor people, and one at the seaside for the tired-out deaconesses. These are very essential parts of the work, and they appeal strongly to our sympathies. As to the great central work at Mildmay, Mr. Peploe said he was grieved to see how little comparatively was given to it. £3000 practically is needed every year to keep the work of the Hall going; besides the other departments. There are in all some forty buildings to keep in order and in repair, and those friends who receive such benefit from the Conferences ought to help in this. There is also the Training Home for young ladies at The Willows, Stoke Newington. At this juncture it is very important to secure a piece of land close by on which there is a proposal to build some residential flats to the destruction of the quietude of the Home. £1800 would be needed to purchase this land, and it is a very urgent matter that some friend should provide this amount at once.

The memorial to the late Sir S. A. Blackwood, in the shape of an endowed bed in the Bethnal Green Hospital, will require £1,500, and only the half of

The Late REV. E. A. TELFER,

METHODIST PREACHER AND LECTURER.

ONE of the most interesting pieces of biographical literature we have ever read has just come from the Press. It is the life story of the late Rev. E. A. Telfer, whose somewhat sudden death in the early part of last year closed a career that was singularly chequered, but in its general features most blessed and inspiring. The biography is from the pen of his widow, who has entitled her narrative The Successful Soul Winner,* and surely never was the appellation more amply justified. Towards the close of the book the shadows mingle very thickly with the sunshine. We do not purpose to enter on any detailed examination or recital of these matters, but we would earnestly commend the perusal of this volume to all who sympathise with the pathetic spectacle of a good and high-spirited Christian man struggling with adversity.

Edward Armstrong Telfer was a native of the Scottish Lowlands, where he was born in 1822. Very early in youth he had what seemed a premonition of the strange reverses that coloured his later life so deeply. A wealthy friend who had undertaken the expenses of his education was ruined through the perfidy of another, and young Telfer's father was involved in the ruin. Having exhibited much promise in many departments of study, Edward Telfer was scarcely out of his teens when he had to launch his bark on the stormy sea of life. He went to Liverpool, where his mechanical tastes enabled him to make progress in the employment of a builder. Moving shortly after to Sandbach, Cheshire, he was brought into close relation with those belonging to the Methodist body, though he had been reared in the Presbyterian fold. His actual conversion was the fruit of a remark made by one of the girl scholars in his Sunday-school class. He soon appears to have caught the true Christian fervour of spirit, and engaged in the work of a local preacher. Resolves were made to enter the regular ministry, and in 1849 he received from Conference his first appointment to a Devonshire circuit.

During the early years of his itinerant pastorate he had much joy and success in the work of the Gospel, especially among the young. His lively temperament and remarkable powers of description and illustration made him a favourite with all classes. His zeal was at white heat, and it is recorded how some few years later he earned the sobriquet of "the hell-fire preacher." Writing after twenty years' ministerial service, he was able to record that he knew of some eight thousand souls whom he had been instrumental in pointing savingly to Christ. In 1855, he was married to Miss How, of Bideford. This lady has been the sharer of his many joys and sorrows, and has lived to prepare this worthy memorial of his earnest, busy, and fruitful life.

Passing to the town of Plymouth, where he had great prosperity in a spiritual sense, and where he developed his extraordinary gifts as a preacher-lecturer, we find him afterwards at York, and later on in Glasgow.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Matthewson & Co., Brisbane.)

While in this northern circuit, he took an active part in revival work at Kilsyth—a name well known in the annals of spiritual upheavals. In course of time he was translated to the great metropolis, and found in Spitalfields a wide sphere for his fervid and aggressive ministry. In that part of the East-end the Methodist cause seems, in those days, to have fallen low, and Mr. Telfer was enabled to infuse much new life into the circuit. Two chapels were restored, and much prosperity experienced. It is stated that during three years' work in East London he travelled 42,000 miles in his preaching and lecturing tours, raising about £3000 for church purposes. In 1870 he returned to Glasgow, where his labours were so abundant that his health suffered seriously.

Yet another period of active ministry was given to the East-end of London, and then he was able to fulfil a long-cherished plan of visiting Canada. Everywhere he went throughout the Dominion, he found large and most appreciative audiences, to whom he lectured and preached in a way which was described by one paper as "graphic, attractive, and powerful." Those who read the excerpts from his lectures given in the volume, will feel that the description is true. His visit was extended as far West as Chicago before he returned to the old country. During his sojourn on the other side he gathered much material, which was afterwards utilised in his popular addresses.

Not long after his resumption of pastoral work in England, Mr. Telfer had to go through the painful but necessary task, as it seemed to him, of defending his character and that of his life partner in a court of law, against a foul and libellous accusation of breach of trust, in relation to a trusteeship which he held. In this action he was completely successful, but it was the beginning of other and similar sorrows, which seemed to dog his footsteps in a mysterious way, and which, no doubt, ultimately hastened his death. Those who are sufficiently interested in the question must refer to the book before us for such particulars as are given of these unwelcome vicissitudes. So far as we can judge from the evidence at our command, Mr. Telfer acted with nobility, probity, and great self-sacrifice, and it seems to us that his widow deserves the amplest sympathy in this endeavour to preserve the fair fame and reputation of one so dear to her.

Another visit was paid to Canada, this time chiefly with a view of learning more as to its capabilities for emigration. Later on he received the permission of Conference to visit Australia. The full records given in the volume of these visits, and the active labours that accompanied them, are of the most absorbing interest, and will repay a careful perusal. With a keen observant eye, and a wealth of graphic diction, Mr. Telfer was able to note down for future reference many occurrences and impressions that go to make up a living and instructive narrative. Financial troubles that came through his devotion to the interests of others compelled him once more to girdle the globe in a lecturing tour, and he stirred many an audience in South Africa, the Antipodes, and North America, souls being won for Christ all the time as he passed from place to place.

All this expenditure of force, almost herculean in its extent, must have told on his frame and his spirit, elastic and buoyant though it was. After his return to England in the spring of 1892, much work was undertaken and plans were made for future usefulness. He preached for several terms in the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, with abundant signs following. At the time of his death he had an engagement for a lengthened mission. His last illness, at Norwood where he and his wife had taken up their residence, was very short. On the Friday he took to his bed, and a few brief days saw him called away to his eternal rest. The doctor who attended him gave the opinion that he had succumbed to serious and repeated shocks of the heart. Of him it may truly be said that his works do follow him, as he rests from his unwearied labours for God and man.

BRIDGE OF ALLAN CONVENTION.

The third annual Convention for the deepening of the Christian life opened at Bridge of Allan on Monday evening, June 18. There was a large attendance from every part of Scotland, as well as a considerable number from England, who enjoyed the rest and refreshing of a week in this health resort. The Convention has now become thoroughly established, and has been accepted with thankfulness by all Christians and Christian workers as a Scottish institution of the highest practical value. The attendance this year was considerably larger than last June. The large marquee erected in the Public Park is seated for holding 2500, and at some of the services was almost completely filled. Three flags bearing the words, "Love, joy, peace," floated over the top, while over the main entrance and platform the motto of the Convention is emblazoned in red-and-white, "All one in Christ Jesus." Mr. Robert Wilson presided at all the meetings.

Speaking at the opening service on Monday, Dr. Elder Cumming chose as his subject the story of Christ washing the disciples' feet. This formed the keynote of all that followed. In the East it was customary, before the feast began, to wash the feet of the guests. The company was assembled, the feast was ready, all were waiting to begin; no one seems to have discovered a want. The duty of washing the feet usually devolved upon a slave. Evidently there were none at hand. It did not occur to any of the disciples to humble themselves to do the work, and thus it is that we have the Lord and Master Himself taking the servant's place and washing the feet of his disciples. The Greatest among them had become the servant of all. Rev. J. E. Houston gave an address on Revival, from Hab. iii. 2. If God's work is to be revived, God's children must be humbled in the dust before Him, for such revival must begin in the hearts of believers. From thence it must manifest itself in the life, so that bringing all the tithes into the storehouse, God may fulfil his word, and pour out a blessing till there be not room enough to receive it.

On Tuesday morning there was an early meeting for prayer. The subject of address, Isa. xl. 28-31, "the need, the power, the benefit of prayer," was opened by Mr. Houston, who pointed out two great evils to be avoided: (1) to act independently of God, which was the cause of the first sin, and (2) to think that God is taking little interest in us. The Bible reading was given by Dr. White, from Psa. cxlviii. 14, "A people near unto Him." In order that God should draw near to us we require to have (1) clean hands, (2) a pure heart, (3) the contrite spirit, (4) Christ in you the hope of glory. The evening brought a considerably increased assembly. It was a time of deep searching of heart. A thrill passed through many hearts as Mr. Wilson gave out the hymn, "There is sin in the camp." This was intensified when Rev. J. J. Luce gave out his subject, Jer. xlv. 5, "Seekest thou great things for thyself?" Baruch was a good and a great man, but his life was self-centred. We ought to examine ourselves in regard to this same thing. Are our motives pure? Are our hearts pure? Is our aim as Christians what it might be? God is asking us, What wilt thou that I shall do unto thee? Even Solomon asked for himself wisdom and knowledge to rule. A self-centred spirit is always burdened with responsibilities which God does not mean men to carry. It is also mistrustful; doubting if God is carrying on things in the best possible way. It is also an unrestful life; troubled about many things. True rest, conscious relief and abiding strength were only to be had where Christ was the centre and his sustaining strength the bridge of all our hopes.

Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor followed with an address upon "Self-examination," from Hag. i. 5, "Consider your ways." There is no hope for our spiritual life without this self-examination. There are secret ways known only to God and ourselves—a life of thoughts, ambitions, wishes, desires, and imaginations. For it is when we look at the matter in this way, that we see the truth of what the Bible says about the wickedness of the heart. Then there is evil speaking regarding which we might well ask—Is it true? Is it kind? Is it necessary? Then there is the habit of reading. Do we ask God to watch over what we read? Our habits of eating and drinking require to be inquired into also, especially as we are under obligation to do all to the glory of God. How is it with our family life? in our business concerns? and in our social relations? Do sincerity, purity, and affection control all these? Another meeting was addressed by Mr. Carr, of New York, and Dr. Elder Cumming. The former spoke from 1 John v. 12, and the latter from John xiv. 20.

On Wednesday morning Mr. Luce gave an address from Isa. xxx. 20—21, his subject being divine guidance. The Bible reading was given by Dr. White from Matt. xi. 28 to 30. The afternoon service was conducted by Rev. C. G. Moore, who, speaking from Mark viii. 21, "How is it ye do not understand?" showed that the great difficulties in our life can be mastered by the guidance and power of Christ. Dr. Elder Cumming followed with an address on the Christian's position in the world, showing that victory is infallibly assured to all who have faith in Christ.

The evening meeting was characterised by a notable increase in the audience, and also by the intensity and interest experienced. Rev. A. T. Donald opened with an address on Acts xvi. 14, dwelling specially on the powerful influence of a mother's life, while Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor spoke on the words "Thou art my King, O God; command deliverances for Jacob." Speaking of the absolute authority of God, and the absolute submission of believers, he referred to the necessity of deliverance from sin, and pointed out that the first step was unreserved surrender and absolute allegiance to God. A wave of feeling of a very marked kind passed over the vast audience; all seemed affected by the consciousness of sin and unworthiness, and many felt as if they must cast themselves at the feet of the great Jehovah, and say, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

Thursday was beautiful without and delightful within. The Bible reading was given by Rev. Evan Hopkins from Deut. i. 19-30, an Old Testament passage for New Testament saints, for whom the danger of losing our privileges was great. He urged them to see where they stood in spiritual knowledge. Referring to the possession of the land of Canaan, he said the land must be seen, must be possessed, and must be entered into in order to be possessed. When God brought the Israelites out of the house of bondage, and taught and instructed them at Mount Sinai, that which they learned then was to be practised in the land of Canaan. Many Christians whose conversion was not to be doubted stopped short at receiving the truth, and were not found doers of the Word. They came to the Borderland, and seemed not to enter into possession. They had all the promises like so many cheques, which were never cashed, and so their souls were starving still, although the land was flowing with milk and honey.

Thursday night found the largest audience yet assembled. Large numbers came from the neighbouring villages. Dr. White spoke from Gen. xxxii. 35, on "the awful touch and the wonderful blessing." In this case it was the "lame taking the prey," and the weak becoming strong. In Isa. vi. 7 a prophet's lips were touched; in Dan. x. he was touched when prostrate on the ground, his lips were touched when he was standing on his feet, and the third time the touch strengthened him for the future of his whole life and work. Rev. Evan Hopkins spoke from Isa. lviii. 11, 12, whence he showed that the life of faith steps out on the promises of God, from whom we receive guidance, satisfaction, and strength.

On Friday morning there was a gratifying attendance at the prayer meeting, and the forenoon's Bible reading by Rev. C. G. Moore on "Taking Offence" was very powerful, and as on Wednesday evening, so now, the audience seemed to be specially moved by the address. There would be about 1500 present in the Convention when the meeting was addressed by Revs. J. E. Houston and G. H. C. Macgregor. At night fully 2200 occupied the spacious tent. Dr. Elder Cumming and Mr. Macgregor conducted the service, the former taking John xv. and the latter Rom. vi. as his subject. There was a very marked intensity of feeling, and the onlooker could scarcely help believing that everyone in the audience desired definite experience of the blessing of power. Without any notice the meeting passed into a consecration service, led by Mr. Macgregor, and while engaging in prayer he asked the audible response of unreserved surrender to God. Five times in succession the response came out from the entire meeting in subdued, but distinctly audible, words, after which the silence seemed to be intense. The third National Convention was then closed with the Benediction, friends speaking to one another in whispers, as if near to an unseen yet conscious presence, which all were desirous henceforward to enjoy.

Saturday's large missionary meeting was a fitting conclusion to services which marked the distinctly rising tide in Scottish Christian life and experience.

VENICE AND THE LORD'S DAY.

The example set by King Humbert and the Emperor William when in Venice lately in regard to keeping holy the Lord's Day does not seem to have been lost upon the Venetians, for since then an agitation has been set on foot to close the shops and places of business. At present a few shops do not open at all on the Lord's Day; some keep open till mid-day, but the great majority are open all the day.

Several mass meetings of shopmen and others interested in the question have been held, the last one on Friday last in the hall of the Chamber of Commerce, kindly lent for the purpose. At that meeting a resolution was unanimously passed asking all those who trade in groceries and food stuffs in Venice to close all their shops, warehouses, and offices not later than mid-day on Domenica—the Lord's Day, as it is invariably called in Italian, our Saturday being called Sabbath (Sabato). The masters agreed to do so, if the result of a canvass showed a certain majority of them to be in favour of it. The result of this canvass shows that almost all the masters agreed to the proposition. It has at once been arranged to give it effect, and so on and after July 1 all such shops will be closed in Venice on the Lord's Day at twelve o'clock.

To those who know Italy, this will be recognised as a great step in the right direction and we may confidentially hope that in God's providence it may lead on to the shops remaining closed all day. The few shopkeepers who already do that, have told me that their days of rest are enjoyable in themselves, that they fit them for their week's work, and that financially the closing is a gain and not a loss. Those who close half a day will doubtless soon find the advantage of closing a whole one. I have noticed, too, that the shopkeepers who close their shops on the Lord's day, generally keep them open on the Church of Rome's saints' days, and thereby hangs a tale. They cannot keep both, and it was the observance of saints' days that led to the breaking of the Lord's Day.

Often Italians have said to me "Our time is so broken in upon by the Church's festivals that we must work on the Domenica." That is how, as Mr. Spurgeon used to say, they broke the fourth commandment both ways, neither working six days, nor resting the seventh. Now we may hope to see them keeping it both ways, working six days, and resting the seventh.—I am yours, sincerely, that has been promised. Of course there are the many minor institutions connected with Mildmay. Throughout the metropolis there are some twenty missions worked from this centre, all exercising much blessed influence among the poor and needy. There is also a work at Malta, and a medical mission in Palestine. So that the work is really multiform. The existing debt is £4444, which must be a matter of deep regret to all. Mr. Peploe, in closing, earnestly appealed for a generous response to the present need, and that in the coming time Colonel Morton might be freed from anxiety as to funds.

Rev. J. G. TRAIN.

of Norwood, gave a brief concluding address on the topic of Conference. The special aspect on which he expatiated was the need of strength, in order, even, to the apprehension and reception of this fulness of God of which we had been hearing. This is a primary need, and must be met before we are empowered for our walk, our work, and our warfare. All these need the possession of the fullest spiritual powers and apprehensions, which can only come from the receiving of the might of the Spirit. In relation to Christ we need life; towards one another we must exercise love, and in the world we are to shine as lights. How great, then, is the need for this spiritual strengthening revealed in this wonderful epistle.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The Fulness of God.

By Rev. H. E. FOX.

We are invited to meditate upon the fulness of God, and specially with reference to its enjoyment and extent. The term "fulness," as used of man, is necessarily a relative one. It must have some reference to the capacity of that which is filled. A vessel which holds a little may be full, just as a vessel which holds a great deal may be full. Then here is the quality of that which fills to be considered—the vessel may be full, but with what? The saints sing of the cup of mercy, the sinner trembles at the cup filled with indignation.

Now we have been considering this fulness of God; but, after all, how little we understand it. There is no limit to it; how then can we comprehend it fully? The Lord Jesus Christ is the infinite fulness of God presented to us in concrete form. We cannot grasp God, but we can in some measure grasp the manifestation of Him in his Son. Now, in the passage before us, the fulness of Jesus is said to be manifested under two aspects: He fills the Church, "Which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all"; and He fills each individual member of that body "that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." And concerning that fulness we have this further truth, "Of his fulness have all we received, and grace for grace."

Now let us consider how the Lord Jesus Christ manifested his fulness, for if we are to be filled we must set our lives (as people set their watches) by his glorious example and pattern. There was one great keynote, sounded at his coming into the world, which supplies the motive for his whole service. The writer of the Epistle to the Hebrews quotes from Psalm xl. the words "Lo, I come: I delight to do thy will, O my God." There are three things here: (1) the joy of the Lord Jesus in doing the will of God; that is love, meeting the required merit of God, rejoices; (2) it is not only emotion, but the surrender of the being, that is obedience; and (3) his active obedience runs along the prescribed path, that is understanding. Now let us take these three and see how they correspond to anything in us: for all our graces not only come from Him, but they are like his. It is instructive to trace how much is said about these things in the Word. Take the first, joy. Turn to John xv. 11, and see how even when Jesus was under the shadow of the darkness of sorrow coming over Him, He seems to dwell on the gift of joy: "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and your joy might be full." That is our Saviour's own joy. Then ch. xvi. 24, "Ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." And so in that marvellous priestly prayer (John xvii.) our Lord says, ver. 18, "And now I come to Thee . . . that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." "My joy?" What was that joy? "Who for the joy set before Him endured the Cross" (Heb. xii. 2). What was that joy? In Acts ii. 28, Peter, speaking by the Holy Ghost, says: "Thou hast made known to Me the ways of life; Thou shalt make Me full of joy with thy countenance." What joy? It is the joy of resurrection. Not that He should escape death, but that He should pass through it and triumph over it. This is resurrection joy, and we who are risen with Him may share it.

But remember God never severs grace from grace. This joy is bound up with obedience and intelligence. In Phil. i. 9 the Apostle prays that their "love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment . . . . being filled with the fruits of righteousness which are by Jesus Christ." Obedience is the only way you can prove the good, and acceptable, and perfect will of God. And this is not all. Look at Col. i. 9, and you see that fulness is not only a matter of joy and obedience, but also of understanding. "That ye might be filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding," and similarly in Col. ii. 2, we read of "the riches of the full assurance of understanding."

So these three things, joy, obedience, and intelligence, manifested in Christ, are intended to be reproduced in us. He calls us to be full of joy, full of obedience, and full of understanding, and we dare not stop short, or rest content with any measure short of fulness. Why are we not full? Very often it is because we are filled with something else. Let us seek to be emptied of everything which keeps us from obeying his command, "Be ye filled with the Spirit."

Rev. HUBERT BROOKE.

As our brother was speaking we have been led to consider, How rich is our Father in heaven; and all his treasures, all He is and has, are for his children. Once He said, "Son, thou art ever with Me, and all that I have is thine." Now He seems to say, "Son, I am ever with thee, and all that I am is thine." Thus the fulness of the Godhead is ours, if we but claim it. He calls Himself the great "I AM," leaving the blank for faith to fill up.

The "fulness" of God! The word pleroma, translated "fulness," occurs seventeen times in the New Testament, and has been defined to mean "the filled condition of anything." It is used of the rent garment mended with new cloth, the baskets full of fragments, and the fulness of the times of the Gentiles, when every Gentile has been brought in. Then there is the fulness of the obedience which Christ rendered, and the fulness of prophetic times. The expression is also used of supply, of grace, of growth, and of glory. And now we are told that the fulness of God is for us to use. We may well be astounded at such an idea, but it is a glorious fact. Remember it is only in Jesus Christ we can understand anything of this wondrous fulness. And do not forget it is for all saints, for every single member of the body of Christ.

Some friends, standing a little while ago by the mighty mass of water which supplies the great city of Glasgow, asked, as they watched the rushing stream and heard of the millions of gallons used every day, "Do you never run dry?" The answer was, "Oh, sir, it makes no odds up here." So there is the fulness of God, and every thirsty soul in the universe may drink, but that fulness remains undiminished—"it makes no odds up here." One can imagine some little house in Glasgow where the water runs slowly in the tap and begins to fail. What can be the reason? Has the supply in the hills run out? Certainly not. What then? There is something wrong with the pipes; they need clearing. So souls, living without the fulness of God, need not think He is exhausted: it is the channels of communication which need looking to.

Now there are clear Scriptural conditions for fulness of soul, quite plainly put before us, and we will do well to look at these. Psa. xxii. 26: "The meek shall eat and be satisfied." Psa. xxxvii. 3: "Trust in the Lord, and do good, so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed." Thus we have two things, meekness and trust; or in one word, humble trust.

Then in Psa. lxxxi. 10: "Open thy mouth wide and I will fill it," that is expectancy, but it is not dumb expectancy. Turn to Psa. cv. 40: "The people asked, and He brought quails, and satisfied them with the bread of heaven." This is asking and getting. Put these two together and you have, as the second condition for fulness, expectant prayer. He will not send one hungry, eager, expectant soul empty away.

Now Prov. xii. 11: "He that tilleth his land shall be satisfied." It is not walking to heaven in slippered ease, or in armchair sloth; it is rising early, tilling the land, turning up the fruitful soil, and getting the freshness into our souls. Then Prov. xix. 23: "The fear of the Lord tendeth to life, and he that hath it shall abide satisfied." The condition here is fear, or obedience. That is, these two passages teach thorough, whole-hearted, prompt obedience and uprightness. And there are many unsatisfied souls, because there is so little of this fear of God in heart and life, in home and society. God will not fill and satisfy disobedient children. Humble trust, expectant prayer, and whole-hearted obedience—these are the conditions of filling. This is the open secret of fulness possessed and enjoyed. Will you have it to-night? Trust, ask, and obey, and you will be satisfied. Do you believe it? Then yield to the conditions, and claim it now.

Lord Polwarth added a few closing words of personal application, speaking of the audience as some three thousand vessels waiting to be filled in order that blessing might flow out to others. He could not help thinking what a marvellous power the three thousand assembled in Conference might be if they went forth, everyone of them filled with the Holy Ghost and with power.

In uttering these closing sentences his own heart went back to him who spoke so pathetically and beautifully last year, who for so many years had presided at the Conference, and who had now gone in to see the King of Glory.

The proceedings of the Conference were then concluded with the singing of the hymn:

In the shadow of his wings
There is rest, sweet rest.

As on the preceding evening, a short after-meeting followed the main meeting. This was led by Mr. Brooke, the aim being to lead all present to purposeful acceptance of the fulness of God expounded in the Conference.

THE STORY OF A TESTAMENT.

Inhabiting a beautiful valley at the foot of the Sufed Koh range, half-way between Bannu and Cabul, is the Afghan tribe Turis. Unlike their Sunni neighbours, they belong to the Sheak sect of Mohammedans, and so have always remained separate and apart from the surrounding tribes.

Eight years ago one of their leading men, who had heard about Christianity and desired to know more, received a Pushtu Testament (Loewenthal's) through an officer on duty there, with whom he used occasionally to talk about religion. Then this officer left, and, after lapse of eight years, another officer in the district reported that the man had been diligently reading the book, and was converted to its teaching. That valley having so far been untouched by the efforts of any mission, and the nearest missionary station being Bannu, the Bannu medical missionary undertook the journey, taking with him a supply of Bibles, Testaments, and religious books, in Arabic, Pushtu, and Persian, as well as some medicines to ensure a welcome.

For several days the guest of the owner of the Testament given eight years before, he was not a little pleased to notice the effect produced through that book on the man's life. Almost every day during those eight years he had read it diligently (as was attested by its well-worn appearance), and he confessed to having found in it the words of Eternal Life. The people of his village, including their priests and influential men, had been accustomed to gather in his house and hear him read and preach from the wonderful book. As a result many became anxious to read and search for themselves. "For," they said to me, "we see what an effect reading this book has had on his life. From being hard and tyrannical, he has become kind and forbearing and just, and we wish to read for ourselves to see how this has been brought about."

Hence many were the ready applicants for Bibles, and very eagerly and sincerely were many of them read by men who already had a fair idea of the great Gospel truths through the preaching of this one man in a land far removed from missionary work, which preaching was an effect of the reading and study of the Holy Word, aided only by the teaching of the Holy Spirit—teaching for which the man had made it his habit to pray daily.

T. L. Pennell.

[Mr. H. L. Orchard, Denning Lodge, Denning-road, Hampstead, N.W., will be glad to forward to Dr. T. L. Pennell any contributions in aid of his medical mission at Bannu, and to supply copies of Dr. Pennell's report recently published.]

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JULY 8.—EZEKIEL VIII.

Ezekiel Transported to Jerusalem (1-3).—A new series of prophecies dates from the beginning of this chapter to the end of the eleventh. A terrible picture is presented of the secret and open idolatries practised in Israel. It was given to Ezekiel, as he sat in his house in Chaldea, surrounded by the elders of the exiled people, who may have gathered around him for worship, and so have established an elementary form of the synagogue of after days. His body was there, but his spirit was away in Jerusalem; "The Spirit lifted me up." (3) This image was either of Baal or Astarte, intruded into the holy temple, and worshipped with shameless rites. Let us beware of idols in the temple of the heart.

The Abominations of Israel (4-18).—The altar spoke of sacrifice for sin, and willing obedience. It was indeed a shameful sin to put an idol in competition with the forgiving grace and demands of Jehovah. What wonder that God seems far off from us, when we permit anything of this nature. But how loving is the Holy Spirit, who, though grieved and pained, still yearns over his rebellious children (2 Cor. xiv. 14-18). (9) Each step reveals deeper dyed sin. God does not allow the full conception of evil, whether in ourselves or in the world, to break on us at one burst. He uncovers it by degrees, lest it overwhelm us. But all that He shows, He is prepared to deal with, if we will. (11) There is nothing hidden that shall not be revealed. Ah! what a spectacle if God were to take away all the house-fronts of respectability and profession, and show us as we are. These were elders, probably much esteemed for their piety by those who looked only on the surface. (12) These chambers of imagery may well stand for the rooms of imagination too often covered with filthy pictures. (14) Tammuz was the same as the Greek Adonis, supposed to suffer annually for his sins. (15) Again, greater. (16) These men represented the twenty-four courses of priests, with the high priest at their head. (17) It was the custom for the worshipper to hold before his nose a branch of the tree sacred to the god he worshipped. (18) Compare Prov. i. 28 with Isa. i. 15. We must put away known sin before we can count on answers to our prayers.

MONDAY, JULY 9.—EZEKIEL IX.

Preparations for Judgment (1-3).—Notice the contrast between the ineffectual loud voice of viii. 18, and this. Over every city there are probably watcher angels. It may be that their special charge is over little children and the defenceless. But their gracious ministries may be neutralised by the evil of the inhabitants, so that instead of blessing and helping, they become executioners of the wrath of God. (2) Is not this one man in the midst an emblem of our blessed Lord? The white raiment betokens his priestly character, and the inkhorn his office of salvation and election. The Book of Life is written by the Lamb. (3) If we read attentively, we shall see the gradual receding of the Glory of the Lord.

Mercy Prevailing amid Judgment (4-5).—Mark a mark. This is said to have been the letter t, the last in the Hebrew alphabet, anciently written in the form of a cross. God secures the safety of his own, when his judgments are abroad (Gen. xix. 22; Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Rev. vii. 1-7). Sigh is the inward sorrow; cry the outward expression. We may well ask the Holy Spirit to give us quicker sympathy with our blessed Lord in his tears over lost souls.

Judgment (6-11).—God's judicial work ever begins with his sanctuary. The nearer you are to Him, the more certainly you will suffer if you dishonour and disobey. These "ancient men" are those mentioned viii. 11. As God had vacated his house, its defilement by death was a matter of indifference to Him. (8) This was very beautiful. Ezekiel pleaded for his people; but it seems as though there are limits in God's forbearing patience, beyond which He will not spare. "Then, after that, thou shalt cut it down."

Our Saviour is responsible for those whom the Father has given Him. He will not lose them (John vi. 39). He will not fail to do all his Father's will (John xiv. 31). Let us see to it that our inner man, the temple of the Lord, is ever kept for its great tenant. Ask him to keep his own abode.

TUESDAY, JULY 10.—EZEKIEL X.

The vision of the two preceding chapters is here continued. Ezekiel is still in Babylon, and these things are passing before him in vision, and recited to the people gathered around him.

The Glory of the Lord (1-5).—If our eyes were anointed, we should always see the sapphire throne ranged in mid-air. There is a sense in which nations and men are always standing before the throne. (2) See ix. 2. The Lord Jesus is the minister of wrath, as well as love. There is "the wrath of the Lamb." Authority is given to Him to execute judgment. Coals of fire are those of wrath, to destroy the city, as the sword had destroyed its population. (3) Note how all intelligent nature as represented by the cherubim acts in perfect concert with the man. (4) The glory of the Lord, i.e. the Shekinah, still lingered over the threshold of the house, as if reluctant to go. The brightness which once filled the Temple had been driven by the people's sins into the outer court, to be replaced by gloom.

The Cherubim (6-22).—The description of the Cherubim is almost identical with that given in the first chapter. There was an identity between the movements of the Cherubim, and those of the wheels that stood beside them to teach us the inseparable connection between spirits in obedience to the will of God, and the workings of the providence of God, which is fitly compared to a wheel, whether we consider its rapid revolution or the impinging of one result upon another. (7) Though the fire was taken by the Cherub, it was scattered by the hand of the Saviour. (12) The eye is the symbol of intelligence, and indicates the attention of these blessed beings to the least movement of God's will. (18) The symbol of God's presence had already passed from the Holy Place to the outer court, it was now to be lifted altogether from the temple. God's love never leaves man until it is compelled, and then gradually. (22) All service should be straightforward in its character, leaving the things that are behind.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 11.—EZEKIEL XI.

The Dissipation of False Hopes (1-13).—This was the chief entrance to the temple, and known as the porch of Solomon. The twenty-five men represent the heads of the twenty-five courses, and the High Priest. The two names are mentioned because the first means "God hears," the second, "God delivers." They knew more, and therefore were more blameworthy. (3) Jeremiah (xxv. 11, 12) had urged the exiled Jews to build houses because the captivity would be a long one. In allusion to this they of Jerusalem said that it was no use building houses, because their troubles would soon be at an end, and that just as the cauldron protects the flesh from the fire, so would the city protect them from their foes. (7) Their words were turned back on them. In very truth the city would be a cauldron, one in which they would be roasted. (13) This man was stricken down because he had been the ringleader of others. Acts v. 5. Again the prophet breaks in with intercession as in ix. 8. Oh for the heart of the Great High Priest, who intercedes.

A Revelation of Better Times (14-25).—"The men of thy kindred" are those related to Him as their God. He was to consider that these were not those of Jerusalem, but of the captivity. It was as if the sins of the Jews remaining yet at Jerusalem had broken the tie between them and the servant of Goël. (16) In opposition to the contemptuous words of Jerusalem, God stooped over the exiles, and told them that He would be their asylum, sanctuary, and temple. God Himself is the spiritual temple of his scattered children. We have come to God, "to the spirits of just men made perfect, etc." (17) God gathers the outcasts. (18) Sorrow and pain refine us and rid us of our idols. (19) "The gift of God," that none may be able to boast their works. The heart here stands for the affections. God alters our likes. (21) We reap as we sow. (22) Here is a yet further removal of the Divine Presence (x. 4-19). (24) The vision closed and the prophet declared its contents. How tenderly God teaches His obedient servants who yield themselves to Him.

THURSDAY, JULY 12.—EZEKIEL XII.

A Prophecy of the Approaching Exile (1-16).—The prophet's failure was due to no unfaithfulness of his own, but to the incapacity of his people for spiritual impression. The good seed will not enter untilled land. (3) The household stuff was prepared for removal from the house in which he had dwelt. This was done by day, whilst the prophet was to follow his baggage at nightfall. In this he typified Zedekiah's flight by night from Jerusalem (Jer. xxxix. 4). (5) The hole made through the wall. (6) The muffled face. (7) The dark night. But all typical of the events of the last night of Zedekiah's reign. (13) God's net was the Chaldean host, into the midst of which the fugitive monarch fell. He was blinded, and therefore could not see it, but he died there. (14) His bodyguard fled. (16) A few of the Jews were spared, and scattered throughout the world, that by their very sorrows they might vindicate the truth and righteousness of Jehovah.

A Prophecy of the Straitness and Privations of the Siege (17-20).—The exiles learnt that their lot was less terrible than that of the people of Jerusalem, whose bread and water were taken with fear and trembling. The land suffers for the sins of its inhabitants. The vineless slopes of Lebanon, the barren corn-fields of Palestine, are a perpetual witness to the sins of Israel. One of Ezekiel's characteristic phrases is, "Ye shall know that I am the Lord."

In the Last Days, Scoffers (21-28).—Infidels always complain that threatened judgments are so long delayed (2 Peter iii. 3, 4). It was so with the infidels of Ezekiel's days. They first said that judgment would not come at all, and then that so extended an interval would elapse as practically to put it beyond the term of their life. Men will not believe that God is present in every age; they always place his mighty acts of salvation or judgments on the horizon of the past, or on that of the future, but the judge standeth at the doors. The Lord is at hand!

FRIDAY, JULY 13.—EZEKIEL XIII.

False Prophets (1-7).—How often does our heart colour our predictions, and our temperament affect our promulgation of the Word of God. (3) We should be very careful to eliminate the personal element when we study God's truth, or advise others as to their duties. We are so apt to follow our own spirit, and then of course, we see nothing (John v. 30). (4) The foxes spoil the vines (Song of Solomon ii. 15). The prophets should have guarded them. (5) They ought to have repaired the breaches and stood in the gap to defend their people, whereas they cowardly fled. (6) Woe to them that buoy up their fellows with false hopes.

The Doom of the False Prophets (8-16).—God's heavy hand is against those who mislead men for their own advantage. They shall not hold the office of counsellor, nor have a place in the national register, nor return from exile (compare Jer. vi. 14; viii. 11). The wall was built without tempered mortar, i.e., sand without lime, and mud without straw; then it was daubed with whitewash to hide its defects. One man built, another daubed it. Thus men encourage one another in false doctrine. One promulgates theories that dupe souls, and others authenticate his work. (11) Wind, rain, and hailstones co-operate to test and destroy the loose and slight shelter behind which we hide. Are there not false teachers in the present day, who are doing this very work in their false theories and teachings, which are specious enough to the eye, but can never stand the strain of the storm of eternity? Their systems shall be swept away, and not a vestige left.

The False Prophetesses (17-23).—As the men built the wall, so these made cushions, symbolically testifying the perfect tranquillity they predicted to those who consulted them. (19) No sin is so dreadful as to prostitute the holy name of truth for selfish interest, at the risk of imperilling souls that would not otherwise die. (22) Let us not grieve till God makes us sad, or be confident unless our hopes are based on the promise of God. (23) Those that have misused their powers shall lose them. God will vindicate his truth and save his people.

SATURDAY, JULY 14.—EZEKIEL XIV.

The Rebuke of the Hypocrite (1-11).—It would appear that persons holding high place among the exiles came with inquiry to the prophet. Outwardly, they had put away their idols, but really they had taken them into their heart. They regarded iniquity in their heart, and it was impossible for God to hear their prayer. Often God's silence when we pray arises from the idols which we have failed to put away. These estrange us from Him. (6) Our face should be turned to Christ, then our idols would lose their fascination. (7) We first love our idols with our hearts, then they become a stumbling-block to our feet. (8) When the hypocrite comes to God with feigned lips, God will answer him directly without the intervention of the prophet. There is an answer given in the secret of the heart, which a man knows apart from the prophetic voice. (9) The false prophet shall be deceived. This is the inevitable law which Jehovah has established, therefore He may be said to deceive the prophet. (11) God's love promoted their destruction, that God's people might be delivered from their transgressions, and brought to Himself.

The Certainty of Jerusalem's Fate (12-23).—Jeremiah had learnt that Judah could not be pardoned, even for the intercession of Moses and Samuel; Ezekiel adds the names of three righteous men whose presence would not avail to stay God's judgments against Jerusalem, so outrageous were its sins, so inevitable was its judgment. If these three men could not deliver the land from any of the four judgments, much less could they deliver the city from their combined effect. (22) A never-to-be-forgotten verse which shows that at the last the saints will so fully recognise the reasonableness of God's dealings that they will be satisfied and comforted. (23) God has a reason and cause for everything that He does or fails to do.

TESTAMENTS FOR HOTELS.—Some years ago I wrote a few words about placing large-type Testaments in the bed rooms of hotels abroad, and asked help to enable me to carry out this scheme. My appeal was kindly responded to, and I have now a great many hotels abroad and at home provided in this way. There is a great deal more to do, and I would again appeal for help. Mrs. Macrae.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 15.

Visit of the Wise Men.—Matt. ii. 1-12.

Golden Text.—Verse 11.

This event took place probably very soon after the presentation in the temple, and was followed immediately by the flight into Egypt. The reign of Herod the Great (1) closed a few months later. He was the founder of the Herodian family, and is described as a man of great energy of character, but unscrupulous and cruel. Though called king he was tributary to Rome. He rebuilt the temple in great magnificence. Considerable speculation has arisen about "the wise men" (1). The term "Magi" was used originally to describe a class of priests among the Medes and Persians; but later was applied to all heathen philosophers. Different traditions give us different statements as to the number of these men. Augustine and Chrysostom make them twelve; but the more common view is that they were three. "Bede gives us their names and their personal appearance. Melchior was an old man with white hair and long beard; Caspar, a ruddy and beardless youth; Balthasar, swarthy and in the prime of life. We are further informed by tradition that Melchior was a descendant of Shem, Caspar of Ham, and Balthasar of Japheth."—Farrar. These traditions are interesting, but are of course unreliable. It is probable that the wise men came from Persia, and were disciples of Zoroaster. The important fact is that they were Gentiles, appearing thus early to pay their homage to the Infant Saviour; a preliminary fulfilment of Isa. lx. 3.

How came they to pay this visit? First, there was an almost universal expectation that a great Deliverer would arise at that time. The most remarkable prediction, outside Jewish prophecy, was one by Zoroaster, 500 B.C., of whom it is said that "he taught the Persians concerning Christ. He said that in the latter days a pure virgin should conceive, and that, as soon as the child was born, a star would appear blazing, even at noonday, with undiminished lustre. He bade them follow the star wheresoever it should lead, and adore the mysterious child, offering their gifts to Him as to the Almighty Word which created the heavens." Memoir of Mrs. Judith S. Grant, Missionary to Persia. If, as the Nestorians say, Zoroaster was a disciple of Jeremiah, this remarkable prophecy need not surprise us.

Astronomical calculations have shown that in the year of our Lord's birth there was a remarkable appearance in the heavens caused by the conjunction of Saturn and Jupiter, and later, of Mars also. Whether this was the star which the wise men saw cannot be determined. The coincidence is certainly a remarkable one. But while this natural phenomenon may explain their journey to Jerusalem, it cannot explain the movement of the star which guided them to the home of Jesus and Mary. So miraculous an event may well be heralded by a miraculous sign.

The practical lessons of the whole narrative are suggested by the different persons mentioned. (1) Herod, a picture of impotent opposition. The birth of Jesus caused him terror (3), possibly because he felt his own position as King to be very insecure; or the recollections of his many crimes hardened his conscience, and aroused his fears. He sought the death of the Child, first, by deceitful intrigue (7, 8). How perilous the position of the Infant Saviour when opposed by one so powerful and so unscrupulous as Herod! But the wisest schemes of God's enemies are folly, and must issue in failure.

(2) The Magi as Representatives of True Seekers.—There was much they did not understand, but they were sincere in their desire to find and worship the new-born King. They were in earnest, hence their willingness to undertake so long a journey. They were humble and obedient, willing to make inquiry, and to follow every direction given them. And God undertook to guide them. Every true seeker will find some stars by which God would lead him to Himself. What are your stars? Your own sense of need; your own Bible; the godly counsel and example of others. If you do not find the Saviour, it is not because you have no star to lead you to Him, but because you do not follow.

(3) The Chief Priests and Scribes as types of those who neglect Him (4-6).—They knew the prophecy (Mic. v. 2), and were supposed to be looking for its fulfilment. The Magi were in earnest to worship Him; the King was in earnest to destroy Him; but these men treated the matter with indifference. This is the most deadly condition (Heb. ii. 1-4).

(4) The Child as Worthy of Divine Honour.—See how He is always mentioned before his mother (11, 13, 14), and to Him, not to the mother, the gifts of the wise men are offered. The worship of Mary is unknown to New Testament saints. Worship Him by offering Him, first, yourselves, then your costliest gifts.

THE SUNBEAM MISSION.

"Miss Alice! what a litter you are making with all them books and papers! I do wish you would clear them all up." And Nurse looked with dismay on the piles of children's papers lying all over the floor in hopeless confusion. Alice's face clouded. "Oh, nursie, don't be cross. I don't know what to do with them. I have no more room in my box, and I'm tired of them all. I think ——" and Alice looked rather ashamed, knowing nurse would call her wasteful. "I think they might be burned. I don't want them any more."

Now, that day it happened that Alice's little friend Gladys was spending the afternoon with her, and Gladys chimed in, "Alice, don't; no, indeed you mustn't burn them. I'll tell you what I do with all mine. Last year I went to the seaside services, and there the speaker told us about the 'Sunbeam Mission,' and said he hoped we would all become members. Then he gave us some 'letters' all printed in different colours, and at the end was a little perforated slip in an envelope for our name and address. On filling this up, putting in six stamps, and posting it to the hon. sec., Mrs. Battiscombe, Eastwood, Weston-super-Mare, we should receive a card of membership and the name of some very poor little boy or girl in a large town, who would be delighted if we would send him or her a magazine every month. He said that was all we promised to do when we joined the Mission, but that if we liked we could write to the child or send toys or flowers or a little garment."

Alice was looking very much interested by this time, and Gladys continued. "I joined at once, and the hon. sec. sent me the name of a little girl called Maggie Duncan. She is paralysed, and always in bed, and she writes me such nice letters, and is so delighted when I send her anything. She says when the time comes round for the magazine, she listens all day, hoping the postman will come. And do you know the hon. sec. said she had hundreds of children sent in to her, all waiting and longing for a 'Sunbeam' friend. Just think what a lot of use these papers would be."

"Oh, Gladys," said Alice, and her face brightened more and more, "I do wish I could join, too. I wonder if mother would let me."

"Well, Alice," answered her little friend, "let's run and ask her now. I remember the speaker said it didn't matter about our having one of the perforated slips, and that if we just wrote to the hon. sec., we should soon have a name sent to us. Mother joined too, but she had to send twelve stamps, because everyone over seventeen is called an associate, and they have to pay 1s. entrance fee instead of 6d."

The matter was soon settled, and Alice had the name of a very poor little child sent to her, and my young readers can perhaps imagine what her delight and astonishment were when something came by post addressed all to herself. Will any of my young readers who have magazines to spare, write to the hon. sec., enclosing six stamps, and ask her to send them a card of membership and the name and address of some poor little child to whom they may thus bring pleasure every month?

SEASIDE SERVICES IN JULY.

Mr. Josiah Spiers, West Bay, Dunoon (Beach), 3.30, each afternoon,; Mr. Jas. S. Tyler, Birchington Bay, July 15-25; Mr. A. G. Dodderidge, at Portrush, North of Ireland, all July.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., July 8, Acts xxvii. 30-44; Mon., 9, xxviii. 1-16; Tues., 28, xxviii. 17-31; Ezekiel, Wed., 11, i. 1-16; Thurs., 12, iii. 1-9; Fri., 13, iii. 10-21; Sat., 14, ix. 11.

ARABIA.—Rev. S. M. Zwemer arranged to start from Aden about July 1, to endeavour to reach the Jews of Sanaa and other places in the interior. He carries with him a thousand Hebrew New Testaments.

ALGERIA.—Mr. and Mrs. Liley are still much encouraged by the work amongst the Spaniards in Mostaganem. They have had a visit from a Spanish evangelist from Algiers. The people are terribly ignorant, but seem very interested in listening to the truth

CRIPPLE CHILDREN BY THE SEASIDE.

Happy children, sunny treasures,
Full of love, of joy, and glee,
Gaily counting on the pleasures
Of a seaside holiday.

For the joyous time you're yearning,
When with merry hearts you'll say
Gay adieus to school and learning,
Welcomes glad to fun and play.

Salt sea lakes and rivers flowing
You will make with spades and pails,
And will launch, 'midst sea-breeze blowing,
Mimic yachts with snowy sails.

O my darlings, you who cherish
Such sweet dreams and visions bright,
Think of little ones who perish,
Fragile forms and faces white.

Little sick ones fading, pining,
Tiny crippled ones who lay
Worn with pain, where sunbeams shining
Scarce can shed one golden ray.

Will you not their sad lives brighten?
List, and I will gladly tell
How their sufferings you may lighten,
Give all pleasure, make some well.

Where the turquoise waves are dancing,
Bright with myriad sunlight gems,
Amidst pleasures, joy entrancing,
Love has built Elysiums,

Where these children are befriended,
Taught of the great God above,
Kindly cared for, fondly tended,
By true mother hearts of love.

Far beyond their fond child dreaming
Are the fields, the sands, and sea,
Pale cheeks blush, dull eyes grow beaming,
Sobs are changed to shouts of glee.

Listen, 'tis our Saviour pleading,
He who sought not self to please,
Will you not, his sweet voice heeding,
Seek to bless his least of these?

Dear ones, health and wealth possessing,
His own loving girls and boys,
For his sake, who gives your blessings,
Share with these your seaside joys.

Harriet Julia Evans.

[Help for sending these suffering little ones away for a holiday in the country, or by the seaside, will be gratefully received by the secretary of the Ragged School Union, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand. Clothing and toys will also be most acceptable for the children.]

PATIENT WORK IN PARIS.

Pastor O. Foulquier, of the Evangelical Church, 8, Avenue Niel, writes:—"Our work of evangelisation in the West of Paris, Quartier des Ternes, near to the Arc de Triomphe de l'Etoile, was begun about fifteen months ago, under the auspices of an American mission committee. After a short time the very existence of the work was threatened through lack of this external financial support, whereupon Madame Foulquier and myself resolved personally to assume all responsibility, and consecrate ourselves and our slender possessions to the carrying forward of our Mission. I rejoice to say that God has given us souls for our hire. After fifteen months of activity we have a membership of about seventy, and can count more than fifty people converted to the Lord; and for France this is a cheering result. These converts have been formed into a church, and urged to be missionaries in their individual spheres.

"Our church, being established on the principles of the Evangelical Alliance, receives all true disciples of Christ, and aims at bringing children of God together in loving co-operation, whatever may be their preferences on points of secondary importance. We have branches of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, also a Temperance Society. At Avenue Niel we have four meetings weekly, and at Courbevoie two. The Lord has greatly blessed us of late. During May nine persons, almost all of them Roman Catholics by birth, were received into the church upon a profession of their faith, and during the first half of June five others have been registered.

"The work is emphatically of a mission character, and cannot for the present be self-supporting. Help from without has occasionally come, but with an exhausted exchequer and accumulating responsibilities we are now at our wits' end. May the Lord answer our faith by raising up sympathisers for our urgent and much-tried, but assuredly greatly-blessed, endeavours put forth in the name of Christ."

The address of Pasteur Foulquier is 78, Avenue de la Grande Armée, Paris.

HOW THE CARPENTER FOUND CHRIST.

Every considerable manufacturing concern has a man to whom is given in sole charge the building and repairing inseparable to the business. He hires men, appoints them their work, and sees that it is done. John McK. had held that position for twelve years. He was worthy of the confidence the company placed in him. He was a man of tremendous physical power. When a boy of sixteen he could push a plane all day without weariness, and later on it was his pride that he could lift one end of a long stick of timber with more men standing on it than any other carpenter in the region.

He was not only a giant in strength but a man of great energy. He was never quite satisfied with himself unless he had done the work of two days in one, and to a considerable extent he put his own power and push into his subordinates. He rarely, if ever, saw the inside of a church. On Sunday he made his plans for the week, estimated what each workman would accomplish, and sometimes went to drive.

Years ago special religious services were held in his neighbourhood. An invitation was given him to attend; but, to human knowledge, it neither met a response nor a rejection. While not a hardened hater of God, he was apparently without thought and certainly wholly without concern. The meetings began. Twice each day he heard the sound of the church bell. That was all. Soon, however, he began to feel an unrest which he could neither throw off nor explain. It disturbed him greatly. He rushed about the village as though the fate of worlds hung on his movements, and men were soon asking the question in store and street, "What is the matter with the boss?"

His mother was a Christian. She had lived her religion in the sight of her children from their childhood, and to whatever else the carpenter was indifferent he never could be to the godly life of this consistent Christian woman. Day after day the weight on the man and his worry grew greater. His thought never once turned to the meetings, but always to his mother. She lived six miles away, and one morning, hardly knowing why and without mentioning his destination, he started for his old home. He could have reached it in an hour, but hither and thither, in his perplexity and distress, he drove until afternoon—a score of miles instead of six. At length the house was reached. Going softly into the kitchen, the room was vacant. He listened. Presently, through an open door, came the voice of prayer, with the burden of a petition, "O God, save my boy; save him now!"

The iron man dropped into a near chair. Great tears rolled down his cheeks. In a minute the mother was kneeling beside him. In another the mother's holy living was rewarded in a mother's answered prayer.—Congregationalist.

BRITISH INSTITUTE, BRUSSELS.

On a recent Sunday evening at St. George's Chapel, Albemarle-street, Rev. L. H. Wellesley Wesley, vicar of Hatchford, Surrey, preached on behalf of this Institute in Brussels, which has for its object the protection of all Englishwomen earning their bread in Belgium. It appeals strongly to the public for aid to carry on the good work it has done for the last ten years, which cannot be continued without a generous help.

A terribly vivid picture was presented by the preacher of the young girl alone in a foreign town, friendless, penniless, and not understanding the language, with no where to go to, her mind nearly unhinged with mental anxiety, and the tempter at hand. Such was old Brussels of the years gone by; and now? A refuge is always ready, with a kind welcome, and words of good advice; a hand to pull them in and save them from temptation.

The sum of £200 annually is asked from friends in Great Britain as their contribution to this good work, and it could only be because the knowledge of it was not sufficiently spread that any difficulty could arise, in realising such a small sum for such a rich return.

The hon. treasurer and secretary of the Institute is Lucy M. Drummond, 13, St. James's-place, S.W.

NATIONAL VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

The ninth annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of this Association was held at the offices, 267, Strand, last week. The chair was taken by Mr. Percy W. Bunting.

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., moved the following resolution:—"That this meeting rejoices at the work accomplished by the Association during the year, as shown in the detailed account given in the present report, and notes with gratitude the great change in public opinion which has taken place during the last nine years in relation to every aspect of the moral question; and looks forward in hopeful anticipation to the time when public opinion will demand an equal standard of morality for both men and women." He said he had very strong belief in the work of the Association, and was glad to know that the work they had undertaken in years gone by was bearing good fruit to-day. He warned the Association they still had need to watch the pictorial publications of to-day, as some of them contained pictures of a very low and debasing character. The Criminal Law Amendment Act was good so far as it went, but it needed amendment, and he understood the Association had a bill in view to amend that Act; when the bill came before the House of Commons, he should be prepared to give it all the support in his power. The condition of the streets was a matter of very grave importance, and he urged the society to do its utmost to purify social life in every direction.

Mr. J. F. Torr, L.C.C., in seconding the resolution, said as a member of the Music Hall Committee of the London County Council, he was glad to know that the Society had been directing its attention to the amusements provided for the people. It was a pleasure to him to be identified with the Association, and he hoped the good work of the past was but the prelude to even better work in the future. Rev. St. Hill Bourne was glad to be a sharer in such Christlike efforts for lifting the fallen and preventing the degradation and shame of woman. They might take courage, for good must ultimately triumph over evil, and the Kingdom of God come in due time.

The report was a voluminous record of work, of which the public get only very occasional glimpses. The Association have rescued girls decoyed into situations with immoral surroundings; played the parent to worse than orphaned children; tracked the betrayer to distant cities and brought him to face responsibility and justice; found friendless lassies in the streets and placed them in good situations; and done much other wise and necessary work. The noticeable feature of the report was the fact that the Association had bought two freehold houses in the heart of busy Hackney, at a cost of £1750, for a working laundry where young women in difficult circumstances may be trained to earn a living by honest work. One portion of the building is to be used as a home for the housing and training of children who are temporarily or permanently deserted and in peril. This institution is at once a preventive and rescue home, and an asylum for needy little ones.

In regard to the enforcement of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, the report dealt specifically with the so-called false charges, said by many persons to be brought under that Act, giving details of the peculiar difficulties of proving such cases, and adding that "the experience of the committee of the Association (who are very careful in investigating cases brought before them) is that the false charges are few, probably not five per cent. of those that come to the office. And of cases which come into court and fail, the vast majority fail, not because the evidence is disbelieved, but because the court thinks the evidence insufficient for conviction." The committee add: "It is quite right to be critical before sending an accused person to gaol; but it is a total mistake to suppose that because he does not go to gaol the charge is not an honest and very likely a true one." The report mentions further that in regard to the prosecutions for selling indecent pictures and books, its work recently had been lighter, owing partly to the salutary effect of earlier prosecutions and partly to the greater vigilance of the police. In one notable case the committee "assisted a person of influence to buy up and destroy the entire stock, and stop the sale of an infamous book which was sold at a high price to the prurient." The Medical Home maintained by the Association had been most successful, notwithstanding the exceeding difficulty of the cases dealt with. The labour of keeping up a list of good registry offices, of rescuing from evil environment girls who have left their parents, of defending English and foreign girls from those who would rob or ruin them, was referred to as the "perennial task, occupying the time and thoughts of the Association."

The report, which is a most interesting document, can be obtained on application to the secretary, 267, Strand, London, W.C.

BIBLE-WOMEN AND NURSES.

The Bible-women and nurses of the society founded by Mrs. Ranyard, and originally known as "The Missing Link," lately spent a most enjoyable holiday at Knot's Green, Leyton, in the grounds of Mr. and Mrs. Gurney Barclay, who have long been among the warmest supporters of this Mission. The weather was perfect, and the hundred or more workers from as many of the very poorest districts of London, thoroughly appreciated the rest, brightness, and hospitality so generously provided for them.

After tea a meeting was held in the great tent, when prayer was opened by Rev. Major Paull, of the Bible Society, followed by short addresses from Lady Hope and Canon Girdlestone, both speakers dwelling on the sunshine the Sun of Righteousness pours out on the heart that opens to receive it, and on the necessity for those whose lives are being spent for others receiving the sunshine first themselves before they could take the sunshine into little dark courts, little dark rooms, and little dark souls. The Vicar of Leyton brought the meeting to a close by proposing a vote of thanks to the host and hostess.

The Mission of the Bible-women and Nurses has always worked so very quietly that it is not so well known as it ought to be. It never advertises, except by the circulation of its magazine, Bible-women and Nurses, and it has never but once held a public meeting. The public also does not know that it employs two distinct classes of agents—the Bible-woman and the nurse. Those who were at the garden party could see the difference at once, the Bible-women appearing in neat but not uniform attire, while the nurses wore light washing gowns with regular hospital aprons and the red belt that is now their distinguishing mark.

The Bible-woman's work sprang out of one woman's devoted love to the Book, and to the great society that distributed it; to her intense conviction that there was a message for the lowest in that Book, and that the humble Christian woman was the best worker to take that message to the poor and ignorant mothers of this great city.

The Bible-woman visits soon revealed the appalling needs of the sick poor, and so a body of Christian nurses has been most carefully selected and trained. Each nurse has to spend a year in a general hospital, and then to learn maternity work before being placed on a district. When on her district her technical education is carried on by means of nurse superintendents, through whom Mrs. Selfe Leonard, Mrs. Ranyard's niece, is brought into touch with the needs of the whole eighty or more nurses. From the central store room at 2, Adelphi-terrace, medical comforts and nursing requisites are supplied, and it is no vain boast when the Mission declares it sends out the best-equipped district nurses in London.

DR. SOMERVILLE was accustomed to bring to the prayer meeting a Gazetcer of the world, saying: "Now, brethren, we have a new prayer-book to-night." Then after the mention of persons and places with their needs, special prayer was offered.

THE BETHESDA MISSION, DALSTON, held its quarterly meeting on Thursday. The report showed much good work done indoors and in the open-air, and cases of conversion were referred to. The chairman, Mr. B. Barry Wake, and all the speakers felt thankful for what had been accomplished, and desired that increased blessing might rest on the labours of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander in Dalston and up and down the country.

WEST AFRICA.—It has been decided to issue monthly a little paper of eight pages, to be called "Niger and Yoruba Notes," containing such information as may be obtained from letters and journals, and which will stimulate interest, especially in the new openings for work in the Yoruba and Niger districts, and call forth offers of personal service. The editor will be Dr. C. F. Harford-Battersby, of Livingstone College, Bow, and the publisher is Mr. Elliot Stock.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

The report of last year's work issued by the Irish Evangelisation Society has many features of interest. Altogether 2600 meetings were held. The work is pressing, and funds are inadequate; therefore it is hardly surprising that the year closed with an adverse balance of £389.

Every page of the report tells of Roman Catholics coming under the influence of the Gospel. A shopkeeper writes:—"I have put my trust in my Saviour, and accepted his finished work, and I have been brought up a Catholic, and I never learned what our Saviour died for, as his death is never preached. I am a Catholic no longer. I know that I will be tempted more than ever, but I will flee to my Saviour, who can save me from all evil. I will keep my Bible in the shop with me, and can read it there."

At Killyman, Moy, meetings were held in one of the society's movable wooden halls, at which a correspondent writes:—"For years it was found impossible to get the young men of Killyman out to such meetings, but some nights last week there were five hundred in the Gospel Hall; and last night's meeting will be ever memorable to many. The presence of God seemed to be realised; tears were running down the cheeks of numbers; and hundreds remained for the second meeting, which was working for nearly two hours."

A mission at Killarney was largely attended by Roman Catholics, mostly men. A weekly meeting, which arose out of it, is now attended by about sixty Roman Catholics, and a good work is going on. A tent mission was held at Bundoran, a watering place on the west coast of the county Donegal. An inflammatory placard, to excite ill-feeling, was posted just before the arrival of the evangelists. The effect was to gather a crowd of opponents, who attacked those attending the tents with stones, and some severe cuts and bruises were the result. The police dispersed the crowd, and the mission was continued with less and less turmoil.

The town of Lurgan has a population employed in factories, Roman Catholics and Protestants being pretty equal, and it is often the scene of party fights. A mission was invited by some of the clergy, who wish to draw those who go to no church of any kind. The people came out in large numbers, and there is reason to believe that the communicants' roll in most of the Protestant churches was increased as a result. In the district of Lungs, co. Tyrone, the wooden hall was not large enough for the audiences. As in other places, ministers assisted the evangelists. The reality of the work here was attested at the close, when thank-offerings amounting in the aggregate to £70 were contributed in aid of the Society.

A wooden hall was taken to Kilkee (Clare), Limerick, Nenagh (Tipperary), and other places. As a rule opposition was shown at the outset, but when things cooled down a little, it was ascertained that many Romanists came as hearers and inquirers. Some who sought the Lord found Him, to the joy of the evangelists.

We recommend those who are interested in evangelistic effort in Ireland to procure a copy of this report from the hon. sec. of the society, Mr. James Barton, Dundalk.

ROMANISM IN MEXICO.

The city of Mexico is the stronghold of Romanism among the Spanish-speaking people of the western hemisphere. Several denominations are at work here, I have the oversight of two of the most flourishing congregations, in each of which we have eight services a week. The Lord brings the people to hear the Word. We preach to large numbers only a few rods from the old burning-place of the Inquisition, and dispose of many Bibles and tracts. One by one the poor deluded souls throw away their idols, and enlist under the banner of King Jesus, until now Protestantism is established beyond the possibility of overthrow in this great city.

But we need help in prayers and in Spanish literature. Men of God, pray for us. A rich blessing would be Spanish leaflets, Spanish picture cards, Spanish tracts, and portions of the Scriptures. They should be securely done up, sent by book post, registered, and very plainly addressed.

FAREWELL TO MISSIONARIES.

For some years it has been the custom to bid farewell to outgoing missionaries at Harley House, Bow, on the Friday of "Mildmay Week." There is obvious propriety in the arrangement whereby Christians are induced to proceed from meetings designed to instruct in doctrine and stimulate in work, to gatherings at which world-wide evangelisation is the ruling topic and account is rendered of efforts to spread the Gospel in the regions beyond. There was a hearty response last week to the invitations of Dr. and Mrs. Harry Guinness, and the afternoon meeting was held in Harley-street Chapel, kindly lent for the occasion.

The chair was occupied by Mr. T. A. Denny, who referred to the excellent work of the College and its associated agencies, in equipping and sending forth men and women who, in zeal for the Gospel and loyalty to Christ, present themselves to fill the vacancies which from time to time occur in the ranks of God's witnesses abroad, not to mention the bringing forward of those who are willing to be pioneers in Christian work.

There were many regrets that Dr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness could not be present, and prayer was offered on their behalf, that God's blessing may rest upon them while in comparative retirement as it has attended their active labours. The report on the year's work was read by Dr. Harry Guinness, who opened by remarking that it is twenty-two years since the foundation of the Institute was laid. In all 1235 persons have been admitted—about one-third of the number who have applied—and of these 846 have been trained for work at home and abroad. The course comprises three years of study, the first in London, and the other two years at Cliff, in Derbyshire. Up to the close of this session 761 workers have left for various parts of the world. Of these 151 have gone to countries in Asia, 163 to different parts of Africa, twenty-three to Jamaica and Central America, twenty-four to South America, and seventeen to Australia and New Zealand. Of the whole some eighty-seven have fallen asleep, thirty-two of them in Africa. Of fifty-six students during the session now ending, eleven are leaving at once for the Congo, and nineteen for other parts of the mission field.

Encouraging reports were also delivered regarding Doric Lodge, the ladies' branch of the work, and Berger Hall, the centre of evangelistic and merciful effort among the poor. As to finances, Dr. Guinness had to join the chorus of those who tell of reduced income. Yet he was buoyant, for in the past all emergencies of the work have been graciously met. The Congo-Balolo Mission has lost valued workers by death. The reinforcements include several whose support has been guaranteed by friends, so that the funds of the Mission will be relieved. Mr. Edward James, from Jamaica, is a coloured brother, who will, it is hoped, have a useful career in the land from which his ancestors were deported centuries ago. Messrs. W. J. Sinclair, of Belfast, and J. C. Logie, of Dundee, two young men of superior intellectual endowments, told in few words the way by which God had led them to volunteer for Central Africa.

Mr. S. A. McCracken followed with an address on the needs of Ireland, and intimated that twenty of the students are about to accompany him on a vacation tour of six weeks. This enterprise was remembered in prayer, and the missionaries about to leave for other lands were commended to the care and blessing of the Lord of the harvest.

Pastor W. Y. Fullerton, of Leicester, spoke some words of cheer and stimulus. In the evening another meeting was held in the East London Tabernacle.

A SPANISH CONVERT.—An interesting baptismal service was performed by Mr. Hucklesby in Maldon Hall, Haverstock Hill, on Friday week, when eighteen new converts were baptized, among them a woman seventy-eight years of age, and a young Spaniard, a near relative of Manuel Matamoros, named Enrique Blanco, who is studying at Dr. Guinness's college. This young man, we trust, will be a true follower of Christ, and the prayers of those who read this are asked on his behalf. The memorial hall for Dr. Manuel Matamoros in Malaga is now finished, but there is a small debt of £25, in which the sympathy of interested friends will be welcomed. W. G.

LIVINGSTONE COLLEGE.

A year has passed since the first notice appeared in The Christian of the new institution which was about to be started for the purpose of giving to missionaries such a knowledge of the elements of medicine and surgery as would stand them in good stead in isolated posts in the foreign field. The experience of the past year has fully confirmed the opinion then expressed that Livingstone College would supply a great need.

Perhaps the most striking proof of that lies in the fact that in the short space of four months from the issuing of this notice fourteen men, representing various different societies, had entered for the course of training. A few of these were unable to remain for our full course, but the greater number are still with us, and have been able to avail themselves of all the opportunities for practical knowledge which are offered at Livingstone College.

In looking forward to the future, I should like to emphasise once more the special object of our work and to state most distinctly that we do not train "Medical Missionaries." These must be trained at our regular medical schools, and obtain the recognised medical qualifications.

Students at Livingstone College receive no diploma of any kind, nor are they allowed by our rules to call themselves "Medical Missionaries," and this is clearly explained to each one before entrance. But at the same time those who leave us next month possess a most valuable amount of practical information. Many of them have become skilful in the dressing of wounds and the treatment of simple injuries. They have all had practice in dispensing. They have been taught how to distinguish between severe and minor ailments, and in the absence of a medical man they would render most important aid.

They have received special instruction in tropical diseases, dentistry, simple eye diseases, and skin diseases, and have had opportunities for practical acquaintance with each of these subjects.

As the next year of the college opens in October next, applications for admission to the course should be made without delay, in order that arrangements may be made to provide accommodation for those who may wish to enter as boarders.

Students are admitted both as residents or non-residents, but there is no question that there are great advantages to those who are able to reside at the college, as the meals are arranged to fit in with the work, and time is not lost in travelling to and fro, besides having the advantage of books of reference within reach when required. At the present time there is only room in the college for a small number of residents, so that it will be readily understood that it is important to make early application. If any specially wished to obtain lodgings in the neighbourhood instead of residing in the college, suitable lodgings might be obtained, but in this case also it will be advisable to make arrangements as soon as possible.

All particulars with regard to fees, and a programme of the course of study, will be forwarded on application to me at the address given below. The working expenses of the college are maintained by the fees of the students, but there are other expenses for which funds are required.

Charles F. Harford Battersby, M.D.,
Principal of Livingstone College.

"SYNAGOGUES" IN CENTRAL AFRICA.—In the province of Singo, Uganda, Mr. Fisher has organised an excellent method of instructing the people in the scattered farmsteads where they reside. Schoolhouses have been put up in some twenty places at distances from two to twenty miles distant from Mityana, where he resides. The small chiefs who are able to read are responsible for the up-keep of these erections, for selling books, for teaching their people, and for bringing them to the central station for the Sunday services. A number of Christian youths are placed at those "gardens" where no one is able to read. These school-houses the natives call "synagogues." Mr. Pilkington was much struck with this organisation and its successful working as he passed through Singo when returning to Mengo from Unyoro, and he persuaded his brother missionaries at the capital to adopt a similar method, embracing a considerable part of the country. He undertook to organise the province of Kyadondo, between Mengo and Kyagwe, and Rev. G. K. Baskerville undertook Kyagwe.—C.M.S. Gleaner.

HYDE PARK BY NIGHT AND DAY.

By CHARLES COOK.

Whilst crossing the Park one evening after dark, one of our brethren was accosted by a young girl. He spoke kindly to her and warned her of her danger. She broke down, and with tears in her eyes said: "My mother and my father are both Christians." It was the oft-told tale of misplaced confidence and treachery. The Gospel of our Lord Jesus was set before her, and we have hope that a way will be found of helping this poor betrayed sister.

On two occasions only and that recently, during the past ten years, have I found time to walk through the Park late in the evening, and having observed what takes place around the band-stand, and noticed the vast number of fallen women who promenade from that place to the Magazine, feel impelled to speak of the awful state of affairs witnessed here.

Most striking are the official accounts furnished by the police-courts. The facts borne witness to by the police speak loudly, and demand the intervention of authority at least to minimise the awful evil.

A few weeks ago this statement was made to me by one who mourns over the facts, and who, if he had the power, would endeavour to remedy the state of things :—

"There have been more offences against morality and more convictions from this Park during the past three months than in any previous twelve months." Let those who can, go to Marlborough-street Police Court, and read the charge-sheets for the past four or five months and see "if these things be so!"

Piccadilly, as to the social evil, is the antipodes of the Park. There it is attired in satin, and attended by culture; here it is robed in raggedness, and regarded by the rough; there it is permitted—here it is punished.

But the poor sisterhood of shame constitutes but a part of the plague-spot. Hyde Park is a hunting ground for men of the baser sort, and many an artless simple girl, who has gone "to hear the band," has been flattered and cajoled and ruined by such as frequent this place for this purpose.

Thousands are gathered nightly round the stand, and whilst thousands of chairs are occupied, there are more persons seen promenading on the fringe of the mass, and what may be seen when darkness sets in I will not dare describe.

The police would be greatly pleased if the band ceased to play about nine—after dark no respectable person should be seen near it; the language heard is horrible, for besides the class spoken of above, there is a crowd of the youth of both sexes, a rowdy, lawless mob, who have "no ear for music," and delight in coarse jokes at the expense of any who may protest against their conduct.

During the racing season, half the police are constantly taken from Hyde Park to do duty at Epsom, Ascot, or Goodwood; hence there is not sufficient force to preserve order in the place where they should be stationed.

Let us now turn from this part of our subject to another, equally of importance, and one which can be witnessed by day as well as night.

Let us start from the Marble Arch. Here at the first is a political partisan; with earnestness he is proclaiming what should be done at Westminster, his text, "The Everlasting Irish Question." Close by a Humanitarian loudly advocates "The Brotherhood of Man," who, alas! knows nothing of "The Fatherhood of God in Christ Jesus." He is a foreigner, and evidently has the courage to proclaim his opinions, until the people laugh loudly at him, and then he loses his temper.

The next group has a red flag, which denotes them as Socialists, but there are very few listening, and a poor speaker is addressing the crowd, and though he talks of parsons as "sky-pilots," and heaven as a "sweet by-and-by," and bids his "comrades" think more of this life than the other of which they know nothing, the people are not interested, and this "eloquence of dispersion" goes on until the man ceases to talk, as no one stays to listen.

But here is a large crowd laughing loudly at what the speaker says. He is a dirty, unshaven Irishman; he has put on over his vest a dirty white shirt, in which attire he addresses the people, Bible in hand, mixing up portions of Scripture with filthy language, the more coarse it is the more loudly laugh the people. He poses as a Roman Catholic; his only object is to draw the crowd and then pass round his hat for coppers. He has recently been locked up from the Park, and appeared before the magistrate, who unwisely discharged him. The police say there is no more offensive man in the Park than this. Next to him is a poor-looking man who declares he has "done" fifteen years' penal servitude, and now he can get no work; will the people help him? and he passes round his hat.

The next two groups are the Christian Evidence Society and the National Secular Society, delivering lectures for and against Christianity, respectively. It is seldom that anyone replies to the Christian lecturer, but there are always some who answer the infidel, and happily the majority of the hearers side with the Truth. At the close of each meeting, unfortunately, there is a collection.

Here at the next group are two or three men who are giving a comic sketch in costume, interlarding their dialogue with innuendoes, which are enjoyed by some in the crowd, who laugh at the gross jests inferred. Failing to obtain more than threepence-halfpenny from the bystanders, and wishing to get a shilling, one of the performers has his head tied up in a white cloth, and then puts on a woman's hat in hope that the meeting will increase. And this is allowed on the Lord's day. These men and several others are in this Park every day and night, thus getting their living by offending the ears of those who are desirous of enjoying the beauties of this lovely place.

Adjoining him is a short Irishman, who displays a large card on his hat bearing the inscription, "Down with the Lords," but his clothes are so dirty, and his language so extreme, that few persons gather round; and after a vain effort to collect an audience he "downs" himself, and taking his card from his hat sits disconsolately on the box which has served him for a platform.

In this Babel of sounds we now hear the voice of song, and find a few young people singing from "Songs and Solos." We stay and listen to the speaker who follows, and are glad to find that he tells of his own "conversion to God," and bids his congregation "Seek the Lord while He may be found." May God bless his efforts! I do not know these friends—they are new-comers, and though they do not yet gather many, it is refreshing to recognise a witness for God amidst this ungodly mass of pleasure-seekers on the Lord's day.

When will the authorities stop these disorderly scenes? How long is this Park to be given over to a few persons who abuse the liberty of free speech in order to gain a living? Surely the Park is for the use of the people at large, and not for the convenience of the few.

Let those in authority simply make a rule forbidding individuals from making collections or taking money (this need not affect the demonstrations of public bodies), and order would reign supreme; then would the police be delighted, and the West-end people rejoice at their once again being able to enjoy an evening's stroll without the distraction which at present exists.

Space hinders me from descriptions of other things met with on this occasion. At one point a phrenologist is speaking; at another a Hyper-Calvinist is "as a voice crying in the wilderness," for few listen to him; and as we draw away from the many gatherings, we see the Church Army with an attentive audience, and are profoundly thankful to notice that they have "no collection."

Be it understood that I have described a Sunday afternoon in Hyde Park between three and half-past four; and also, that I have not mentioned what takes place on the other side, near the Serpentine.

Speaking for myself and fellow-workers, we are not able to be in the Park in the afternoon. We are there in the evening from six till eight, and on four week-nights from eight till half-past nine, but we cannot give up our Sunday afternoons, as meetings are held in Hyde Park Hall for believers at that hour. Things are not quite so bad on the week-nights as Sunday evenings, but still it is hard and arduous work to maintain the meetings year after year.

Our choir, consisting of some sixty Christian brethren and sisters who have been converted in the work, are able to attract an audience of thousands, and through the preached Gospel, God is adding nightly "to the church such as shall be saved." Our annual meeting takes place at Stafford Rooms, Tichborne-street, Edgware-road, on Tuesday, July 10th, at 8 o'clock, when the brighter side of "Hyde Park by Night and Day," will be spoken of. W' shall celebrate our 23rd year of Hyde Park services and a quarter of a century's work in the West End, on that occasion. We shall value the prayers and fellowship of the readers of The Christian for the maintenance of this testimony to our Lord Jesus in Hyde Park.

GENERAL BOOTH'S JUBILEE.

In connection with this Jubilee a series of demonstrations is being held this week, finding their climax in Tuesday's enthusiastic proceedings in the Crystal Palace. A welcome meeting was held in Exeter Hall on Monday evening, when about 500 foreign delegates were accorded an enthusiastic reception by an audience that filled the building in every part. Among the countries represented by the Salvationists present were the United States, South America, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa. India, Jamaica, France, Germany, Italy, Holland, Belgium, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden. Prayer having been offered by General Booth, he called upon his son, Mr. Ballington Booth, to introduce the United States contingent, which consisted chiefly of coloured people, who wore costumes which gave predominance to a pattern of stars and stripes. This party sang two selections which resembled plantation melodies.

General Booth then spoke at considerable length. In the course of his address he said his message on such an occasion to the Army was one of gratitude— of intense gratitude to the men and women who had worked so self-sacrificingly, not for him, but for the sake of the salvation of the people. To the Church he would say, "Do not be afraid of us." The Salvationists acted for them as pioneers, in the way that jackals might be said to provide for the lions. Where, he asked, would be some of the forward movements, armies, and missions if it were not for the Salvationists? To the Governments of the earth he would say, the work of the Salvationists was the only antidote to anarchy and the spirit of disobedience that was at work in the earth. Some of the would-be reformers of this world were wanting to encourage a spirit of disrespect for authority and a disobedience to law. To them he would say they were sowing the wind, and if they did not mind they would eventually reap the whirlwind.

The remainder of the evening was devoted to the reception of the foreign friends, who with the flags of their respective nationalities waving over their heads stood up in sections at the command of the chairman. They came to the front and sang Salvation Army songs after they had been introduced by the General, who from time to time called upon the officers of the contingents to address the meeting.

A TESTIMONY TO DIVINE GOODNESS.—Let me record it to the praise of the glory of Divine grace and infinite mercy, that for many years—indeed, for as many as I can remember, since my first discovery of the sinner's way to God by Christ—I have never been allowed to lose my way to the Mercy-seat for a single day. I have not always had bright sunshine, but I have every day had sunlight and not darkness in my soul. What shall I render to the Lord?—Dr. A. A. Bonar.

BISHOP BOMPAS, of Athabasca, speaking of his diocese, says :—The chief characteristic of an Arctic life consists not so much in what is present as in features that are conspicuous by their absence. No cities, towns, or villages, streets, roads, or lanes; no markets, farms, or bazaars; no flocks, or herds, or carriages; no money, whether coin or notes; no railways, mails, or telegraphs; no government, or soldiers, or police; no prisons or taxes; no lawyers or doctors." The Bishop thinks that in the stern magnificence of Arctic nature, varied by a few weeks of summer loveliness, one is brought so near to the Creator as to compensate for the lack of many things.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—Instead of the monthly prayer meeting on the first Monday of the month from 4-5 p.m., the directors of the London Missionary Society have resolved to hold a weekly prayer meeting on Mondays from 12.30 to 1.30 at the Mission House. They cordially invite all friends of missions, and trust that many who cannot be present will be able to observe the hour as a time of prayer. They venture to suggest two subjects for intercession :—(1) The present financial embarrassment—that it may be speedily removed, and the Society's work go forward unhindered. (2) The celebration of the Centenary—that it may effect a great revival of missionary enthusiasm in all parts of the Society's constituency.

THE LAST COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

I SPENT last Saturday at Cilfynydd, the scene of the recent dreadful colliery explosion. There seemed scarcely a house where there had not been one dead. In not a few there had been more than one. The Permanent Fund provides £5 for widows for funeral expenses, and 5s. weekly, with an allowance for each child up to fourteen. But where a son has lost his life, who has been the stay of the household, just as his father might have been, a sum of £20 is paid for him, and no more. I met with one very distressing case of this kind. A lad of nineteen had been the bread-winner for his mother and four other children. On the fatal Saturday, after having worked all Friday night and got a few hours' sleep, he went down for the afternoon shift, saying he must put in all the time he could, because he wanted to take his mother into the country for a change. In half an hour he was launched into eternity. Mr. Wintle (Pontymoile, near Pontypool) is looking after this and similar cases.

It is to be hoped that evidence will not be withheld which may lead to the actual cause, and even to other possible causes, of this deplorable calamity. But men are evidently afraid or disinclined to say much about such cases, lest they should be dismissed. Evidently many of these accidents arise from some man's own wilfulness or carelessness; but more might be done to prevent such terrible disasters underground as well as above ground.

Much kind sympathy is shown in the district, and many collections are being made; on the other hand, some men show an awful callousness, and the language heard from them is appalling in its wickedness. There is not a little heathenism in these colliery districts, no less needing the Gospel than those in the centre of Darkest Africa. M.

A MANITOBAN PASTOR.

WRITING from Methuen, Manitoba, to a friend in this country, Rev. A. Gordon says:—

"I laboured at first in Ontario for twenty-six years. During that time God gave me the joy of leading many souls to Him. In 1882 we were sent to this country as missionaries. Our first field was Alexander. We laboured there for two years supported by the Missionary Society. Now, that field pays the salary of its minister, and has for the last five years. We then went to Manitoba, where we worked for three years; we saw a good many souls saved. That Mission has now been divided into two fields, and has a good circuit of Missions. We spent the next three years in Cannon, a circuit of twenty miles square, with eleven appointments. I had a young man as assistant, and two churches were built while we were on this circuit; the year we left it was divided, and now consists of two good circuits. Our next field was Burnside and Prospect. After two years there of work, it was decided to build a church at Prospect; between thirty and forty persons were converted.

"We came here last June. We have a good church, and my time is fully occupied. I have three services every Sunday, an after-meeting for Christians, and prayer-meetings each week, and two meetings for young people; the latter is for the mental and moral improvement of those who attend. If I live until June, I shall have worked thirty-eight years as a missionary. My wife has been a great help to me for the last thirty-five years. I have had influenza this spring, and was ill for some time, but God graciously spared me, and has restored me to health again."

RICHMOND-STREET MISSION, WALWORTH.

A MEETING in connection with this Mission was held at the Metropolitan Tabernacle on Monday week. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who presided, commended the work, and remarked that it was one of the offshoots of the Tabernacle Church, and was doing one of the noblest works possible in a densely-populated and poor district. He hoped that it would receive the subscriptions, the prayers, and active interest of all who could assist in either of these three directions.

Mr. C. G. Barr, secretary, gave a short résumé of the work of the mission. In appealing for increased support, he mentioned the fact, as an evidence of the earnestness of the workers, that over £1300 had been raised in about one year towards £2500 required for the enlargement of the schools, plans for which are now prepared, and an effort is being made to commence the new building at once. The treasurer is Mr. F. A. Bevan, and the hon. sec. of the building fund is T. W. How.

AN ADULT SCHOOL AT OLD FORD.

FROM Old Ford to China is a far cry, but in that distant land sleeps the founder of this little mission, the late William Argent, killed in a riot—one of the missionary lives that are the buried seed of a coming harvest. Five and a-half years ago he caught fire on the Adult School Movement at a Birmingham Convention, and returning to Old Ford began forthwith to act on his impressions. Having overcome various obstacles, he started his school on a certain Sunday in February, 1889, with eighteen members. In October, 1892, the little community got settled into a place of their own. It was a small house and empty, and they had but £8 in hand to spend on adapting it to their use, but stout hearts and willing hands can do wonders. Night after night from six o'clock to ten, and Saturday afternoons into the bargain, for the space of three months, Sundays only excepted, these willing-hearted folk were at work, pulling down, putting up, plastering, carpentering, painting, decorating, etc., until they had accomplished work to the value of £150—all given freely.

The result was that the little eight-roomed house became transformed into a convenient school-building, with class-rooms, reading, recreation, and refreshment rooms, and a bright comfortable hall to seat 200; the benches also being home-made. What the feelings of the congregation were when on New Year's Day, 1893, they gathered for the conspicuous occasion of the opening, can be better imagined than described.

Since then they have kept on "going ahead," with an average of eighty adults at the 2 a.m. school on Sunday, and good attendances at all meetings. Week nights are taken up with a varied programme of good things; prayer-meetings, Bible Defence Union, Gospel Temperance, Choral Society, Sick Benefit Society, Boot Club, Penny Bank, etc., besides monthly meetings, quarterly teas, and committees. Best of all, conversions are the order of the day, and redeemed lives bear glad testimony to the fact that in Argent Hall shines the light of the pure Gospel.

The next move is to take over the adjoining house (a "sweet" shop, open all day on Sunday), and transform it into a Young Women's Evening Home. This can be secured and adapted for the moderate sum of £60. The need of such a resort as a haven for young girls is, alas! only too palpable to those acquainted with the district. There is also the purchase of the freehold of the whole premises, which have a sufficient area to be available for extension, and a spot so sacred, a birthplace of souls, it is felt must be "our very own." About £2000 altogether is needed. The president is Mr. E. P. White, 52, Fairfield-road, Bow, E.

THE KINGSDOWN ORPHANAGE.

RECOGNISING the necessity laid upon us by the call of God, we have undertaken to endeavour to fill the void left by the removal of the "Mother of the Orphans," our dear friend Mrs. Ginever. We trust in God, "the Father of the fatherless," to sustain us, and in his children, who have so generously supported this work for the last twenty years, to continue their aid. With 172 boys and girls to provide for, some of them cripples, necessities press upon us daily; in answer to prayer, we trust these necessities will be met! We are pleased to say that all is in good working order at the three Homes; the matrons and workers who rendered such loving service in former years, still continue at their several posts. A ladies' committee will be formed to render such assistance as the Homes may require.

Mr. R. T. Smith will act as secretary, conduct correspondence, attend meetings wherever they can be convened, and collect subscriptions. Letters should be addressed, Mr. R. T. Smith, Secretary, at the Orphanage, Pemberton-road, N.

THEATRICAL MISSION.—As we have already announced, Mr. Courthope Todd has been compelled by illness to resign his post as secretary. His successor, Mr. A. B. Harding, writes:—The committee are fitting up a house at Kensington, close to Olympia, as a branch of their work, for the special use of the girls employed in the spectacle. A friend residing at Kensington is so anxious that something should be done to shield these employés from peril, and to surround them by good influences, that he has generously offered to pay for three years the bulk of the rent, rates, and taxes of a very suitable house for the purpose. But in order that we may avail ourselves of this kind offer we shall require to expend nearly £200 in furnishing and fitting up the house, while its maintenance when completed will cost nearly £200 per annum.—Address, Theatrical Mission, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, W.C.

IRISH NOTES.

THE Irish Presbyterian Sunday schools raised last year for missions the sum of £1071.

The co. Leitrim Protestant Orphan Society, which is now in its fifty-fourth year, is doing a good work, and clothed and fed last year forty-two orphan children.

An important Missionary Conference has been held in the First Presbyterian Church, Antrim, when addresses were delivered by Revs. S. L. Wilson, T. C. Fulton, and W. J. Macaulay.

A successful series of missionary meetings has been held in Bailieborough and the neighbourhood by Rev. Jno. Stevenson, of India, whose addresses were earnest, practical, and calculated to stir up a vital interest in missions.

The Primitive Church Methodist Missionary Society, whose labours are mainly confined to co. Fermanagh, held its annual conference at Maguiresbridge last week. During the year the society made steady progress, and now employs seven missionaries.

At the annual Methodist Conference held in Dublin last week, the following resolution was adopted:—"That a case having arisen in which the promoters of a bazaar in one of the circuits offered a valuable prize to be competed for in a shooting gallery, Conference declared the proceedings to be not free from the elements of gambling, and therefore condemned by the standing rules."

A monster Band of Hope demonstration, organised by the Belfast and Ballymacarrett Band of Hope Unions, took place in the Botanic Gardens, Belfast, on Saturday week. These unions, which were formed about eighteen months ago by the Irish Temperance League, have now over 10,000 children on their rolls, and the demonstration referred to was the first of the kind held under their auspices. The weather was very unfavourable, yet there about 5000 children present.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A STRONG appeal is at present being made for a more generous support to the Glasgow Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, whose efficiency is greatly crippled for want of funds.

Rev. James P. Pittendreigh, senior minister of the U.P. Church, Anstruther, in Fifeshire, has died from the effects of an accident. He was a native of Aberdeen, and was first ordained in Pittenweem in 1866.

The July number of the Free Church Monthly is beautifully illustrated by portraits of members of the different committees of the Church, the Assembly officials, and the principal preaching stations on the continent.

Special services are being held on Sabbath evenings in the Thomas Coats Memorial Church, Paisley, which was recently opened. They are being largely attended, and are much appreciated, as the preachers are all well known men.

A very general impression exists in Christian circles that Scotland is on the eve of experiencing a great revival such as swept over the country in 1859. Scotland much needs such a time of awakening, and earnest petitions for it are being offered up from pulpits, and at united prayer meetings.

Now that the fine weather has set in, open-air work is being vigorously carried on all over Scotland, and especially at the coast places most frequented by visitors. Local parties are being countenanced and aided by earnest Christian workers from Glasgow and other large towns, and much good is being done.

The Free Church has, this year, made very thorough arrangements for an efficient pulpit supply at the most frequented summer resorts in Scotland. About a dozen of the most talented and earnest young ministers have been selected to preach at these places, which are usually crowded by strangers at this season.

A prominent Glasgow Christian worker has just died, namely, Mr. Jonathan Thomson. He was one of the founders of Claremont U.P. Church congregation, where he acted as an elder for twenty-four years. He was a liberal contributor to the funds of the denomination, and active member of the church courts, and devoted much of his leisure time to the charitable institutions of the city.

REQUEST FOR PRAYER. — For tent meetings in Berks for deepening of spiritual life and evangelistic effort by Messrs. W. Day and A. E. Sidford.

HAYLING.—The Gospel Mission Hall was opened on Thursday. A service was held in the Hall, when Rev. A. Cope preached on "Till He comes." The place was filled with an attentive audience. After tea a public meeting was held, presided over by Mr. John Harvey. Earnest addresses were given by Rev. A. Cope, Messrs. H. G. Wilson, Chamber, and W. E. Jones.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Mr. T. W. Gladstone, for many years secretary of the Southport Y.M.C.A., has accepted the pastorate of the Reformed Church of England at Eccles, near Manchester.

The Exeter Hall authorities have arranged to expend upwards of £1000 in modernising and making thoroughly effective the sanitary appliances throughout their large building.

A successful quarterly meeting of representatives of the North-Eastern District of Y.M.C.A.'s has just been held at Durham by invitation of Rev. H. E. Fox, and other friends.

The students at the International Y.M.C.A. Training School, Springfield, Massachusetts, have specially celebrated the jubilee in an interesting meeting, for which Sir George Williams had on this side spoken an address into the phonograph. Each student was presented by Sir George with an autograph copy of the "Golden Book."

Encouraging news has lately been received from the association secretaries at Jaffa, Jerusalem, and Damascus. From the latter ancient city Rev. Archibald Stuart writes that the first annual meeting has been held, when a cheering report of the year's work was given. He also states that an Association was being formed at the foot of Mount Hermon as a branch of the Damascus Association, and that an association building for Damascus is contemplated if sufficient funds can be raised.

An early example of the advantages expected to accrue in different countries from the new interest created by the recent Jubilee Conference has been experienced in the clearing of the Paris Y.M.C.A. building from debt. Mons. A. André, Regent of the Bank of France, who presided over one of the sessions of the Conference, called together the principal Protestant Christians in Paris on his return, and, joining with Mr. James Stokes, of New York, headed the list with a munificent contribution, which will enable the work to be prosecuted in the handsome new building in the Rue Trevise unfettered by debt. The English executive has made a grant out of its Jubilee Extension Fund in aid of the work in France.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

At the annual meeting of the G.W.R. Temperance Union, held at Exeter, a membership of 5040 was reported.

The principal total abstinence associations in Liverpool are actively engaged in a month's united open-air Temperance mission.

A new coffee stand has been opened in Belfast. The Irish Temperance League has now sixteen coffee stands in Belfast, beside a café and a farmer's yard.

There is a clause in the Swiss Federal Constitution to the effect that 10 per cent. of the income derived from spirit duties should be employed in the fight against alcoholism.

The thirteenth annual Temperance Festival was held last week on the Moor at Newcastle-on-Tyne, as a counter-attraction to the local races, and, as usual, attracted large crowds.

The annual Temperance Fête at the Crystal Palace will be held on Tuesday, 10th. Will preachers and singers please meet at 3 p.m., at the Bible Stand in the Palace? William Forbes.

71, Tollington-road, Holloway, N.

The Bishop of Liverpool presided on Tuesday week at a meeting held in Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool, at which a resolution was passed asking the city magistrates to exercise their power to do away with the use of backdoors to public-houses.

Rev. Charles Garrett, presiding at a meeting of Temperance Veterans in Liverpool, mentioned that when he returned home after signing the pledge, fifty-four years ago, and told his mother what he had done, she was deeply grieved, and expressed her conviction she would soon have to order his coffin.

Rev. W. J. Williams stated at the Australian Wesleyan Conference, that though Women's Franchise in New Zealand had not yet overthrown the drink traffic it had given that traffic such a tremendous shake from one end of the colony to the other that no retail liquor trade in the land was now worth six years' purchase.

Dr. Annie McCall, addressing a B.W.T. meeting at Wimbledon, said a doctor had a right to use alcohol as a medicine, but it should only be administered in the tiniest of doses, and the patient should never be allowed to take it as a beverage. That it was not a necessary of life, was shown by the fact that when it was withdrawn from prisoners in gaol they did not suffer in consequence, and no coroner's jury had yet returned a verdict of "Died from Teetotalism."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has been spending a lengthened season in the North of England holding Gospel services. At Liverpool the Lord graciously owned his servant, and many professed conversion, while the Christians were encouraged by the expositions of the Word.

Messrs. B. Knight and E. B. Lannen concluded a month's mission on Thursday evening last at Winton, near Bournemouth. The services held in the mission hall belonging to the Y.M.C.A. were well attended. A number professed to have received blessing during the mission.

Swathling.—Mr. Rowland Sturt has concluded a fortnight's services in this growing suburb of Southampton. Bible readings were held on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons in each week, and during the mission services were also arranged for young people, at which special addresses were given by the evangelist.

Mr. John H. Cook commenced tent mission work on May 20, at Frittenden, Kent. There were good meetings from the first, and much blessing was experienced. On each Lord's day the tent was crowded, and many were unable to obtain admission. After a month's stay, Mr. Cook has now moved on to Sutton Valence.

Margate.—For several years past special services have been held during the season in the Music Hall and on the sands in connection with the Shaftesbury House. On Sunday Mr. Henry Thorne conducted the opening service in the "Hall by the Sea." Several persons rose in the after-meeting as an indication of their desire to yield themselves to God. Mr. Monro Collings is once more in charge of the children's services, and it is hoped that, as in past years, much blessing will follow his labours.

Rev. J. Manton Smith.—During the past week we have had the pleasure of services, conducted by Mr. Smith, nightly in the Countess of Huntingdon's Chapel, Bath. It has been to us a time of much refreshing. Mr. Smith's genial way of setting forth the truth is most attractive, as shown by the large audiences attending. Best of all, the Word was in the power of the Holy Ghost, as manifest by souls passing out of darkness into God's marvellous light.

G. E. T.

Almeley.—A tent mission held at Almeley, Herefordshire, from the 17th to the 24th June, was exceedingly well attended throughout. The tent was so crowded on the Sundays that many were unable to obtain admission. There was no attraction but that of the old Gospel story delivered in the power of God, and listened to with riveted attention. Besides local friends, Wm. Hobson, London, Mary Greenwood, Malvern, and Samuel Southall and wife, Leeds, took part. Great unity and love characterised the whole mission.

Northampton.—Good work has been done here by Mr. Wm. Sampson. On Sunday, June 17, Mr. Sampson preached morning and evening in the Wesleyan Chapel, which was crowded at night. In response to the earnest appeals of the preacher a large number sought a fuller blessing, and several unsaved cried for mercy. On the following evening three young men surrendered their hearts to the Lord. Scarletwell Street and several surrounding villages were visited by Mr. Sampson. Eternity alone will reveal the good which has been accomplished.

Mr. T. W. Canning, of the Evangelisation Society, began a fortnight's tent mission in Tayport, Fife, on Sabbath, 17th June. Large gatherings have come together to hear the Gospel, especially on Lord's day evenings, when every inch of ground within the tent is occupied, and large crowds stand outside. Souls are being saved, and God's people greatly blessed. An awakened interest in Divine things is manifested among the well-to-do class, while as of old, the common people gladly hear the words of life. A united and hearty co-operation in the work is given by the Free Church, the Y.M.C.A., the Y.W.C.A., and the other missions of the place.

Aberfeldy, N.B.—A successful series of services for children was brought to a close on Sabbath, June 24, by Mr. T. Graham Bailey and Mr. Jas. McNeil Little, both students of Edinburgh. The three Sabbath-schools in the town, Established, Free, and Congregational, united heartily in the movement, and gave up their regular meetings for joint services in the Town Hall on the Sabbaths. The week evening meetings were held in the same place. Occasional special meetings, held for boys and girls separately, were very solemn times, many of the children indicating a desire to give their heart to the Saviour. Great interest was manifested in an "Object" service; also in a Chinese Lantern service. Large open-air gatherings were held in the Public Square on the two last Sabbath evenings. Thos. G. Irvine.

Southsea Common.—Having spent the month of June with Mr. John Denning, taking the tent meetings on the common, I should like to commend this work to prayer and sympathy. Many thousands of people pass the tent day after day. Some only come as excursionists for a few days. On a large red flag there is the word "Eternity" in large white letters constantly reminding people of the awful doom awaiting those who die in their sins. In another part of Southsea, where hundreds of new houses have been recently erected, and where Romanism and Ritualism abound, Mr. Denning has pitched a small tent, where meetings are held nightly in addition to children's services. I am now returning home for work in other places, but Mr. Denning continues with both tents two months longer.

PERSONALIA.

Mrs. Thomas Spurgeon and her family arrived last week on our shores. Mr. Spurgeon went to Plymouth on Wednesday to meet them.

Bishop Tucker left England on Thursday on his return to East Africa. He will visit Berlin en route to consult the leaders of the German Mission.

Mr. F. S. Ball, of the Evangelisation Society, sailed in the s.s. "Orontes," on July 2nd, for a lengthened season of rest in Melbourne and Tasmania.

Rev. Alfred Tilly, of Cardiff, has been elected to the vacant seat on the Baptist Mission Committee, and appointed a member of the China Sub-committee.

Rev. Dr. Culross has been asked to help Rev. Duncan Macgregor in the Dunoon Gospel Training College, and it is expected he will begin work at an early date.

Rev. F. G. Harrison and Mrs. Harrison arrived on Tuesday from the Congo. Mrs. Harrison, having to return in consequence of ill-health, was unable to journey without the company of her husband.

Canon Fergie, the devoted Vicar of Ince, is much improved in health. He has definitely decided to resign in the autumn, as he feels a younger vicar is needed to carry on the many organisations of this large colliery parish.

Mr. Montague Waldegrave is proceeding from Beira to Mashonaland. The journey is one of considerable difficulty, and prayer is requested that he may be sustained in the journey, and blessed in the testimony he desires to give in Mashonaland.

Rev. F. B. Meyer writes in his magazine:—"On July 23rd I go for two or three days to Keswick, and, on Saturday, 28th, start for New York, hoping to reach Northfield on Saturday, August 4. Mr. Moody asks me to stay with him through the month, and I hope to reach England about Sept. 6th or 7th, in time to preach at Christ Church Sept. 9th. Will all my friends pray that I may be greatly used? This is my great desire. It is a marvellous opportunity of touching the springs of American Christianity."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The St. Paul's Presbyterian Endeavourers of Napier, Queensland, support two teachers in the New Hebrides.

Dr. Francis E. Clark describes in The Golden Rule four remarkable conventions—in Topeka, Kan.; Hopkinsville, Ky.; Waco, Tex.; and Guthrie.

The New Zealand Methodist has been enlarged, and has opened a Christian Endeavour department for the growing band of New Zealand C.E. societies.

Rev. Donald M. Grant gives a shrewd hint to pastors when he says: "Nowhere in all of his ministry can a pastor reap as much fruit from as little labour as he can in the C.E. Society."

The Kansas City C.E. Union recently conducted a city census, with the result that the church and Sunday-school attendance at twenty-four churches was increased the Sunday following the census by over one thousand.

A new Society of Christian Endeavour has been started by Rev. T. M. Mundle in connection with London-road Congregational Church. At the first meeting twenty-five active members and one honorary were enrolled.

There are now 1521 British branches of the Y.P.S.C.E. A branch has been formed in connection with Homerton New College, Cambridge, also in connection with Trinity Congregational Church, Walthamstow, and Boulevard Church, Nottingham.

In order to deepen the interest in Foreign Missions amongst Endeavourers, a midsummer morning missionary meeting was held in Cambridge-street Baptist Church, Glasgow, on Sabbath week, when above four hundred Endeavourers and friends were present. Mr. Anderson, Principal of the Bible Training Institute, gave an account of the Morocco Mission. Miss Murray, of the China Inland Mission, gave a brief and interesting account of the work she and her sister have been carrying on for the last eight years, and of the blessings which have attended their labours.

OBITUARY.

REV. WILLIAM THOW, FORMOSA.

THE Convener of the Presbyterian Missions Committee has received a cablegram of the death of Rev. William Thow, M.A., of the Formosan Mission. He died of peritonitis at Taiwanfoo, on June 24. He went out to Formosa for the first time in 1880, and has given admirable service during these fourteen years. A large share of the country work, visiting the stations and preaching in heathen villages and towns, fell to his share, and was done by him with great thoroughness and success. Mr. Thow's removal in the ripeness of his powers and usefulness is a great blow to the Mission.

REV. HENRY FISHER, LEAMINGTON.

A Leamington correspondent announces the death of "Rev. Henry Fisher, who for thirty-seven years has held the post of Incumbent of St. Luke's Episcopal Chapel, Leamington. A 'son in the faith' of the illustrious Hugh McNeile, Mr. Fisher was a man of strong principles and strong character. Very firm in his attachment to what are called 'the doctrines of Grace,' he was singularly honoured of God as a bringer of souls 'from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God'; and that is an honour which, perhaps, can hardly be fully appreciated in this present world. Of Mr. Fisher it may be said that honour was done him at his death. The service was read by Rev. F. N. Carus-Wilson, Vicar of New Milverton, in which parish Mr. Fisher's Leamington house is situated. And it was plain that the hundreds who attended the funeral were not drawn to it by idle curiosity, but by deep respect, sincere affection, and genuine sorrow."

REV. J. W. GREEVES.

The Wesleyan Methodist Church has just sustained a severe loss in the unexpected death of Rev. John Wakefield Greeves, who died on Monday morning at his residence, 82, Breakspears-road, Brockley, in the seventy-first year of his age. He was the eldest son of a remarkable family, three of whom attained a foremost rank in the Wesleyan Church, and the other in the Church of England. Mr. Greeves entered on work at Truro in 1846. Forty years ago he came to London, where he spent six years at City-road and Great Queen-street Chapels. Thence he travelled in Leeds, Hull, Manchester, and Southport. In 1870 he returned to London, and six years later was appointed financial secretary of Wesleyan Home Missions, in which department of Methodism he has rendered invaluable service, his death creating a vacancy which will be difficult to fill. He is brother to Rev. Dr. Greeves, of Southlands College, Battersea. The announcement of his unexpected death will be received with wide-spread sorrow.

MRS. ROWBOTHAM, LIVERPOOL.

There has passed away from us, within the last few days, a devoted Christian worker. Mrs. Rowbotham, the wife of one of our city missionaries, was a remarkable woman. Converted at the age of sixteen, she gave herself up to seek the salvation of others.

During the past twelve years the Lord has used her much. In addition to her household duties, which she never neglected, she has conducted weekly two cottage meetings, a large mothers' meeting, and a Bible-class, and was a welcome visitor among the poor, the sick, and the dying, often acting as nurse. She was also an active worker at the open-air meetings. Some who were converted through her ministry are now preaching the Gospel. Her last illness was long and painful, but she cheerfully bore it, and as she neared the end it seemed as if there was nothing between earth and glory. The funeral showed how the poor loved her. The crowd round the grave was very large, and as we sang "Rock of Ages" and "Peace, perfect peace," many wept. The Liverpool City Mission is the poorer to-day for the loss of our beloved sister. J. BARNABAS BAIN.

MISS MARIA A. WEST.

This gifted lady passed away on June 27 at the Catherine Pennefather Memorial Home for Invalid Ladies, where she had come for rest a month ago, and where she was tenderly cared for and watchfully nursed in her closing days.

Miss West was for twenty-five years a successful missionary of the great American society known as the A.B.C.F.M., and amongst the Armenian women of Asiatic Turkey was the means of winning many trophies for Christ. The narrative of this, the most important work of her life, was published under the title "The Romance of Missions," and made her name familiar to British Christians, many of whom she numbered amongst her personal friends, who admired her alike for her unaffected piety and her bright intelligence. She was also the founder of the Strangers' Rests at Constantinople and Smyrna, which in later years have been worked by able and devoted handmaids of the Lord.

Our friend had for some years suffered from failing health, and spent the winter before last in Florida. She came to this country last summer to re-visit her friends in Scotland and England, and at Cannes a few months ago underwent a serious operation, which further enfeebled her. She now "sleeps in Jesus," and "her works do follow her." America gave her birth, and England holds all that is mortal of her till the Resurrection morn. J. E. M.

THE BISHOP OF RIVERINA, N.S.W.

The particulars of the death of Bishop Linton, of Riverina, are of a pathetic character. He sacrificed his life in the cause of his Master, and another name has thus been added to the overgrowing list of missionary martyrs. His diocese was large and unwieldy, and he frequently had to ride for hundreds of miles across rugged tracts and rough roads. His mode of conveyance gave rise to a disorder from which at times he suffered severely, but he refused all suggestions of a more restful life. His last attack was brought on just at the beginning of one of his visitation tours.

The Bishop had travelled some 1300 miles by rail, and although much fatigued by the journey, and threatened with a renewal of his complaint, he drove from Broken Hill to Silverton to take an afternoon service, over a dangerously rugged track, sixteen miles each way. The sequel can best be told in the words of his brother, Rev. E. F. Linton. "Medical aid at Broken Hill brought some relief to the state of misery and pain which ensued, but the case was so serious that the Bishop was conveyed the whole way back to Melbourne, attended by one of his clergy, in the hope that his life might be saved by skilful surgical treatment. He reached Melbourne, where Mrs. Linton was staying on a visit at the Bishop's Palace, only to die." The Bishop is widely mourned in Australia, but the annals of the Church at large are enriched by the story of his work and the final sacrifice of himself in the sacred cause of duty.—The Record.

THE LATE M. A. MABILLE.

Our French contemporaries give highly appreciative obituary notices of M. Mabille, whose death we announced last week. He died on May 20 at Moriah, Lessouto. He had for thirty-four years laboured as a Christian minister, and was privileged to see two of his sons enter upon mission work. M. Dieterlen writes to the Paris Journal des Missions Evangéliques:—"His death was the most beautiful and edifying that I have ever seen. He died like the choice Christian that he was, remaining a missionary to the last." On his death-bed M. Mabille was visited by several of the Basuto chiefs, to whom he addressed suitable exhortations. About five thousand persons, for the most part Basutos, attended the funeral.

The son of a schoolmaster, M. Adolphe Charles Mabille was born at Baulmes, near Yverdon, in 1836, being consecrated from birth for Gospel work among the heathen by his pious parents. He studied at Lausanne, and passed some time in Holland and England before his heart responded to the Divine call to proceed to Dark Africa. There he entered with zest into work of a pioneer order with M. Eugene Casalis and other men of like devotion. He translated into the vernacular Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and other useful books, and compiled a Bible dictionary.

M. Mabille was the life and soul of the work at Moriah, not only in pastoral, but in educational spheres. He aimed at establishing Christian effort on a native basis, and the results have been encouraging in a high degree. Moriah is the centre of seventeen outstations of which he exercised the oversight; he also directed a printing press, a Bible and tract depôt, and a school for native teachers.

MISS G. F. S. DANIELL, ALDERSHOT.

This devoted labourer, whose departure was noticed in your last issue, was laid to rest till the Resurrection morn beside her beloved mother in the Military Cemetery, Aldershot, on the afternoon of June 29. Military friends and others from all parts assembled in the Mission Hall, so sacred in the memories of many. All felt that after long and patient suffering this dear one, who for many years had ministered unto them and their comrades, was at last gone from them. Our hearts were sadly stirred as we thought of the days, very many years ago, when night after night we met in fellowship with comrades from almost every regiment in the camp, many of whom have gone to their rest, amongst them General Sir James Hope Grant, General Russell, Sir Arthur Blackwood, Mr. Baxter, Major Malan, Rev. Melville Pym, Dr. Macbeth, Colin J. Campbell, Captain Warren, and others. We thought of the weekly believers' meetings, in which Miss Daniell was such a help. We thought, too, of the many blessed and soul-stirring seasons of prayer and testimony enjoyed week by week, and last, but not least, her personal dealings with the unsaved.

For some time before the death of her mother Miss Daniell was her right-hand helper, and the great Day will reveal how much good has been accomplished at the Aldershot Mission Hall through her instrumentality. Wrapped in the Union Jack, the remains of our sister (a soldier's daughter) were placed upon a gun-carriage of the Royal Artillery, and conveyed to her last resting-place by soldiers who had received blessing at the Home, and laid beside those for whom she laboured. The cortége included Miss Hanson, Miss Hamilton, Mrs. Digby Dent, Miss Molony (London Soldiers' Home), Miss Brownlow (Colchester Home), Miss Brunker (Chatham Home), with other lady workers; and by representatives of every grade in the army, as well as by many civilians of Aldershot, by whom she was much respected. The service was conducted by Prebendary Webb-Peploe (assisted by Rev. Mr. Oliver, chaplain to the cavalry brigade), who delivered a solemn address. The hymn "Rock of Ages" was sung, and the benediction pronounced by the Chaplain-General.

All was very peaceful and quiet, reminding one of the service held at the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Daniell, in the autumn of 1871. Amongst those present were General Sir Robert Phayre, General Brownlow, General Anderson, Colonels McGregor, Graves, Roberts, Phillips, Phayre, Russell, Major Pelham Burn, Major Evered Poole, Captains Wisely, E. Bissett Campbell, Rev. R. W. Allen, Mr. R. H. Hill, and many others. In the evening Mr. Webb-Peploe conducted an impressive service at the Soldiers' Mission Hall. NEWMAN R. HUGHMAN (late Scots Greys).

GATHERED GOLD.

Do not thou conclude, because thou canst not reach God by thy short stump, He cannot reach thee with his long arm. Oh the length of the saving arm of God!—Bunyan.

QUIETNESS AND STRENGTH.

The spirit of restless eagerness in modern religion needs to be checked. We must get back to the calm confidence, the quiet joy, the unresting but unhasting strength of perfect faith. And to reach it we must ground our religious life in a firmer assurance of Christ's promises and a more intelligent submission to his leadership.—Dr. C. A. Berry.

The Word in the book
Is gold in the mine;
The Word in the heart
Is purse-carried coin.
—Wm. Griffiths.

THE BANK OF FAITH.

I am fully assured that one thing profoundly needed by the churches is a fresh vision of that future which God's promises disclose. That vision will set our hope aglow, it will nerve to activity. Our progress will correspond; no narrow, slender petitions begging poor instalments of the promise, as if Heaven were half bankrupt; but on a scale, with a range and sweep, and with a boldness and assurance of faith proportioned to the grandeur of Divine grace.—Dr. Culross.

LOWLY SERVICE.

The strong man's strength to toil for Christ,
The fervent preacher's skill,
I sometimes wish—but better far,
To be just what God will.

I know not how this languid life,
May life's vast ends fulfil;
He knows; and that life is not lost,
That answers well His will.
John Dickie of Irvine.

LIVING AND DYING.

Dr. Greer, of New York, in an address to young men in a Christian Association, said:—"When the old Roman gladiators entered the arena they proceeded first to the Cæsar's throne, and said, 'We who are about to die salute the Emperor.' Borrowing the same formula, but changing its terms, associations like this are teaching the young men of America to say, as they enter upon the struggles of manhood, 'We who are about to live salute that Master of Life who was dead and is alive again, and liveth for evermore.' Life is always more than death. Triumphant living is more than triumphant dying."

"LABOURERS TOGETHER WITH GOD."

1 Cor. iii. 9.

Not mine the work, but thine;
Or rather—wondrous grace—
'tis thine and mine!
Thou knowest not indeed,
Nor want of us nor need,
That ne'er can be;
Yet how dost Thou delight,
And even condescend—
As Friend with friend—
Still freely to invite
Man to co-work with Thee!
R. Ball Rutter.

The Book World.

The Dew of thy Youth, by J. R. Miller, D.D., is an address delivered to young Christians as a consecration service. It should prove helpful to a large circle of readers. (6d. Sunday-school Union.)

Two attractive books for young people, brought out in Messrs. Nelson's fine style, are The Wreckers of Sable Island, by J. Macdonald Oxley; and Mopsie, the Story of a London Waif, by Dorothy Walrond.

Steadfast; the Story of a Saint and a Sinner, by Rose Terry Cooke, is "founded on fact." The scene is laid in New England, and is full of life and incident, descriptive of Puritan prejudices of the eighteenth century. (1s. Andrew Melrose.)

The Hand on the Helm, by Frederick A. Trotter, is a stirring story of Irish Life in the last century. It tells of perils and plottings, and illustrates the sufferings of Romanists who confess Christ rather than conjure by "Holy Church." (1s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.)

Things to Come, a Journal of Biblical Literature, with special reference to Prophetic Truth, is a new monthly. It has been founded as the organ of the Prophetic Conferences. The first number, dated July, contains several valuable papers and articles which Bible students are sure to preserve for future use. (1d. J. E. Hawkins & Co.)

Charles Whitehead: A Forgotten Genius. By Mackenzie Bell. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock, Bowden and Co.) This is a new edition. Whitehead was a poet, a humorist, and a novelist; born in London in 1804, he died at Melbourne, Victoria, in 1862. He was a man of sad weaknesses; consequently his life was blighted, and he came to a pauper's grave. The book should "point a moral" as well as "adorn a tale." A description of Whitehead's works, with copious extracts, invests this book with a peculiar literary interest.

Life and Immortality Brought to Light by Christ.—The valuable series of "Present Day Tracts" (4d. each. Religious Tract Society) has been enriched by one bearing this title from the pen of Rev. William Wright, D.D. Succinct and pointed, this essay illustrates doctrine by history, and sets forth in brief the sure warrant of the Christian faith. This little book of sixty-four pages is calculated to do much more effective service against agnosticism and other forms of unbelief than are many more pretentious and bulky works. It is instructive and evidential in substance, plain and untechnical in style, and eminently loyal to Holy Writ. Ethnic gropings after light as to the life beyond are explained, and revealed truth is shown to culminate in the resurrection of Christ. These pages, always lucid and at times eloquent, constitute a useful popular introduction to studies of sublime interest.

The Historical Geography of the Holy Land, especially in relation to the History of Israel and of the Early Church, by George Adam Smith, D.D., is a work of solid value and peculiar attractions. Every page bears testimony to wide reading and keen observation; they evidence historical insight as well as large erudition. The results of modern research are admirably summarised; and many copious notes conduct the reader into the bye-ways of archæology and topography, while mediæval and more recent history is by no means overlooked. Though in sympathy with modern Biblical criticism, Dr. Smith shows himself in this work very independent, contesting some of the conclusions, textual and historical, of prominent critics. To read in this work about Jericho and its chicken-hearted inhabitants, or about the Maritime Plain and its plague, is to acquire information explanatory of many passages of Scripture. The same may be said of almost any chapter, especially those on "The Real Strength of Judæa," and "The Lake of Galilee." Dr. Smith saw the "Changeless East" to real purpose, and his description excels that of the mere traveller because Sacred Story occupied his soul, and the writings and impressions of others were ever present to his mind. This is a work of living interest, instinct with high-toned religious sentiment. The volume contains six very useful maps, and is sure to take its place as a text-book on its deeply-important subject. In studying the history of God's ancient people and the early Church, such a work will render assistance of the utmost value. (15s. Hodder & Stoughton.)

TRAINING FOR WORK IN FRANCE.

I am interested in a young ex-Catholic, twenty-nine, who was professor in a college in France, but got truly converted and brought to Christ, and then was desirous of consecrating his life as a French pastor. He is studying for the purpose, but I much want that in his three months' vacation he should be introduced to vigorous Christian life and activity in England. He is greatly drawn to English people, and can speak the language fairly. Would any of your readers receive him into their house, read the Bible with him, and show him bright Christian life and Gospel work? Would a small payment for his board help anyone who could not give him board and lodging free?

MATCH BOYS' BRIGADE.

We have formed this Brigade for the benefit of our London match boys, to provide them with amusement, recreation, and spiritual instruction during their evenings. To do this successfully necessitates expense, and we are doing our utmost to make the effort self-supporting. For this purpose we are carrying on a business at Fish-street-hill, where the boys are supplied with special wax vestas at the same price they now pay. This leaves a margin of profit of say 1s. 2d. per gross clear, which, as it accumulates and our sales increase, will give us the means to carry on the work. All our expenses for rent and salesman's salary, etc., are met by a sum of £100 a year, which a firm of polish manufacturers pay us for an advertisement on the back of our boxes.

If your readers could send us any good papers, etc., for which they have no use, for our boys to read when at the club, it would be a great kindness.

(ESTABLISHED 1869.)

Mr. F. N. CHARRINGTON, Hon. Supt.

Dear Friends,

I am pleased to inform you that I have returned from my long voyage to Australia and Egypt (thank God), fully restored to health.

I take this, the earliest opportunity, to most sincerely thank all our friends who have so kindly contributed to the work during my enforced absence.

I find, however, that while we have just received enough, we have nothing left, so that at the present moment our funds are entirely exhausted.

Under these circumstances we most earnestly appeal to you for a special donation towards our current expenses.

We also still require £250 before we can open our Children's Hall, which is so greatly needed in this teeming population (see picture on front page).

Please help us at this time of special need.

Yours most truly,

Notes and Comments.

WE are receiving pressing appeals from mission workers in London for funds in aid of "Day in the Country" excursions. The excellent effect, physical and moral, of a visit to rural scenes, and a blow of fresh country air, upon hard-worked women and neglected children from the metropolis, cannot be over-estimated. We shall be glad if our readers will enable us to respond more readily to these appeals while the summer sun is still shining.

There is, and perhaps there must be, much divergence of thought in regard to spiritual things, but in all such discussion we should surely seek to avoid a censorious spirit and acrimonious expression. It is well for us all to remember that the first beatitude, which includes all the rest, is "Blessed are the poor in spirit." "Let us not judge one another any more." Let us endeavour to think the best of those who differ from us; to believe that they are seeking the truth no less than ourselves, and by love to serve one another.

A contemporary, which claims to speak with a Tongue of Fire, has the following editorial note:—"In the recent correspondence in THE CHRISTIAN upon the Baptism of the Holy Ghost, most of the writers attempted to prove, to their own satisfaction, and doubtless that of the devil, that there was no such experience after conversion." This is far from an accurate representation of what was written. It would have been more candid if the Scriptures quoted had been replied to. The advocacy of sinlessness and the claim to a special baptism of the Spirit with such words as the above, seem a contradiction in terms.

The correspondence referred to was characterised by a kindly and brotherly spirit on either side, and we think that the writer of the above remarks will, on reflection, regret their tone. We have doubtless written sharp things ourselves, but the westering sun of life reminds us how soon we shall know as we are known, and how differently things will look before the judgment seat of Christ.

In a number of the same paper Mrs. F. W. Crossley has some excellent thoughts on "Tone." She says:—

I think that nothing marks off the character of the Lord Jesus more strikingly than its tone. Compare it with that displayed by other men—ay, by the best of them at their best. There was an unbroken calmness and dignity, a divine assurance of love, an unearthly forgiveness, which, after the denials in the judgment hall, melted St. Peter by a look, and even on the cross besought pardon for his murderers; a reading of men as they stood round Him, and of the future, immediate and distant, all of which gave, by their tone (alike of humility and power), an unrivalled evidence to his unrivalled claims. Who could affect or invent a tone like that? "Never man spake like this man."

The Lord Jesus offers this heavenly tone to you. But, to obtain it, it must be prized—desired at any cost! Jesus does not cast his pearls before swine; and, strange to say, some prefer a "witty," flippant, sneering, conceited, or domineering tone, to one, like that of Jesus, of perfect purity and perfect love. The latter is the only tone that will enter the Glory Land; even sinful men are sure enough about that. Heaven can be heaven on that condition only. It is the tone of the world that makes the world, and the tone of heaven that makes heaven.

By all means let us cultivate that heavenly tone: it will make days of heaven upon earth.

We have received two additional letters which further urge that the coming of the Lord for his Church may be at any moment, and that He yearns that we should be in "momentary expectation" of his appearing. For more than forty years the Lord's personal return has been our "blessed hope." But no sooner had we received this teaching than we found that those who held it were divided into two camps, some holding that the Lord might come at any moment; others, that the Church will not be taken up until after "the great tribulation." This question is still unsolved. Saintly men have held each view, and hold it still. We must respectfully decline to open our columns to the discussion of a problem which, we think, will only be solved by the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.

The awful colliery explosion at Cilfynydd, which caused the loss of nearly 300 lives, was very possibly the result of the recklessness of a worker under a grossly inadequate system. The Western Mail speaks of "useless safety lamps," and says that "a 'safety' lamp must be unsafe in a fiery colliery if it can be easily opened with a chip of wood by any of the workmen employed in the mine." We have before us just such a lamp from the colliery in question. "The fact is the 'safety lamps' in use in all the mines in South Wales and Monmouthshire are well known among experts to be most unsafe in the hands of reckless persons." It seems incredible that owners and men can run such terrible risks for no possible inducement.

Our friend Mr. Wintle is relieving some who do not participate in the Provident Miners' Fund, and will be thankful to be aided in this good work.

Mr. Bindon Scott and Captain J. Kearney White also appeal pathetically on behalf of the relatives of the sufferers in the Achill-Westport disaster, whereby a large number of harvesters on their way to England and Scotland lost their lives by the upsetting of a ferry-boat.

"THE NEGLECTED CONTINENT" is the title of an illustrated account of the tour of the Rev. G. C. Grubb and party in South America in 1893. It has been written by Mr. E. C. Millard, and includes a striking historical sketch and summary of mission work in South America by Miss Lucy E. Guinness. (1s. and 2s. 6d. E. Marlborough & Co.)

Many, possibly, regard the Conference Hall, Mildmay Park, mainly as the rallying-place of the great Midsummer Convention. It must, however, be borne in mind that while it is this, it is much more; being the centre of an important and valuable work, reaching into some of the darkest districts of London. Those who perused attentively Mr. Webb-Peploe's clear statement (given in our last issue, pp. 16 and 19) will understand—first, that the work is large and varied; and, second, that the present needs are great. The Hospitals, Convalescent Homes, Training Homes, and Deaconesses' House, as well as some twenty outlying Missions in the Metropolis; these, with the evangelistic and other operations in the Hall itself, and the support of various works abroad, require large funds indeed for their maintenance. At present, we are grieved to learn, there is a deficiency of £4444, which rests as an incubus on the whole institution, and threatens to cripple its usefulness. This fact must awaken wide concern. Surely its simple statement will suffice to call forth willing and liberal gifts in aid of this centre of united Christian effort, which God has greatly blessed. The claims of Mildmay on the loving helpfulness of the Lord's people are peculiarly strong and urgent.

In the forthcoming annual report of the Children's Special Service Mission, reference is made to some of the dangers which beset our young people. The committee say:—

It is with the deepest regret, therefore, that we have seen the publication, especially during the last year or two, of books issued by publishers of Christian works, and of articles inserted in periodicals circulating widely in Christian families, in which theories are promulgated which are entirely inconsistent with the full inspiration of God's Word, inasmuch as they throw doubt upon many of the most important facts, especially those recorded in the Old Testament. There never was a time, of course, when the Bible was not assailed by enemies of the faith. But the peculiar danger now is that many of the present attacks come from men whose high abilities and character have given them a prominent place in the Christian Church, and who write attractively, earnestly, and reverently of the moral teachings and doctrines of the Bible, while at the same time denying its accuracy in matters of fact, throwing discredit on a large number of the miraculous events recorded in it, and refusing to large portions of it the claim to be fully inspired by God.

It is very properly inferred that such teaching must have disastrous consequences:—

The periodicals which give currency and countenance to this teaching go into thousands of Christian homes all over our land, and numbers of our younger Sunday-school teachers, and others whom we ought to look forward to as Christian workers, cannot fail to be influenced. We fear that if faith is shaken in the truth of the well-known Bible narratives, there will be a greater difficulty in finding labourers for the Sunday-school or other Christian efforts amongst the young. And surely the cause of foreign missions must equally suffer if we can only offer to the heathen a Bible a large portion of which is declared to be untrustworthy.

The need of the time is to direct the young away from human influences to Christ, and to encourage the study of the Holy Scriptures rather than books that apologise for them and profess to explain them.

Whatever may be the legal points involved in the imprisonment of our friend Alfred S. Dyer and his fellow sufferers, we cannot doubt that the moral points are of infinitely more importance. To them we turn for satisfaction. The conscience of India, we believe, will see clearly and will be impressed by the fact, that four Christians, not of Indian race, but all of the conquering race, have risked this suffering and disgrace for the sake of India's salvation. It will be such an evidence of devotion to righteousness as nothing else could be; it will be a proof of love to Christ and to the people of India which will do more good than thousands of sermons; it will confirm every word of truth, and will give an illustration of fidelity on the part of preachers which will surely prepare their way before them from end to end of the country. The effect on the minds of converts who have to suffer affliction for the Gospel's sake must be strengthening and helpful, and timid believers will be made bold. The whole incident will, in due season, appear to have "fallen out rather to the furtherance of the Gospel."

A minister who lately preached on the Church as a peacemaker, was somewhat surprised to hear the nature of a conversation to which it gave rise. A group of working men who had heard him were of opinion that it would be a great disadvantage to the labour market if some millions of men were discharged from the armies of Europe, and sent away to earn their living. That such a change would produce some hardship may be taken for certain.

> Never on custom's oiled grooves
> The world to a higher level moves,
> But grates and grinds with friction hard
> On granite boulder and flinty shard.

But it would only be for awhile, the new conditions would gradually become harmonised, the men who had only been consumers would become producers also. Taxation would be eased, and a great stimulus given to all peaceful industries. The mere liberation of so many minds from military affairs would be the addition of a vast amount of mental force to the world. We should soon be gainers all round.

We hold it to be the duty of those who believe in a righteous God, who will reward men according to their works, to point out, from time to time, evident instances of the action of his just law. The American railway strike seems to us to be a case in point. For a long time we have heard of the nefarious "operations" in railway stocks of men who made themselves rich at the cost of others. The railway has become the means of the most stupendous gambling transactions. It is, however, said to be the "Achilles' heel" of the capitalist organisation; because if the unionists become sufficiently incensed, there are not enough troops in the United States to keep the trains going. The very extent of American railways, which has been a great element in their success, thus becomes an element of weakness. And where men have acted so often with a total disregard of righteousness, they will find their punishment. We shall be thankful if reason and conscience at once assume the guidance of men and masters, and if, for the future, "operators" learn that to make money by unjust means is to sow the seeds of trouble. These comments may easily be applied to things in England also.

Dr. L. B. Sperry, of Carleton College, Northfield, Minnesota, in his book "Confidential Talks with Young Men" (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier), pleads for a perfect manhood, a manly manliness, which can be gained only through purity of life. Some of his words may be quoted for others than youths and young men who are in danger from particular temptations. He is of opinion that—

> Every boy or man who drinks intoxicating liquors, or uses tobacco in any form, thereby helps to unman himself. Other things being equal, smokers and drinkers, whatever their age, are less vigorous and less efficient in the world's work than they would have been but for the debilitating effects of narcotics, not only on the brain and nerves, but through injury to the reproductive sphere.

He seems to us to be justified in calling upon his readers to ponder these facts :—

> The careful and trustworthy records of Amherst College relative to the class of 1891 show that during their college course those who did not smoke gained as follows : in weight twenty-four per cent. more than the smokers gained; in height, thirty-seven per cent. more; in chest-girth, forty-two per cent. more; and in lung capacity, 8.36 cubic inches more.

That is an important view; another is, that if the money consumed by professing Christians in drink and tobacco were given to Christian work, every society would have to enlarge its operations.

The report on dangerous trades contains some painful facts. The evils of overtime in milliners' and dressmakers' establishments call for prompt and decisive action. Captain Smith, R.N., expresses his wish to see all overtime abolished, except to preserve perishable goods.

> Young women and girls aged thirteen now work fourteen hours (less meal times) on forty-eight days in the year. Many of them do not even get wages. That their health suffers I have little doubt, and the only excuse is a coming fashionable assembly or a funeral; the latter excuse is perhaps worthy of consideration, but the answer is found when one points out that more hands could be employed, or the order subdivided so that it could be executed in legal hours. I secured a conviction a few days ago against a fashionable dressmaker who considered that a mourning order justified her in having kept two girls at work thirty-four consecutive hours, allowing them one and a-half hour only for rest.

It is pitiable to think of young persons tortured in this way in order that mourners may be dressed in black. Quakers do not go into mourning at all, and no better reason for following their excellent example could be given than the pain which is too often inflicted by getting large orders ready in a short time.

We feel compelled to give the following extract from Mr. Lakeman's words with regard to trade in the West-end :—

> When I look to West-end workshops and learn of the extent of non-compliance with the law as to sanitation and employment, I confess to utter astonishment at the "don't care" spirit some of the large establishments exhibit, It is not speaking the whole truth to say that the Workshop Act has abolished sweating in the West-end, or that its provisions have been respected as to meal hours, periods of employment, or by rendering obedience to the condition for overtime, after so many years. Terrible as have been the exactions upon the labour of females in the East-end sweating dens, those luxurious showrooms, and elegantly-appointed reception rooms, which administer to the wants of aristocratic customers, are in sad contrast with the overcrowded and badly-ventilated workrooms behind, where the hours are very excessive,and the meal times cribbed. Let us not be deceived, it is stitch, stitch from morning to night, labour and profit on one side, pale faces and wearied bodies on the other, liable to dismissal at any moment, and all for a few shillings per week as wages.

Customers have things very much in their own hands; they should neither do harm for want of thought nor in a spirit of harshness towards those who serve them.

Several temperance women have made an unsuccessful attempt to induce Mr. Frye, M.P., to withdraw his opposition to the bill for the Abolition of Grocers' Licences. Mr. Frye blocks the bill, because its passing into law would, in his opinion, be ruin to many traders. The women replied that the trade ruins the bodies and souls of numbers who buy drink from grocers. The women have the best of the argument every way. Trade would improve all round if the drink traffic were utterly ruined. The loss of a few would be the gain of the many. The loss of a few would also only be temporal, whereas the effect of their trade is destruction of every kind to its victims. But is there not enough sense of honour left among grocers to rise up against this trade, which turns grocers' shops into drink shops, and say they will no longer have it? Cannot those grocers who have never bowed their knees to Mammon nor soiled their hands with this unholy gain, form a league to save a respectable business from reproach? Salvation may come from within.

When the Licensing Law Amendment Bill was before the House of Lords last week, the Lord Chancellor attributed the prevalence of drunkenness to the facilities afforded for the satisfaction of the drink passion. He said:

> During his early years he was in constant attendance at criminal courts, listening to evidence, and sometimes taking part in the proceedings himself. In criminal cases it was often necessary to inquire of a witness as to his sobriety, particularly how he had spent the evening, and it invariably turned out that he had spent it going from one public-house to another drinking. After hearing so many of these cases he came to the conclusion that had there not been so many public-houses the man would probably have left the first public-house, and gone straight home in a sober state. He had a strong conviction that in many parts of the country the number of licensed houses was excessive, and that if they were fewer there would be less drinking.

The Home Secretary has been occupied with the same subject. Responding to representations from the Middlesex magistrates as to the increasing amount of drunkenness in the county, Mr. Asquith refers to the stringent orders given to the police and the exertions made to prevent the sale of drink to intoxicated persons, and mentions that the justices have abstained from using to the full the powers possessed by them for the punishment of offenders. We are glad to find that the practice of publicans offering inducements to children to fetch drink is to be dealt with severely. It is to be hoped that Sunday-school teachers and other workers for the young, on hearing of instances of this reprehensible practice, will report the same to the police.

The word "ought" is a great, a supreme word in Scripture. It rules in every command and supports every promise. It inheres in the original relations we sustain to God and to each other. Because God is our Creator, we "ought, we "owe" it to Him, to be reverent, obedient, holy. Because He has redeemed us it is our duty, it is due to Him, to trust and love Him. Obligation—something bound by a line—is fastened upon us at the very moment of our birth. Our safety and happiness require us to acknowledge it. We cannot talk of merit. When we have done everything we are unprofitable servants who have done that which was our duty. He in whose conscience the word ought is inscribed in large letters of light is one to be trusted in all circumstances. He feels a divine necessity laid upon him, as did his Master. "I must" has its force and motive in "I ought." "Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

THE LATE PRESIDENT CARNOT.

It seems that the lamented President of the French Republic was a warm friend of the venerable M. Paul Bouchard, mayor of Beaune, and widely known for his outspoken Protestantism. Just after being wounded, M. Carnot requested the presence of M. Bouchard, but this was for the moment impossible. It is stated that during one of the last conversations which M. Bouchard had with the President at the Elysée on the subject of religion, M. Carnot said: "In my heart I entirely agree with you, my old friend; and were I free, and placed in any other situation than the one imposed upon me, I should do as you have done."

This attitude explains why M. Carnot, sometimes so cold and distant towards the Romish bishops, received the Protestant pastors with so much affability. This he did even on the day of his death, when he received most kindly the President of the Consistory of Lyons. While he accepted the unrequested visit of the Cardinal-Archbishop, his dying request and ardent wish was to see his old Protestant friend, Paul Bouchard.

Visions of God.—I.

To Ezekiel, among the captives by the river of Chebar, the heavens were opened and he saw visions of God. The word of Jehovah did verily come unto him, and the constraining hand of Jehovah was there upon him, moving him independently of his own will. He was called to bear God's messages to a rebellious nation, to stiff-faced and hard-hearted children, and he must be prepared for his work by visions of God.

He was to pass through pains and tribulations of no common sort. His tongue was to cleave to the roof of his mouth; he was to lie upon his left side 390 days, and again upon his right side forty days, symbolically bearing the iniquity of Israel and Judah; he was to eat defiled bread and to drink water by measure; he was to lose the desire of his eyes at a stroke, and to make no mourning for his dead; and for all these heavy sorrows he was to be strengthened and prepared by visions of God.

He was to behold every form of creeping things and abominable beasts, and all the idols of Israel, pourtrayed on the wall, every man in the chambers of his imagery; he was to see the women of his people weeping for Tammuz, the Babylonian Adonis, with lascivious tears; he was to see the priests, the ministers of the Lord, whose lips should teach the people knowledge, the high priest at their head, with their backs toward the temple of Jehovah, worshipping the sun toward the east: and that his spirit might not fail nor be discouraged by these wicked abominations, his eyes were to be enlightened and his soul illuminated by visions of God.

And of what scenes did his visions consist? The earliest was of a whirlwind out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire catching itself—that is, spreading and kindling, "self-communicating from one part to another." It was a vision of the reality amid which he dwelt. The Chaldeans had come like a whirlwind out of the north, and would come again; a great cloud of judgment enveloped captive Israel; and the fire of tribulation went on kindling upon them.

But there was a brightness about the cloud, and out of the midst of the fire as the appearance of amber, or of burnished gold.* The judgment-cloud had a silver lining of loving kindness and tender mercy, which shed its brightness about its outer edge; and out of the midst came as the clearness and the brightness of gold and silver purified in the refiner's fire. And furthermore than this: out of the midst of the thick cloud and the purging fire came the likeness of four living creatures, whose appearance had the likeness of a man, even of the Man upon the throne—for the same appearance of amber, or of gold and silver purified by the fire, was seen by Ezekiel in Him who sat upon the sapphire throne above the firmament. And the same brightness that Ezekiel had seen round about the thunder-cloud he saw round about the appearance of the throne; "from his loins even upward, and from his loins even downward, I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about." And this brightness had the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain; that is, the rainbow of the covenant and of promise which John afterward saw all round the throne. And this rainbow-circled throne, with the Man upon it, was the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. "And we all, with open face, beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, as by the Spirit of the Lord" (Ezek. i. 26-28; Rev. iv. 2, 3; Heb. i. 3; 2 Cor. iii. 18).

Man, made perfect in paradise, had sinned and fallen, until God almost swept him from the earth by the flood, and by another judgment confounded the language of the repeopled world. He then chose Abram, and made him the head of an elect race, on whose cultivation He had done his utmost (Isa. v. 4); but they had sinned more deeply than Adam's seed at the flood, or Noah's descendants at Babel, and had consequently been carried away by the northern whirlwind, enveloped in the judgment-cloud, and the inexorable fire was to go on kindling upon them. But whirlwind, and cloud, and fire should do their appointed work, and bring forth a vessel sanctified and meet for the Master's use—the fourfold living creature—God's ideal Man.

The house of Israel, like the house of Adam and the house of Noah, had proved to be as a vessel made of clay, marred in the hands of the Potter, but the Creator would make it another vessel as seemed good to the Potter to make it (Jer. xviii. 1-10). And Ezekiel was fortified for a ministry which was to be exercised as among briers and thorns, and for a dwelling-place among scorpions, by the vision of humanity redeemed, purified, and Spirit-filled, and of the glorified God-Man upon the throne above the sapphire firmament.

In like manner Paul, in later days, was prepared for sorrows and tribulations, and sustained through conflicts and imprisonments, perils, and deaths, and, most burdensome of all his cares, the daily care of all the churches (2 Cor. xi. 23—28), by the revelation of Jesus of Nazareth as the Lord of glory, and of the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all—a building fitly framed together, growing up unto an holy temple in the Lord; a body coming, in the unity of the faith and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of the Christ (Acts ix.; Ephes. i. 19-23, iv. 13-16).

God never calls his servants to a useless and hopeless task; their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

So, also, Peter was enabled calmly to anticipate following his Master to the cross by the vision of the majesty of Jesus, by the voice from the excellent glory on the holy mount, and by the revelation to his mind of the living stones built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, upon the one alone Foundation, the Elect and Living Corner-stone (2 Pet. i. 16-21; 1 Pet. ii. 4-6).

So, likewise, the beloved John was fitted to endure his exile, and to encourage his brethren and companions in tribulation and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, by the apocalypse of the Lamb in the midst of the throne, and of the glorified Church made ready and prepared as a bride adorned for her husband (Rev. v., xix., xxi.).

"For I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord; thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you an expected end" (Jer. xxix. 11). The woman's immediate seed may be a Cain; the line may pass through Tamar and Rahab and Bathsheba; and the stem of Jesse may be cut down, overgrown, forgotten; but in the fulness of time the promise of Eden is fulfilled; the Judge of Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting, is made of a woman (made under the law to redeem them that were under the law), that we might receive the adoption of sons. With his bruised heel He bruises the serpent's head, and through death destroys him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and delivers them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

Ezekiel should not beat the air nor run uncertainly. He was in due time to call Israel to measure the pattern, and to show them the form of the house (xliii.); but first of all he was to see the pattern of humanity according to the eternal purpose and will of Him who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working; and he should not merely learn in suffering what he must teach in song, but his prophesying to a rebellious race should help to convert the rebels dead in trespasses and sins, into living creatures, worshipping and working according to the will of God. M.

* "The word rendered amber is translated by the LXX. and the Vulgate by electrum—a substance composed of a mixture of silver and gold. . . . It is not the colour but the brightness which is compared. . . . The brightness is that of a shining metal, not of a transparent gum. . . . Out of the midst thereof, like burning gold out of the midst of the fire.'"—Speaker's Commentary. Compare Mal. iii. 3—"And He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver; and He shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness."

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

In the July issue of the "Quarterly Record" of the McAll Mission in France, Pastor S. H. Anderson gives some interesting notes from his diary of work in Paris. He says: "At the beginning of this winter a gentlemanly man attended the meetings at the Rue Royale, and used to ask prayer for more entire consecration to God. In conversing with him I found that he had been a monk, but was now in business in Paris. He came very regularly, and soon began to pray aloud with us. One night another well-dressed man having requested our prayers, the former prayed for him. At the close, the one who had been prayed for, told me he had been a Jesuit seminarist. I then introduced him to my friend the converted monk, and it was interesting to hear them exchanging remarks and asking each other questions concerning various monasteries and priests. The monk was soon after received as a member of a church here, and testified that it was at the Rue Royale that he had first had his heart touched. He is now helping in the Lord's work. The ex-Jesuit was earning his daily bread as a 'garçon de café,' but was very poor. He still desires to continue his studies, and we hope soon to find that he is truly on the Lord's side.

"Not long since, also at the Rue Royale, a poor woman came forward to greet me, saying, 'It is thanks to you that I am converted.' It appears that years ago I gave her a tract on the Boulevard Sébastopol, and invited her to the meetings there. She, too, is now member of a church. Yet another instance of the Lord's goodness in blessing our work in the Rue Royale. A lady who in her youth had been a devout Catholic afterwards lost all faith in the superstitions of her Church. Not knowing anything of the Bible she lost all religion. One evening, as she strolled past the door of the hall, she accepted the invitation to enter, thinking it was a scientific lecture. She was surprised to find that it was a religious meeting, but greater still was her astonishment when, at the close, she discovered that she had been enjoying a 'McAll meeting,' at which she had often laughed, not really knowing what it was. She felt she must return, and she was spoken to by one of the speakers. Gradually faith revived in her heart, and she accepted Christ as revealed in the Word of God. She speedily left behind all else, and after more than ten years of indifference and scepticism she is now a member of an Evangelical church."

THE CHRISTIAN LIFEBOAT CREW mustered last Tuesday at the Welcome Home, Ratcliff Highway. Miss Child gave the text for the month, "Rejoice, for He cometh," after which reference was made to the encouraging accounts of the past month's work in connection with the Home. An item of special interest was a letter received that day from one of the ailing sailors now in the country home lately opened, telling what a blessing that home is, and how it had been the means of restoration of health. Amongst those who addressed the gathering were Mrs. Peck, from New Zealand; Mr. Walter Douglas, from Australia; Mr. Sharpless, from the Spitalfields Mission; Mr. Banks, an inspector of police, and several seafaring members.

A Missionary Appeal.

About a fortnight ago I read the following words, written by a fellow-missionary in India:—"Nearly everywhere the audiences were good, and the people thoroughly interested. Some asked for a teacher. Alas! that ever-recurring demand! It almost makes a missionary shudder."

Last Sunday, when conducting a public service, I read to the congregation these words, spoken by the Lord Jesus: "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few. Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."

Yesterday morning I read a telegram which ran thus: "All offers postponed for present." This telegram gave the decision of the directors of the London Missionary Society at their meeting held last Tuesday, and was received by one who has said:

> Take my life, and let it be

and who, with singular qualifications for work in the foreign field, had offered to go out in connection with the London Missionary Society.

Fathers and brethren in the ministry at home, and fellow-Christians living in this highly-favoured land, shall we allow this condition of things to remain? If we do, are we not verily guilty before God, and may we not expect that in our experience there will be a fulfilment of the words, ". . . Behold, ye have sinned against the Lord, and be sure your sin will find you out"?

From all the lands where dwell the eight hundred millions of our fellow-creatures who do not know Christ, there comes to-day the cry: "Come over and help us." On many foreign mission fields the harvest is ripe. In some places the fruit is even perishing for want of labourers to gather it in. God is verily answering our Christ-taught prayer for "labourers." Shall our selfishness, or our love of luxury, or our delight in holiday-taking, or shall anything keep back those of us who profess to know and love Jesus Christ from doing all we can to send out those who are willing to go? Do not the present condition of the funds of missionary societies, and the present grand opportunities for carrying forward Christ's work among the heathen, warrant us in taking some hitherto unventured bold step, so that the directors may not long have need to adhere to a resolution which nothing but a most painful necessity would, I am sure, have led them to pass?

Oh, fellow Christians! what is the meaning of those words in our New Testament: ". . . He laid down his life for us, and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren"? Surely some great act of true self-denial is implied in them—an act which the Master expects his servants to perform, and for the performance of which (for it is not easy) He will cause all who are faithful to realise what it is to have "all grace" made to abound to them, so that they, "having always all sufficiency in everything, may abound unto every good work."

J. Pearse,
Hull. Missionary L.M.S.

[Most heartily we endorse this appeal, but it will produce only a spasm of liberal contribution unless there is method in the response. "A penny a week and a shilling a quarter" from every member, was John Wesley's heaven-taught method. A similar simple and universal plan, with a mighty twofold working power, that of daily prayer and daily giving, has been devised and adopted in at least one church, with the significant and (as things go) magnificent result, that that church of moderate numbers, moderate means, and an immoderate debt, has in two years found itself able to sustain its own foreign missionary.

But prayer and giving must have something to feed upon, and while the society locates and superintends the missionary, he must be in touch with those by whom he is sustained. This is effected by his periodical letter being sent to the church as well as to the society.

A missionary interest may be created in any body of real Christians where there is one person, pastor or member, man, woman, or child, intent upon obedience to the Lord's command to preach the Gospel to every creature.

Only by the whole Church of Christ being aroused to her pre-eminent duty can such an appeal as the above be adequately answered. This can be done, and can only be done, by acting upon each church, and on each individual in it. Since the Pentecostal power was promised by Christ to his witnesses, can it be expected or enjoyed except by such? We believe a revival of enthusiastic interest in missions to be indispensable to the Pentecost for which we are all looking.—Ed.]

RABBI LICHTENSTEIN.

The first annual statement of the Rabbi Lichtenstein Council gives extracts from some deeply interesting letters received from the aged Rabbi since he took up his residence at Budapest. He writes:—

"Shortly after my arrival here, a number of people gathered about me, curious to hear me, among them many also who thirsted for the Word of God. By request, I gave addresses in a Branch Synagogue, and had great encouragement. Scholars from the Rabbinate College streamed in in great numbers, students thronged round me and listened to my discourse. But soon all was changed. To my inexpressible grief, the President of the Synagogue was strictly forbidden to offer me again the use of his pulpit; and the scholars supported by the institution were threatened with dismissal should they, however indirectly, continue to hold communication with me. The fathers, also, of the students were warned, both by word and letter, that I poisoned the minds of youth by teaching error. It was impressed on the students who visited me, that no certificate for religious knowledge would be given them, without which their college certificate would be useless, and that every one who came to see me was marked.

"To this end a young man from Grosswardein is employed, who has hired a dwelling immediately opposite my own. My bigoted old landlord also watches my guests with jealous eyes. But, as a stream, stemmed in its course, forces for itself new channels to flow in, so am I interviewed at every road and crossing, and obliged to proclaim the Gospel in its unsurpassable sublimity. 'Wisdom cries without, and causes her voice to be heard in the streets.' I have intimate intercourse with doctors, professors, and officials, as also among educated ladies, where the words springing from my heart find ready response. Many families of position also visit us, who condemn the harsh conduct of the Rabbinate here, in relation to me; many foreigners also visit me. I have often very grave important discussions with Talmudists and Rabbis from a distance, who wish to bring me to compromise, and it is worthy of note that many who formerly had no knowledge of the New Testament, and stared blankly and incredulously at me when I quoted its sublime doctrines, have afterwards begged to possess one.

"In the great Jewish community here there is at last a certain stir—I might almost say revival of Judaism—taking place. Religious instruction, which was formerly lifeless, is now imparted with earnestness and diligence. On every Sabbath there is preaching (it was formerly every fourth week), and truly in harmony with the prophets and with the New Testament; but there lacks the melting influence, the quickening Sun, the proclamation of the glorious name of Christ, whose trumpet-call alone can awake the dry bones of Israel to new life, but—I shall see it, though not now; I shall behold it, and nigh at hand. The thunder of opposition to Christ sounds now more like the grumble of a retreating storm, as the herald of a brilliant rainbow, sign of the everlasting covenant."

The freewill offerings acknowledged in the statement, in support of the aged Rabbi and his work, have come from all parts of the world. Rev. David Baron (23, Grove-road, Highgate-road, N.W.), the hon. sec. of the Council, will be glad to send copies of the statement to interested friends.

CHRISTIANS ON HOLIDAY.

Many wearied toilers are needing rest, and the question is, "Where shall we find it?" Some friends have gone abroad, visiting Switzerland and other countries, and, after spending weeks and months admiring scenery, etc., they have returned more weary; they have found no one like-minded, and the foreign countries have been like desert places to them, yielding no refreshment. Hotel-life does not yield refreshment, nor does even most luxurious mountain air, unless they are combined with healthful intercourse with children of God and with active testimony for the Lord.

Now, it is quite possible to combine a visit on the Continent of Europe with happy helpful service and real refreshment and rest; the intercourse with Christians of other lands might be of great and lasting mutual benefit. If Christian travellers would inquire for countries and towns where they would meet with other servants of God, they might be the means of blessing to them, and they might find rest in a change of scenery and of work, whereas a life of inactivity both for mind and body is a burden too heavy to bear for one whose life is laid out and spent in the service of the Lord. Many solitary labourers in Germany, Austria, and Switzerland would warmly welcome an occasional visit from fellow-labourers from Great Britain, and the Oneness of the Body of Christ might be practically manifested by members having fellowship in service.

There are also great opportunities for tract distribution on the way and in hotels, and I would especially recommend to English Christian travellers the hotel servants, many of whom have been in England and have come in touch with English aggressive Christianity. A kind interest in their welfare is, in most cases, gratefully received; a little love with them goes a long way. A holiday spent in Prague, Budapest, Vienna, Gratz, Breslau, Berlin, Hamburg, might be productive of blessing and refreshment for body and soul, and might cheer and encourage fellow-labourers. The same might be said of many places in South Germany and Switzerland. Travellers should, before leaving England, secure introductions to some active Christians, and then arrange their plans accordingly.

Blankenburg, in Thüringia, is one of the health resorts in Germany which would offer opportunities for happy and useful work. F. W. Baedeker.

REV. D. BARON'S TOUR.

Writing on his recent continental tour, Rev. David Baron says:—"I thank God I am safe home again, but feeling very weary. From Budapest I went, accompanied by Rabbi Lichtenstein, by Danube steamer, all the way to Orsova. The five days on board, going and returning, was one of the most interesting mission experiences in my life. A large proportion of the passengers on board (sometimes the majority) were Jews, and we stopped at forty-two stations in Hungary and Servia, at every one of which Jews came and went. We spoke and reasoned with different groups from morning to night, and after lying down in our berths we would hear them discussing among themselves what we had been saying about Christ. Again and again everybody in the large saloon, Jews and Gentiles of all classes, were around us for hours, eagerly listening or discussing with us the claims of our Saviour Jesus Christ.

"We took with us a supply of New Testaments in Hebrew, German, and Hungarian, but our stock in the last two languages was exhausted long before we returned to Budapest, and I have since sent copies by post from Vienna to those who gave me their addresses begging to have them. I have confidence in the Lord that the seed thus sown broadcast is not all in vain, but that some at any rate will spring up and bear fruit to the glory of our ever blessed Lord Jesus Christ.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

THE DROUGHT.

(Jer. xiv., xv.)

"If, in the paths of the world
Stones might have wounded thy feet,
Toil or dejection have tried
Thy spirit—of that we saw
Nothing; to us thou wast still Cheerful, and helpful, and firm;
Therefore to thee it was given
Many to save with thyself;
And at the end of thy day,
O faithful shepherd! to come,
Bringing thy sheep in thy hand."

Arnold.

The reign of Jehoiakim was still young. Necho was back in Egypt; Nineveh was tottering to her fall; Babylon was slowly growing upon the horizon as the rival of each great empire, and as the future desolator of Judah. Meanwhile, the chosen people like a tree whose heart is eaten away with insects, was corrupted by innumerable evils. As a premonition of coming destruction, and as though the Almighty would make one last effort to arouse them to the awfulness and imminence of their peril, a terrible drought cast its sere mantle over the land. It had often been predicted amongst the other results of disobedience, but probably never before had it fallen with such desolating effect (Lev. xxvi. 20; Deut. xi. 17; xxviii. 23).

The whole land was filled with mourning. In the places of public concourse, where the people gathered in the burning sunshine, they sat in black garments upon the hard ground. Accustomed to rely upon the natural resources of the country, nourished by the rivers and streams that gushed from valley and hill, the people were reduced to the dire extremities of famine. The vines on the terraced hills were withered, the cornfields were covered with stubble, and the pasture on the wolds was yellow and scorched. The very dew seemed to have forsaken the land; where the river had poured its full tide, there were only a few trickling drops; the beds of the watercourses were filled with stones. And so the bitter cry of Jerusalem ascended, made up of the mingled anguish of men, and women, and children, whose parched lips might not be moistened.

The description given by the prophet is very striking. Want is felt in the great houses of the nobles, who send their servants for water without avail. The ploughmen sit in their barns with covered heads; it is useless to think of driving their ploughs through the chapped soil. The hind, whose maternal love has passed into a proverb, is represented as forsaking her young, that she may seek for grass. The wild asses stand on the bare heights and eagerly snuff up what breeze may pass over the land in the evening, to relieve the agony of the fever of their thirst. All the land bakes like an oven; and the sun, as he passes daily through a leaden sky, looks down on scenes of unutterable horror.

What a picture is this of the desolation that sometimes overtakes a Christian community! Every faithful worker could tell of periods when it has seemed as though the cloud and dew of Divine blessing had forsaken the plot on which he was engaged. There are no tears of penitence, no sighs of contrition, no blessed visitations of the dew of the Holy Ghost, no fresh young shoots of piety, no joy in the Lord, no fruits of the Spirit. Ah! then work is hard and difficult; and the soul of the worker faints and is discouraged. Blessed is that church which has not known this time of drought, and which has not experienced the counterpart in the spiritual sphere of the utter failure of moisture in the natural.

It is at such times that the lover of his fellows gathers himself together to deal with the Almighty. You can see him entering the secret place of the Most High, prepared to speak with God, and, if possible, secure a mitigation of the reign of the brazen sky and a return of those times of blessing that can only come from the presence of the Lord. His face is set with a resolute purpose. Through the weary eyes the fire of a mighty resolution is burning. With his two hands he is prepared to come to close dealings with God, as Jacob when he made supplication with the angel. Let us draw near, and overhear the colloquy between Jeremiah and the Almighty. It may be that we shall discover arguments that we may take upon our own lips when days of drought are visiting the Church at large, or that sphere of work in which we are called specially to labour. It is thus that the soul discourses with God.

I.—THE PLEADINGS OF THE INTERCEDING SOUL.

"My God, I come into thy presence to acknowledge my own sin, and especially the sins of my people. I stand before Thee as their priest to confess the sins which have separated between Thee and them, incurring thy Divine displeasure, and closing the avenues of communion between Thee and them. Our iniquities testify against us, and our backslidings are many. Once Thou seemedst to abide in our midst. Thy smile a perpetual summer; thy presence one long stream of benediction; thy grace like a river making glad thy city. But of late thy visits have been few and far between. Thou hast tarried for a night, and been away again at dawn, and we sorely miss Thee. Once Thou wert as a mighty man, our Samson, whose arm sufficed to keep our enemies at bay; but for long Thou hast seemed overcome by an unnatural stupor, by a paralysis that holds Thee like a vice. And yet Thou hast not really changed; Thou art our Saviour; Thou art in the midst of us. We bear thy name. Thine honour is implicated in our lot. What Thou couldst not do for any merit of ours, do for the credit of thy name; do for the sake of thy Son; do for the maintenance of thy cause upon earth. Leave us not, nor let that foreboding prediction of Ezekiel be realised, when he saw the glory of the Lord recede by stages from the Holy Place, until it stood outside the city walls" (Jer. xiv. 7-9).

The Answer of the Divine Spirit.—There are times when God seems to speak thus to the soul—if we may dare put our impression of his words in our own phrase: "It is useless, my servant, to pray. My grace is infinite; my mercy endureth for ever; my fulness waits to pour forth its tides, to make the wilderness rejoice and blossom as the rose. I have no pleasure in the parched wilderness; I would that it were springs of water. I have no liking for the glowing sand; I would that it might become a pool. But so long as men cling to their sins, so long as they perpetrate abominations like those which Ezekiel saw when in the chambers of imagery he beheld the elders of Israel offering incense to creeping things and abominable beasts, it is impossible for Me to cause rain or give showers. Beneath the appearance of religious worship and decorum, evils are breeding that separate between my people and Myself, and hide my face from them. These must be dealt with. You must begin to search the chambers of their hearts with candles; to show my people their transgressions, and the house of Israel their sins. Your work just now is not that of the intercessor, but of the reformer; not yet to plead with Elijah upon the brow of Carmel, but, like Elijah, to extirpate the lurking evil of the people, as when he dyed the waters of Kishon with the blood of Ahab's priests" (xiv. 10-12).

II.—THE LAMENT OF THE TRUE SHEPHERD.

"Ah, Lord God! True, too true, sadly too true, are thy words. Thy people deserve all that Thou hast said. Their iniquities are alone accountable for their sorrows. But remember how falsely they have been taught. The land is full of those who hide thy truth under a cloud of words. They say that the outward ritual sufficeth, howsoever far the heart is from Thee. There is grievous fault; but surely it lieth at the door of those who mislead the fickle, changeful crowd. Their mouths are lined with wool; they cry Peace! peace! when there is none. The very remonstrances of conscience are drowned by their delusive assurances. Spare thy people! they are scattered because the shepherds have failed in their high commission" (xiv. 13).

The Answer of the Divine Spirit.—There are days in the history of the Christian when he is called to walk upon the mountains of vision, and overhears the attendant shepherds, of whom Bunyan speaks, talking to each other and saying, "Shall we show these pilgrims some wonders?" Beneath their guidance they climb to the top of the hill called Error, which is very steep on the further side. At the bottom lie several men all dashed to pieces by a fall from the top. "What meaneth this?" is the obvious inquiry. "Have you not heard of Hymenæus and Philetus," is the reply, "who erred concerning the faith of the resurrection of the body? These are they." So in our pleadings for men, we sometimes obtain a glimpse of the inevitableness of the Divine judgments and the irreparableness of the injury that false teachers may do to their fellows. There is no fate so terrible as of those who have not only erred themselves, but have caused men to err; who have been a stumbling-block in the way of one of God's little ones. Better be dumb and not able to speak, than say words that may destroy the faith of childhood, or start questionings that may shatter by one fell blow the construction of years. It was in this strain that God replied to the prophet.

"The doom of the false prophets will be terrible. Their fate will be the more awful, because they have run without being sent; and prophesied without having seen a vision. There has been no Divine impulse energising their words. Position, bread, power, have been the incentives of their office; but the people have loved to have it so. Their corrupt morals have produced a corrupt priesthood, and a crop of false prophets. The men of whom you complain are the product of their times. My people, enervated with sloth, luxury, and conceit, would not endure the simple truth of the Divine word; and this evil band have been bred and nurtured in the stifling corruption of the age. Until, therefore, the people themselves have put away their sin, and returned to Me in penitence and consecration, they must be held guilty before my sight, and suffer the outworking of their sin. 'I will pour their wickedness upon them.'" (xiv. 14-16).

III.—THE INTERCEDING SOUL.

"Granted, Great God, that Thou art just, and right: yet Thou canst not utterly reject. Thy smiting cannot be unto death. Thou must heal. Thou mayest cast away those with whom Thou hast not entered into covenant relationship, or on whom thy name has not been named, or amongst whom the throne of thy glory has not been set up, but Thou canst not deal with us as with them. There is a tie between thee and us which our sin cannot break. There are claims which we have on Thee as our Father, which the far-country wanderings of the prodigal cannot annul. There are interweavings of thy character and prestige with our history which no stroke of thy pen can dissolve. Remember the covenant; remember thy promise to thy Son: remember thy Bride, whom Thou canst not put away; remember that we have no help but in Thee; remember the word on which Thou hast caused us to hope—therefore we will still wait upon Thee. We are not worthy to be called thine; but we claim the kiss, the robe, the fatted calf" (xiv. 17-22).

The Answer of the Divine Spirit.—It is as though the Lord said, "I am wearied with repenting. I have tried every means of restraining them, and turning them to better things. Now, by winnowing out the chaff, and again by bereavement and sorrow, and again by the swift destruction of the sword. They have appeared to amend, but the improvement has been only superficial; but now my mind is thoroughly made up. My methods must be more drastic, my discipline more searching and thorough. I will turn my hand upon my people, and thoroughly purge away their dross, and take away all their ties; and I will restore their judges as at the first, and their counsellors as at the beginning. Thus I will answer thy pleadings on their behalf. The destruction of the city, the decimation of the people by sword and famine, the awful sorrows of captivity shall act as purging fires, through which they shall pass to a new and blessed life. Nothing else can now avail. For my love of them I cannot spare them. The prayers of my holiest cannot alter my determination, since only thus can my eternal purpose of redemption be realised" (xv. 1-9).

IV.—THE CRY OF THE INTERCESSOR.

Here the prophet falls into a muse, and as he foresees, the misrepresentation of his motives, and the certain hate which his unfaltering prediction of coming doom must excite, he wishes that he had never been born. So does the heart of the man of God fail, and if, like Jeremiah's, it is highly strung and keenly sensitive, it becomes the cause of the deepest anguish: "Why, O God, didst Thou make me so gentle and sympathetic; so naturally weak and yielding; so incapable of looking calmly on pain? Would not some stronger, rougher nature have done thy bidding better? Even now, hast Thou not some man of ruder make to whom Thou canst entrust this mission? There are skins more impervious to the scorching heat than mine; may they not go into these flames? Why this stammering lip, this faltering heart, this thorn in my flesh?" (xv. 10).

The Answer of the Divine Spirit.—"I will strengthen thee for good." It is as if God said, "My grace is sufficient for thee. I have summoned thee, with all thy weaknesses, to perform my will, because my strength is only perfected thus. I need a low platform for the exhibition of my great might. To those that have no might I impart strength; in those that have no wisdom I unfold my deepest thoughts. The broken reed furnishes the pillar of my Temple; smoking flax gives light to my beacon fires. Be content to be a threshold, over which the river passes; be satisfied to be a rod in my hand which shall achieve the deliverance of my people. O frail, weak soul, thou art likeliest to be the channel and organ for the forthputting of my energy. Only yield thyself to Me, and let Me have my way, through thee, with thee, in thee; then thou shalt be as the northern iron and brass which man cannot break" (xv. 11-14).

v.—THE RESPONSE OF THE SOUL.

"O Lord, Thou knowest." "Things that my dearest cannot guess, which I cannot utter, which I am slow to admit even to myself; the hope that trembles like the first flush of dawn, and the fear that paralyses; the conflict; the broken ideals; the unfinished sentences; the songs without words. Thou knowest. Thou art my all. Thy smile strengthens me against reproach. Thy words bring rifts of joy and rejoicing in my saddest hours. Thy presence banishes loneliness when I sit alone. And yet sometimes a dark foreboding comes that Thou wilt be to me as a deceitful brook, whose intermittent waters fail, which is dry when most its flow is needed. I know it cannot be, since Thou art faithful; and yet what could I do if, after having made me what I am, Thou shouldest leave me to myself?" (xv. 15-18).

The Answer of the Divine Spirit.—"Leave thy forebodings," God seems to say. "Come back from the far country with thy despondency. I would have thee stand face to face with Me without a shadow of a cloud. Wait before Me. Consider not thy frailty, but my might; not thy foes, but my deliverances. Put from thee that which is vile, expose thyself to my refining fires, that all thy dross may be expurgated. Divest thyself of all that is inconsistent with thy high calling. Then thou shalt be as my mouth; thou shalt stand amidst the surging crowd as a fenced brazen wall; thou shalt be impregnable against the assault of fear; in the darkest hours, when floods of ungodliness might make thee afraid, and the fury of hell is hurled against thee, I will be ever with thee to save and deliver. Thou mayest have neither wife nor child; but I will be to thee more than they. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible." "This is the heritage of the servants of the Lord, and their righteousness is of Me, saith the Lord." (xv. 19-21.)

HOMES FOR WORKING BOYS.

An influential meeting on behalf of these Homes was held on Thursday afternoon at the Mansion House.

The Duke of Fife, who presided, said that the work done during the past twenty-three years by the Homes was most important, because it had been the means of saving many struggling lads from the dangers and temptations that surround them in great cities. The youth of all classes were impressionable, easily led and open to good or bad influences; and recent biographies had shown how greatly some of our most eminent men had been influenced by the conditions and surroundings of their early days. In the Homes the boys found Christian influence and wise and kindly guidance, and a notable feature of the work was the success that had attended the efforts of the superintendents to find situations for inmates who were out of employment. There were eight Homes, accommodating 340 boys, of whom about 150 are employed in the City of London. The Home situated at Spital-square had been rebuilt at a cost of £6000, of which £1300 had still to be received, and it was mainly to raise that sum that the meeting had been called.

Archdeacon Farrar bore testimony to the value of these Homes for working boys, and said they saved many from temptation and crime. He took very deep interest in the institution, and believed it worthy of warm support. The signs of the times were somewhat ominous, the horizon of the distant future was dark and lowering, and new ideas made them feel uneasy about the social condition of English life of the present day. Retribution for past neglect might at any time overtake them. Great cities were the grave of physique and of morality, and it behoved them to do their utmost for future generations. The enormous growth of the population was also another difficulty with which they had to contend, and they must endeavour in every direction to improve the condition of society. Prevention was better than cure, and he believed that colossal sums had been spent in this country in coping with evils instead of preventing them in the first instance. In supporting institutions of this sort they were rendering the highest possible benefit to posterity.

Mr. A. J. Balfour, M.P., said that there were two propositions he would endeavour to recommend to the notice of the meeting. The first was that the undertaking was in itself a good one, and the second was that it was especially incumbent upon the City of London to see that the undertaking was carried out successfully, and did not fail for want of the necessary pecuniary support. The task was a necessary consequence of our new, and in some respects advanced, social conditions. The provision of homes for youths setting about to learn their business was no new problem, but we had to meet it in a new way. In former times, the necessity was met by the system of apprenticeship; and how was it to be met now? He did not think it was practicable for the community in its collective form to carry out the work. He did not believe that either the State, as the State, or the municipality, as the municipality, could be expected to supply, out of public funds, the necessary means. The only third alternative was that the charitable public should set their hands to the task. There might be stern critics who thought that an undertaking of that kind might have, as one of its collateral consequences, the encouragement of some form of pauperism. He did not agree with that view. On the contrary he held, with almost all the practical authorities upon our Poor Law system, that such work was not only not pauperising in its results, but that it had consequences of a directly opposite kind. Let them conceive the position of one of those boys without a home, or friends, or introductions in London. Unless a helping hand were extended to him, was it not too likely that he would be handed over to the difficulties, temptations, and hardships necessarily incident to a friendless boy in his position. Having probably to sleep in a common lodging-house, he would be thrown into the society of broken men, and he would be subject to all the temptations inseparable from the life of a great urban community. They were asked to provide such youths with the nearest approach to a home that public organisation could produce.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost maintained that childhood and youth represented the true point of attack for the solving of the great social problems that were now pressing upon us. Mr. Quintin Hogg, speaking of the good results that had already attended efforts for safeguarding children, expressed the opinion that there was not one destitute lad in the streets of London to-day for every ten a decade or two ago. The Hon. T. H. W. Pelham as treasurer stated that £2600 was required to pay off the building debt, and to carry on the cost of the eight Homes, towards which amount £1450 had been received or promised. His address is 50, Palace-chambers, Westminster, S.W.

MADRAS TAMIL MISSION.

The tenth annual report of the Madras Tamil Mission, directed by Mr. Gnanamutthu Joseph Israel, records cheering progress.

There are fifteen schools, with 876 Pariah children under forty-eight workers, against one school and seventy pupils in 1884. The various branches of the work are evangelisation work among slum women, mothers' meetings, distribution of clothing, social work among lepers, and other Christian poor. The thirty children who are at present at the Orphan Home are supported by contributions from friends in Great Britain.

The Mission has not neglected industrial education, which is essential for the material progress of India at large and the Pariah community in particular. The Madras art embroidery is taught at the Orphan Home, as well as at two of the chief day schools. An important feature is the work among the hitherto neglected Pariah women. Through lack of funds the Mission has had to discontinue the free dinners to hungry children. Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Mr. James Carter, Eldon House, St. Annes-on-the-Sea, Lancashire.

PRINCESS MARY VILLAGE.

In some past years heavy rain has interfered seriously with the pleasure of Commemoration Day at Addlestone; but last Thursday's experiences amply atoned for former failures. In the brilliant sunshine everything was at its best; and often as we have visited the Princess Mary Village Homes we never saw it look better or brighter. The eighteen cottages around the open quadrangle, with the little church at the one end and the school and hall at the other, all glowing in a charming setting of flowers, formed a pretty picture. As usual, the different cottages were open to inspection, and in each, girls not actively engaged in the proceedings at the village hall were ready to welcome visitors and call "mother" to show them round the interior, with its cool clean bedrooms, sitting, and play-room and kitchen. At present about 200 little girls, chiefly the children of criminal or depraved parents, are resident in the village.

It may be interesting to recall that the institution was founded by Mrs. Meredith twenty-three years ago, under the patronage of the Duchess of Teck, who ever since has taken the liveliest interest in its welfare, and her daughter, the Duchess of York, has been from her fifth year a frequent visitor and a sincere friend to the Homes. The children cared for are not of the ordinary type to be found in such institutions. They are drawn from sources which peculiarly appeal to public sympathy. They are not orphans, but their natural parents have forfeited their parental rights to bring them up, and every child has been rescued from more or less dangerous surroundings, or from those who have cruelly ill-treated them. Many of the children are committed to the institution by magistrates' orders. Instead of being lodged as in a big boarding or workhouse school, they are divided into groups of ten, and each group resides in a cottage by itself under the care of a "mother" or matron, who in each case is a widow who has had children of her own. So the little ones grow up with the comfort and advantage of home life. They are thoroughly trained for domestic duties, acquiring in the training-house the knowledge of the special things in which domestic service consists, and in the Ladies' house they learn finally to practise the knowledge previously imparted to them in various ways.

The visitors appeared genuinely interested in the cottages and their inmates—not least in the quiet little infirmary cottage in a far corner of the green, at present happily tenantless. The laundry arrangements were also examined carefully by many of the ladies, many of whom commented appreciatively on the good order, cleanliness, and general brightness of the whole place; as well as on the healthy and happy looks of the girls, whose appearance certainly testified to the care and attention they receive.

The meeting of the day was, however, that held in the Shaftesbury House, where the friends by-and-by assembled, and a number of well-trained little ones went through a variety of musical exercises, and sang various pieces. The chair was taken by Lord Brassey, who said that the girls were often taken very early, and kept till they were fifteen or sixteen. They were trained in domestic service, laundry work, and generally enabled to earn their own living. Failures among the girls in after life were very rare, and many instances of unlooked-for success had occurred. The circumstances of the children before coming to the Homes were most unfortunate. So well were they trained in the institution, and so good was the influence brought to bear, that nearly every child who passed through the Homes turned out thoroughly well in after life, reflecting credit upon all who were responsible for the bringing up of the children there.

Rev. J. E. Campbell Colquhoun, one of the trustees, read a report of the work done in the Homes, which was of a very satisfactory character; and Rev. T. H. Sparshott, chaplain to the Homes, gave some further information. Lord Radstock then spoke on the value of such work, as shown by its results in new and useful lives. Lord Rookwood, the treasurer of the Homes, emphasised briefly but pointedly the peculiar necessity for such places of refuge.

Lady Brassey then distributed the prizes to the children, speaking in a kind and genial way to each child. Lady Elizabeth Biddulph received purses on behalf of the Princess Mary Village Homes, and the proceedings came to a close as the visitors hurried off to catch their homeward train.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

BIBLE READING AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

It seems impossible—at least, I hope it may seem quite right to those who are before me here—that one should do anything else than turn just now to words in which our attention has already been enlisted. At the risk of wearying some of you who may be now hearing the same truths as you have listened to before, I would ask you to turn with me to Eph. iii. 16, 17. There we are taking up a special branch of the subject given for our consideration to-day. We read " . . that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height, and to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge."

The general subject entrusted to us at this Conference is the endowment of the family of God, according to the riches of his glory. We sought—those who were present yesterday—to understand something of the origin of the family, the way in which God created the family in Christ Jesus, through the cross, by the resurrection, onwards in the ascension, until He takes us up to the very throne of God, and makes us partakers of the Divine nature. We then saw that by virtue of that nature with which we are endowed, and as children are given the inheritance of their father, so we are endowed according to the riches of his glory; that whatsoever God possesses as God is at the command of his children if able to partake of it; and that there is actually no limit whatsoever to the rich treasures which men may enjoy, except the limit of receptivity. Just as that which was outpoured at Pentecost was, we believe, the fulness of the Spirit, so, as one of the greatest writers has said, there is no limit whatever to the outpouring: there is a limit only to the receptivity of man.

God has also manifested marvellous love in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. We heard much of that this morning, and we must, of necessity, detain your thoughts upon it again this afternoon. I think that the manifestation of the love of God in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord is the highest testimony to the riches of his glory. He was pleased to up to the extent that man yields himself to God the Holy Ghost; and, working from the spirit of our being outwards, the Holy Ghost claims, first, the heart or affections; then, the mind or reasoning faculties and powers of the man; then the will, so that the personality of man's will is yielded more and more to the direction of the Holy Ghost; and then the strength, so that all his powers are yielded up to the service of God according to the dictation of God the Holy Ghost.

Out of that there comes the obedience of the body, which always is a slave to the will, mind, and personality of the man. To this extent we have realised, I hope, how richly God has endowed us. In giving us the Holy Ghost He gives us not only a Comforter, but a Director, and that an absolute Director. He must be an interpolator, that is his proper place in man; but when He is an interpolator, He is so for a special purpose—that He may reveal to us what could not otherwise be known, namely, the personality of the Christ. We see that we are to rise to know the personality of God; so that, as St. Peter says, in a passage which is too little remembered, "Christ Jesus died, the just for the unjust, to bring us to God."

We stand to-day in the intermediary space, as it were, of contemplation, between the operations of God the Holy Ghost when He comes to strengthen us with might in the inner man, according to the measure in which we yield to Him; and the contemplation of the glory of God in which we shall bask for ever. Not being absorbed, but retaining our individuality, we shall yet be filled unto all the fulness of God, so that our joy will be absolutely perfected in Him. But, beloved brethren, between, first, the operation of the Holy Ghost and the perfect fulness of God which awaits us, comes a magnificent revelation which many Christians seem to understand as only a synonymous expression for the workings of the Holy Ghost, but which just a few—would to God they were more—have apprehended to be a marvellously progressive development of God's love, will, and power; that is, the endowment which comes to us, according to the riches of his glory, when the Holy Ghost reveals to us the indwelling of Christ Jesus the Lord.

We are not here to speak of tri-theism, to set forth that is, three persons who come with three separate manifestations, to indwell the soul of the Christian believer. But we say that while God the Holy Ghost is one, and the first cause of everything good which is accomplished in man, yet there is a progressive experience, a subjective realisation of life, which may be described, in the words of this passage, as a progress of the realisation of the strengthening by the Spirit, unto the realisation of the indwelling of a person. And it is this, as I understand it, which the Apostle Paul speaks of when he says that, if we be strengthened with might by the Spirit of God, in the inner man, then He reveals to us things which we knew not before; and that permanently, not coming as a wayfaring man to sojourn for a night—in Jer. xiv. 8, that prophet wails to think it should be ever so with the believer—but as a guest to abide permanently, willing to come as a person, by the Spirit revealing Himself as indwelling our souls and abiding there for ever.

How splendidly, how exquisitely, is this expressed in the Prayer of Access, as we call it in the Church of England service, "That we may evermore dwell in Him and He in us," ofttimes too carelessly read, I fear, by ministers; ofttimes too little apprehended in its deep force by the hearers; but of the deepest spiritual value, and in exact accord with the words of Scripture, if we rightly understand the Word of God, that we are called to indwell the Christ, for safety, for peace, for joy, for provision, for prospect, for pleasure, for perfection, but that He is called also, when we take our proper place, to indwell us for power, for patience, for progress, and finally for the perfect realisings of enjoyment which God would give to us. It is this, I think, which St. Paul speaks of when he says that, if we be really strengthened with might by the Spirit in our inner man, Christ should be revealed to us as dwelling in our hearts by faith.

Why the heart? I am bound to speak of this, because the subject which is to engage our attention now is love. The heart is, I think, most expressly chosen by the Holy Ghost here, through the pen of St. Paul, on purpose to express the issue. The one part which Christ desires to have more than any is the heart; because, first, it is the seat of the affection, and Christ is yearning to have our affection; because it is the seat of the very weakest element of our being, the most uncertain—yea, as we are told by the same prophet (Jeremiah), in chapter xvii., it is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked. But when God the Holy Ghost brings in the great cure of Christ for the sinner's need, and applies it to the soul so that it is washed from its guilt, then purity is produced. When the Holy Ghost comes in and takes possession of the affections so that He claims them all for God, it is to pass them on to the Christ; and the Christ, yearning as the Saviour, the Redeemer, the Revealer of God's magnificent love to us, delights in us at that particular moment when the Holy Ghost can pass on to Christ our poor, fickle, feeble hearts, and, placing them at his feet, can say, "They are thine, O God the Lord, the Lord Jesus Christ."

The Holy Ghost has but one great work in this world, I believe—it is

TO MAGNIFY THE CHRIST;

and as He does so to us, He magnifies the Christ to the universe, when He can take our poor fickle hearts and lay them prostrate for the service of the Lord Jesus, showing that we have been made to delight ourselves in Him. So St. Paul is made to say "that Christ may dwell in your heart by faith"; and as we dwell, this afternoon, upon this glorious revelation of the God in Christ Jesus, may God in mercy remind us of the one object of it all—that Christ may get our hearts. How earnestly He says in the Old Testament scriptures, "My son, give Me thine heart"; and in the New Testament, when appearing amongst men, one asked "Which is the great commandment?" the answer was, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

Christ Jesus was, as it were, absorbed in love of the Father. He had within Him one devouring element, if we might so speak—though, of course, it could not destroy anything in Him, but only served to draw virtue out of Him—and that was love, burning in his heart, to God, and, from the God, brought, love to man; a love which yearned over the guilty, must needs redeem them, making them at length like Himself, a love to his saints which never ceases. "Having loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end"; and that end, "receiving the end of your faith, even the full salvation of your souls." Christ will never have his yearnings satisfied until we love Him back as He has loved us. One of the commandments which He has given us and, after all, the old commandment of eternity, is that we shall love one another "as I have loved you," not only as men love one another, but as we have been loved by Him.

It is of this love that we desire to speak; and, after what has been said, what more could be said? so would say many. While there is doubtless some tautology—and there must needs be some repetition—surely there is novelty of consideration, novelty of appreciation, even amongst those who have dwelt upon the love of Christ for many years. I am not afraid, therefore, except of any unkind judgment; I am not afraid of treading on old ground when I ask you to consider in this passage the wondrous love of God as revealed in Christ Jesus, which we are called to know when once the Lord Jesus Christ has fully in our hearts by faith. Multitudes of people are always craving for power; and ofttimes in the meetings of advanced Christians I hear men say that the one thing which is wanted is power. My own conviction is that power is but a prelude to something greater and better still—a prelude to getting the love which can qualify us at last to enter into the fulness of God, and to enjoy God Himself for ever. Well says the Catechism of our brethren in the North, that the one end and aim of man's existence is to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever. This is what we really are aspiring after, if we are faithful believers in the Lord Jesus. How shall we come to it?

Take a passage of Scripture which is as exquisite as the one we have had before us. Look first, according to the syllabus, at the Person who reveals to us the meaning of the word "love." When the Apostle John is led to say to us, in the fourth chapter of his first Epistle, "God is love," he is saying that concerning the great Creator and Founder of all things, which is beyond our comprehension mentally.

WE CANNOT DEFINE LOVE.

This thought is carried one step further by reminding you that even the Holy Ghost Himself, even the Lord Jesus Christ Himself, if we may say it reverently, neither of them seems ever to have had it possible for them to give an accurate description in man's language of what is really meant by love. For invariably, as far as I remember, when an effort is made in the pages of Scripture to bring before our minds the meaning of the word "love," it is always by comparison, or by the declaration of certain effects. For instance, our blessed Lord says, "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son." We have never stopped to think what was the abstract meaning of love in that passage, but we saw it all in the gift of the person of Christ, and St. John says in his Epistle, "Hereby perceive we the love" (the words of God are an insertion) "because He laid down his life for us." "Herein is love" (in the next chapter, the fourth), "not that we loved God, but that He loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." I do not know a definition of love; I do not know a passage in which it is attempted in the Scriptures; but I do know a multitude of texts in the Scriptures in which the relation of love is given; and instinct compels us to realise the force of the terms, not by philosophical discussion, but by mental and spiritual appreciation.

What can we do but refer to the revelation of love? That revelation is distinctly given to us in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. Avoiding, as far as I may, the language used this morning, I would turn your thoughts, in the person of Christ, to these following ideas, though they make, together, but few compared with what ought to be spoken on the subject. Has it ever struck you, dear brethren, with regard to the love of Christ, or the love of God in Christ, how infinitely marvellous it is when we think of the condescension thereof, the stoop which the Lord Jesus Christ had to make, to reveal to us, in his own person, the meaning of the word "love"? Carry back your thoughts for a moment, far behind the creation, as you hear the Saviour, when He walked upon earth, putting up the most earnest, loving words towards the Father, "The glory which I had with Thee, before the world was." Think of that; "the glory which I had with Thee, before the world was," think what that was to Christ, partaker of the very magnificence, of the very being of God, partaker of all the honour and omnipotence of God. And yet all that glory which He had with the Father, He leaves to come down and take the form of a man. "Being fashioned like as a man, He humbled Himself and became obedient, even unto the death of the cross."

LOVE MAKES THE SON OF GOD STOOP

until He reaches the obedience of the cross of a malefactor. Not only so, but, going back to the words of the Apostle, we read, "The only begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." Did we ever think what that intimate fellowship must have been to Christ Jesus; the Fellow, as He is called in Zechariah, of the great high God? All through the eternity past, to be one with the Father in everything—in comprehension, in enjoyment, in purity, in holiness, in delight in each other. All this, the love of God makes the Christ of God to abandon; and, giving up the bosom of the Father in his own personal and integral enjoyment, He condescends to reach this earth of ours, and to visit us in the form of a man. More than this, we have to become like Christ, or we shall never enjoy Him in eternity. It is the measure of our correspondence to his being now which will decide the measure of our enjoyment in glory.

Not only did He condescend to leave the glory and the bosom of the Father, but He leaves—may I dare to say it reverently—in one sense, the nature of the Father which He had enjoyed to all eternity with the Father. Watch Him as He trod this earth of ours, and hear Him say that He is under command to obey, that He has no will of his own, and is in utter ignorance as to certain things in the future. What means the marvellous change which has come upon his condition? Just this—the Godhead in Him is so left that He must needs empty Himself of it, as the Apostle says in the Epistle to the Philippians, and come down to take the very nature of man. The stoop is infinite. It is all the way from the throne of glory down to the lowest, basest, and vilest of men. It is a marvellous stoop, brethren, but we understand nothing about it. Ofttimes men have tried to speak of the condescension of a human being to his fellow; but this is absolutely nil, because there are the smallest possible relative shades between the guilt of one and another. But for Godhead complete in itself to resign its prerogatives, powers, and opportunities, simply to meet the need of one such as came of us, is altogether inconceivable; therefore Paul says of it at once that it is "the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge," but we see a little of it when He comes to reveal the love of the Father.

Do you know what made Him do it? It was love to the Father first. He loves the creature, but the Creator He loves pre-eminently. He is content to take such a place as that, that He may make known the love of the great high God, the infinite love of the Father.

But, again, I think we see a little of the meaning of the words, "the love of Christ which passeth knowledge," by considering the infinite wisdom and marvellous knowledge of the scheme by which our salvation is provided. St. Paul is rapt with attention to it, after he has developed the scheme of love throughout the Epistle to the Romans, until he comes, in chapter xi. verse 33, to the words, "O the depth." He is starting from the throne of God, and his mind's eye travels rapidly down, by the inspiration of the Spirit, until he reaches the depths where we are, and he says, "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" Wisdom and knowledge in what? In providing a scheme that could meet the needs of an almost innumerable mass of mankind; in providing an atonement that should satisfy God's justice, the devil's taunting claims, man's awful needs; in providing a condition of reconciliation, so that the Father should be well pleased, for his righteousness' sake, even with the vilest and most corrupt of mankind; in providing a scheme that should not only acquit man, but should take him out of his grovelling condition, and, purifying his being step by step, should lift him, lift him up to God. We have seen a ship sunk beneath the surface of the water by its own inherent weight and its overloading cargo, until it has been lifted through the removal of the cargo; and as the pontoons brought the breath of life into the hull, we saw the vessel rise. So, God provides a scheme which lifts poor sunken humanity until it is elevated even unto the very throne of God, purified, satisfied, glorified. Could anything but infinite wisdom and knowledge have devised it? Yes, we are told that in Him, our Saviour Christ, are hidden all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, for our sakes.

Once more, I think I see a little of the meaning of the love of God in Christ, when I contemplate the cost, the infinite cost, that it was to Christ when He was prepared to lay his glory by to come on earth to purchase our redemption. Yes, beloved, contemplate the cost to the Lord Jesus Christ. Not only his glory, not only the bosom of the Father, not only the worship of all the angels in heaven, but that He should lay by the very Godhead which He possessed from eternity, and by virtue of which He was the Creator of all things, the upholder of all things; that He should lay by the Godhead so completely, in its activities, for our sakes, that while here upon earth He could allow Himself, though He was the revelation of a pure law, to be condemned, to be condemned and despised by the breakers of the law; to stand amongst men, and endure the contradiction of sinners, moment by moment, against Himself; to allow Himself to be treated as Beelzebub, the prince of the devils; and, at last, to be placed, amongst the guilty, on the cross, to die the most degraded death which could be known in this world. The Son of God is going there, and as He lifts his eyes to heaven, in darkness which no human eye can pierce, we hear the bitter cry go up "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken me?" The answer is this, "God so loved, God so loved"—and this is love.

It passeth knowledge that dear love of thine,
My Saviour, Jesus.

We have tried to contemplate it in its uttermost condescension, in its wonderful wisdom, and in its marvellous cost. Then turn, for a moment, to contemplate the marvellous purpose of such a display. Here I see love, when I see what Christ intended by this. First, it was to vindicate the character of God the Father. I have already dared to say that He loved the Father infinitely more than He loved all of us put together, all wondrous as is that love of his to us. Would we know love? We must look into the face of Christ, and see Him now content to abandon all his own prerogatives, to take the place of the deserted, the rejected, and, at last, to be treated by God as the very embodiment of sin. For, we are told that "God made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him." That is the most awful word, I suppose, which has ever been put in the Bible, except the parallel words in Gal. iii. 13, where we are told that Christ was made a curse for us. He was made sin, and made a curse. The Son of God is led as a lamb to the slaughter, saying, "I delight to do thy will, O God." Why? That He might before the world. Have you ever loved parents, wives, children, or others, so as to make a sacrifice to vindicate their honour? Some sacrifice of your nearest and dearest, of your property, that you might vindicate the character of the loved one? That is love; and Christ Jesus stands before us as a doomed malefactor; as heaven, earth, and almost hell-abandoned, for the one reason that He is ready to glorify God the Father, out of love to Him to whom He looks up and says, "Abba, Father, thy will be done."

He is prepared to carry out God's holy will in regard to his sufferings, but it is purposely to win us. His love in this is exercised not only that He may save us from hell, not even to get us to heaven, but that we may rise to know the Father. Oh! the magnificent self-obliteration of the Christ in order to reveal to us what is meant by love, though I suppose He hardly thought of what He was doing in that sense. It was a love which did not seek to make us admire Him, but in it He sought that He might bring us to God the Father. We shall hear of that to-morrow, "that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." He was doing it to get us there; and as I proceed I wonder if God the Holy Ghost is dealing with souls now, so that they say, "What know I of these purposes being fulfilled in me? Am I getting nearer to the Father? Am I loving God the Holy One more and more? Am I anything more in conformity with the Holy Christ who is well pleasing to the Father?" That is the purpose of the Son, to get you pleasing to the Father, as He Himself is pleasing, until God shall look at you as at the Son, and say that He is perfectly pleased, saying even of you, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased."

Once more the Christ is prepared to carry out this work, to show his love, by defeating and at last abolishing evil from the whole space of what is called the new creation. Where the dark, bottomless pit may be, none of us can tell while in this world; but we know that in the new creation there shall be nothing evil, no speck or spot shall be allowed to enter—all shall be pure. The Christ of God was ready to go through all He did go through to glorify God the Father, to bring us up to God the Father, and to remove every spot and stain of evil from the perfected Kingdom of his own beloved Father. This is love; and you will understand that he who speaks to you would like to detain you by going into many, many further details, but he cannot indulge his hopes and wishes.

We can only proceed to say, in the words of the passage, this is all meant for us, brethren; and in order to comprehend it, there must be advancement, advancement and then enjoyment. The advancement is found in the words which have been well treated this morning, "that ye being rooted and grounded in love." But let me ask you to remember, that while we are to be rooted in love as in a soil—while this is the very starting point of our spiritual life—the Apostle also makes use of the expression which was not much dwelt upon this morning, namely, grounded, or founded as I think the word is. Let us think whether we have got

A ROOT, A FOUNDATION.

In both cases the words are found "in Christ Jesus" receiving through fulfilment for us. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid," says St. Paul in the Epistle to the Corinthians; and our Lord Jesus Christ, when He wants to show the utter folly of a mass of people in this world, who are seeking to get to heaven on a false basis, says that there are fools who try to get to heaven without a foundation. Apart from the rooting and grounding, too many are seeking to force themselves into this blessing. But nature does not act on its own part for labour; it leaves the manufacturer to do the labouring, simply providing what is needed by its master, man. So you and I, if we understand our privilege, should know that we are just planted. "The plants of my Father's planting," says our blessed Lord, He looks at them, and loves to think that they are plants which the heavenly Father has planted, that He planted them in the bed of the cross to which Christ came down. His love brought Him down, down, down, until He reached the lowest depths to which our fallen nature needs to go, even to the mouth of hell. Love cannot take Him inside the gate, though it may take Him to men who are quivering over the mouth of the pit, and, as they almost sink therein but not quite, as long as breath links them to this world, that love can draw them up by its mighty power, and still save them and fit them for glory. But beyond that even Christ's love cannot reach; because the devils and those who are like them even in the pit, absolutely refuse, at their own cost, to turn their faces towards God.

The Christ can root us in his own love, and ground us in his own love; and then a strange contradiction in terms receives its fulfilment in our persons. The wise ones of this world may say, "How can you have a thing so contrary to nature, as a root which belongs to a plant, and grounding which belongs to stone walls, in one person?" Because the Apostle knows that what is contrary to nature is real truth in grace; that we are made, as St. Peter tells us, living stones. He speaks about us as living stones; we have come to a Living Stone, and we are made living stones. And, as living stones have life like trees, and strength like walls, we are built into the very rock, the Rock of God which is Christ Jesus; but, at the same time, instinct with his divinity, we rear our heads upwards until, as we have it in this Eph. iv. 13, "We all come into the unity of the faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ. . . . . making increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." That is the starting-point. We commence in love; and our life is absolutely nil, in the spiritual and true sense of the word, until we are rooted and grounded in the love of the Lord Jesus Christ, the love that makes self-sacrifice delightful, the love that makes God's will to be our joy, the love that is our uprearing and the uprearing of all men; the love that is for us the very centre of existence, being, thought; the love which makes God's honour the nearest and dearest thing to the heart. How do we go on?

THERE IS AN ADVANCEMENT TO BE MADE.

How many dwarfs there are in the spiritual life, who seem never to wish for growth! St. Paul speaks sternly concerning such, saying, "When for the time ye ought to be teachers, ye . . . are become such as have need of milk, and not of solid food." You have come to this point, perhaps, already, finding, some of you, that you are not up to the standard. "Rooted and grounded in love," what next? That then, and then only, you may be able to comprehend. The words are very beautiful now. "That you may be well able, fully able, truly able, right royally enabled, enabled by the power of God." What for? "To comprehend." A word which, perhaps, a little puzzles you; but I can give you the parallel meanings of it. Acts x. 34. ". . . Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons." In Philippians iii. 12 and 13 you find it translated apprehend several times over. Now, what does the word mean? That we may be able to perceive or apprehend. You see, that is not so much an activity of the brain. Truth is not so much obtained by labour; a thing which I suddenly apprehend or perceive comes to me through mere exercise of the faculties which enabled me to grasp, to appropriate, to make my own. So the Apostle Paul says here that the one thing which we are to desire, and should attain unto if we are wise, is to comprehend with all saints who had ever yet learned to know their blessings, what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height.

Some say that we must pause there, and that it is not intended to refer to the love of Christ. Well, I think we may safely take it so, if we like; but I prefer to add the subsequent words on this occasion. Paul is labouring to express to our minds the magnificence of this love. How does he express it? It is a beautiful thought that he has, with a bold flight of imagination, to add a new standard of measurement to the ordinary measures which you and I know in daily life. We talk of breadth, length, and height—these three are the only standards of measurement amongst us. Paul adds a fourth—he says depth. Ah! wondrous thought, he is not content with the ordinary thought of measurement, he must needs add another to express what it took the Christ to bring Him from the throne right down to the mouth of hell, that He must bring us into the knowledge of it, in some degree. As long as it is from God's throne to the pit door; as broad and wide as from the first act of creative will to hereafter: so broad, so long, so high, so deep is the love of God in Christ Jesus our Lord, which you and I are bidden to comprehend. Yes, this is not the advanced school, it is the middle-class school. There is the start of the infant who is rooted and grounded in knowledge, and as he grows in ripeness towards boyhood or manhood, he at last begins to perceive what he never saw before. Ah! beloved, do you know a little of this now? Do you see something of the breadth, length, depth, and height of the love of Christ, if it is the point upon which the Apostle is dwelling?

Then, can you go one step further and say that you have come to know the love of Christ which passeth knowledge? And hear what a paradox! "Poor fool," says the ignorant critic of our day, "these Bible writers didn't know how to express themselves grammatically; they didn't know fine language as we do." Is it so? The natural man says that; the man of grace says, "How blessedly true." We can know it. Yes, with the spirit, with the soul, with the heart, we can know what we can never know with the mind. And we can also say, when we know to the full with every faculty we have to-day, that there are reaches of knowledge far beyond us, "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known." "I give up all, that I may know Christ, yet have I never apprehended Him yet," says Paul. "No, brethren, do not think I stand ahead of you; but this one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Oh that the body of believers in this hall would set their faces to know what God intends them to know; to count all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus the Lord. Have you ever watched the course of the Apostle Paul? He never started that race until long after he was a believer. It was when he began to see the magnificence of the love of Christ so that it permeated his being, that he began to seek souls and began to know something of what Christ feels towards them. It is quite right to be rooted and grounded. That child is quite safe; if God were to take it, it would be in heaven: but perhaps now it has nothing beyond the limpet-like enjoyment of clinging to the Rock. But I do not want to be a limpet throughout eternity. I do not see any spiritual enjoyment in getting no further than that. Then, you know, there are a great many eels. They like to go through the water, but they generally stick a little to the mud, and so make a great deal of mud about them, too. I do not see why we should be content with ease, only getting on a little, apprehending only something of the great waters in which we live. Did you ever watch a whale? See it come up to the surface and blow up before God and man all the superfluous power which it has, overcoming all obstructions, so that, as it is said, it can scorn an attacker. By the grace of God, that is a life worth living. But even that would be only a selfish life, passing rapidly through the floods of God's goodness. Let us come to something higher still. The lower creation is no parallel for us. We are mentally as Christ Himself; and to know the love of Christ means that our being corresponds to his, our thoughts correspond to his, our life corresponds to his, our work is exactly in the blessed steps of our Master, and we learn what it is, through the action of love, to glorify God in our body and in our spirit, which are his.

Oh! to know. And, then, always to feel that there is more to know. Oh! to acknowledge, to feel, that there is more to be found in giving than in having, and that it is the most precious privilege of the highly existing Christian as God has poured out upon us. My brethren, hug not your life: for, "he that keepeth his life shall lose it; but he that loses his life for my sake," says Christ, "and the Gospel's, and the souls of the world's sake, shall find it." God wants men who copy Christ in the self-sacrifice of love, in the determination to glorify God, in the will that has no action of its own as against the holy will of God; and you and I are called to this. It is a glorious privilege. There is a higher conception still, perhaps, of a coming eternity, when you shall be filled with all the fulness of God. But now, while it is our blessed privilege to be strengthened with might, we must be thinking of action. God means us to do something more in order to come to the enjoyment of loving. We see the babe, rooted and grounded in love. Then we see the strong man coming forth, from twenty-three to sixty, working hard, strengthened by God's Spirit in the inner man. Then you look upon a dear elderly saint, called to retire for a little from the public activities of life and hard work. Have you not watched and seen the fine ripening, the character gradually moulded, the whole of the person yielded step by step to God, the saint led to think not of the mighty things which he has done, but he sits at home, and you have never visited his room without saying, "Oh! how beautiful that face is getting, how like the man's character is to Christ." Would to God we knew a little of it.

It is coming, it is coming; and, dear brethren, when we think of those who occupied this platform before, and the many seen below in the hall from year to year, and now gone, we do praise God that He has revealed to them what it is to be like Jesus Christ, an attainment which comes not of works and labours, though such are our high privilege and duty now; but it will be just this: "we shall be like Him, because we shall see Him as He is."

I spoke to my own people last week of a mocking infidel who stood by the dying couch of a Christian saint, trying to turn her away from blessing—God forgive him. He had heard her say she was about to go to Christ. "Ah! my good creature," said he, "that is all very well. Pretty dreams for you to have, but very much too good to be true." "Yes, sir," she replied, "much too good to be true; much; but, bless the Lord, it is true, for all that."

TO TRACT DISTRIBUTORS.—Mr. John Hook, writing from 9, Clarence-terrace, St. Leonards-on-Sea, says: "I have for some time past made it a practice to give away only plain and pointed Gospel tracts (the shorter, I think, the better), and on each tract I have written plainly and boldly such sentences as 'Jesus Christ will save you if you only ask Him. Try;' or 'Immediately you ask Jesus Christ to save you He will. Try.' This seems to me to give additional effect to the Gospel invitation contained in the tracts. If God's blessing is asked upon each one distributed, I believe that the message will be carried home to many hearts."

"THE MAIN CHANCE."

"I MUST MIND THE MAIN CHANCE."

Most assuredly you must. No one can blame you for such a resolution. But what is the main chance? Ay, that is the question.

To earn a living, to become distinguished, to be great in this world, to leave riches to your family, are more or less desirable objects in life; but I emphatically deny that any or all of these constitute "the main chance."

Hide it as you may, there is a secret consciousness in your inmost soul that there is a main chance far outstripping everything this world can present. "A man's life," says Christ, "consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth;" and again, "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"

The main chance is not what our brief existence here below can offer. It is connected with the great eternal future. The question is not how we shall live, say seventy years or more, on earth; but how and where we shall exist for eternity.

What is eternity? Can you grasp the thought? No, nor can the wisest or the most learned grasp it. Yet we who believe in the Lord Jesus have an assured eternity of happiness in heaven.

Ask yourself the question solemnly—"Where shall I spend eternity? In heaven or hell?" There is no alternative. In heaven with God, in endless bliss, with all who are good and true—or in hell, with the lost and bad, in outer darkness and endless remorse.

Are you prepared for eternity? If you are not, listen to these words of love and mercy:—

"Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord. Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isaiah i. 18).

"God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, bu have everlasting life" (John iii. 16).

Oh, what love—to offer as a free gift forgiveness of sins, and acceptance in the Beloved One, who shed his blood for sinners!

Accept Him, and you will have "an inheritance incorrruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time" (1 Pet. i. 4, 5).

Accept Christ. That is the main chance; by all means mind it. To be able to say of Christ, "He is mine, and I am his," is to possess "unsearchable riches."

"All things are yours; whether . . . the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's" (1 Cor. iii. 21-23).

MISSIONARY PRAYER UNION.

Rev. J. J. Turner, from China, was the preacher at the quarterly meeting of the Missionary Prayer Union, in the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Sunday. The report of the secretary for the past quarter showed that over £25 had been received from seventy-five members. The interest in the union is sustained.

The letter from the missionary, Mr. Hall, of Agra, is always an interesting feature. It tends to sustain and to deepen the interest already felt in missionary work. Among much that was interesting in the latest letter were the following sentences:—"We went into one or two of the great Hindu temples at Brindaban. They are dreadful places, some of them nothing more nor less than great houses of ill fame. Those who in these latter days are so enthusiastic over the beauty and the spirituality of the religions of India, and who tell us of the purity of the ideals of Brahminism and Buddhism, should know that in actual practice those systems are corrupt and degrading in the extreme."

THE LATE CANON HOARE.

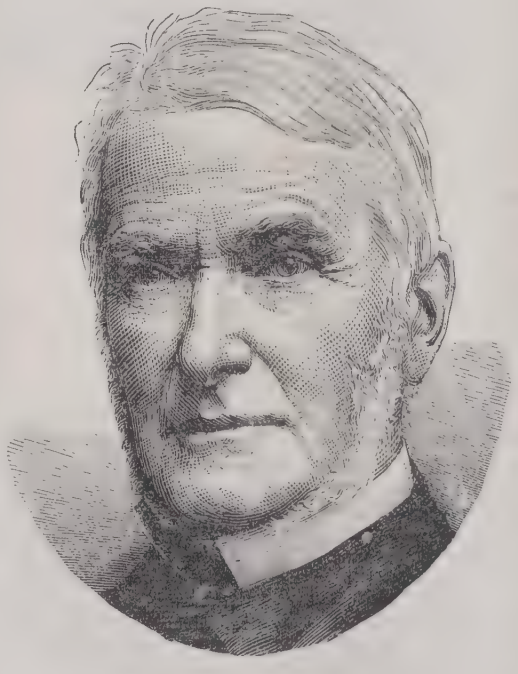
This devoted and honoured servant of Christ was called to his rest on Saturday morning, at the age of eighty-three. The announcement will cause little surprise, seeing he has been seriously ill for some time, but it will be received with the deepest regret by all who knew his faithful service. His mother was, as mentioned in the sketch of his life we gave some years ago, a sister of the famous Elizabeth Fry and Priscilla Gurney. Brought up among the Friends, Canon Hoare throughout his long life maintained loving association with many members of the Society of Friends, with whose spirit he was deeply imbued. He was led to enter the Church of England at fifteen years of age, and resolved to devote his life to the ministry. After working in Pakefield, Richmond, Holloway, and Ramsgate, Mr. Hoare was appointed in 1853 to Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, where he has laboured ever since.

This parish, in the very heart of the town, has become the centre of a remarkable and admirably-organised work, reaching all classes of the people, and not only filling the large parish church, but winning many to Christ. Apart from the church services, which have always been of the most thoroughly evangelical and highly spiritual character, all manner of classes and mission operations of a Gospel, social, temperance, and educational kind have been actively carried on. In short, as a parish clergyman Canon Hoare has done remarkable work.



THE LATE CANON HOARE.

From photograph by Messrs. Russell and Sons, Baker-street, London, W.

But beyond the limits of the parish, as a trusted and steadfast leader of the Evangelical party, and as a speaker at Christian conferences and congresses, Canon Hoare's services had been highly valued. As an exponent of the spiritual truth, an expounder of the Scriptures, and a teacher in the deep things of God, he occupied a high place. His preaching has been described as "that of one who had a singularly strong grasp of the doctrines of the vicarious atonement and the second coming of Christ; and whose strength lay in his reality; his sympathy; his knowledge of the Scriptures; his unfaltering convictions; and his obvious acquaintance with the rich treasures of theological literature."

Canon Hoare issued a number of works, amongst these "Our Protestant Church," "The Doctrine of the Lord's Supper," "Rome, Turkey, and Jerusalem," "Redemption," "Truth of Inspiration," and "The Prayer Book."

His loss will be mourned by many as that of one whom God has greatly honoured, and one who had the rare art of linking to himself in bonds of love and esteem all with whom he came in close contact.

IN A CHINESE CITY.

Mr. Stewart McKee, writing from Ta T'ung Fu, Shansi, North China, says:—

"In February I started an Opium Refuge with two patients, Wang and Ts'ao. Both of these got saved, and are now bearing good testimony for the Master. Since then we have set the Opium Refuge in full swing, and at present have fifteen patients, some of whom we believe are really trusting Jesus. We have also started a Women's Opium Refuge, and have three inmates, for two of whom we have every reason to praise God.

"In the middle of February I started a boys' day school, and have at present sixteen pupils. They study Christian books, and I have service with them every morning. They are making good progress in Bible knowledge, also headway in singing. In the same month Mrs. McKee felt the need of a change, so, accompanied by Miss Barraclough, went to live at a village thirteen miles east of the city. She stayed a month, and at the close I went and held meetings for the men. At the Sunday morning service no fewer than eighty adults turned out, and that out of 110 families. The result of the month's work is that several families have burned their idols, and we believe that several are really saved.

"We have invited a man and his wife into the city to spend a month with us, and get more instruction, in the hope that they would then go back and witness for Jesus. One old man said quite pathetically to me, 'I am seventy-four years old. When I was a boy the old people used to say, if you are in want of food ask God, but I did not know who God was. Now, at last, I have found out who God is, and that He will not only feed me, but forgive all my sins. Praise God, I know Him and trust Him.'

"Since last writing, the Lord has supplied the money for a new chapel, which is now built and seats 150, but it almost seems too small already. Only six months ago we thought fifteen a fair attendance! The Street Chapel goes on well; good attendances daily, for which we praise God. Last Sunday I took my first service in our new chapel, and as there were so many just turning to Christ, I felt led to take for my subject the terms of discipleship. The place was packed, and the Spirit was evidently at work. I made it specially prominent that they that will live godly must suffer persecution. Little did I think how soon my subject would be illustrated.

"Service over, the ladies and Mrs. McKee had an after meeting with the women, and two knelt in prayer and asked God, for Christ's sake, to accept and forgive them. Just at that time some boys began throwing stones at the ladies' gate; some lads soon joined, and by 1 p.m. there was every sign of something serious, so I went to the magistrate for help. He sent policemen, who apprehended the leader, and afterwards a crowd of men assembled in the lane cursing the foreign devils, etc. They smashed the ladies' gate and entered the building, which, however, was empty, the women having taken refuge in a house near by. Meanwhile, the police had taken the ringleader into custody. Next day the magistrate sentenced one of the men to fifty blows on the mouth, and the others to one hundred stripes with the rod, ordered them to make good all damage, and tender a suitable apology to me. They have repaired all damage and eaten humble pie; so I think all is over. A good proclamation in our favour has also been put out.

"God delivered us all without a scratch, and kept us in perfect peace in the midst of the trouble."

THE DRINK BILL of New South Wales for 1893 is calculated to amount to £17 4s. 7d. for each family of five.

"CUI BONO?"—Pasteur Lortsch, of Nimes, informs us that the story related in our columns of May 3, regarding the conversion of the father of Count Agénor de Gasparin, after hearing sermons by Adolph Monod, is not to be relied upon. M. Lortsch shows that the statement was examined some years ago, and proved to be legendary.

BRIGHTON RAILWAY MISSION.

Wednesday week was a red-letter day in the history of the Brighton branch of the Railway Mission. Mr. Albert Head presided at the afternoon meeting, and struck the keynote which rang throughout the meetings, "The Lord is good." Well might this be the refrain, for the beautiful new hall just opened sets once more the seal to the truth, "Them that honour Me I will honour." Most signally has the Lord fulfilled his word to Mrs. Gates, the leader of the Brighton Railway Mission, who, finding herself adrift last autumn, with no meeting-place for her large band of some 400 people, had quite unexpectedly the offer for purchase of a fully-fitted chapel in the Viaduct-road, in the required locality, and in every way suitable; but £2500 was needed for the purchase money, and of this, before October last, Mrs. Gates had none. Money has flowed steadily in, subscriptions having come to hand from places as far distant as Japan, Holland, Switzerland, and Ireland; but on the afternoon of the opening day there was yet a deficiency of £330. This was, however, cleared off ere the day closed, and thus the rejoicings were complete.

The new home of the Brighton Railway Mission was formally dedicated by the Countess of Chichester during the afternoon meeting. The Countess expressed "every good wish and prayer that God may manifest his power and glory abundantly, and that many may here receive new birth and life in Him." The chairman in the evening was Mr. S. G. Sheppard. Amongst other speakers were the Countess of Chichester, Mrs. J. P. Knight, Mr. W. H. Seagram, Mrs. Gates, and others. A memorial tablet to the late Mr. J. P. Knight (late general manager of the Brighton line), who, with Mrs. Knight, always took such a deep interest in the work, is placed in the hall. Several testimonies were given during the evening meeting by individual members of the Mission, both men and women, as to definite blessing received, while the enthusiastic reception accorded to Mrs. Gates evidenced how greatly her work and leadership are appreciated. The new hall is large, airy, and well ventilated, and on Wednesday was most artistically decorated with flowers and flags. Much voluntary work had been given in the general arrangements, and Mrs. Gates, in acknowledging these labours of love rendered, mentioned that she found the other day two goods guards scrubbing away with all their might at the floor, a very practical way of showing appreciation of the work. The contributions of the railway men towards the new hall, exclusive of large amounts collected by them, amount to £115. May God continue to vouchsafe his blessing in the future, as in the past, to the Brighton Branch of the Railway Mission, and give it long life and prosperity in its new home. M. J. G.

ALDERSHOT SOLDIERS' HOME.

In a circular letter notifying friends of the lamented death of Miss Daniell, the trustees for Miss Daniell's Soldiers' Homes say:—"Under a deep sense of the great loss the Mission has sustained, and of the heavy responsibility now resting upon us, we are glad to be able to inform you that Miss Hanson, who has been for so many years closely associated with Miss Daniell in the work, has consented to carry on the Mission in all its branches as at present.

"We desire earnestly to commend the work and the workers to your prayers, your sympathy, and your help; in the sure confidence that God, who has hitherto so graciously owned and blessed this work among our soldiers, will be even yet more gracious in time to come."

A HEALTH RESORT.—Some of our readers may like to know of Salies-de-Béarn, a health resort in the South of France (Dep. Basses Pyrenées), whose salt-springs are invaluable in cases of rheumatism, neuralgia, and other nervous complaints, etc., and also for spinal disease and general weakness in children. Living is moderate, there are good hotels and doctors, and great educational advantages combined with pretty scenery. The Béarn district is still somewhat of a stronghold of Protestantism, and Salies has a French Protestant Church.

The Late Countess de Gasparin.

The death quite recently of the Countess de Gasparin touched thousands of hearts as a bereavement almost personal in its keenness. The fame of her husband, Count Agénor de Gasparin, as a social reformer and philanthropist, and her own reputation as a charming author and an interpreter of the spiritual life, both arose in the reflecting mind, and a feeling of pain was experienced that, even at the advanced age of eighty-one years, the accomplished lady had passed away. In France and Switzerland she was esteemed for her generosity as well as revered for her expression of the best sentiments in the choicest of language. Wherever the story of her large-heartedness was told, and wherever her works were read in translation, she was held in high regard.

The maiden name of the Countess was Valerie Boissier, and she came of a distinguished Genevan family. Born in 1813, she married the Count in 1840. He was of an influential Dauphiny family, and was well known as an eminent Christian, an eloquent orator, and a bold social reformer. After enjoying high Parliamentary position, he retired to Switzerland, where he died in 1871, after a life entirely consecrated to the service, by lip and pen, of the combined cause of the Gospel and liberty.

THE LATE COUNTESS DE GASPARIN.

The Countess was a true helpmeet for him; and was a poet as well as a practical Christian. She was ardently Evangelical, and although highly cultured and refined in manner, she was no visionary, no mere doctrinaire. A Swiss contemporary sums up her religious inspiration in the two words, Faith and Love: faith without limit and absolute in God and his Word; faith uncompromising in regard to revealed truth; love full of tenderness for the weak and promotive of active beneficence. She dispensed to the poor without stint; to raise the fallen and love those who were neglected was her joy, and in times of grief and trial she found in this her consolation.

The Countess lived in the heights of spiritual experience, and the joys which were hers through Christ she would fain communicate to others. To recall her own words, in a note to the Editor of this paper, she aimed at "strengthening the hearts and raising the souls" of those who read her books—in fact, "conveying to them a breath of pure air, the breeze from the mountain tops!"

Like her husband, she was a prolific writer. After works of travel, comes, as early as 1842, "Marriage from the Christian Point of View," which the great Vinet called a noble book, and which was "crowned by the Academy" as the best fitted to promote good morals of all the books published that year in France. She spent the last few months of her life revising this work for a reissue. Some of her subsequent volumes have taken rank among those that are read and re-read. Especially may this be said of Les Horizons Prochains and Les Horizons Célestes, which have been translated into English and published together, with the title "The Near and Heavenly Horizons." Then there were Camille, an imaginative piece, and some high-toned volumes of poetry, Edelweiss and El Soñador. In 1892 was published Quelques Pensées, in which are found many beautiful sayings and wise counsels. In order to discredit unauthorised likenesses of the Countess, the publisher of this volume supplied one which he declared "the only genuine," and from this our portrait has been engraved.

The Countess had a very active mind, and was busy till the last. She died on June 16 at Le Rivage, near Geneva, where during twenty-three years she ceased not to mourn the loss of her beloved husband. She has, in turn, been mourned as a loss to French Protestantism, without distinction of church or party. She was a noble soul, having a hatred of anything specious or unreal; and one of the many monumental works that follow her is the Deaconesses' Institute at Lausanne, which she founded and endowed some years ago.

EASTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

Mr. J. A. Wray, of the C.M.S. Mission, writing from Mombasa on June 9, says:—"We Mombasa missionaries stand in great need of prayer at the present moment. First, let me explain our position. Mombasa is an island, about two miles by three, and is separated from the mainland by a creek about half a mile wide; Frere Town is on the mainland. On the island there are about 25,000 people, and these nearly all live in the town, and are most bigoted Mohammedans.

"We have three stations on the island—the chief one is in the town; one at Mzizima (it can scarcely be called a station, as it is a hospital away from the people), the third is Kilindini, on the opposite side of the island. This is a settlement of liberated slaves, and is under my special care. Our house is in the town, but my wife and I go out to Kilindini every day. The work is quite new, but the Lord has given us showers of blessing. Some have confessed Christ, and they have built a church of their own. They are very poor, and can only put their farthings into the collection bag every Sunday. They have paid off the church debt. The mission at Kilindini has not cost the C.M.S. anything, and I trust it will not. We have a flourishing school under the charge of Mrs. Pigott.

"Well, now about the main work, the town. We have Rev. W. G. and Mrs. Taylor, myself and wife, and five lady missionaries. We have been working here over twelve months, and with no apparent results. We hold two street services in the week, and go twice to hold open-air preachings in the bazaar. In this latter place we have often been interrupted, but now it has come to active opposition. Whenever we go, they bring out an old mace, and get as close to us as possible, yelling at the top of their voices, 'There is but one God, and Mohammed is his Prophet,' all the while we are there, and it is impossible to make ourselves heard. This very greatly discourages us, and we are wondering what it means, whether it is God's voice bidding us cease for a while, or what.

"We have decided to give up the bazaar preaching and one of the street preachings for a fortnight or three weeks. Meanwhile, we give ourselves up to prayer and waiting upon God for guidance; at the same time, we are writing to our friends to pray for us, as we hope to begin and make a special effort. So will you remember us specially before the Throne of Grace?"

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.—The latest issue of "Letters from Spain," giving in extenso the address delivered by Senor Valles y Ribot, "one of the most brilliant orators in Spain," in his defence of Don Alexander, at his recent trial at Gerona, should be widely read, being of remarkable interest. ## OPIUM SMOKERS IN SHANTUNG.

Although it is only seven years since our last return to China, our medical superintendent has seen it needful to urge our being sent home, the nervous system of Mrs. Judd and myself being much broken down. It is not easy for a missionary to leave the post where souls have been turned from darkness to light. It was amidst much weeping, both of our native Chinese brethren and sisters and ourselves, that we parted from the Christians in Ninghai for a season. It was not until we came to leave them that we realised how strong is the bond of love in Christ between them and us. The Chinese of Shantung province are by no means emotional, but Christian love moves the springs when perhaps hardly anything else would. Oh, how greatly their love to us at this time contrasted with the bitter hatred shown to us when we first went to that city seven years ago. Then we were stoned, our shutters and doors were battered, filth was besmeared on them, and my family had twice to flee from the city. Now even the unconverted heathen usually treat us kindly.

Recently God has been deeply moving many hearts, and some very clear conversions to God have taken place, specially among the women. The visit of our friends, Mr. and Mrs. Russell, has been used of God in this matter. Mrs. Russell appears to have been wonderfully helpful in bringing some women into the light of sins forgiven.

One of those who were most troubled at our leaving was a man of sixty odd years, who for over thirty years had been the slave of opium, gambling, and wine; for these he had sold all his land and come down for some years to be an underling in a magistrate's office, a position usually held only by the most vicious of men. A Christian military officer was the means, however, of giving this man some knowledge of the Saviour. Only those who know the awful effect of thirty years' opium can form any idea of the fight it was to give up the cursed drug. The wine was comparatively easy, but the opium cost him many sleepless nights in breaking it off. During one of these sleepless times he snatched up his New Testament, and opening it at John xvi. he read words which were just living water to him; he read on and on into the night, and the words soothed his troubled mind. Since then his sleep has been comparatively good, and the Scriptures his constant study. Gambling was another of the vices from which the Lord graciously saved him. He has two sons, the younger converted before him, and helpful to his father; but the elder is still under the spell of that sin, although inclined to hear the Gospel. The wife had for some years partially supported the family by transferring demons from one person to another, and thus was said to get the sick healed, by which she earned a good income for a Chinese woman. We have hope for her conversion, but she was not thought to be quite free from her idolatrous trade when we left Ninghai. We shall be so glad of prayer for this family. Satan will leave no stone unturned in order to destroy their influence for Christ.

Another man, now a follower of the Saviour, who used to spend his earnings largely in gambling, has become so changed that his mother, a heathen woman, came to thank us for the benefit her son, and she too, had received in his changed life.

A farmer, recently baptized, owes his conversion to his aged mother, one of the first women converted soon after our going to Ninghai. She went to visit her native village, about twelve English miles from us, and then taught him the knowledge of our God and Saviour. A friend of his, baptized the same day, was first interested in the Gospel through reading some Scriptures given to him by Mr. Stephen, of Shi-tao. Thus in various ways is God leading precious souls out of darkness into life and light.

I notice that of all the varied machinery used for the conversion of the Chinese, whether evangelistic, medical, educational, tracts or Scripture circulation, our God uses any or all of them with the provision that 1 Cor. xiii. be taken good heed to: love, love strong and self-sacrificing, love which sees the very best in the persons for whom it labours, and counts nothing too much to pay if only it can come nearer to them; this love is the fire without which all our machinery and knowledge are but powerless to melt one stony heart. If any place in this poor world needs loving, sympathising hearts, it is poor, downtrodden China, a nation of discouraged, broken-spirited people, who have fled to the abominable drug, opium, to solace their comfortless hearts and lives.

It is often asked, "Why do Chinese so readily take to this drug?" One reason is, I think, often overlooked: the life of the Chinaman in large cities is so utterly void of anything to alleviate the monotony of long hours of work. Most shopkeepers and working-men toil on from daylight till nine or ten o'clock at night, and many even later, their only recreation being a very few days in the year, in which they are released to see the theatricals performed for the supposed gratification of their gods. For spirits thus crushed by monotony, and bodies with little energy, the opium presents a most tempting relief. But when its sad effects have taken hold of its victim, its pleasure is almost entirely gone; then, to those who accept the Lord Jesus fully, is the grandest victory of the power of the Lord seen. His power delivers from the galling chain, from which the victim had long, and in vain, sought deliverance on other lines. His Spirit gives the joy and gladness which was only so temporarily found while under the drug, and the "hope of glory" often gives such new light to the countenance that the heathen say we give medicine to produce it.

May our God send forth to China men and women full of loving sympathy, men who will not be puffed up by their supposed Western superiority, and women who can take a Chinese baby into their arms with a look of love in their faces, in spite of the rags and filth on the poor child's body; these are the workers we want for China. It is wonderful how love can break down our national pride and prejudices. God give us men of love.

BUCKS EVANGELISTIC AND VILLAGE MISSION.

It has become necessary to build an iron mission room for two adjoining villages in a most destitute condition. There are several hundred people, and not a chapel or meeting-room for them of any kind for miles round. There is no resident clergyman, and only one short service is held in the church during the Sunday. Formerly the men spent the Sunday in games, etc., the sin and spiritual darkness being more than I can describe.

In the early part of the summer we went into this neighbourhood with a Gospel caravan, and began work, and for weeks lived in the place, visiting every person many times, and preaching the Gospel. Interest was created and great good done. Hundreds came night after night, standing round the speakers for hours together, and even rain could not keep them away. The whole place seemed changed, and we continued weekly meetings late into the autumn, for the people begged us not to leave them, but all through the winter we were obliged to cease, as no room could be had. We did our best to visit the people in their homes, and often they would send us the appealing message, "For God's sake get us a room of some kind where we can meet to hear the Gospel!" We commenced again early this summer in the open air, the Lord is working as before.

We have now got the promise of a piece of ground, under almost miraculous circumstances, and I have the promise of an iron room to hold about 200 people for the sum of £100. I have enough for brick foundations and seats, and can pay a yearly rent for the ground, so that for £100 a good room can be opened every day all the year round for a coffee room, reading room, and preaching station, where hundreds can hear the glad news of salvation.

We ask help, and that speedily, else we shall lose the offer of the iron room at the price quoted; these villages mentioned are only two out of many such. Pray for them and ask the Lord to send forth labourers.

MR. ABRAHAM HORNSTEIN.

A well-known helper of Christian work in many forms writes:—

"I think it right to send you a letter I have just received from A. Hornstein, in reply to a civil refusal from me to help him.

"It is shocking to think that a man calling himself a Christian missionary should write so."

The West Central Provincial and Continental Mission for Promoting Christianity Among the Jews.
2a, Berners-street, Oxford-street, W.
July 5th, 1894.

Mr. B.—Sir,—How you love self and ignore the bitter sufferings of others; you must be a frivolous egotist, or a hardhearted churl. Such men ought to be swept away from the face of this earth. God will send upon you plagues, and you will then see what hunger means, which Mr. B— does not unfortunately know now.—Yours, Resident Missionary and Secretary.

Our readers will be able to judge how far Mr. Hornstein is a fit and proper person to assume the control of any mission.

THE EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE IN IRELAND.

Inquiries have from time to time been addressed to us from the other side of the Channel with reference to a branch of work which was established some years ago by the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance, and by which much good has been accomplished. Allow me to explain. The Alliance formulated a scheme for promoting throughout the country a special study of the principles of the Reformation. A syllabus of subjects was drawn up, with a senior and junior grade. Candidates may study singly or in class; examinations are held annually in the month of April, and prizes and certificates are awarded to successful candidates.

The text-books are valuable handbooks of the several subjects, and contain a simple but comprehensive view of the questions at issue. The object of the council is not to encourage controversy, but to train our young people in a special knowledge of those Reformation principles to which, under God's blessing, this Empire owes its prosperity and its greatness; and at the same time to enable those who follow the course to discuss, intelligently and successfully, those principles with all gainsayers. Warm testimony has been borne by clergymen and others to the good which has been done.

GOSPEL TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON.

This college has taken a new departure in entering on a new and suitable building. There was no public ceremony. Principal and students met in the new class-room and all present took some part in expressing their gratitude to God. The principal stated how he had been led from a small beginning in connection with his own congregation to extend the advantages of the college to all who wished to enter and were found suitable.

The distinctive feature of the college is that the Bible is made the centre of all the teaching, and all students are to aim at reading it at sight in Hebrew and Greek. Steps have been taken to secure the services of well-known teachers in theology, elocution, Greek, and German. The Ladies' department will also soon be in operation; another building will be secured for this, and arrangements made for medical education.

Ministers who have likely young people in their congregations are urged to bring the new college before their attention. The teaching is free, and all the teachers, matron, and lady principal give their services. Students who are able to do so are expected to pay their own board, which does not cost very much. It is expected that at the end of this year there will be forty students in residence.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—On Thursday night last Sir George Williams entertained a number of unhappy women from the Strand and neighbourhood in Exeter Hall, under the auspices of the Midnight Meeting Movement. A strong body of voluntary workers missioned the locality, and eighty-one young women responded to the invitation. Light refreshments were handed round, and, after singing and prayer, addresses were delivered by Sir George, Messrs. C. C. Greenwood, Joseph Thomas, and Bottjen (in German), great attention being paid throughout. The addresses of many of the girls were taken, and early next morning one came to the office, 8a, Red Lion-square, W.C., and said, "Send me to a home at once." It is needless to say her request was granted.

The Mildmay Conference.

EVANGELISTS' MEETING.

A most interesting meeting was held on Tuesday afternoon in the South Tent for "prayer, praise, and testimony," which was attended by a large number of well-known evangelists and Christian workers. Mr. W. R. Lane, who opened the proceedings by reading 1 Cor. iii., said that the three important matters here referred to were, knowing right, being right, and doing right. It was to the man who "was less than the least of all saints" that the "unsearchable riches of Christ" to preach among the Gentiles was committed. He mentioned the fact that he had received a letter from Central Africa, where his brother has seen two youths converted after five years' labour. Surely God will reward the labours of those five years.

Mr. J. J. Sims, of Canada, spoke a few words of exhortation. Among other good things, he said: "We smoke too much and burn too little; there is too much looking to man, and too much fear of man; let our hope and trust be in God. There are among Christians two sorts of people, the bunglers and the grumblers, but the first-named do most of the work, whilst the others buzz around.

Major Liebenrood remarked: At the present time there are two dangers to shun in preaching—a cross without the Christ, and the Christ without a cross. Mr. William Noble spoke briefly on "Power," and said we need low thoughts of self and high thoughts of God.

Rev. R. Balgarnie then turned the meeting into the channel of testimony, and spoke of the value and worth of open-air preaching, as evidenced by him at the sea-side. Mr. Chas. Cook cited some remarkable cases of blessing, as seen by the brethren of the Open-air Mission at Epsom, and told of the special interest evinced at the meetings in Hyde Park and Hyde Park Hall. Mr. Charles Inglis also spoke on the willingness of the people to listen to the Gospel, and of blessing seen. After a few words from Ned Wright, who, in a happy, humorous way testified to the power of the Gospel, the happy meeting of workers closed.

MISSIONARY MEETINGS.

The interest in missions is always strong at Mildmay, and no doubt the great fields of the heathen world could show many devoted workers who received the first impulse for their life work at some of the Mildmay Conferences or other meetings throughout the year. On the Wednesday afternoon Room No. 4 was very full for the meeting called to consider the subject of foreign missions.

After a song of praise, and prayer, Mr. James E. Mathieson, the chairman, read a part of 1 Thess. i. In the course of some very apposite and weighty introductory remarks, he alluded to the power of the hope of Christ's second coming as an incentive to missionary work. He said the idea that a belief in the second Advent would cut the motor nerve of missions was now an exploded one. As to the responsibility of those at home for the work of missions, Mr. Mathieson said we would have to give up many cherished idols if we were to rise to the occasion. The Chinese lay great store on ancestral tablets; do not many Christians unduly value their ancestral possessions, and thus keep back from God that which is needed for his work?

Mr. Fred Arnot gave a succinct and intensely interesting account of his early experiences in pioneering work in South Africa, and of the dawn of mission effort among the great tribes in the interior of the Dark Continent. He said the large native empires of the continent were of comparatively mushroom growth. In the olden days of club and spear all could hold their own, but the introduction of gunpowder enabled some energetic chiefs to establish extended rule and found big empires. This was in one sense a great calamity, as the capitals of the Barotse, Matabele, and other chiefs became places of merciless slaughter. At the same time this autocratic rule enabled travellers and pioneer workers to explore the central parts of Africa and pave the way for the more organised mission efforts that have followed. Mr. Arnot related many facts of the deepest interest bearing on the first missionary endeavours in the country of the Garenganze.

Bishop Nuttall, from Jamaica, was the next to claim a hearing from the audience. He told of the establishment, through a former visit to Mildmay, of a deaconesses' institution in his own diocese. Speaking of work in Jamaica generally, the bishop said that there is a population of 650,000, the greater part of them being either those who were slaves at the accession of our Queen or their descendants. The Episcopal Church in the island is almost self-supporting, with 40,000 communicants, 1000 clergy, 300 schools, and 150 native catechists. After some good-humoured complaints addressed to Mr. Eugene Stock (who had entered the room), that the Jamaica work did not receive adequate attention in the literature of the C.M.S., the good bishop referred briefly to the adverse statements made by Dr. Johnston, of Jamaica, concerning Mr. F. Arnot's work in Africa. He said the remark was probably not needful, but he would ask Mr. Arnot and his supporters to be in no way discouraged by anything in the book, "Reality versus Romance in Missions." With a lengthened opportunity of judging of Dr. Johnston's methods of work, his opinion was that few men of his talents, attainments, and standing before the community were so little able to form and to express a correct opinion as to what is reality and what is romance in Christian work.

After a verse of the hymn,

Far, far away, in heathen darkness dwelling,

Mr. Mathieson read an extract from a letter he had received a day or two before from Mr. Charles Studd in China:—"The officials in China seem to be getting more opposed than ever to the preaching and the preachers of the Gospel. The last mail brought news of a prosecution originated by officials in Manchuria; also of a remarkable apparent Gospel success among the people near Si'gnan, in the Shensi province, where 240 villages are said to have received the Gospel. The result is that seventy mandarin officials are going about everywhere threatening the people. Only a few weeks ago the magistrate here made a most direct and unprovoked attack on us. What made it worse was the fact that at the time I was, at his own special request, doing what I could with a poor slave-girl suffering from gangrene in the leg; and my wife had been giving medicine to the magistrate's wife for her eyes, which had done her good. It did seem rather a backhander when we found out what he was doing. We had our revenge in a satisfactory way; when he sent us a present we returned it with thanks."

Mr. Montagu Beauchamp based an earnest talk on the words very familiar to Conference attenders this year—"the whole family of God." He spoke of the great need of enlargement in the work of missions in China. A special need is that of evangelists who will move from place to place and declare the Gospel message. Mr. Beauchamp made special reference to the province of Si-chuen, in which he had laboured. When he went there in 1886 there was only one station, in a province as large as Spain. Now there are fifteen different centres of mission work in the province, though that is very little, after all.

WORK FOR YOUNG MEN.

This was the theme of a most interesting Y.M.C.A. meeting held during the Mildmay Conference. On Wednesday afternoon there was a large audience, presided over by Sir George Williams, and the proceedings served well to illustrate the importance and need of association work and its present widespread character. After prayer, led by Mr. W. Hind Smith, an address was given by Mr. David McConaughy, of Madras, who told of magnificent opportunities presented in India at this time for work amongst educated young natives, thousands of whom were leaving the schools and colleges every year. It was through these, he urged, that India was to be won, and there was no agency better fitted to reach them than the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Karl Fries, Ph.D., secretary at Stockholm, described the work in Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Finland. Mr. E. J. Kennedy gave an excellent exposition of the objects of the Y.M.C.A., as set forth in the four words of its title.

M. Christian Phildius, of Berlin, testified that it is a good thing for an Association to entertain an International Conference. That held in Berlin in 1884 gave the work a tremendous impetus forward. Experience in Berlin showed that it was a wise plan to overtake men by communities.

Mr. R. McBurney, of New York, showed the many-sidedness of the Association's work, referring particularly to special agencies prosecuted now in behalf of hotel and restaurant waiters, bakers, soldiers and volunteers, students, railroad men, commercial travellers, etc. A solo was sung by Mr. Thane Miller, the blind evangelist of Cincinnati, and the concluding address, dealing with young men's work in the colonies, and appealing very warmly to the sympathies of the audience, was given by Mr. J. J. Virgo, of Adelaide, who said that when Y.M.C.A. secretaries give letters of introduction to young men going abroad and to the colonies they should write to the secretary on the other side the name of the young man and the ship by which he is to arrive, for oftentimes he falls into sin on the voyage out, and is ashamed to call at the Y.M.C.A. If so, he is lost to the Association and the Church, until he ultimately reaches the Y.M.C.A. in dire distress.

HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Dr. Barnardo was the first speaker, under the Mulberry Tree on Wednesday afternoon, and though the time was limited, he won the sympathy of his hearers as he told of the need of someone caring for the "waifs and strays." "The children's rights" were enforced in a ten minutes earnest, forcible, and eloquent manner, and many a tearful face told of sympathies for suffering little ones.

Mr. Isaac, of the Strangers' Rest, Ratcliff Highway, spoke of the need of the Gospel being brought before our seamen when ashore. "Here they may see in our windows of the Rest, in their own lan, guage, an invitation to come in and read, and write and rest free, and when once in, they are often led to find a rest to soul as well as body." Several instances of conversion were mentioned by Mr. Isaac, which were cheering and inspiriting.

Very suitably followed Miss Perks, the soldiers' friend, of Winchester. Many a young recruit is reached for good by herself and sister. Music and singing are used to introduce thoughts of "home and mother," and when confidence is inspired the Gospel is introduced. "Well!" said one young soldier at the close of a Sunday spent at the Home, "This is the happiest day I've spent since I left my father's home, and I will come again." Another case mentioned was that of a wild young man who attended the meetings, but "To-day," said Miss Perks, "I have been able to write to his mother and say, 'Your son is a saved lad.'"

Rev. T. Richardson followed, advocating the value of the Bible and Prayer Union. He told the story of a ship's captain having left one of the papers of the Union at Pitcairn Island, and to-day every inhabitant of the Island is a member of the Bible and Prayer Union. Dr. Stoney told of the rapid growth of the Christian Police Association, and the Rev. Edgar N. Thwaites, of Salisbury (who presided), closed with an arousing account of Gospel work in Calcutta and other places, and told of seventeen souls being converted in one after-meeting.

UNDER THE MULBERRY TREE.

On Thursday afternoon, under the Mulberry Tree Gospel addresses were given, the first by Major Liebenrood, on "Where art thou?" During his address he said, "In hiding from God we are hiding from our best friend; we need new hearts to receive the old Gospel; we are not told to turn from sin to God, but asked to turn to God from sin; let us not serve the devil all our lives and then go to God for our wages." Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor followed on "I thought on my ways and turned my feet." Young in appearance, natural in manner, and perfectly at home in the open air, he interested all by his simple clear testimony to the old Gospel. We welcome this Scotch brother to our City of London, and bespeak for him the prayers of our readers for his new sphere at Notting Hill. Miss Ada Rose having sung a very sweet solo, Mr. E. T. Kennedy spoke of "The three gradations between earth and heaven," conversion, confession, and consecration. With illustration, simile, and anecdote, he pressed on all the Gospel. If there were present at Mildmay on the closing day any who were unconverted, they did not leave the Conference without being warned of their danger, and invited to the Saviour. A second solo from our gifted friend Miss Rose brought this interesting meeting to a close.

HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Earnest support to foreign missions is usually accompanied by increased gifts to home work. A real interest in foreign missions stirs up the heart, enlarges the sympathies, fosters gratitude for our blessings in a Christian land, and the result is increased liberality toward all God's work, whether at home or abroad.—Missionary Herald.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JULY 15.—EZEKIEL XV.

The parable of the vine. In itself the vine is less valuable than other trees; its wood is not suitable for making even a pin of, and therefore if it do not bear fruit to quench man's thirst, it is entirely useless, and is cast into the fire for fuel. When it is charred thus, it is still less useful than previously. In this the vine was a suggestive emblem of the children of Israel. They were not distinguished amongst the nations of the world for intellectual brilliance, or for strength of character, such as made Greece and Rome so necessary to the building up of the fabric of human society. Their exclusive prerogative was to be the religious teachers and preachers amongst men. When, therefore, they failed in this, they failed in the one function for which they had been created and redeemed. Nothing could save them from the destroying flame, and when they had passed through it, the remnants left by Egypt and Babylon were still less valuable or available for the Divine purpose. Let us see to it that we fail not God, who has called us into fellowship with Himself in the winning of the world for his Son. His purpose in our salvation was ministry. All that mars this defeats the eternal purpose, and exposes us to the extreme of chastisement. When we cease to be holy we fail in the one particular for which we were saved, and expose ourselves to the doom of the castaway. (1 Cor. ix. 29.)

MONDAY, JULY 16.—EZEKIEL XVI.

Saved by Grace (1-7).—Israel was so idolatrous that she is described as sprung from the land of Canaan, in which impurity was, so to speak, indigenous. (4) The simplest offices performed for a child were neglected, and this to teach the adversities through which the chosen people had passed in the early stages of their national life. (5) There was nothing in us to attract the love of God. He loved us because He would. He gave us life according to his eternal purpose. (7) And even when the people had increased in numbers they still tenanted the wilderness, naked and bare. The more we know of ourselves the more we wonder that we are numbered in the family of God.

Espoused to the King (8-14).—All the advances were from God's side. Ah! my soul, thou lovest because thou wast loved. Thou becamest Christ's because He entered into covenant with thee. He hath washed, and anointed, and clothed, and adorned, and satisfied, and made thee beautiful. (13, 14) The beauty is that of the Lord our Righteousness, for we have none of our own.

Infidelity (15-34).—We are all tempted to look on God's gifts as our own. Our heart is prone to depart from the living God. Too often we use God's love-tokens for purposes of self-indulgence. As a wife may not part with her husband's gifts to another, so it is a grievous sin to use God's gifts for other gods. (22) Let us never forget the past, that the mercies of God may bind us to Him. (27) To fall from high positions of privilege often involves the apostate in sins of which men of the world would be ashamed. (33) It is the darkest of sins to sin for the sake of sinning.

Judgment (35-52).—The more God has loved, the more severe his chastisement. (41) He will count no cost of pain too great if we may cease from sin. (43) Sin frets, vexes, and grieves God (Isa. lxiii. 10, Eph. iv. 30). (46) Ah, woful comparison, that Israel is counted sister to Samaria and Sodom, and has even sinned more vilely than they. (49) A side-light on the fall of Sodom. (52) May not these words have suggested our Lord's? (Matt. xi. 24).

The Bringing Again (53-63).—Yes, God always brings back those who are really his! The captivity may be prolonged, but restoration follows.

TUESDAY, JULY 17.—EZEKIEL XVII.

The Parable of the Eagles and Vine (1-10).—The first great eagle is evidently Nebuchadnezzar. The cedar of Lebanon the chosen people. Babylon, like London of to-day, is the land of traffic. By this symbol the prophet sets forth the first captivity, in the reign of Jehoiachin, who was taken to Babylon. (5) Thus the setting up of Zedekiah in his brother's place is referred to. Though not a cedar, but resembling the low-spreading vine, there was no reason why Judah should not have been prosperous. (6) Though its branches turned towards Babylon, in token of fealty and subjection. (7) The second eagle is the king of Egypt. The vine thirsted after the waters of the Nile, and sought an alliance with Egypt to its destruction. (8) There was no reason why Zedekiah should revolt from Babylon. (9) He is Nebuchadnezzar, who now would most certainly uproot this vine, and the signs of new life would wither. (10) All the might of Egypt would not avail to avert the doom that must alight on the perfidy of Zedekiah.

Its Application (11-21).—If Judah had been faithful to the oath of allegiance it would have been safe, though humiliated. The judgment of God followed on the violation of the covenant made between Zedekiah and Babylon. This suggests a very solemn thought. God punishes, sooner or later, all covenant-breakers. They wither. It is not necessary that any great power should be brought to bear on them, but gradually they shrivel and die. God pleads with us for our trespass.

The Branch (22-24).—The Jews had hoped for much from the various scions of the house of Josiah. Their hopes had been disappointed. But they would be more than realised in the Branch, who is evidently the Messiah, the highest of the high. All fowl of every wing shall shelter in Him, the majestic eagle and the timid dove alike (Matt. xiii. 32). The high trees of human pride and boast shall be felled, whilst the plant out of the dry ground shall fill the land with glory and fruit.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 18.—EZEKIEL XVIII.

The Just shall Live (1-9).—There was a disposition on the part of the people to arraign the justice of God's dealings. They laid the blame of their sufferings on the sins of others, especially of their fathers. (3) The proverb would pass out of use, because God would make it clear that they were by no means as sinless as they thought or seemed. He would establish the rectitude of his dealings with the people, and that He had not done without cause all that He had done. (4) This affirmation is full of majesty.

The Bad Son of a Good Father (10-13).—A robber, one who breaks through restrictions, and who does to his brother any of the things which follow (see R.V. marg.). The father's goodness is not hereditary, but aggravates the sin of the son. There are degrees of anguish. "It shall be more tolerable," etc.

The Good Grandchild (14-18).—Many a child has been warned by his father's sins, and turned from them. But it is an awful risk. What the parent is, the child tends to be. And surely the hell of the hereafter will be doubly fearful for those who, by their example, have brought their children thither.

An Objection Answered (19-28).—In the opening words the Jews appear to point to the evidence of fact to support their position. Surely, they say, it is so, that children suffer for their fathers' sins. But the prophet rebuts their words. Doubtless, children suffer physically and circumstantially from the misdeeds of their ancestors, but morally and spiritually each stands for himself, and is judged at the bar of God for what he has done, whether it be good or bad. (21) What an encouragement for the backslider to turn! (24) Disobedience cuts a soul off from God, the source of life, and where the flow of the blood is stopped mortification is the result. (26) We may profess and not possess, in which case we shall not continue to the end.

The Divine Appeal (29-32).—To turn from transgression is repentance. The long-suffering and mercy of God are ever leading us in this direction, but it is our part to obey, not resisting his Spirit or receiving his grace in vain. (31) We must be willing to have, but God alone can give (Ps. li. 10-12).

THURSDAY, JULY 19.—EZEKIEL XIX.

A lamentation for the fall of the Royal house. 1*st Strophe* 1-9.—Jerusalem is the lioness. The lion was the ensign of Judah. (3) This is Jehoahaz, carried into Egypt (2 Kings xxiii. 33). (5) Jehoiakim, who imitated the oppression and extravagance of neighbouring peoples. (7) Evidently the young king gave himself up to courses of rapacity and impurity. He made himself possessor of palaces and estates, wrenched by violence from their rightful owners.

2*nd Strophe* 10-14.—Jerusalem was once a flourishing vine, and its princes as fruitful branches. David, Solomon, Hezekiah, Josiah, were numbered amongst them. How evidently these predictions have been realised. The chosen people are now as a vine planted in the wilderness, and there are no strong branches fitted to rule. But the time will come when the Deliverer shall come, who will turn away ungodliness from Jacob, and then they that dwell under its shadow shall return. Times of refreshing shall yet come from the presence of the Lord, which shall make the vine of Israel fruitful, and a praise in the earth.

FRIDAY, JULY 20.—EZEKIEL XX.

The Story of Israel's Rebellion (1-32).—The elders came to know how long the restoration would be delayed. They came in the seventh year of Jeconiah's exile (i. 2; viii. 1). No answer was given because their many rebellions had blinded their eyes and dulled their perceptions (Prov. xxviii. 9; John vii. 17). (4) Instead of gratifying their curiosity, tell them of coming judgment. Four instances of the rebellions of Israel are then enumerated.

(1) In Egypt (5-9).—The up-lifted hand which is here thrice mentioned was the symbol of solemn earnestness and resolve. Evidently Israel had become deeply imbued with the idolatries around them, and had therefore no claim on God, but He wrought on their behalf, because of his covenant with Abraham, and for his holy name.

(2) In the Wilderness (9-14).—At Elim, Rephidim, Sinai, by many differing methods, God appealed to his people; and especially by the Sabbaths and other feast-days. But their repeated murmurings and sins were so grievous as to suggest the necessity of abandoning the attempt to make them holy. More than once, speaking after the manner of men, Jehovah told Moses that He must cut off the people whom He had redeemed. Yet still He wrought for the sake of his holy name.

(3) On the Borders of Canaan (15-26).—The children of those that murmured followed closely in their fathers' footsteps. Notice especially how grievous the pollution of the Sabbath is to God. (21) Let us dwell much on the ever-enduring mercy and patience of God, which have been our lot as much as Israel's. Many a time have we refused his statutes and ways, but He has not turned from us, not because of any claim we had on Him, but because his holy name was in some way involved in our character and life. He could not let it be polluted. (25) And yet there is a limit even to the Divine forbearance and pity. There does come a period in God's dealings with souls, when, as they persistently refuse the better, He allows them to follow the worse and to reap the consequences. (26) But even these are permitted with the purpose of bringing back the wandering soul.

In the Land (27-29).—Bamah was borrowed from the heathen practices. It means high places, and ought long ago to have fallen into disuse.

The Consequences of Israel's Rebellion (30-44).—Their prayers could not be answered until their lives were amended. (32) At the same time they could not be as the heathen. God could not afford to let his sons sink to the level of surrounding peoples. (35) Isolated from all the world, in the horrors of exile, God would plead with them, as He did of old (Hos. ii. 14). (37) They would pass under his rod, as shepherd. (38) They would finally be purged of alloy. (39) Choose between God and idols, but don't halt in indecision. The lukewarm are rejected. (41) The restored soul is filled with an agony of sorrow for the past, and with great conceptions of the unmerited grace of God. (45) Here begins another subject, which should be considered with the following chapter.

SATURDAY, JULY 21.—EZEKIEL XXI.

The Destruction of Jerusalem.—By fire (xx. 45-49).—To Ezekiel, in Chaldæa, Jerusalem lay in the south. Under the comparison of fire, the prophet traces the invasion of Nebuchadnezzar, which should involve all in its terrible flames. By sword (1-17).—(3) God's sword was the Chaldean hosts. (6) We who denounce God's judgments against sin may well sigh with bitterness. We speak of the fate of the ungodly with dry eyes, and therefore they will not take heed. (10) When God's chastisements are abroad it is no time for mirth, but for searching the heart, trying the ways, and turning again to the Lord. (13) "There is a trial." Even the rod, that is the prince, of Israel, would have to submit to it. (14) The stroke would be repeated. It is the sword by which many are slain, even great ones, who are overtaken, not only on the battlefield, but in the chambers whither they had fled. (15) The last clause of this verse is rendered in R.V.: "It is made as lightning, it is pointed for slaughter." (16) The sword is here addressed, and bidden to concentrate itself on its awful mission. (17) God smites his hands as Ezekiel had done (14), in token of his resolve to smite Jerusalem, and his anger was to have unrestrained vent.

The Decision of the King of Babylon (18).—The King of Babylon is depicted as having reached the point where the road forks in two directions. One to Ammon, on the east of Jordan, by way of Palmyra; the other to Jerusalem, by Syria. The two roads come out of Babylon. (21) Jerome says that the Chaldeans wrote the names of certain cities on the arrows of their quivers, and marched against the first name that they drew forth. The liver was the first part of an animal which was examined for favourable or unfavourable signs. (22) The decision is against Jerusalem, as the first object of attack. "To set battering rams to open the mouth (in command) for the slaughter," etc. (R.V.). (23) The Jews would count these divinations as false, because they relied on the pledges of submission they had given (2 Chron. xxxvi. 13). But Nebuchadnezzar would call to mind their failure to keep these vows, and would avenge it. (25) "O deadly wounded one," this is especially addressed to the prince of Judah. (26) "This shall not be thus"—i.e., there would be an end to the royal dynasty, and the power of rule should apparently pass away from David's house. (27) See how the testimony to the Coming One pervades prophecy. And He comes amid the demolition of human pride.

The Fate of Ammon (28-32).—Although the tide of invasion had just engulphed Jerusalem, Ammon's turn must come also. "For slaughter it is furbished, unto the uttermost, that it may be as lightning." (29) The false prophets divined lies; the result would be to add the Ammonites to the decapitated trunks of the slain of Judah. Because of their reproach they were destroyed; so shall those that reproach God's people be no more remembered (Mal. iii. 18).

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

JULY 22.

FLIGHT INTO EGYPT.—Matt. ii. 13-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Psa. cxxi. 8.

As soon as the birth of Jesus is known to Herod, the Child is in danger. Hitherto the wicked king has not failed in any of his cruel and murderous schemes. His success in deceiving "the chief priests and scribes" (4) seems to promise him success in this. The issue of the contest is a great one. Not only the safety of the Child, but the salvation of the world, is involved.

GOD PRESERVES HIM (Golden Text).—Opposition to the Child means opposition to God. The cruelty and craft of Herod can do nothing against Him. The contest is a picture of what goes on still. You and I are on one side or the other. Power may seem to be on the side of the wrong; but ultimate victory must be with God. See how God defeated Herod. (1) By the angel (13, 19). See Psa. xxxiv. 7, and Heb. i. 14. The same helpful ministry is ours, though the angels may be unseen. (2) By Joseph.—Possibly the tidings given him by the Magi had awakened his fears, which were not entirely removed even though the Magi did not return to Herod. This consciousness of danger and need prepared him to receive and to obey the counsel of the angel. His example reminds us that in hearing and obeying God the path of safety will be found. (3) By flight into Egypt (14, 15).—A night journey had its perils; but God defends those who are in the path of obedience to Him. Egypt, once the scene of the oppression of Israel, was now the refuge of Jesus. The road thither took them directly away from Herod. And there they found a large colony of Jews. Tradition says they stayed at Matarea, in the vicinity of Leontopolis. In this event Matthew sees a fulfilment of prophecy. Hos. xi. 1 referred primarily to the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. But that event was typical as well as historical. The Messiah, as the true seed of Abraham, sojourned for awhile in a strange land (Gen. xv. 13). The prophecy has a fulfilment in every converted person. This world is the Egypt out of which God calls us.

THE SLAUGHTER IN BETHLEHEM (16-18).—This story has been disputed because it is not referred to by Josephus. But among the many monstrous crimes of Herod this was a comparatively little thing. The population of Bethlehem was about 2000, and the number of children under two years of age must have been about twenty or thirty. From what we know of Herod's character it is just the kind of deed he would perform. The murderer of his own wife and of his three sons was not likely to stop at the murder of a number of children if his purpose required it. The prophecy which was fulfilled in this event (Jer. xxxi. 15) is again typical. It first refers to the Jews being carried into Babylon, and presents Rachel, the ancestress of Benjamin, as rising from her grave near Bethlehem, and uttering a loud wail which reaches to Rama, where the captives are gathered. As applied to this incident, Rachel represents the mothers of Bethlehem lamenting the sudden death of their children.

There are many Herods to-day who destroy the children. Fashion, pleasure, drink, gambling, these are the foes from which the young need to be protected.

RETURN TO PALESTINE (19-23).—This contains another proof of the golden text. It is again the angel who commands, and Joseph who obeys. God's care appears (1) in the time when they are called to return. Herod did not live long after the flight into Egypt. He died a most terrible death at the age of seventy, after a reign of thirty-seven years. (2) In the place whither they were directed (22, 23). After the death of Herod his kingdom was divided, Judea, Idumea, and Samaria were given to Archelaus: Galilee and Perea to Herod Antipas; Batanea, Trachonitis, and Auranitis to Philip. Edersheim says of Archelaus that "he far surpassed his father in cruelty, oppression, luxury, the grossest egotism, and the lowest sensuality, without possessing the talent or the energy of Herod." Nazareth was situated in Lower Galilee, south of Cana, not far from Mount Tabor. The modern town has over 3000 inhabitants. The prediction (23) is not found in any Scripture, but it is introduced as though it embodied what many "prophets" said. The most probable explanation is that which refers to the description of our Lord as a branch, the Hebrew word being Nazer (Isa. xi. 1), and meaning an insignificant thing. The name Nazer appears in Nazareth, which was a despised city (see John i. 46), and by which Jesus was most frequently called. The name Nazarenes is, in the East, given to Christians to this day. It reminds us of the lowliness of Jesus; and makes the defeat of the powerful Herod to appear the more remarkable. Is it not God's method still to defeat the mighty by what seems to be despised? See 1 Cor. i. 27, 28.

AUGUSTA, THE DORSETSHIRE GIRL.

BY WILLIAM LUFF.

I HAD the history of Augusta from her own teacher, so know its truth. She worked in a rope-spinning factory in West Dorset from six in the morning to eight at night, and would come to the evening Ragged School covered with tow and hemp. She never knew her father, and her mother was very wicked.

One Sunday morning the lesson was on Matt. xxv., "The story of the ten virgins," and when the words were read "And the door was shut," the teacher said—

"I hope no one here will be outside."

Augusta looked, and quietly replied—

"I shan't, teacher."

"Where will you be, then?" she was asked.

"Inside with the Christians, I hope, 'cause I asked Jesus to wash I in his blood, and make I his child, and I know Him will do it."

Augusta believed "it was impossible for God to lie" (Heb. vi. 18). He had said, "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool" (Isa. i. 18); and she knew "He is faithful that promised" (Heb. x. 23). Do you thus believe? "God is not a man, that He should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent; hath He said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" (Num. xxiii. 19).

At another time she said—

"Oh, teacher! I was so unhappy t'other night, 'cause I thought I couldn't go to heaven, I was so wicked. Then I seemed to hear a voice say, 'Yes you will, if you believe in Me,' and I knew 'twas Jesus spoke to me."

"If you believe in Me." Yes; that is how the Bible tells us we go to heaven. "This is his commandment, that we should believe on the Name of his Son Jesus Christ" (1 John iii. 23). "Whosoever believeth in Him shall receive remission of sins" (Acts x. 43). "He that believeth on Me, hath everlasting life" (John vi. 47). "He that believeth on Him is not condemned; but he that believeth not is condemned already because he hath not believed in the Name of the only begotten Son of God" (John iii. 18). "He that believeth not God hath made Him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son" (1 John v. 10).

She turned the wheel for the women to spin all day, but could often be heard singing at the top of her voice,

In heaven above, where all is love,
There'll be no more sorrow there.

Her happiest hour on earth, during the week, was on Tuesday, from eight to nine; she would rush from the wheel to her class, held at that hour, and if they were behind in commencing, would say,

"Keep us vive minutes after nine, teacher; don't 'e let's go short of vive minutes."

One night teacher said to her,

"Do you really love the Lord Jesus, Augusta?"

"Yes, teacher."

"Well, then, you must now try to please Him."

"I do, teacher, for when the hooman that I do turn for cuss me, I don't sass at her."

"Were you saucy before then?"

"Oh, yes, teacher, but I don't now, 'cause I know Jesus wouldn't like it."

Another evening she said:

"Oh! teacher, the policeman comed and had my mother away last night, and only left I and my little brother in the house; we cried a long time, then I got out of bed and kneeled down and asked Jesus to take care of we; and so Him did, for we went to sleep, and in the morning mother comed home, 'cause twadden her that stoled the things."

Some time after this she had to go to the infirmary with a bad foot, and, as the bone was diseased, the doctors decided upon amputation. This she bore without chloroform, and when the nurse spoke a word of pity, she said,

"I can bear it; Jesus bared more than that for I."

Augusta was right—buffeted, scourged, mocked, crucified for her, for me, for you. "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God" (1 Pet. iii. 18). "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows . . . He was wounded for our transgressions. He was bruised for our iniquities" (Isa. liii. 4, 5).

EVENING.

ASLEEP in the sun's departing smile,
The sea and the burnished bay,
The leafy forest, the grassy isle,
And the white sands far away.

'Tis the hour of beauty and love and calm,
When the green earth smiles her best,
With creation singing her summer psalm
At the gates of the amber West.

Yet around are the pangs of love's last embrace,
And the sufferer's dying groan,
And the deep sin-wounds still unhealed by grace,
And penury's bitter moan.

Day after day at the ceaseless wheel,
Morning and noon and night;
Year after year, till the tired brains reel,
Must the hopeless toiler fight;

The dews of morn ere the noontide dries,
The treasureless rainbows fail;
And he looks on his wife with her weeping eyes,
And the children worn and pale.

Have the clouds of sorrow been darkening down
From the mists of a wasted past?
Must the wayward earth suffer heaven's frown,
That the soul may be saved at last?

Yet cheer! for short is the weary way,
And faithful and true the Guide;
And sweet the song of the closing day,
And the light at eventide.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

IN California a society was lately organised twenty miles from a railway town and thirty or forty from a church.

The Philadelphia Union is planning to supplant some of the street car advertisements with more profitable reading, putting up in their place cards with Bible verses.

A Wesleyan society of South Australia held "associate members' object lesson meetings." Every associate member brings some object and repeats a text, illustrated by the object.

The inaugural convention of the South-west District union of C.E. societies was held at Wimbledon on Wednesday, July 4, in the Queen's-road Church (Baptist). Addresses were delivered on "The History of the C.E. Movement," by Rev. H. Tressidder; "The Genius of the C.E. Movement," by Mr. Wincer; and "The Power of the C.E. Movement," by Mr. W. E. Abel. The secretary of the union announced that twenty-seven societies had affiliated.

CHILDREN'S S.S. MISSION.—SEASIDE SERVICES.

The following are the arrangements for the Children's August Seaside Services:—Bridlington, H. Hutchinson, Aug. 7 to 31; Blackpool, S. J. Hewlett; Brighton (West), H. Hankinson, from August 12; Bognor, J. Barnes, D.D.; Birchington Bay, J. S. Tyler, July 15 to 25; Carnoustie, N.B., B. L. Livingstone-Learmonth, from Aug. 13; Colwyn Bay, Martin J. Hall, Aug. 7 to 31; Cromer, E. Arrowsmith, to July 15; Dunoon, N.B., Josiah Spiers; Eastbourne, A. G. Dodderidge, from Aug. 7; Exmouth, P. Welch; Felixstowe, C. F. H. CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Sun., July 15, Ezekiel xv. 1-8; Mon., 16, xviii. 20-32; Tues., 17, Psalm lxxviii. 1-16; Wed., 18, lxxviii. 17-33; Thurs., 19, lxxviii. 34-54; Fri., 20, lxxviii. 55-72; Sat., 21, lxxix. 1-13.

POLICE-COURT RESCUE WORK.—Under the First Offenders Act, magistrates have now a much wider discretion than formerly, especially in dealing with juvenile delinquents, and the metropolitan stipendiaries are happily distinguished for their humane exercise of these opportunities of giving those whose cases seem to call more for pity than punishment "another chance" in life—often, in reality, the first. To assist them in finding shelter and employment for homeless and tempted boys, who seem anxious to lead an honest and industrious life, Mr. Gawin Cummings—well known to many in connection with evangelistic work—has been appointed to attend the police-courts in connection with Mr. Fegan's Homes, to assist the Bench to save the lads. We commend this new development of Mr. Fegan's work to the prayerful sympathy of all God's people.

MR. HARVEY'S LEGACY.

Mr. and Mrs. Dudley Cobb, as their visiting cards said, or William and Jane Cobb, as they were called by their friends, lived in an old-fashioned, gabled house, a few miles out of Guildford. The house and its inmates were thoroughly in keeping—"old-fashioned" would describe to a nicety both Mr. and Mrs. Cobb; and their three quiet, elderly, eminently respectable servants, in their black attire, and with their soft-footed attention, merited the same adjective.

"Gracious me!" cried Mr. Cobb one morning, as he ran his eyes over the contents of the morning paper, "Here's a pretty to-do—here's a nice thing! Poor old Harvey's dead!"

"I wish you'd come to breakfast, William!" cried his wife, from behind the teapot. "You are getting quite irregular in your ways—it is already a quarter past eight. And I do wish you would not be so profane!"

Poor Mr. Cobb turned round in his chair, and stared at his wife; he looked from her cap to her slippers under the table, and then he laughed—not a pleasant laugh for Mrs. C. "Well, Jane, of all the old frumps that ever poured out tea—and they are pretty numerous," continued Mr. Cobb, "you are about the silliest and frumpiest. Profane, indeed!"

Mrs. Cobb did not collapse under this withering sarcasm: she was used to it—in fact, she rather liked it.

"Well," she replied, "you never see or say anything without some profane preface. Just now it was a needless 'Gracious me!' Do you mean anything by it?"

"I don't think I do, when I come to consider it. But, butter me some toast, and don't talk like a book, Jane," said Mr. Cobb, with anything but a defeated air.

Jane did as she was bid—then she began laughing.

"Now, what's the fun?" asked her husband. "At it again?"

By this time you will have found out that Mr. and Mrs. Cobb regarded each other from two humorous standpoints—he tried to joke away her sense of propriety, and she always pretended to be shocked at his want of that sense.

"I was thinking," she said, in reply to his question, and gazing at herself in the silver teapot, "that I do look a 'frump' in this cap. Why do I wear it, William? And is it necessary, now?"

"You wear it, my dear Jane," said William, sententiously, "because your husband is twenty years older than yourself, and because it does for you what grey hairs do for him. But, as he's getting younger every day, and the weight of wisdom is surely ageing you, put off the cap!"

Mrs. Cobb did as her husband commanded, she flung the ancient headgear on the fire, and asked her spouse, "Do I look more modern? What do you think of me, William, with no ornament but my curls?"

"Jane," began Mr. Cobb, "I think you are ——" The compliment, or whatever it was, was never finished. A silent maid entered the room with a tray, on which lay one of those imperative missives—a telegram.

"Gracious me!" cried Mr. Cobb, a second time. "Here's a fix I'm in; here's a nice thing for me, Jane! Got to run up to Harvey's place at once; something about his will. You know I'm one of the witnesses."

"Well, as you are a witness, he cannot have left you anything, I suppose," said Mr. Cobb's wife. "Had he any children?" she asked, in a different tone.

"Well," was the reply, also in a different tone, "I think there was one little bit of a thing. Harvey's wife died a year after her marriage. Well, they're both gone now! Strange it seems!"

Breakfast was soon over, and Mr. Cobb was on the point of starting, when he turned half-seriously, half jokingly to his wife, and said, holding the door ajar the while, "Jane, dear, I won't be 'profane' again if I can help it. But, Gracious me —— There, I've done it again!"

He ran out of the house after that, and his wife watched him through the trim, old-fashioned garden, while a sad expression stole over her face, and tears came into her eyes.

"Oh!" she sighed, "How I wish we both had something more in our lives than we have. We should be so different."

When Mr. Cobb returned to his comfortable home on the evening of that memorable day he was not alone.

Mrs. Cobb was awaiting his arrival at an anteroom window, and she saw, squeezed in between her husband and the coachman in Mr. Cobb's smart little dog-cart, a bundle of life with a big crop of yellow hair. Was it a child? she asked herself.

As Mr. Cobb jumped down from the vehicle, he looked towards his wife, and called out cheerily to her—

"Jane, my dear, I've brought you a new toy—a live one."

Then, turning and lifting the child down, he said, "Now, you two! Come, you know, you must be very good friends, because it is to be a long partnership. Jane, my love, little Horace has come to be our own boy!"

Mrs. Cobb clasped the child to her, and shed a few happy tears on his golden curls. Was he not the answer to her cry of the morning—a "something more" in her life?

"Darling," she said, tenderly, "I want you to love me a little, if you can. I think you have been sent to me."

The child looked with wondering blue eyes into the face of his new friend, and considered soberly a moment or two.

"I shall love you," he said. "And did God send me to you, do you think? I hope He did!"

Mr. and Mrs. Cobb exchanged glances full of meaning.

"I think that is a beautiful thought," said the little lady, "that God sent you. How did you think of it, darling?"

"Well, before my father went to God he told me that no doubt He would send me to kind friends. God always does choose the best things for us, my father said, if we let Him."

"The dear child is right," said Mrs. Cobb; "it is quite true. How is it we never thought of that before, William?"

Mr. Cobb was just about to exclaim, "Gracious me!" when he remembered in time; and pulling himself up, he said, "It is strange, is it not? But we will always try to think of it now. Horace, you must never let us forget it again!"

The child—so suddenly become God's minister to these grown-up persons—looked shyly at them, and said, "I don't think you will ever forget it again if you ask Him to help you. My father said that when once God is in our hearts, He is there for ever, so long as we wish Him there."

William and Jane Cobb felt solemn after that, and in the pause before bed-time, William said to his wife—

"Is it not wonderful, Jane? I feel as if we had an angel in the house. Do you feel like that, too?"

"Yes, a beautiful angel who is to lead us to God. William, we have been very happy; how is it we never thought of Him before? He sent a silent spirit into my heart this morning after you had gone, a wish that we had more in our lives. I never felt so before, and now He has given us the child!"

"Yes," said William, "and this morning you reminded me of my foolish habit of taking his name in vain; it was a preparation. That child must never hear me speak so thoughtlessly of his Father! Poor Harvey left a special request that if we could train his son for Jesus Christ we might have him. I felt I could never do it, but I thought of you, Jane. He is a beautiful legacy!"

"In his little prayer to-night," said Jane, "he asked God to bless his kind new friends, and to help them never to forget Him. And then he added," said Jane, choking down a tear, "that he thought God had sent him to us because we had no little boy of our own."

William and Jane were a different couple from that day. The old-fashioned air, the house, the servants, the habits, the speech, were all ordered and rearranged to suit the sweet young life that was to blossom, and romp, and grow, and bear fruit in their midst, and to open their hearts and their purses, and make them what the Heavenly Father meant them to be—Christ-like.

The child had a strange but sweet fancy: he wanted a plate laid at dinner always for his father, and if any poor creature came to the door during the meal, he would carry out the plate with "a portion for Jesus," as he called it, upon it, and give it to the hungry one for Jesus' sake. Horace was to his new friends a true house-angel, and if you could look in upon them, and see their changed lives, and how they find all joy in living for God, you would better understand the meaning of the words, "Thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

ENCOURAGEMENT IN SPAIN.

Miss E. Lawrence, writing from Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona, on July 2, says:—

"Many of your readers will no doubt be pleased to hear something of our difficulties and encouragements. The enemies of the truth quite expected that the removal of our dear father would mean the total fall of the Gospel work in Caldas. But now, to their dismay, they see that this it not the case. We realise more every day that 'if God be for us,' none can be against us.

"The Romish party, headed by the rector, have been and still are doing their utmost to hinder the spread of the Gospel. They resort to boycotting whenever possible, to prevent parents from sending their children to our school. Some of the rich fanatics have opened evening schools in opposition to ours, and seek by means of presents, lotteries, and so forth to draw our pupils away. The rector preaches very strong sermons against us, warning his hearers to beware of the soft pleasant words of the heretics.

"But in spite of all this the Gospel work prospers. During the winter months our hands have been quite full with the school work alone. We have some very promising pupils under instruction. We are very busy just now preparing them for a public examination, before breaking up at the end of this month. We want to make it an occasion for setting the truth before the many neighbours and others who do not usually attend our meetings. I hope also we may be able to give a little treat to the scholars. We were not able to do so at Christmas, as we had wished, and I think they deserve a little encouragement. Mr. W. Greene, 3, Endsleigh-gardens, N.W., will receive any gifts for this purpose, or for the general work.

"Our public Gospel meetings continue to be well attended. It especially encourages us to see the number of intelligent-looking working men, old and young, who attend regularly, and appear to drink in the Gospel messages.

"Through the kindness of friends, we have been enabled to distribute a good number of large-type Scriptures, and this has greatly helped our work."

AWAKENING AT HAVRE.

The interest in the work of the Salvation Army at Havre does not subside. Long before the meeting begins the hall is filled. When the clock strikes eleven the audience does not move. Who can describe that row of men and women kneeling at the foot of the platform? One officer after another kneels by the side of the seeker; hearts are broken on account of sin, and there is joy on assurance of pardon.

The Maréchale gathered in a room in the sailors' quarters many young women of the "fallen" class. Six girls have left for the refuge in Nîmes, among them a child of seventeen, and another of only fourteen years of age. There is a magnificent opportunity for rescuing scores. We are already known in this sin-blighted quarter, and the girls flock round our officers when taking the invitations to the meetings. In England a hundred times more is done for this class than in France.

Several of the converts are beginning to testify, and it is most refreshing to see how the rags of a religion of form, be it Catholic or Protestant, fall off when Jesus, the Resurrection and the Life, has appeared. We never get home till midnight, the meals are quite a third consideration. All inferior things are sacrificed to the superior claims of a lost world.

The Maréchale, who is pushing the battle, is returning on July 15 to take up this blessed work. Pray for her, and help us at once for Jesus' sake.

WELLS-NEXT-SEA, NORFOLK.—During the summer months, Mr. Chas. D. Judd and other friends conduct open-air services on Lord's day afternoons at this sea-side resort. Earnest Christian workers will be most cordially welcomed to co-operate in these special efforts to reach precious but perishing souls.

"WITHOUT SIN."

Dear Sir,—Will you allow us to offer a few remarks with reference to Mr. Varley's letter on the above subject in your issue of May 10, which has just reached us. We shrink from controversy, and are very unwilling to appear to contradict a man like Mr. Varley, whom God has so used in many parts of the world, including India. But his letter shows—as we venture to think—that he has yet something to learn on the subject of holiness, and even Apollos may be shown the way of the Lord more perfectly, though by such humble persons as Aquila and Priscilla, especially if they can speak as witnesses, and their name is legion. We are constrained to bear our testimony, because we are concerned for those to whom—as it seems to us—Mr. Varley's letter is liable to be a stumbling-block and an injury—an unintentional discouragement to some who are longing for deliverance from sin, and an equally unintentional encouragement to others who, having no great desires after holiness, are only too ready to tolerate the faults that they regard as inevitable.

We might protest against Mr. Varley's hasty method of generalisation from one or two unwise statements of the full salvation which he happens to have heard, such as "I bless God I have not sinned for five years." A crude and unguarded expression like that may be heard once in a way (one of the undersigned never heard it), but is it fair to put such an emphasis on the expression as Mr. Varley does? If he were to go, say, to the Keswick Convention, he would not hear it, but he would hear this—that Jesus is a perfect Saviour, and that in proportion as we abide in Him in full trust and unreserved surrender, He does save us "all the time," which is a very different thing from saying that we have attained to sinless perfection.

We admit all that Mr. Varley says about the danger of having an imperfect conception of the evil of sin, and a lowered estimate of the absolute holiness which God requires. We do not claim to get beyond the constant need of the blood of Christ to atone and the Great High Priest to intercede—though that intercession must surely include more than a plea for forgiveness (see John xvii.). Moreover, we readily allow, and earnestly contend, that full salvation involves growth and progress. But after saying all that, the fact remains that within the realm of consciousness we may be so fully saved as to be "free from sin." It may be helpful, in this connection, to recall Wesley's definition of sin as "the wilful transgression of a known law." Is not that what Paul means when he says, in 1 Cor. iv. 4, R.V., "I know nothing against myself"? and again in Acts xxiv. 16, "Herein do I exercise myself to have always a conscience void of offence toward God and toward men." Within this realm of consciousness we say that, adopting Mr. Varley's sevenfold definition of sin, "the grace of God which bringeth salvation" (1) saves us from conscious lawlessness; (2) saves us from the consenting thought of foolishness, for the shield of faith is worthy of its ancient fame, and quenches all the fiery darts of the wicked one; (3) saves us from wilfully coming short of the Divine glory; (4) inspires us to love the Lord our God with all our hearts; (5) fills us with an intense hatred of sin as sin; (6) produces in us the fruits of righteousness as the occasion arises; (7) prompts and enables us to perform all known and possible good.

In conclusion, we would submit these three questions:—

1. If holiness, in the sense of complete deliverance from conscious sin, is not possible in this present life, why should God mock us by commanding the impossible, by putting within us desires which cannot be gratified, and by teaching us a prayer which He does not mean to answer in the experience of the suppliants, "Thy will be done on earth"?

2. Have any of your readers got a revision of the Revised Version, which reads, "Where grace abounds sin doth much more abound"? Christ gave Himself for us to redeem us from all lawlessness; are we to write "failure" over the purpose, as of a man who began to build, and was not able to finish? By all means we echo Mr. Varley's counsel, "Carefully study Romans vi., especially verses 12 to 19," which verses twice over contain the expression "free from sin."

3. What Scriptural authority is there for saying that full salvation is reserved for the other side of death or of the Lord's appearing? It is on this line especially that we have been re-searching the Scriptures, and we cannot find any indication of any such postponement. We do not read, "Christ in us the hope of holiness," and when Paul prayed that the Thessalonians might be "sanctified wholly," he did not add—in Mr. Varley's dogmatic and sweeping style—"That could never be truthfully stated of any believer on this side the eternal glory"; but "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Thess. v. 23). So that entire sanctification and blamelessness must be intended as a present possession. Mr. Varley is afraid of "pride and self-righteousness," or rather, he charges those offences upon the holders of the doctrine he opposes. There would be ground for the fear and the charge if full salvation were a human attainment instead of a Divine bestowment. But boasting is excluded by the law of faith. All along the line we are "being saved," and our hearts are cleansed and kept clean by the perfecting presence and operation of the Cleanser. God forbid that we should "change Christ for an experience"; we might as well try to change the sun for the sunshine, and so we go on singing:

Jesus saves me all the time,
Jesus saves me now.

If the pebble lying in the clear stream were to say, "I have no dulness," it would deceive itself, and the truth would not be in it; but if the pebble were to say, "I am dull," it would be equally untrue. The pebble is bright with the brightness which the stream puts upon it, and we are "perfect through his comeliness which He puts upon us," and clean with his purity which He works in us.

THY HELP AND THY SHIELD.

The mighty God is ever near,
Whate'er thy need may be;
Thy faintest prayer his love will hear,
The faithful God is He;
The Lord, whose heart doth hold thee dear,
Is pledged to succour thee.

Oh, think not He will leave thee lone!
He guides thy steps aright;
He comes to thee in love unknown
And makes thy darkness light;
Thou art his ransomed one, his own,
And precious in his sight.

He careth for the sweet wild flowers,
The blossoms lowly laid;
His hand supplies through changeful hours
Their wants in sun or shade;
He sends the dew, the silver showers,
To bless the woodland-glade.

The Lord Who for his people made
A path o'er ocean-bed,
The Master who drew near to aid
Where mourners' tears were shed,
The King, whose mercies never fade,
Saith, "Child, be comforted.

"Fear not, for I will hold thy hand,
And lead thee onward still!
And clear will grow the misty land,
And bright the shadow'd hill,
And love will wreath the rugged strand,
Dear child, fear nought of ill!"

The sea of life hath changeful tides,
Yet ne'er to doubting yield!
Rest thou in Him Whose grace provides
For grasses of the field;
Thy God, the living God abides,
Thy Hope, thy Help, thy Shield.

CAPTAIN W. D. CHAPMAN, who recently paid a visit of inspection to the work of the Irish Church Missions in Dublin, writes as follows in reference to one aspect of the Society's operations: "I was aware that the work of the Irish Church Missions was avowedly aggressive, and I rather questioned the desirability of proceeding on controversial lines. One single 'controversial meeting' at which I was present sufficed to put all my prejudices to flight. Although the views of both parties were freely ventilated, there was not the slightest friction. I am satisfied that in carrying on the work on controversial lines, the Irish Church Missions are exercising sanctified common sense."

GENERAL BOOTH'S JUBILEE.

The demonstration at the Crystal Palace on Tuesday week in connection with General Booth's Jubilee afforded remarkable evidence of the fervid love and loyalty with which he has inspired thousands. The preparations for the event had been long and elaborate, and the result more than fulfilled the expectations of the most enthusiastic Salvationist. The spectacular portions of the day's proceedings were entirely successful, while the great assembly of the afternoon was so impressive in its solemnity that no one could come away without a feeling of admiration for the spirit which pervades this missionary body, which, during the past twenty-nine years, has been organised so successfully.

General Booth's estimate of the number present was about 60,000, and he was probably within the mark. For some weeks past streams of Salvationists, of nearly every race, colour, and nationality have been flowing into London from all parts of the world to take part in the jubilee celebration, and they all went down to Sydenham. Their numbers were augmented by others who, travelling all night from different parts of the country, only passed through the metropolis on their way to the Crystal Palace. Thousands upon thousands of uniformed Salvationists were to be seen from early morning till near midnight in the Palace and in the grounds, where canvas encampments were to be seen on every side. The day's programme was long and varied. At seven o'clock in the morning the "order of the day" comprised more than thirty items, and at times there were two or three separate demonstrations simultaneously in different parts of the Palace and grounds. The first event was a march and meeting, the latter taking place in the concert hall, Commissioner Howard presiding.

At the jubilee reception, General Booth was received with an outburst of cheering from his followers. After this reception the day's business began in real earnest. Numerous foreign contingents were to be seen holding their own special receptions and retailing goods of their own manufacture. Near by was a "Darkest England Exhibition," an effective display of the work of the "Social Wing" of the Army. Life among "the Submerged Tenth" was illustrated—not only "the way in," but "the way out"—in a manner to arouse the sympathetic interest of every inquirer into the working of General Booth's social scheme. During the afternoon two great gatherings took place on the orchestra and in the central transept. Subsequently, in a great "Battle of Song," thousands of men's, women's, and children's voices blended in choruses of praise.

For the Solemn Assembly a special "order of service" had been prepared, in which the gathering was referred to as "an assembly of those who desire to meet with God, to hear his voice, to receive his message, to obey his command." . . . The gathering lasted for an hour and a-half, hymns being succeeded by prayers, readings, and exhortations by General Booth. At a given sign every Salvationist turned to the person sitting next with the shout "He is able to save." Then General Booth called upon all who felt they ought to come to God to "go to the pool." Two large squares in the seats in the transept had been reserved as a "pool," to which penitents were invited. The invitation was accepted by some sixty or seventy persons.

Shortly before five o'clock, the signal was given for the great march past and review, which has been one of the most striking features of each year's anniversary at the Crystal Palace. Specially elaborate preparations had been made for this Jubilee occasion, and the mass of enthusiastic Salvationists, waving hats and handkerchiefs, with their red jerseys blazing in the hot sun, and their eager faces lighted up with joy and zeal, was in itself a magnificent spectacle. The varied colours of the costumes of the men and women of so many nationalities, with their silken banners, made the spectacle a most striking demonstration of affection.

A POINTED QUESTION.—David Abeel, speaking at a meeting in Exeter Hall in 1834, challenged the young men in the colleges to join the missionary ranks and asked, Who has given you a dispensation to remain at home while the whole world is calling so loud for assistance?

EVANGELISATION OF ARABIA.

BY REV. S. M. ZWEMER, BAHREIN ISLAND.

Arabia, like ancient Gaul, is divided into three parts, Petrea, Deserta, and Felix. As is the land, so has been its history. The caravan trade, which brought all the wealth of Ormuz and Ind to the marts of the west, left large blessing on the desert, and made Arabia commercially happy. When commerce left the land and chose the sea, the entire peninsula suffered and became, in a sense, deserta. And when Islam triumphed it petrified.

Christianity in Arabia has had only two short chapters; the first is completed, the second has not yet been written full. The first tells of a superstitious, almost pagan, form of Christianity in Yemen, before the advent of Mohammed. The second is the story of Christian missions in Arabia. Physical Arabia is as wonderful in its diversity as is the opinion of modern critics on the ethnology of its peoples. In the far north and along the Mesopotamian valley there are vast fertile plains covered in winter with luxuriant grass, on which flocks of sheep pasture. Brilliant with flowers in spring, all dries dead when the rains cease; then, too, the nomads fold their tents and steal away.

Central Arabia is a tableland two to four thousand feet above sea level, rocky and barren for the most part, and again adapted to pasture and herds or the date palm. The western coast begins with lofty Sinai and extends to the volcanic rocks that give Aden strength. It is, however, low, hot, rainless, and, but for a few oases, nearly barren. The interior rises to become mountainous and desolate, as near Jiddah and Yenbo, or mountainous, well-watered, fertile, and densely populated, as in Asir and Yemen. At Jiddah the highest inland peaks are only two days' journey; from Hodeida it takes six days' climb for mules and ten for camels to reach Sanaà, the capital.

The southern coast line resembles the western, but is altogether more fertile; from Aden to Makallah the country inland produces tobacco, coffee, and gums; from Shehr to Muscat the interior is least known; but Arabs from Sur tell me it is fertile and populous. North of Muscat the coast stretches in rocky heights past Ras Mussendom, Katar, and the pearl islands of Bahrein. El Hassa has low, moist ground where rice grows, hot springs, ancient ruins, and is altogether a remarkable province. From the mouth of the Tigris-Euphrates to the city of Bagdad the land is blessed with wealth of palms, barley, and wheat. Arabia is not wholly a desert, nor is it deserted. The exact population is unknown. Albrecht Jehm, the best authority I know, excluding the Euphrates valley, estimates it at 10,752,000.

Arabia political is a problem on a chess-board waiting solution. The Wahabee game has been left unfinished, and others have tried their hand.

Sinai is Egyptian, and also the two hundred miles south of the Gulf of Akaba. Hedjaz belongs to the Turk, and he also grasps (not holds) Yemen, Asir, El Hassa, and Irak. All the rest of Arabia yields neither love, obedience, nor tribute to the Sublime Porte. The oppressed tribes of Upper Yemen were recently crushed into submission, but do not despair of future revolution.* El Hassa frets like an Arab steed under the yoke of taxation, and Mecca itself dictates at times to the power behind the throne in Constantinople. The tribes near Aden and the entire South coast, including Muscat, are in one way or other under subsidy or "protection" of the English, who rule the gulf and have a voice at Busrah and Bagdad. Wide, wild Nejd bends to the iron sceptre of that greatest Arab of our day, Ibn Rasheed, the Ameer of Jebel Shommar. For the rest, nomads roam the free desert, acknowledging no sultan save their sword; they hold the parliament of war or peace in the black tents of Kedar.

Thus within the last fifty years have the schisms of Islam, the turmoil of nomad rebellion, and the diplomacy of English commerce burst the barriers of the land of Ishmael for the all-conquering Son of Isaac; the very cradle of Islam is almost unveiled for the herald of the Cross. The strategic points for mission effort in Arabia must, from the nature of the case, be first on the coast, and they are six cities—Jeddah, Aden, Makallah, Muscat, Bahrein, and Busrah. Each of these has special claims as being the trade centre of a province, and each has peculiar advantages, and therefore special plea, for mission effort.

Says Doughty, than whom there is no better authority on Arabia Deserta: "All Nejd Arabia east of Teyma appertains to the Persian Gulf traffic, and not to Syria; and therefore the foreign colour of Nejd is Mesopotamian." This statement leaves no question as to the importance of Busrah as a mission headquarters, aside from the demonstration of its claim by the possibility and progress of work recently inaugurated there. Bahrein is under English protection, has a large population peculiarly friendly to foreigners, and has the largest import trade in the gulf. Muscat is the key to Oman and Makallah to Hadramant. Aden is English, and has long since taken commercial prestige away from dead Mocha and bed-ridden Hodeida. If anywhere, then here there should be a strong evangelical mission for Europeans and natives lest the moral corruption of a Port Said be paralleled. Jiddah is the port of Mecca, and (listen again to Doughty), "Jiddah is the staple town of African slavery for the Turkish Empire—Jiddah where are Frankish consuls—OR ALL THE MOSLEMIN ARE LIARS."* The italics are his own, and the statement is true.

Such is Arabia, and such are its natural gateways for good or ill. Where have missionaries been? Where has the Gospel entered? Where has it found foothold? Too brief is the answer, yet not without interest.

Long had the Holy Spirit of missions brooded over the face of this deep before God said: "Let there be light." Long did neglected Arabia wait, but the hour of her redemption is drawing nigh. Space forbids to give data and facts at length.

The British and Foreign Bible Society had sent colporteurs to Jiddah and opened a depot at Aden; the Church Missionary Society proposed a mission to the latter place, and the Baptists (English) to Jiddah about 1884.† But before these proposals were carried out Ion Keith Falconer began his pioneer mission at Sheikh Othman (1885). Why the Scotch nobleman chose this centre for the work, what he did and suffered, and how he entered into glory, every student of missions has read in the memorials of Ion Keith Falconer, by Robert Sinker. [Cambridge, 6th edition, 1890.] It is true that a Roman Catholic mission was founded at Aden in 1840, but the Keith Falconer Mission of the Free Church of Scotland was the pioneer of Protestant effort. Dr. and Mrs. Harpur came to Aden for the Church Missionary Society in 1886, afterwards moved to Dhala, and again to Hodeida, but were obliged to withdraw some time later. In 1856 Rev. A. Stern had made a missionary journey to Sanaà in behalf of the Jews; an American sea captain is said to have carried Scriptures to Muscat annually on his voyages, and there may have been scattered effort before that time. We speak of organised work.

The appeal of Mackay from Uganda for a mission to the Arabs of Muscat (1889), and General Haig's report of his journeys in Southern and Eastern Arabia (1887) were two trumpet-calls to duty. Thomas Valpy French responded to the first, and that broken box of exceeding precious ointment was fragrant from Muscat to the whole missionary world. It was not what he accomplished, but what he purposed, that made the late Bishop of Lahore the Henry Martyn of Arabia. From America, though the paper of General Haig was unknown there, came the reply to the other call for the evangelisation of Arabia. And it was a providential coincidence that one of the missionaries from America to Arabia journeyed with Bishop French to Aden and met General Haig with him at Suakin. The Arabian Mission was organised in 1889. At present it has its headquarters at Busrah, with out-stations at Bahrein and Muscat; in both places there is a Bible and book depôt; work is openly carried on for Moslems, and we number three ordained missionaries, a medical missionary, and seven native helpers. At Sheikh Othman are Rev. and Mrs. Gardner and Dr. Young, of the Keith Falconer Mission, with one native helper; the mission has a dispensary, and a school has been opened. At Aden is the depository of the Bible Society, and Rev. Friedrich Grote, of the German Lutheran Church, is at present, I believe, working independently among the Bedouin of Sinai. This makes a total of seven missionaries and eight native helpers for the whole of Arabia. What are these among so many? The most of the great doors of entrance yet unentered; the vast interior unoccupied; and ten millions of people, WHO ARE NOT INACCESSIBLE, utterly neglected by the vast majority of Christians who believe in missions—neglected in the concert of prayer and in the consecration of men and means. If to the seed of Isaac, "to the Jew first," then surely to that other son of Abraham not last and least.

Arabia pleads for itself. The leadings of God's providence are the promptings of his Spirit. Must we plead with the Church not to resist the Holy Ghost? Darkness needs not to be further demonstrated, it must be dispelled. Misery is its own plea. The Arab is of noble race—Anglo-Saxon of the Orient and unconquered lord of the desert. It is not hard to love him for his own sake; it is the highest happiness to love and labour and live with him for Christ's sake.

Further information regarding the Arabian Mission may be had from General Haig, Redhill, Surrey.

ST. GILES'S CHRISTIAN MISSION.

FINANCIAL CRISIS.

Sir,—I am anxious to bring under the kind notice of your readers the really serious condition of the finances of this Mission.

A sum of at least £1000 is needed immediately to meet the liabilities which it has incurred in carrying on its important work, for—(1) The saving of juvenile offenders from a life of crime. (2) The assistance of wives and children of prisoners undergoing sentence. (3) The reclamation of the criminal and fallen classes generally.

The cost of maintaining four Boys' Homes for Juvenile Offenders, a Men's Home for the better class of Discharged Prisoners, a Home for Fallen Women, and of assisting the wretched wives and children of those undergoing sentence, is necessarily great, and I most heartily trust that this Mission, which has assisted 60,676 discharged prisoners to make a fresh start in life, and which is admitting annually more than 500 juvenile offenders into the protection of its homes, will meet with such sympathy and support from your readers as will prevent the necessity of its operations being materially curtailed.

The work itself is naturally a trying one, and when anxiety regarding funds is added, the strain is very considerable indeed.

Either Mr. William Wheatley (superintendent), 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, London, W.C., or myself will gladly communicate with friends.—I am Sir, yours faithfully, F. A. Bevan, Treasurer.

54, Lombard-street, E.C., July 10, 1894.

[This institution is a national benefit, and its close would be a national disaster. We trust this appeal on behalf of Mr. Wheatley's self-sacrificing and capable work will not be in vain.—Ed.]

THE STRANGERS' REST.

At the monthly workers' meeting on Friday last, Mr. J. Theo. Isaac made an earnest appeal for more practical help and interest in the work of "the Rest." The cost of maintaining this work only amounts to about £300 per annum, and yet there is now a deficiency of £100. More workers are also needed to help in the singing and open-air work on Sundays and throughout the week; also to assist in making and filling the bags. A great deal of unsuitable literature is sent to "the Rest" for this purpose, which takes considerable time to examine and sort.

Mr. Charles Inglis followed with a stirring and helpful address on the seven-fold blessing in Deut. xxxiii., pointing out that the people of God are—A saved people (v. 29), a seated people (v. 3), a secured people (v. 3), a separated people (v. 16), a satisfied people (v. 23), a supported people (v. 27), a sacrificing people (v. 19). Some Christian sailors and others also gave bright hearty testimonies.

At the close of the meeting two ladies promised their help in the singing and filling the bags. More workers are still needed for this happy service, and it is hoped that the deficiency in funds for so valuable a work may soon be covered. M. R.

MR. OSCAR OWERS has commenced open-air services in Hyde Park, making it his special business to observe the words and arguments of the Secularist lecturers in order to supply his hearers with satisfactory answers.

EMSCOTE, WARWICK.—A good Gospel work amongst railway people and the inhabitants generally is being done here in the Railway Mission Hall. Mr. John M. McAuliffe has just closed three days' mission services here, which were well attended and profitable to many.

Letters to the Editor.

EVANGELISATION FOR CONVERSION.

Dear Sir,—At the close of the paper on this subject in your issue of June 28, reference was made to the two objections most frequently met with against the conversion of the world by means of evangelisation—or, in Saxon English, by the preaching of the Gospel, being the will of God, and, therefore, to be kept in view by his servants. One of these, and that the most frequently adduced, is that the Gospel is to be preached among all nations, "only for a witness." The "only" is an addition to Scripture. Thousands and tens of thousands, for whom Christ gave Himself a ransom, are daily "perishing," perishing "without excuse," "without hope," "without Christ," "without God." Surely it is to save them from that abyss that the messengers of good tidings are sent forth.

"The correct view of the case we believe to be this: that there is no real antithesis between the preaching of the Gospel for the conversion of the world, and preaching it for a witness unto all nations. The former indicates the grand end of preaching. The latter, so far from being a contrast, is not properly an end at all, but merely the means by which the designed end was to be effected, and the form in which the preaching was to be conducted, viz., by witness bearing."—[Deus Vult, p. 19.]

The other objection we introduce by a further quotation from the paragraph in your issue of April 12:—"It would be impossible to avoid a feeling of despair if it were the Church's work to convert the world. After a century of missionary work it is estimated that there are ninety-seven millions more heathen to-day than when the era of modern missions commenced." This is an objection very frequently to be met. I ask, has there really been "a century of missionary work" on a scale anything like commensurate with the conversion of the world, whether as regards the fields embraced or the number of labourers sent? To ask the question is to answer it. A strong fortress has to be assaulted and taken. The commander orders the assault. A mere handful of his troops respond; and the body of his army argue that because they have remained in their tents the enterprise must be held a failure; or, that the commander must surely never have intended that the fortress was to be taken by them! After forty years of journeying the Israelites were scarcely any nearer Canaan than when they set out. "We be not able," they said, "to go up against the people, for they are stronger than we." There was failure indeed. Whose? and wherefore? The apostle answers: "So we see they could not enter in because of unbelief." And where is the failure now? In the Gospel of the grace of God, or in the Church which has been put in trust with it? Most gladly do we acknowledge that many of the honoured servants of God, who most strongly hold that evangelisation, not conversion, is what they should keep in view, are far better than their profession. They do aim at conversion, whether at home or abroad.

In view of the supreme importance of the subject, we make bold again to suggest for serious consideration whether there may not have been of late years a forgetfulness of our Lord's teaching regarding the dispensation of the Spirit. "To wait for his Son from heaven" must be the attitude of every one of God's children "till He come." Whenever that is forgotten by them, whenever they cease "to look for Him," the work of the Lord cannot prosper in their hands. But if ever that earnest longing should lead to forgetfulness of the continued presence of the Spirit, can we wonder there should be failure?

There are two sayings of our Lord which seem specially seasonable at this time, and which ought always to be remembered together: "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power." The other: "Can ye not discern the signs of the times?" On the former Archbishop Trench well remarks: "The times (chronoi) are, in Augustine's words, 'ipsa spatia temporum,' and these contemplated merely under the aspect of their duration over which the Church's history should extend; but 'the seasons' (kairoi) are the joints or articulations in these times, the critical epoch-making periods foreordained of God, when all that has been slowly, and often without observation, ripening through long ages, is mature and comes to the birth in grand decisive events, which constitute at once the close of one period and the commencement of another. Such, for example, was the passing away with a great noise of the old Jewish dispensation; . . . such, by still better right [than some others he mentions besides], the Reformation; such, above all others, the second coming of the Lord in glory (Dan. vii. 22)."

In the other passage (Matt. xvi. 3) the word there translated "times" is that translated "seasons" in the passage in the Acts, so clearly discriminated in the words of Trench. How are these to be reconciled? Is it that in the latter our Lord points to certain signs to be discerned—signs which the Pharisees and Sadducees might have read had they not been wilfully blind? And are not such discernible now? That we are fast approaching one of those "critical epoch-making periods foreordained of God, the close of one period and the commencement of another," every thoughtful observer will surely recognise.

Alas, there are not wanting signs of another kind. Far from it. Iniquity abounding, the love of many waxing cold. In the churches, grievous error tolerated and spreading; "among the nations distress, with perplexity, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth," the precursors of a great and notable day of the Lord; the presages of the close of one period and the commencement of another. That that period shall be one of the universal diffusion of the Gospel throughout all nations, there seems every reason to hope. One of the most noticeable signs is the general expectation that largely prevails in important heathen lands. So, also, there is the persuasion among those who have been long workers in the field. Notably is this the case in China. We trust the day is breaking. "All the ends of the world shall remember, and turn unto the Lord." "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."—I am, yours sincerely, D. McL.

Dear Sir,—A correspondent in The Christian of June 28 criticises a remark of yours which appeared in your issue of April 12. He has started a discussion which may be of much service after his second letter has seen the light. There is one thing, however, in his first which it may be advantageous to notice at once. Your correspondent refers to Mr. Spurgeon, that eminently able and holy man, as though his view of the future would almost suffice to sustain his own. He writes as if Mr. Spurgeon's words deserve to settle the point.

This led me to consult Mr. Douglas's admirable volume on "The Prince of Preachers," and on the last page but one I find the following significant statement:—

"In the latter half of his ministry, Mr. Spurgeon became pre-millennial in his convictions; and as time went on, more and more pronounced in his declaration of Second Advent truths." But he did not enter into the details of prophetic truth. He had (the writer goes on to say) no theory with respect to the Book of Revelation.

Like many other able and holy men, he taught that "the Lord would descend from heaven," while having a dim view of what the state of the world would be when the Lord cometh. Your correspondent's quotation makes this clear. It involves the post-millennial advent in spite of Mr. Spurgeon's having become in some sense pre-millennial in his convictions. His admitted failure to study prophecy accounts for this contradiction. I regret to say this of so able and admirable a man—a man so blest of God. But it seems wrong to allow his authority to guide us on this deeply important subject.—Believe me, yours truly, W. Sandford.

THE NAME OF THE LORD JESUS.

My dear Sir,—In your editorial reference to my new book, "For His Name's Sake: A Plea for Reverence," you unintentionally do me a wrong. Your words clearly imply that I am responsible for the line, "Lord Jesus Christ, the thought of Thee," in lieu of the first line of hymn No. 657, in "Sacred Songs and Solos." I never heard of this. The original line, though not poetry, is at least poetical, but the words you quote are prose of the most prosaic kind. It is not often that the exigencies of rhythm and the rules of verse are so entirely in accord as they are here with what I deem to be the claims of reverence. The line in question is intended to be a "four-foot iambic," and it ought to run (like that magnificent hymn No. 44),

O Christ! the very thought of Thee.

And so also the last verse, where the rhythm is again sacrificed to the desire to bring in the personal name.

I will not presume to criticise your criticisms upon my book, but I cannot help regretting, knowing as I do your sympathy with its aim and object, that you should dismiss it by dealing only with the hymn question, which is but a side issue, discussed in an appendix note. And I will only add that if I could accept your very remarkable suggestion, that the name "Jesus" is equivalent to Jehovah, I could no longer content myself with words of gracious appeal to those who seem to me to be guilty of unintentional irreverence. The too-familiar use of the sacred name would then demand nothing less than stern denunciation, on the ground of open and flagrant profanity.—I am, yours faithfully, 39, Linden-gardens, W., June 30. R. Anderson.

[We had no idea of attributing to Dr. Anderson the above alteration. We do not think, however, the hymn could appropriately have begun with "O Christ!" instead of "Jesus." Christ is the official name, Jesus is the personal name. And because the hymn is so personal the writer necessarily, as we think, addresses the Lord as Jesus rather than as Christ.

We are not quite accurately quoted as having said that "the name 'Jesus' is equivalent to Jehovah." We said: "Jesus . . signifies Jehovah—Saviour." Dr. Wm. Smith's Bible Dictionary has, "Jesus—the Greek form of the name Joshua or Jeshua, a contraction of Jehoshua, that is 'help of Jehovah' or 'Saviour.'" In the same work "Joshua" is interpreted "whose help is Jehovah," or rather "God the Saviour," with a reference to Pearson on the Creed, art. ii. Elsewhere Jehoshua is translated "Salvation of Jehovah," or "the Lord saveth," which is remarkably like our own suggestion.—Ed.]

CHRISTIAN UNION BUILDINGS, DUBLIN.

Dear Sir,—You very kindly inserted in your issue for June 28, a notice of the work carried on for the poor in the Christian Union Buildings, Dublin. The free breakfasts referred to are continued winter and summer, and at present are attended by unusually large numbers. The great majority of these are Roman Catholics, to many of whom this is the only opportunity afforded for proclaiming the glad news of a full and free salvation through Jesus Christ.

Mr. R. Cotter has retired from the secretaryship, and has been succeeded by Mr. H. B. Dawson, who has for many years been engaged in similar work among the poor of Dublin.—I am, yours faithfully,

John R. Fowler, Hon. Treasurer.

FISHERMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

A Christian Association for the fishermen of the world sounds rather a bold venture; but who can tell what great and good purposes such an Association may serve, when founded and carried on in simple faith and earnest prayer? The necessity for such a bond of union amongst Christian fishermen was the subject of some considerable thought and discussion at our M.D.S.F. Workers' Conference at Lower Exeter Hall last autumn. Those who know the fishermen best will, I think, admit the correctness of the following three propositions:—(1) Union amongst the Christian men in the fleets means strength to the weak, courage to the repentant backslider, and increased Christian and moral influence over the whole mass of men. (2) Union on shore ought to mean a strong hand stretched out to protect the young convert when he lands, to cheer the one who has passed through many a storm, to welcome home the Christian brother; and we believe it will mean joy in the home, and escape from the awful temptations of the week or eight days in port, so full of peril to many a noble fellow. (3) Union of all Christian fishermen, both on sea and land, means a great moral force to prevent oppression, to help those who are so often made to suffer materially for Christ's sake, and thus to assist our fellow-Christians to come out boldly on the Lord's side.

Like the Y.M.C.A., the Christian Police Association, and other similar organisations, our desire is carefully to avoid interfering with the work of other Christian societies, and to help, as occasion may arise, the work of all the Protestant Christian Churches. When a central committee has been formed, the Association will be governed by its own members, and will become entirely independent of the M.D.S.F. The movement has already been warmly taken up in Gorleston, whilst friends of the Mission are visiting the fleets, and explaining the scheme to the men afloat in the North Sea.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—On Saturday the Young Men's Branch of this Association held a garden party in the grounds of the Stockwell Orphanage. During the afternoon the children of the Orphanage entertained the visitors with chorus singing, handbell ringing, musical drill, etc., and later on the Upton Chapel choir sang selections of sacred music. In the evening a public meeting was held in the new Memorial Hall. Rev. V. J. Charlesworth presided. Rev. W. A. Wills spoke of work in China. Rev. A. T. Teichmann gave an interesting account of schools in India, Rev. G. T. Dann spoke of the Fanning Institution in Delhi, and Rev. Frank Harmon, of Shantung. Rev. J. J. Fuller and others also addressed the meeting.

UNION HALL MISSION.

During the past thirty-four years God has graciously owned and blessed our labours in a very wonderful manner, so that thousands of precious souls have been won to Christ. Many of these are now gathered home to Him, whilst a great number are still happily serving the Lord in this and other lands.

In our Sunday-schools we have 1200 poor children who are regularly taught the great and precious truths of God's Holy Word, and a large number of poor people attend our Gospel services Sundays and week-days. The open-air preaching three or four days in the week is a most cheering feature in our work, and the Lord has given much blessing upon it. The house-to-house visitation, the mothers' meetings, the Bible readings and prayer-meetings, and various other services regularly held, are the means adopted for the spiritual help and instruction of those attending our mission halls. A Special Gospel Mission, continuing for eight days, has just recently been held at Union Hall.

During the present summer we are anxious to use our two Gospel tents in spiritually-destitute localities, where the Gospel is not preached, and we ask help in this very important matter. We are also very desirous that our two Bible carriages should be brought into use, so that the Word of God and good Scriptural literature may be freely distributed among the masses of perishing around us. In former years God has used these means to the salvation of many.

Robert Bilke.

NORTH CENTRAL MEDICAL MISSION.

On behalf of this Medical Mission an important meeting was held at the Shoreditch Town Hall on Friday; Lady Jeune in the chair.

Mr. Arthur Wood gave a pathetic account of the poverty and distress in the poor district of Hoxton, and followed it by telling of the help which the Medical Mission had been to many poverty-stricken homes. But he wanted a house for the sisters of the Mission; and having found one, the rent and taxes of which amounted to £40, he appealed for money wherewith to furnish it, and keep it going for a while. Mr. Wood asked £300 in all, so that he might be spared the necessity of turning from evangelistic work to beg for money. Already £200 had been raised, and he wanted £300 that afternoon.

Archdeacon Sinclair made an earnest and sympathetic speech. He felt that there is ample scope for each Church in this great city. He rejoiced in the good work that Mr. Wood was doing, and thought that he was the right man for the neighbourhood.

Rev. C. H. Kelly followed with a bright, stirring address, warmly defending Medical Missions, which, he said, were the outcome of Christianity. Lady Jeune as firmly upheld the excellence of medical work, believing that it tended to attract the people to spiritual things; people in suffering and sorrow could not be expected to grasp that which was spiritual. But, she urged, turning to the special object of the meeting, while we desired to alleviate the sufferings of the people, we must not lose sight of those who worked amongst them. She strongly sympathised with Mr. Wood's work, and, knowing the neighbourhood well, she believed that he was the right man for his position. Dr. Davis (head of the medical department) next addressed the meeting, after which Mr. Wallis, Rev. W. Puttick, and the Hon. Claude Haye took part.

MISS E. SPICER-JAY writes from Willow Dene, Clapham Park, S.W.:—After two years of acute suffering and prostration, it has been laid on my heart to resume, in addition to my present classes for men, women, and girls, the work for Christ among lads of thirteen to sixteen. With the inevitable needs of an invalid taxing a diminished income, I am no longer able to meet the necessary expenses unaided.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For the Tent mission on Larkin's Estate, High-road, Lee; also for an awakening to spiritual life.—For services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Cinderford, on 15th and 16th July.—For a mission now being held by Mr. Henry Thorne at the Albert Hall, Nottingham.—For blessing during the first mission the village of Milton Lilbourne, Wilts, has ever had, to be conducted by Mr. Rochfort, July 15 to 29.—That great blessing may rest upon open-air work in North London, and especially on five evening meetings in Marquess-road from July 11 to 15. Also on Gospel temperance meetings.—For special meetings by Mr. Henry Varley, at the reopening of City Hall, Salisbury, for religious services, commencing July 15.—For special meetings in Retford.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

A new Association has been formed for the district of Eversley and Finchampstead.

Mr. J. J. Colman has given £1000 as a jubilee contribution in aid of an effort which is being made to free the Norwich building from debt.

New Associations are likely to be formed at Oswestry, Halesowen, and Lichfield. A small Association has been formed recently at Listowel, in co. Kerry.

The East Grinstead Association, which is doing well, is proposing to erect premises of its own. A house has been taken for the recently-formed Association at Hanley.

Mr. W. A. Sunday, so well known in Christian Association work, has resigned his position in the Chicago Y.M.C.A., and will assist Dr. Chapman in his evangelistic work.

The unique photograph of the 2500 Y.M.C.A. delegates and friends who attended the Jubilee meeting in the precincts of Windsor Castle, has been issued, and is pronounced a remarkable success.

The monthly meeting of the National Executive was held on Friday afternoon, under the presidency of Sir Geo. Williams. Encouraging reports of work were presented by the travelling secretaries.

The Croydon Y.M.C.A. Cycling Club and Cycle Mission Band have arranged a tour from Croydon to Sunderland, starting at 8 p.m. on Bank Holiday Monday, August 6, and returning on Tuesday, August 21.

Mr. R. W. Middleton, a former worker in the Adelaide Association, and one who was led to Christ through its agency, has, after spending some time in preparatory study, left for China to join the China Inland Mission.

A series of special meetings for young men have been held at Ipswich by Messrs. A. C. Furse and Evan Hopkins. Definite blessing has resulted. In the early part of October a series of special meetings will be held. Addresses will be given by University men from Oxford and Cambridge. Much blessing resulted from a similar mission last year.

The report of the Brighton Association shows good and fruitful work. Interesting details are given of evangelistic open-air and other services. "Probably the class for Bible study, so many years conducted by Mr. Marriage Wallis, and now carried on by Mr. J. E. Davis, has been the centre of some of the most resultful Christian effort in the Association. Throughout the year, much spiritual power has rested upon the class."

On Monday week an inaugural meeting was held in Bristol to welcome Mr. Frank W. White as secretary of the youths' department. Mr. S. T. Gay (chairman) referred to the growth of the work, and the present satisfactory position. Whilst thankful for the good work accomplished, they all looked for greater results in the future. Mr. White, who was most cordially received, Mr. E. R. Short, and other friends spoke, and several youths took part in the meeting.

THE Y.W.C.A.

A new hall was lately opened for the Y.W.C.A. in Newport, N.B.

The members of the Belfast Institute met on June 28 to say good-bye to one who has been for over six years an earnest worker in their midst. Miss Entrican, who has been the assistant secretary, and who has been specially zealous in the missionary department, has now been appointed by Mrs. Menzies as travelling missionary secretary for some of the northern counties in England.

Our working girls may soon hope to be released from their daily toil for one, two, or three weeks, and we are very anxious that this little break in their monotonous lives should be as happy and restful as possible. Whilst some of these girls are able, by careful hoarding up of the odd pence, to pay the greater part of their expenses, many can only manage the railway fare, and many, many others are so poor that they can only look to us for help with wistful eyes and longing hearts. After a year's imprisonment in close workrooms and noisy factories, they long intensely for a glimpse of the sparkling sea or shady woods, and earnestly do we plead their cause. Contributions may be sent to the hon. sec., Mrs. Smurthwaite, 107, Eaton-terrace, S.W. S.

MR. J. J. BROWNE, L.C. Missionary to public-houses, has just returned from the Burslem Wakes, in the Potteries, where he has been holding services with the vicar, Rev. M. Graham, of St. Paul's. God has greatly blessed the work, and many souls have been won to Christ. We also ask prayer for Mr. Browne's visit to Ireland during July, and that his meetings may be much blessed.

IRISH NOTES.

The Watford Protestant Orphan Society is doing a good work and has had a prosperous year. It has now twenty orphans on its books.

Much sympathy is felt in Ireland for Rev. F. W. Ainley, of the Free Church, Cork, whose wife has just died after a brief illness, brought on, it is believed, by a blow from a stone received during one of the recent open-air services in that city.

The Eastern Reformed Presbyterian Synod, which has just held its annual meeting in Belfast, has had a successful year, and has aided in the support of the Missions to the Jews, and also in North India, the New Hebrides, and the islands of the South Pacific.

A special meeting in support of the Spanish and Portugese Reformation Movement was held at Bray on the 2nd inst. The Archbishop of Dublin presided, and addresses were delivered by the Bishops of North Dakota and Iowa, both of whom bore emphatic testimony to the value and extent of the religious awakening now going on in the Spanish Peninsula.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A suite of rooms has been opened in Paisley for the accommodation of the Y.M.C.A.

Rev. Dr. Parker is to conduct a week's mission in Aberdeen, at the earnest request of ministers of all denominations.

The belief is pretty general that Rev. Dr. Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, will accept the call given him by the High Church, Edinburgh. He is, meanwhile, staying at Crieff.

A District Nursing Association has been formed in Pollokshaws, through the earnest exertions of a few Christian ladies, who have got subscriptions promised amounting to upwards of £100.

The first church built in connection with the secession from the Free Church, because of the Declaratory Act, is to be opened on Sabbath, at Kames, on the Clyde. It is an iron church, and has cost £400.

A number of volunteers have sent in their names with offers of service to the Foreign Missions committee of the Free Church, but the committee is without sufficient means to employ them. It is sad to think that there are men willing to go, and that they cannot be sent simply for lack of money.

More than a hundred have been brought to Christ during the recent revival at Cockenzie, near Edinburgh, and although the attendance has now slackened at the meetings, because the fishermen have gone off to their distant fishing-grounds, the fruits remain in larger gatherings at church and prayer-meeting and Bible-class.

A new Free Church is being erected for the village and district of New Blyth, Aberdeenshire. Ever since the disruption, the worshippers have had as a church simply a house, in the upper story of which the mission preacher has lived, the lower being the church proper, little more than the size of an ordinary room, containing a pulpit and a couple of dozen seats.

The Hamilton U.P. Presbytery recently presented an address of congratulation to the Rev. John Inglis, the senior and much-respected minister of Saffronhill U.P. Church, in which they stated that Mr. Inglis had completed a ministry which no member of Presbytery ever completed before, and had attained an age in life which no member ever reached. A few days afterwards he died at the age of ninety-five.

Dr. Archibald Graham, whose recent death is much mourned over in Edinburgh, was a remarkable Christian worker. He decided for Christ when he was eight years of age, so that he has spent eighty-seven years in the service of his Master. In India he devoted himself very specially to the evangelisation of the Santals, and it is to him we owe the labourer there who has been described as an ideal missionary—Mr. Andrew Campbell. He was for thirty-two years an elder of the Barclay Church, Edinburgh, and a right-hand man to its minister, Dr. Hood Wilson.

MANCHESTER.—At a very interesting meeting of the Manchester Women's Christian Temperance Association and Police-court Mission, held last week, some facts were given that are worthy of notice. At the City Police Court 324 women and girls have been sent to homes, situations, or restored to friends. At the Salford Borough Court over 300 have been similarly dealt with since January last. Over 600 women rescued from a downward course! What noble self-denying labour these figures indicate! At the Retreat for Inebriate Women (under the Act) fifteen cases have been admitted since January last, seventeen have left, and of these latter ten are doing remarkably well; 100 girls in the various city restaurants are now pledged abstainers, twenty having joined since April last.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Ireland.—A very successful five weeks' series of Gospel meetings has been held at Kilmore, co. Down, by Mr. Jas. Miller, who is conducting at present a similar series of meetings at Ballynahinch.

Rev. John Hall, D.D., of New York, is at present paying his annual visit to this country. He is staying at his native place, Mountnorris, co. Armagh. He preached on Sunday to a great congregation.

Mr. J. Wooldridge has entered on his season's tent work. He is now at Sutton, where already indications have been granted of rich result. Last year he worked his tent for twenty weeks with great blessing.

Mr. Opie Rodway has been ill for some time, but is now able to do a little work, though nearly seventy-three years of age. He has been preaching at Raglan, Mon., and at Maindee, Newport, Mon. Next Saturday he goes to Cinderford, where some few years ago over 120 were baptized in less than six months after the meetings.

Rev. Thos. Cook's mission in Pirie-street Wesleyan Church, Adelaide, "was eminently successful, and exemplified the fact that earnestness and power can be manifested without excitement or noise. Mr. Cook appeals both to the understanding and the heart." So says Our Herald, and from other exchanges it is evident that the testimony holds good of the various places visited.

Mr. R. G. Pearson,—Yorkville, S.C., has passed through a great religious awakening. Mr. Pearson has been there nearly two weeks, preaching the Gospel twice a day. The services were held in the large Presbyterian church. It is said that there were over 1500 people in the church on Sabbaths. Scores reconsecrated themselves to God's service, while many unconverted were reached by the Gospel.

Mr. Stephen J. Alexander will visit Allen's Green, near Harlow, and preach special sermons on Sunday. Praise is desired for cases of conversion in connection with meetings addressed by Mrs. Alexander at Bishop's Stortford. Sawbridgeworth, Harlow, Hallingbury, and Hatfield Heath.

Mr. W. R. Lane has during the past week been holding special mission services in Chatsworth-road Baptist Church, Clapton Park, N.E. The results have far exceeded our anticipations. Many lost and erring ones are now rejoicing in the Saviour, and Christians have been especially blessed and strengthened through the services and the preparatory prayer meetings. We are thankful to God for what He has done, and for sending his servant amongst us. Most heartily do we wish him God speed in all his future labour of love for the Master.—W. Moxham, Pastor.

Mr. Henry Thorne has been actively engaged in evangelistic work during the past month at Barnet, Margate, Hastings, and Brighton. At Barnet he formed a committee for the purpose of raising funds to build a hall for evangelistic and philanthropic purposes. At Margate he opened the Hall by the Sea for the usual series of summer services held in connection with Shaftesbury House. At Hastings he preached to a large audience in the Pier Pavilion, and conducted services in the Cambridge Wesleyan Chapel. On the 7th inst. he commenced a mission at the Albert Hall, Nottingham, whence he hopes to go on to Tenbury.

Faversham.—Mr. D. Perry has concluded an eight days' Mission in the Gospel Hall, Faversham. The afternoon Bible readings were much blessed to believers. The Gospel in the evening meetings was a power to salvation. The meetings were well attended. Mr. D. Perry has now gone on a Bible carriage tour through the villages, a work which calls for the prayers and sympathy of all believers, for whilst the towns are privileged by great advantages, the villages are dark, and need the Gospel. The only way to reach these benighted places is by house-to-house visitation and personal conversation, and open-air services on the green.

Dr. Munhall at Mobile, Ala.—For three weeks the Rink has been filled every day with a multitude of people, representing every sect, creed, denomination, and condition in life. The pastors and workers of the various Methodist, Baptist, and Presbyterian churches were for weeks and months making preparation for his coming. Each church and each committee took hold of the matter with zeal. At the mid-day services there was hardly standing room in the Rink. But it was the last meeting that proved to be the grand and magnificent culmination of his three weeks' work. Dr. Munhall later closed a three weeks' work at Carthage, Mo. At the concluding service about 400 converts were present.

Mr. Henry Varley in Plymouth.—The meetings which have been held at St. Andrew's Hall, Plymouth, will be long remembered. The interest has increased day by day, despite the heat of the weather. The Bible studies have been exceedingly helpful. To many fresh light and knowledge have come, and the result has been to establish these in their most holy faith. The evening meetings have shown numbers brought to decision for Christ. Sunday was a memorable day, the building proving inadequate to hold the people. In the after-meeting between sixty and seventy confessed Christ, hundreds of others telling of the blessing received. As a fitting close to these deeply interesting services, the assembled company united in singing most enthusiastically, "All hail the power of Jesu's name." Mr. Varley goes to Tiverton for three days, and will begin a special mission at City Hall, Salisbury, on Sunday next.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Charles Forder, late of Soho Bazaar, is now removed to Mayfield, Sussex, where communications should be addressed.

Misses Peddie, whose late mother was so well known in connection with work in Spain, have removed to 16, Viewforth-terrace, Edinburgh.

Mrs. Amanda Smith greatly delighted her warm friends by appearing at the Central noon meeting, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday, and singing and speaking with her old fire and fervour.

Pastor Rohrbach, of Berlin, is free during July and August to speak on behalf of the Lord's work in Germany. Address, care of Dr. Guinness, Harley House, Bow, E.

Rev. Peter Thompson is still in such a feeble state of health as to excite some apprehension. He is at present unable to discharge his duties at the East London Mission.

Rev. Dr. Stephenson, having returned from America greatly improved in health, preached on Sunday week. The general committee of the Children's Home has a most encouraging report to present to the ensuing conference.

Rev. D. B. Hooke has been elected secretary of the Colonial Missionary Society; consequently, he retires from the editorship of the Independent, as well as from the secretaryship of the Congregational Total Abstinence Association.

Miss Willard writes to the hon. sec. of the B.W.T.A. from the Teutonic:—"We had a hard voyage; head winds and fog, but pleasant weather comes to meet us down the bay, and land winds blow at last. So may it be when we all make the voyage home to God."

Rev. J. C. Harrison, for forty-seven years the beloved pastor of Park Chapel, Camden Town, is far from well, and his health is giving great anxiety to his friends. Special references were made to him at the services at Park Chapel on Sunday. He is upwards of eighty years old.

OBITUARY.

SIR HENRY LAYARD.

The death of Sir Henry Layard, at the age of seventy-seven, has revived memories distinct from those of a political and diplomatic nature. Sir Henry's explorations in the East led to a substantial increase of our knowledge regarding ancient Nineveh and Assyria. His discoveries are among the best-known objects in the British Museum; and Bible students read with great profit his fascinating account of his work.

REV. ROBT. ROSS, D.D., LONDONDERRY.

Much regret is felt in the North of Ireland at the sudden death of Rev. Robt. Ross, D.D., minister of Carlisle-road Presbyterian Church, Derry, and ex-Moderator of the General Assembly, who passed away on Sunday week, aged 69 years. He preached twice in his own church on the preceding Sabbath, but an affection of the heart setting in he passed away. He was an able, logical, Evangelical preacher, and was a kind and sympathising friend and pastor. He took an active part in bringing Mr. Moody to Derry the first time, now nearly twenty years ago, and also took an earnest interest in every movement which had for its object the welfare of the people. He spent his whole ministerial life of forty-six years in the one congregation, which, under his pastoral care, grew from one of the smallest and most obscure to be one of the largest in the city.

THE SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY held a meeting on Friday at 28, Great George-street, Westminster. Including the immediate aiding of 497 cases of shipwreck, distress, and bereavement sanctioned for the past month, the special relief operations recorded at the meeting for the half-year just ended comprised a total of 2478 mariners and fishermen, with 2291 widows and orphans, the number of vessels concerned being 557, and the direct relief issues amounting to the sum of £9091. It was announced that the annual meeting would take place at the Sailors' Home on July 20.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Bishop of London has presented to the House of Lords a Bill to amend the licensing laws.

It is stated that of the 11,000 members of the Blue Cross total abstinence movement in Switzerland, 4000 are reclaimed inebriates.

No fewer than twelve Bills dealing with the sale of intoxicating liquors have been introduced into the House of Commons during the present Session.

When the Queen of Madagascar closed the drink-shops in her kingdom, and the ex-publicans asked for compensation, she replied, "Compensate those you have wronged, and I will pay the balance."

A London committee of the United Kingdom Alliance has been appointed to confer with kindred temperance societies in any combined movements that may from time to time be deemed expedient.

An Albany jury (U.S.A.) awarded 2000 dollars damages to a widow whose husband drank to intoxication in a saloon, and was then run over by a train. The saloon-keeper was held responsible, and had to pay the fine.

Some law students of Gray's Inn who are total abstainers, and have to either eat or pay for so many dinners during each term, are asking to be allowed to take unfermented wine as a substitute for the intoxicating article which is provided, and has to be paid for whether taken or not.

The fourteen special lecturers provided by the Band of Hope Union during the past five years have addressed 13,153 schools, at which 50,000 teachers and 1,390,956 scholars were present, and 571,443 certificates were awarded to children who had written satisfactory reports of the lectures.

Mr. John Morley, replying to a question in the House of Commons, said the conclusion to which the Commissioners on Lunacy in Ireland had arrived was that the consumption of decocted or over-infused tea might, when taken in excess, produce dyspepsia, restlessness, and sleeplessness, and might possibly, in certain subjects, favour the development of insanity.

Lord Wolseley, replying to an invitation to attend a temperance meeting in Belfast, said there are yet some great battles to be fought, some great enemies to be encountered in the United Kingdom, but the most pressing enemy at present was drink. It killed more than all our newest weapons of warfare, and not only destroyed the body, but the mind and soul also.

"Alcohol as a Medicine."—In a calmly reasoned paper (issued by the National Temperance League, price 1d.), Dr. F. C. Coley deals firmly with the popular notions on the use of spirits, shows the danger of prescribing these, and concludes:—"If alcohol is thought to be desirable or necessary for the patient, I would earnestly recommend Dr. Richardson's suggestion—viz., that it should be prescribed in the form of rectified spirit, in a medicine bottle."

Mr. F. C. Selous, the African traveller and hunter, during his twenty years' wandering in Africa, has never taken with him even a medicine bottle of brandy or spirit. From his youth up he never tasted beer or wine or any other intoxicant. The anti-tobacconists will also be delighted to hear that he is proof against the insidious weed. The natives with whom he spent most of his life in Africa never smoke tobacco.—Irish Temperance League Journal.

In a series of addresses on Daniel, Rev. J. Morley Wright dwelt on Belshazzar as a warning against intemperance and profanity. National sins bring national shame and ruin. One of the worst of modern sins is intemperance. As patriots it is the duty of every citizen, and as Christians it is the duty of every follower of Christ, to do their utmost to arrest the mighty evil. While intemperance was a terrible sin and danger in itself, it did not stand alone. In Belshazzar's case it was accompanied by profanity and blasphemy. This also was a terrible evil of to-day. Who had not been pained by it in the office, the workshop, and the street? Let young men frown it down, and let older men rebuke it and stamp it out.

An influential deputation, promoted by the Metropolitan Women's Total Abstinence Union, with representatives from the National W.T.A.U. and the North Kensington W.T.A.U., waited upon Mr. Frye, M.P. (North Kensington), who has recently blocked the bill introduced by Mr. D. A. Thomas, M.P., for "the abolition of the grocer's licence." Lady Elizabeth Biddulph introduced the deputation and laid before Mr. Frye some of the grounds of opposition which women temperance reformers have to grocers selling intoxicating drinks. She was followed by Mrs. Finlay, Miss Docwra, Mrs. Servanté, and Mr. Atherton. Mr. Frye, who had the assistance of his solicitor during the interview, gave his reasons for opposing the bill, and pointed out the ruin to these licensed traders should it become law. To this the deputation replied, showing the greater ruin to souls and bodies through the trade in strong drink.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Dr. Paget, Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, is spoken of as likely to succeed to the See of Bath and Wells.

The Bishop of Chester preached the Annual Sermon at the Foundling Hospital Chapel on Sunday morning.

Canon Ainger, the author of the "Life of Charles Lamb," has been appointed Master of the Temple, in succession to Dean Vaughan.

Mr. T. S. Blofield has been chosen as Organising Secretary of the London Lay Helpers' Association. The members now number 6272.

Revs. E. N. Thwaites and J. Martin Hall gave, last week, before the C.M.S. Committee, an account of their experience during their recent tour in India.

Rev. H. G. Hopkins, of Clifton, York, has exchanged charges with Rev. H. E. Bishop, of Hampreston. Mr. Hopkins will be a great loss to the Evangelicals in the North.

Rev. C. B. R. Hunter, the new vicar of Seaton Carew, is the son of the late Archdeacon Hunter, of Bayswater. He has been for ten years curate to Rev. N. F. McNeile. Great satisfaction is felt at the prospect of the continuity of Evangelical teaching at Seaton Carew.

At the midsummer gathering of the London Clerical and Lay Union, a large number of members, tempted by the delightful weather that prevailed, availed themselves of the kind invitation of Dr. Campbell to pay a visit to the Royal Normal College for the Blind at Upper Norwood, where a most enjoyable afternoon was spent.

Every Sunday, at St. Mary-at-Hill, Monument, after the evening service, conducted by Rev. W. Carlile on evangelistic lines, there is a short meeting at 8.30, specially for the purpose of seeking power from on high. Short addresses are given, and the crying needs of our great metropolis are laid before the people, with the view of stimulating a true consecration of heart for home and foreign mission work.

The annual meeting of the Birmingham Auxiliary of the C.M.S. was held last week in the Town Hall. Rev. E. A. Knox presided. The report showed that £2337 9s. 3d. had been remitted to the parent society. Bishop Hodges gave particulars of the work in his diocese of Travancore and Cochin, in India. Rev. J. G. Watson, who has recently returned from an extensive tour in India, China, and Japan, spoke of China.

A gathering of the Ladies' Home Mission Union, in connection with the Church Pastoral Aid Society, was held in the grounds of Armitage Bridge House, the seat of Mr. Thos. Brooke, J.P., on Thursday, June 28. Mr. Thomas Brooke spoke of the great work which the C.P.A.S. had done in the large and populous parishes around Huddersfield. Miss Lang, of Wakefield, gave an interesting address on the work done by the women workers of the society. Afterwards Rev. W. Odom gave an account of the Society's operations in Sheffield and the neighbourhood.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Boulevard Chapel, Nottingham, has been reopened after renovation.

The Watchers' Band of the L.M.S. has now 453 branches and nearly 14,000 members.

Rev. T. H. Steward Perfect has been welcomed to his new pastorate at Christ Church, Teddington.

At Lozells Chapel, Birmingham, a memorial has been erected to the late Rev. J. T. Feaston, for some years the devoted pastor.

The congregation at Cambridge Heath are looking hopefully for blessing in connection with the coming of the new pastor, Rev. J. R. Richards.

In the Wigan district a Congregational Association, on the lines of that recently established at Manchester, will probably be formed, and a united mission held early in the winter.

Rev. Arthur Hall, who was prevented by an attack of pneumonia from preaching at Mount Pleasant Church, Hastings, on Sunday week, is going on fairly well. The medical report is on the whole satisfactory.

The ordination of Mr. Cullen Reed, son of Rev. Andrew Reed, as an agent of the London Missionary Society to Matabeleland will take place at New College Chapel, Avenue-road, N.W., on Thursday, 12th inst., at 7.30 p.m. Dr. Joseph Parker, Dr. Monro Gibson, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, and others will take part.

Calls.—Rev. C. F. Bryer, of Falmouth, to Nottingham; Rev. F. Sloper, of Greville-place, Kilburn, to Boscombe; Mr. F. W. Pascoe to Dawlish; Rev. J. Irving to Old Gravel Pit, Hackney.

Resignations.—Rev. C. J. Lidstone, of Orange-street; Rev. M. T. Eastwood, of Union-street, Brighton; Rev. S. Harber, of Barkway.

BAPTIST.

Dr. Maclaren intends visiting Chicago University in the autumn of this year.

Rev. W. A. Wicks has received a warm welcome at Christ Church, Six Ways, Birmingham.

New chapels are building at North End, Portsmouth, Far Cotton (Northampton), Teddington.

Rev. J. Lawson Forfeitt and Mrs. Forfeitt left last week by the steamship Coomassie, to resume work at Underhill Station, Congo.

The summaries of the American Year Book for 1894 show the largest gain in membership of the Congregational churches of any year in the denominational history.

Mr. Wm. L. Tweedie, of the Pastors' College, has accepted the call of the church at Cork, and hopes to begin his ministry there on Sunday, 22nd inst.

As the result of services commenced in Malvern Assembly Rooms eight years ago by the Worcestershire Association, a new church has been erected in Abbey-road, Malvern.

At Shortwood Chapel, Nailsworth, after the evening service, in accordance with a custom that has prevailed for ninety years, Bibles were given to twenty senior scholars.

Queen-street, Peterborough, Sunday-school reports 453 scholars and forty-eight teachers. More than fifty scholars are church members; the International Bible-reading Association numbers 316.

Rev. H. H. Pullen, having accepted an invitation from Rev. Edward Clarke to join him in the work of the Spezia Mission, has intimated his intention of resigning his pastorate at Crouch Hill at the end of September.

Rev. J. E. Bennett, late of Lincoln, opened his ministry at Mare-street Chapel, Hackney, by preaching from 1 Sam. iii. 9, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth," and in the evening from 1 Pet. iii. 15. There was a large congregation at both services.

At the annual meeting of Manchester College it was reported that of the £12,000 which it is hoped to raise, £7000 had already been promised. The ministrations of the students at Openshaw have been so successful that the church is now in a position to appoint a pastor, and Mr. Lewis M. Thomas, one of the students, has been selected.

At the annual meeting of Rawdon College it was reported that the income of last year amounted to £1600, and the expenditure to £1900, the balance on the wrong side being increased to £1400, towards which, however, there were promises amounting to £457 and a legacy of £84. The annual address to the students was delivered by Rev. R. H. Roberts, president of Regent's Park College.

Calls.—Rev. C. Hull, of Sussex-street, Brighton, to Hitchin; Rev. F. C. Fuchs, to Selly Park, Birmingham.

Resignations.—Rev. J. Field, of East-street, Walworth; Rev. W. Burnett, of Brasted.

METHODIST.

New chapels have been opened at Woodville, Ashton-on-Ribble, and Colaton Raleigh.

New chapels are being erected at Newton-lane, Wakefield; Linton, Wetherby; Wombourn Common, Stourbridge; and Carlton, Barnsley.

Bishop Andrews, who is to represent the M.E.C. of America at the Wesleyan Conference, preached on Sunday evening at Wesley's Chapel.

The Southport Holiness Convention has, it is stated, exceeded in interest all previous years. At one service there were quite 2000 persons in the tent, and 500 outside.

Rev. J. Howard preached on Sunday week to 1000 people in the dining-hall of the London and North-Western Railway Company's carriage works at Wolverton on the occasion of the Sunday-school anniversary, the church being too small.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rev. J. Thompson, of Westmoreland-road Church, Newcastle, is very ill.

A mission has been opened at Gipsy Hill by workers from Mr. Train's church at Upper Norwood.

There has been a large accession of members at Regent-square Church since Rev. A. Connell became minister.

Rev. Hector Mackinnon, of Ince, was the preacher at the Gaelic service in Crown-court Church, Covent-garden, on Sunday afternoon.

The anniversary of Aston Tyrrold Church has been held. As usual, visitors were attracted from long distances, the anniversary of this venerable Berkshire church—the congregation having a history of over two centuries—being regarded as an event of considerable interest.

Rev. Robert Duff, who for the last seventeen years has ministered at St. George's, Myrtle-street, Liverpool, made known to the Presbytery of Liverpool on Monday that he would accept a call of the congregation of Belgrave Presbyterian Church, London.

Calls.—Rev. J. B. Cantley, to St. George's, Newcastle; Rev. Alexander Whyte, of Duntocher, to Kelvinside, Glasgow; Rev. W. Porter, to Hallside, Cambuslang; Rev. A. Tully, of Hamilton, to Rattray; Rev. W. H. B. Douglas, to Newton Stewart.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

Friends in England will be interested to hear that Rufus P. King, of North Carolina, has received the sanction of his monthly meeting for service in the Gospel in London and Dublin yearly meetings. He visited these islands acceptably years ago.

Dr. Scott F. Hershey, of Boston, U.S.A., says, regarding the new meeting-house in course of erection there:—"It is going to be a modest but beautiful structure, with full equipment. In all this great city no more delightful spot could be had to locate a Quaker meeting-house."

New England and New York yearly meetings have just been held. The efflux of population westwards and the natural conservatism of old meetings tell against Quakerism in the Eastern States. Yet these two meetings are struggling to hold their own and make progress. The means increasingly adopted are evangelisation and pastoral care, which are both Scriptural, and, rightly maintained, are calculated to promote truth everywhere.

The imprisonment of Alfred S. Dyer is likely to arouse a strong public feeling in England in behalf of him and his fellow-prisoners. English Friends are moving in the matter, and no cause they have heretofore espoused has been known to fail. The opium and impurity systems, so pregnant with evil to India and China, are doomed. Deep sympathy is felt for our suffering friends, whose nobleness is winning a moral, and preparing the way for a great legal, triumph.

Among the agencies that have rendered incalculable blessing to the Society of Friends their schools hold a conspicuous place; and the general meetings of Ackworth, Sidcot, Sibford, Lisburn, Penketh, Wigton, etc., just held, show that there is no falling off in interest or spirit in these institutions. In a body of Christians "that has no layman," but where all are priests unto God, a sound general and Scriptural education is essential for the maintenance of truth, and this the Friends aim at more and more. With, it is hoped, increasing success in keeping abreast of the times in a true and sound education.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The miners of Holkonui mine, New Zealand, have given two trucks of coal, valued at £6, to the Salvation Army Winton Festival.

Mr. Ballington Booth has decided upon the opening up of the Hawaiian Islands, situated in the Pacific Ocean. They will be worked by the American Salvationists.

At the opening of the new food and shelter depot at Halifax, Nova Scotia, ex-Lieut.-Governor Ritchie, Rev. D. M. Gordon, and Mr. John Burgoyne spoke at the meeting.

On the night of the assassination of President Carnot a well-known and daring Anarchist gave in his name at Lyons as one desirous of being identified with the Salvationist cause.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

At Richmond-road, Dalston, on 3rd inst., Mr. James Miall, aged seventy-two, for forty years a worker at Queen's-road Chapel.—At Moss Side, Manchester, on 28th ult., Mrs. Charles Bateman, aged eighty-five, widow of a well-known Congregational minister.—At Wotton-under-Edge, on 2nd inst, Mr. John Lawrence, aged eighty-five, well known in Christian circles in Bristol.—In York-street, Marylebone, on 30th ult., Mrs. James Spink, aged sixty, a quiet, earnest worker.—At Harleston, Mrs. Pratt, a devoted leader in Sunday-school work.—At Lewisham, Mr. Henry Hood, aged ninety-eight, actively associated with the Congregational Church from its opening.—At Market Harborough, aged eighty, Mr. W. Gilbert.—At Yeovil, on 1st inst., suddenly, in the Baptist Chapel, Mrs. Hawkes.—At Worthing, Rev. J. S. Sargent, a Wesleyan minister, who formerly did good work at Great Queen-street and elsewhere.—At Lincoln, on 3rd inst., Rev. Isaac Hadfield, Primitive Methodist Superintendent.—At Cardiff, Rev. A. E. Coupe, a Methodist minister.

Notes and Comments.

IN consequence of the publication last autumn of Miss Sutter's remarkable book, "A Colony of Mercy," describing Baron von Bodelschwingh's mastery of the problems of destitution and vagabondage in Germany, a "Christian Union for Social Service" was formed, representative of all denominations, to recommend, and, if permitted, to direct the application of the great object-lesson to the needs of social life in Great Britain. In our next issue we hope to give some particulars of the organisation.

A letter has been published by ten members of the School Board for London, in which it is said:—

The religious instruction under the compromise of 1871 has been received with the almost entire unanimity of the parents in London, and is of a thoroughly Christian character. On the testimony of many teachers, clergy, and others, it is as good as, or better than, that in denominational schools. But, unless vigorous means are at once taken for its defence, it may go to the wall.

We would refer you to the resolutions in favour of its maintenance by the Sunday School Union, the British and Foreign School Society, the Protestant Alliance, the Dissenting Deputies, the Nonconformist Council, the Congregational, Baptist, Wesleyan, and other religious bodies, the representative managers of the Board Schools, and the important meeting of Churchmen and Nonconformists recently held at Sion College, under the presidency of the Archdeacon of London, besides the declarations of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of London, and the Bishop of Winchester.

As a rule, we avoid political and semi-political controversies; but this discussion touches questions fundamental to sound Christian doctrine. While it is not right that the Board should disseminate sectarian teaching, it is highly desirable that it should promote Scripture knowledge. This is emphatically out of the range of denominationalism; it is above it, being of supreme importance; it is greater, because given by inspiration of God. The compromise of 1871 was favourable to this desirable end, and we trust it will be maintained, and prove of lasting good to the rising generation.

When Mr. A. S. Dyer entered the cell in which he was to undergo one month's imprisonment for speaking out boldly in regard to the illegal sale of opium, his first thought was "to kneel down and pray God to use these imprisonments to break up the opium traffic." This is the spirit which has won victories for righteousness in times past.

Mr. T. M. Hudson, who, with Mr. Dyer and Man Sukh Lal, has been sent to prison, made a strong and cogent defence, which is published in The Bombay Guardian for June 23. Therein he vindicates his right as an Englishman and as a missionary to protest against and expose evasion of the law to the injury of the people. He reviews the history of the case, the action of the Government, and the means whereby this action is rendered nugatory in India. He shows the need existing for fearless exposure, and claims that he has established the truth of the article for which he is prosecuted. Those who read the full report of the trial will be likely to agree with Mr. Hudson.

A grave "impeachment" of the action of the Bombay Government has been published in The Methodist Times, which hopes, however, that the writer of the indictment is partially mistaken. Certainly the facts of the case point imperatively to the need for vigilant watchfulness, earnest prayer, and fearless protest on the part of all who love righteousness, and regard the cry of the victims of the opium vice.

In a caustic article which appears in Word and Work, by Mr. A. H. Forbes, who writes as a member of the Church of England, showing the immense Romeward advance in the decade 1882—92, he gives the following figures:—

| | In 1882. | In 1892. |
|---|---|---|
| Clerical supporters of the Romeward movement ... ... ... | (?) | 7000 |
| Ritualistic churches ... ... ... | 2581 | 5043 |
| Churches adopting eucharistic vestments... ... ... ... ... | 336 | 1029 |
| Churches illegally using incense | 9 | 177 |
| Churches using altar lights ... | 581 | 2048 |

These are speaking tables. Mr. Forbes goes on to say:—

If further figures could be ascertained, they would doubtless reveal a similar advance in banners, crucifixes, processions, adoration of the elements, confessions, &c. Now all this can foreshadow but one conclusion, namely, that before many years are over Evangelical teaching will have been crushed out of the Church of England, and that Church will have become a department of the Church of Rome. No rational man can avoid that conclusion. Where, then, does the remedy or the consolation lie, or have we any? Yes, verily, much every way. I am convinced that the people of England will never tolerate a return of this country to Romanism. Of that all Protestants may rest certain.

We wish we could believe this. But we should like to know on what foundation of historical fact such an assurance rests. Only those who are true to Christ have ever stood stedfast against advancing error. At the bidding of the priests the people cried, "Crucify Him!" and the natural heart, Jewish or English, is, like pagan popery, semper eadem.

It has been insisted that the numerical increase of professed Romanists does not keep pace with the increase of population. That may be true, and yet the nation may become familiarised with Romanism, honeycombed with sacerdotalism, ready for an utter collapse of Protestantism when the time has come for Rome to take the ultimate step in her Forward Movement.

The Board of Trade has just issued a book which casts an interesting light upon the habits of the Jews in London. When there is no work doing, or when work is done, the Jew reads the Talmud, or listens to the exposition of it from a raised desk in the middle of the workshop.

This double life of the Jew, the concentration of half his thoughts on material gain, and the other half on his race, its history, and its literature, must be understood, in order to grasp the position he takes in the industrial world. He is thus enabled to survive and find an interest in life under conditions which, to an English workman, would be intolerable, while the continual study, through many generations, of the casuistry of the rabbinical law, in the opinion of those who are entitled to speak with the greatest authority on such a subject, has been no mean instrument in sharpening those faculties which make him so formidable a competitor in industry.

We have heard the shrewdness of the Scotch attributed to their practice of committing to memory large portions of the Book of Proverbs. We have not yet heard of any strong sinew being made in any body of men by the modern newspaper or modern novel.

The Jew, it seems, has a happy way of taking things as they come. "He passes from low wages to high, or from high back again to low, without any risk of demoralisation or loss of heart." Which may be explained by the long period of great vicissitudes through which his people have passed. Hardly any Jews are paupers. Little crime can be laid at their door, less than the average. Few get into trouble through drink or idleness; it is gambling that works among them the most harm. They remain "a peculiar people."

We do not look for the enumeration of lofty principles in most political speeches; all the more gratifying, therefore, are the following words which fell last week from the lips of one of the leaders. We only wish they may always be acted up to by both parties. He said:—

They should attach themselves to public principles, and cast aside personal advantage; they should be careless of whether they remained in office or went out of office; and they should determine to do the right because it was right, without any care as to whether it would be to the advantage of their party or not. Great objects could only be gained by great sacrifices, and the last thing he would say to them was—let them above all things be true to themselves and to each other.

No greater service can be rendered to the State than for a man to work for it from disinterested motives, and although he is sure to be falsely judged by some, he must, in spite of everything, be a purifying and uplifting influence.

Why "liberal"? If a man's theological views are loose, or dim, or directly opposed in some vital points to the truth of the Gospel, why are they to be called "liberal"? Surely some other adjective would be more appropriate. Why not call them loose or uncertain? "Unorthodox" is an adjective which has fallen into disrepute; all the same we want an equivalent for it. Further, why is it "liberal" for anyone to hold lax views on the Lord's day and on such practices as theatre-going? He may be liberal to that self-will which chooses its own way, but ought not such conduct to have another name? Liberality, in loosing Divine claims, and in making the way of God as easy to human nature as that nature may desire, is easy enough and cheap enough from the human side, but is it not indulged in at a serious cost? Those who are liberal with other people's property are not, in the affairs of this world, called by such smooth names. Besides, the converse of "liberal" is always implied in regard to those who do not hold lax views as to doctrine and practice. Is that quite fair? We are reminded of Isaiah's prophecy (xxxii. 5): "The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful."

Dr. Amory H. Bradford writes to The Christian World giving "the other side" of the race-prejudice question, the instances which can be adduced in evidence of a change passing over the feeling and thought of America with regard to Negroes. He relates at some length the honours paid to a young lady in the High School which his own daughters attend. Her face is almost black, she is typical of her race. Her father obtains his living by selling papers and doing the work of a painter, her mother assists in the business. Yet this humble Negro girl, who, like every other girl in the school, is educated at the cost of the State, received the first prize for an essay, and had as much respect paid her as if her skin had been as white as an English girl's. Other instances are given. But the Negroes mostly prefer to keep to themselves, as do the Jews, the Germans, the Scandinavians, and the Italians.

"The Art of Dying," the title of an article in The Nineteenth Century, by Miss J. A. Taylor, is not a happy title. There is no art of dying well; anything of art takes away at once from reality and satisfaction. Had our blessed Lord and Saviour an art? The very question shocks us. All was real; there was no arranging of scenes and sayings. We are tested by facts, and in every pain and anguish of it the crucifixion was a terrible fact. All the love and tenderness and self-sacrifice displayed on Calvary was purely natural, came from the Sufferer because nothing else could come from Him; and similarly, every true Christian who has died has died as He was, without art. "Art is to conceal art"—so elaborate an effort has nothing of the simplicity of faith which just follows the Good Shepherd as He moves forward. Be it through cloud or through sunshine, faith follows to the end, and knows nothing but his faithfulness and love.

Jeremy Taylor did not write a book on the Art of Holy Dying, but on Holy Dying, and whilst we cannot but take exception to a sacramentarian tendency in his teaching, there is eminent wisdom and Scripturalness in much of the way by which he seeks to drive unreasonable fears away from the dying. He says:—

> If the dying man wants some degree of comfort, or a greater degree of hope, let him be refreshed by considering that Christ came into the world to save sinners; that God delights not in the confusion and death of sinners; that in heaven there is great joy at the conversion of a sinner; that Christ is a perpetual Advocate, daily interceding with his Father for our pardon.

And many more such comforting thoughts he suggests. We have to run life's race looking unto Jesus; we shall die best looking unto Him.

> He who dies believing,
> Dies safely in thy love.

The British Medical Journal is shedding light upon a grave social scandal in the use that is made of some houses where massage is practised as a cure. They are traps for the young women who have spent their last penny in learning the art, and who, engaged ostensibly for honest and useful work, are really compelled to submit to a life of sin. If they have conscientious scruples they are discharged. Their pay is nominal, but they are at liberty to accept presents. Our contemporary is of opinion that nothing could be done in the way of registering massage establishments "unless the ground had been previously cleared of what is undoubtedly a great social scandal." Besides the danger to these young women, one cannot overlook the danger to good people who might ignorantly go to one of these houses for treatment. To us it is a new pitfall among innocent things.

Dr. Norman Kerr's book on "Inebriety," almost a re-written edition, gives painful evidence of the infatuation of men for intoxicants. Cocaine is one of the newest kinds. Dr. Kerr says that all cases known to him of inebriety from its use began from the medical prescription of the poison to alleviate severe pain. He describes it as perhaps the most terrible and seductive form of inebriety, from the rapidity with which it breaks down the mental power. Lavender, ginger, antipyrin, eau-de-Cologne, anything that can produce intoxication, comes handy to some persons. Something surely might be done to discourage the weak desire to avoid all pain; our fathers rather boasted of how they could endure it—we of how we can evade it. But in the evasion we are caught with a far worse thing. Sin is worse than pain; yet we do not deny the right use of anæsthetics.

How some men will seek to evade conscience was painfully illustrated in Ireland in the days of the famous Father Mathew, when some pledged themselves not to get drunk on the beverages then in use, but got drunk on ether. A doctor taught them the effects of the new intoxicant. The habit grew apace. The Irishman takes it "neat," and can get drunk on it three times a day for sixpence. It is said that shopkeepers treat customers' children to small doses, and schoolmasters can detect its odour from pupils ten years old. Even a mixture of ether and methylated spirit is not nauseous enough to deter some drinkers. Such instances of degradation, while filling one with shame and almost despair, emphasise the need for the one sure remedy for all sin—faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The doctor may do something for the diseased body, but the thing we should most like him to do is to refrain from recommending the use of intoxicants as medicines or useful beverages.

Evangelisation for Conversion.

We are perfectly in agreement with the writer of the letters on "Evangelisation for Conversion," that the Gospel is preached for the purpose of conversion. We agree with him in denouncing the reading of "only" into Matt. xxiv. 14. We believe with him that the Gospel is to be preached unto all nations for a witness of God's love to the world, and of Christ's propitiation for the whole world, and that God willeth that all may believe and be saved by it. We are persuaded that this is the belief of the great majority of missionaries, whatever their eschatological views may be.

But we are assured by definite Scripture statement that neither in this nor in the coming age will all the world be converted, for this sufficient though dreadful reason, "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life." "Ye judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life." "We are unto God a sweet savour of Christ, in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are the savour of life unto life; and to the other the savour of death unto death." Such was the twofold effect of the preaching of the Gospel by the Lord Jesus when on earth, and by his apostles who, after his ascension, preached the Gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. And from then till now the mightiest revivals have been marked by the rejection of the Gospel by some as well as its reception by others.

It will be the same even when Satan is shut up in the abyss, for during the Millennium, when the wolf and the lamb feed together, and the lion eats straw like the ox, there will be sinners of a hundred years old who die accursed (Isa. lxv. 20). And although then the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, multitudes will yield feigned obedience unto God and to his King (Ps. xviii. 44, lxvi. 3). And at the close, when Satan is loosed for a little season, he will go out to deceive the nations in the four quarters of the earth, whose number is as the sand of the sea, and they will compass the camp of the saints about, and the beloved city, and fire from God out of heaven will devour them. In this age, and in the coming age, so long as man is in the flesh, there will still be some to whom He who wept over Jerusalem will have to say, "Ye will not come unto Me that ye might have life."

The Truth, an able American orthodox monthly, publishes 120 texts showing that "not a converted world but the antichrist will usher in the last time." The writer thus speaks of America:—

> It is strange that good and sensible men can look upon the state of things existing in our own country without alarm. Here is a land hid from the nations of Europe until the Art of Printing and the Reformation. God sent to it the Puritans and the Huguenots, the best seed of earth. He gave to them statesmen with wisdom to lay the foundations of the most beneficent Government the world had ever seen. In climate, soil, extent of territory, wealth, increase of population, and all the elements of prosperity, it has never been equalled. Yet where are we to-day? Anarchy, lawlessness, crime, and violence threaten our national existence. . . . The utter weakness of Congress to cope with the financial difficulties that oppress the people; the rapid increase of murders, suicides, and divorces; the wide separation between the Church and those known as labourers; the condition of the Church itself, honeycombed with infidelity and decaying with worldliness: all betoken that we are on the eve of a disastrous and destructive change, and that the conversion of this part of the world at least is the wildest dream.

This may seem pessimistic, but hear also the lamentation of The Daily Chronicle of last Friday, a Radical organ of political progress and social reform:—

> This is a sorry close of the century for the great Republic which started with such bright hopes, such boundless energy; but it is a close which must have been foreseen by all competent observers of American politics. When money is king and God, when everything is permitted to drift, when the worst elements rule, when hand-to-mouth legislation is devised for the satisfaction of vested interests, when party machines supplant serious political convictions—a terrible dénouement is inevitable. The best we can hope is that stern repression of crime and anti-social teachings will be accompanied by some genuine attempts at reform and national amendment. But we are not too sanguine of this, for the fierce riots of 1877 apparently taught no lessons to the American people. Indeed, since that time things have gone from bad to worse. Apathy and despair seem to have taken hold of the better classes of Americans; and the country is so vast, and the population so heterogeneous, that the social reforms which we find it comparatively easy to carry here, are there for the most part still insoluble problems. We must believe, however, that good will come out of this evil, and that a more serious tone will be imparted to the political life of the American people, who will now perceive that they have precisely the same trouble to deal with that afflict the "effete" nations of Europe, and in an even more complicated form. Meanwhile, we may look for a reign of Conservatism, strong government and reaction, and the disintegration of the forces which make for social reform.

Yes: God will overcome evil with good, but the good will not be settled on a universal and permanent basis until the establishment in resurrection glory of the Everlasting Kingdom of Christ and of God.

THE GROVE MISSION.—The anniversary of this Mission has been held. The report showed that during the last few months there had been sixty-seven conversions. The congregations have increased. The Sisters have a mothers' meeting numbering 300 members. The Sunday-school has an averag. attendance of 150 and 300 morning and afternoone The newest development is a midday prayer union, which numbers seventy-eight members, and many requests for prayer have been answered week by week. The brotherhood is growing, and the young men conduct five meetings in the lodging-houses each Sunday.

Visions of God.—2.

A LIVING creature, fourfold and yet one, a partaker of the divine nature of the living God, with the forces and qualities of the lower creation—the lion's majesty and power, the ox's patient strength and labour, the eagle's keen perception and aspiring flight,—added to the intelligence of man: such was Ezekiel shown that redeemed humanity should be.

Desire and power to rise heavenward, for they four had their faces and their wings;—righteousness of walk and conduct, for "their feet were a straight foot";—loving unity of motion, for "their wings joined and kissed (iii. 16) one another";—oneness and fixity of purpose, for "they went every one straight forward";—life in the Spirit, fulness of the Spirit, obedience to the Spirit, for "whithersoever the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go";—burning with love and shining as lights in the world, for "their appearance was like burning coals of fire and like the appearance of lamps";—undeviating directness of aim, for "they turned not" to the right hand nor to the left hand "when they went";—instantaneous and irresistible execution, for "they ran and returned like the appearance of a flash of lightning";—denial of self and reverence toward God, for "when they stood they let down their wings";—doing all in the name of the Lord Jesus, for "whither the Head looked they followed it" (x. 11, 12), guided by his eye;—loved of the Lord Jesus, and having fellowship with the Father and his Son Jesus Christ, hearkening to the voice of his word, for "there was a voice from the firmament that was over their heads, when they stood and had let down their wings";—identified with and carrying into execution the high and dreadful purposes of the high and lofty One who inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy, for "Behold, one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures . . . as it were a wheel in the midst of a wheel. . . As for their rings, they were high and dreadful . . . and when the living creatures went, the wheels went by them . . . and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up . . . for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels"; *—their whole body full of light, for "their whole body, and their backs, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had" (x. 12);—such were some of the qualifications of the New Humanity, the new creature in Christ Jesus, which shone out on the ecstatic vision of Ezekiel, in uttermost contrast with the rebellion, idolatry, selfishness, stubbornness, and pride of the house of Israel.

Such, in some measure, shall Israel be in that day when they look on Him whom they pierced, and mourn for Him as one mourneth for an only son; when there shall be upon the bells of the horses "Holiness unto the Lord," and the pots in the Lord's house shall be holy like the bowls before the altar; in that day, when He shall create Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy, when strangers shall stand and feed their flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be their plowmen and their vine-dressers; but they shall be named the priests of the Lord, the ministers of our God, to Tarshish and Pul and Lud, to Tubal and Javan, and the isles afar off, that have not heard his fame nor seen his glory; and they shall declare his glory among the Gentiles.

Such, in some real and actual measure, was the Church at and after Pentecost, when they were all with one accord in one place; when they were filled with the Holy Ghost, and spake the wonderful works of God as the Spirit gave them utterance; when great grace was upon them all, and they had all things common; when Stephen turned not to the right hand or the left on his stony road to heaven; when Philip opened Africa, and Paul Europe, to the Gospel of God, because "whither the Spirit was to go they went, thither was their spirit to go."

Such, without measure, shall be the glorified Church of the living God, when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality; when He shall appear, and we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is. "For our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall transfigure the body of our humiliation, that it may be fashioned like unto the body of his glory, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself."

But we walk by faith, and faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. What doth hinder the Church of Christ from realising now, so far as it can be realised in the body, the glorious ideal which Ezekiel saw in the visions of God? Did not He love the Church and give Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing? Are not hor members members of his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all? Is she not invited, and therefore commanded, to be filled unto all the fulness of God? When the day of Pentecost was fully come, were they not all with one accord in one place? Filled with the Holy Ghost, did they not speak the word of the Kingdom, the word of God, with boldness? Did they not with great power bear witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus? Did they not go to prison and to death for his sake? Did not God also bear witness with them, both with signs and wonders, and divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost?

Where are the witnesses? Where is the power? Where is the fulness? Where is the Holy Ghost?

The vision of the living creatures never can be realised except by a people who have left all and followed Jesus; who have hated father and mother, brother and sister, husband and wife, yea, and their own life also, in comparison with the Christ whose love constrains them to live no more unto themselves, but unto Him who died and rose again for them.

This glorious vision can never be fulfilled in a church like that of Corinth, where the saints are carnal and walk as men; where there are envying and strife, contentions, factions, divisions, schisms, sects, heresies; where they say, "I am of Paul, and I of Apollos, and I of Cephas, and" (worst of all in its arrogant assumption) "I of Christ." Where there must be divisions in order that those who are approved among them may be made manifest; where each popular teacher has his following; where the men who are the gifts of the ascended Christ (Eph. iv. 11), and the truths they teach, are turned into idols and worshipped; and communities are called after the names of men, or after special doctrines, which, however true, or forms of church government, which, however important, are not God, nor the Son of God, nor the Spirit of God, who, by the mouth of the holy men of old time, declared that his glory He would not give to another, and that no flesh should glory in his presence.

"Ye are my witnesses," said Jehovah to his Israel of old. "Ye shall receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon you, and ye shall be witnesses unto Me, both in Jerusalem and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth," was Jesus' last word to his disciples before He returned to the Father. His promise was fulfilled in the outpoured Spirit, but his disciples have not taken seriously his command to preach the Gospel to every creature. Consequently the Church is like a machine thrown out of gear. The power is still here in the seven Spirits of God before his throne, sent forth into all the earth; but only so far as we are his witnesses, adequately at home and adequately to the uttermost part of the earth, have we any Scriptural expectation of being united to the power. M.

* The wheel appears to be the symbol of God's wonderful and mighty work. James speaks of "the wheel of nature" (iii. 6). Everything works in circles; everything revolves. The sun hasteth to his place where he arose; the wind returneth again according to his circuits; unto the place from whence the rivers came, thither they return again (Eccl. i. 5-7). The earth turns upon its own axis; the moon revolves round the earth, the earth round the sun; the stars in their courses round some greater sun. The wheel also is the symbol of speed and power. There may be some connection between Ezek. x. 13 (see margin) and Luke iv. 15—"As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O Galgal." "Galilee of the Gentiles—the people that sat in darkness saw great light: and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up." In Galilee the mighty wheel of God's high and dreadful work of salvation first began to roll.

"THOU REMAINEST."

(Heb. i.)

"THOU remainest!" Words of comfort
When earth's happiness is flown,
When, bereft of love and loved ones,
We are left to weep alone.

"Thou remainest!" Precious Jesus,
Thou hast felt the sting and pain;
Thou hast lavished love, and only
Had indiff'rence back again.

"Thou remainest!" Oh, my Saviour,
What true rest those words impart!
Thou alone canst read the anguish,
Know the pain that wrings my heart.

"Thou remainest!" Loving, changeless,
Never failing, ever true.
Jesus, let thy tender pity
Draw my heart to Thee anew.

"Thou remainest!" Let me rest me
In thy love so strangely deep;
Slighted, destitute, forsaken,
Bid me come to Thee to weep.

"Thou remainest!" Say it always,
Till it sets my heart aflame,
Thou wilt never, never leave me,
Thou canst ease this bitter pain.

"Thou remainest!" All have left me,
Dreams of love and happiness;
All have faded, flown, and vanished.
Wilt Thou bless my loneliness?

"Thou remainest!" Thou who lov'st me!
I who longed for love so sore;
Let me know thy love, Lord Jesus,
I have THEE, I ask no more.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.—The Government of Bengal refuse, under present circumstances, to permit Miss Taylor and her party to enter Tibet. Inasmuch as the missionaries are not yet ready to enter, this refusal will not seriously affect them. They are confident that when they are prepared to go the way will be made clear.

A CONFERENCE FOR STUDENTS will be held, August 10 to 13, at Frankfort-on-the-Main. English students and other servants of God would meet with a warm welcome. Application should be made to Pastor Lohmann, Falkenhaf, Bockenheim, Frankfort-on-the-Main. These conferences for students are now held annually, as they supply a need in Germany, but they are as yet small beginnings, and prayer and sympathy from English brethren would be greatly valued.

Living in the Sunlight.

By Mrs. MERRILL E. GATES.

The human spirit hungers for supreme approbation. God alone is supreme. He alone can satisfy the intense desire of approbation within us. The estimate we place upon the approval granted us is measured by the estimate we place upon the person according it to us, and by the entirety of his knowledge of our character. God is the one whom we, consciously or unconsciously, esteem most highly. He it is who possesses the fullest and most entire knowledge of our characters.

That approbation from some source and in some degree is a primal fount of happiness seems very clear to us when we recall those evanescent moments of perfect serenity and unbounded satisfaction which enveloped us like a charmed atmosphere at times in childhood. No such feeling of perfect adjustment to our environment, no such peace and buoyancy, ever visited our childish mind when we were under the ban either of our own or another's condemnation. But such rare felicity of rapture in existence and of high-heartedness in living came only when a sense of approbation lifted the weight of life, making us for the time daring, soaring spirits of the air, expanded, blessed, joyous! These passing sunbursts of exuberant delight amid dark clouds were prophetic of what the clear-shining heaven of God's approbation continually raying down upon us might be to the soul happy enough to live under it.

Beside these early experiences, we find a proof of this fundamental necessity of our nature in the every-day sight of a man who lowers his moral standard to catch the good-will of those beneath him in moral tone. Lower and lower he will go. He must obtain somebody's approval, and if he has forfeited that of the good, he must degrade himself that he may win the base approval of sinners by going beyond them in audacities of evil. It seems to be a law of our being that we must be approved of, loved, praised, in some way, or we are unhappy.

But how can we ever hope, even although the eternities were before us in which to effect it, to attain to the state of being approved by God? He knows our character in its entirety, and knows that it is not worthy of approbation. Is it possible that He can take that complacent pleasure in us which will give us utter and endless satisfaction? Can we expect that approval from Him which expands and amplifies the soul, and enables it to put forth its highest and best activities? Can we expect that glad uplift for the head and that intense delight for the spirit which are the result of approval by our Creator? To be the conscious object of his approbation would be happiness enough for an eternity. God knows this. He made the nature which can rest for its sustenance, support, and highest joy, in nothing less than his approval. He proposes to satisfy the insistent need of our nature. He longs to approve us thoroughly, constantly, and for ever. We long that He should do so. Something stands between these two desires: the desire on his part, and the desire on our part. Something seems ever to prevent our living on the elevation and under the glory and the fine illumination of life which would come from knowing ourselves to be the objects of his supreme approbation. This that stands so forbiddingly between us and that which we desire is sin, and to speak of God's supreme approbation of us, acknowledged sinners, seems almost paradoxical when we remember the holiness which is the essence of God's being.

St. Bernard asked of God no other vision than that of his own sins. But such a vision alone and unrelieved would be to look into the depths of the blackest midnight sky. And we want the vision of a golden, glowing sky, full of the lights of morning and evening tenderness and the noonday thrill of glory and heat. We want the full sunlight of God's supreme approbation, and the vision not of our sins alone, but the revelation of an utter, everlasting, beneficent complacency in us, shown by God Himself, which shall satisfy and empower our whole being, and overflow it with perfect beatitude. Is such a condition possible to us now?

It is. But in order to have it we must take God's view of ourselves, not our own. We must see the mysterious and unsearchable work of Christ for us on the cross in the light in which God regards it. We must believe more profoundly in the ocean-fulness of God's love to us in his Son, which sweeps away our sin until there is absolutely nothing left of it in his sight. We must be so identified with Christ that, in the mighty transfers of values that took place by reason of his death, we see ourselves to be as beloved by the Father as He. In this case as in all others of the Divine ordering, God does the work and we believe in it. This belief is the simple (yet how profound) belief that according to the word of Jesus (John xvii. 23) the Father loves us as He loved the Son. Somehow, somewhere in the depths of a soul-travail that is to fill eternity with its blessed results, God's love to his believing ones was manifested through his Son, and now identification with our Lord brings upon us, dark and deformed as we may be spiritually, a glory as of the seventh heaven, the same glory that God sees in the face of Jesus Himself. Surely if God looks at us as He does at Christ, it must be with supreme approbation.

> When Arthur spake and cheered his Table Round
> With large, divine, and comfortable words,
> Beyond my tongue to tell thee—I beheld
> From eye to eye, through all their order flash
> A momentary likeness of the king.

God beholds on the faces of the followers of his Son, flashing from eye to eye, not a momentary likeness of their King, but the constant, unchanging, eternal likeness of Him into whose image they are changed from glory to glory. A likeness illuminating them now by virtue of Divine transfer from Him who loves us, and to be theirs hereafter not alone by reflected glory, but in an immortal inward and outward realisation of holiness.

If God says that He sees us only in the transcendent likeness of his Son, shall we not simply believe Him and live in unclouded joy that we are so regarded by God? Let us look more steadily at that resplendent righteousness of Christ which attracts the eternal gaze of God, and counting it our own as does He, live in the smile of his supreme approbation.

N. MIDLAND EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The annual report states that tent missions were held through the summer, and during the winter the evangelist (Mr. Neech) was fully engaged with missions in the various churches. At every mission the presence of the Lord was manifest, and much blessing vouchsafed. Mr. Neech is open to take missions. Applications can be made to him direct, or to Mr. Alfred Haley, Grove Hall, Wakefield. The missions held have been channels of blessing. Believers have been awakened to fresh devotion, sinners have been aroused, convicted, and saved. When Mr. Neech was at Wisbech, a woman spoke to him, thanking God that during the tent mission in the Y.M.C.A. Grounds, Wakefield, she was led to Christ.

BERLIN EVANGELICAL MISSION.

Mr. Julius Rohrbach, speaking last week at the Central noon prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, gave interesting details of the work God has put in his hands in the German capital. In the course of his remarks he said:—

For nearly fourteen years it has been my privilege to preach the Gospel in Berlin among a population of about two millions. We had at first great difficulty in winning a hearing, but there has lately been decided progress in this respect. We commenced in Moabit, a suburb first settled by Huguenot refugees, who, driven out by persecutors from their own land, found a refuge in Berlin. Among the hosts of working men now inhabiting this suburb we began work in 1880. The Sunday-school attracted the children, while my wife soon won the attention of women, becoming among the young workgirls a great power for good. Our Gospel services began to be fairly well attended and were blessed of God.

Then we were led to open a second branch in Charlottenburg, the centre of a dense working class population, who live for the most part in utter ignorance of God, giving their whole attention to music-halls, clubs, concerts, and similar amusements, caring nothing for their eternal welfare. In 1885 we began tent-services, and these being much blessed, a little company of believers were soon gathered; hence four years ago we opened a hall seating 600 people. This has now become a centre of active mission-work in many directions. The Gospel is regularly preached to large audiences, while Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, Sunday-school, and temperance meetings are also held.

Besides the work at Moabit and Charlottenburg, we have been led of the Lord to open a branch in the royal city of Potsdam. A dancing saloon was converted into a mission hall, and a good work is now going on, and souls have been saved.

A special feature in the development of the last year has been that of a Training Home for young evangelists. There is a total lack of any such means of training workers. Men are needed to go out and evangelise, but we know not where to obtain them. The seminaries and universities cannot supply them; they have no provision for evangelistic preparation. We want to raise up a Gospel band, and hence this home for training. We have now twenty-five young men, and we yet hope to see them going out with the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We need help in various ways, for as yet the value of such mission work is not realised widely in Germany. During my stay in this land I shall be glad to address meetings on this work. Letters will reach me if sent to care of Dr. Guinness, Harley House, Bow-road, E.

THE PILOT ON BOARD.

Two in a boat are bending
With one will to the oar;
Two in a boat are sending
Thoughts to the homeward shore.
Pulling for aye together;
Watching one beacon light;
In fair or stormy weather,
By morning, noon, and night.

One in the boat is steering;
And when He guides the helm,
With certain course, unveering,
No danger can o'erwhelm.
He knows the way He taketh;
They know his way is best:
Their Pilot's presence maketh
The hardest labour rest.

KINGSWOOD CONVENTION.

A very helpful convention has been held here, Christian workers attending not only from Leamington and Birmingham, but from Stratford-on-Avon, and also many of the surrounding villages. It was a pleasing feature of the gatherings to see the people coming in from the country side and the surrounding districts from several miles round. The ministering brethren, whose teaching of Divine things was much enjoyed, were the Revs. J. J. Luce, J. Houghton, F. Dodds, and C. G. Moore, Messrs. William Lees and John M. McAuliffe. The doctrines of the Atonement of Christ for the sinner, the work of the Spirit for believers for life and service, and the near return of the Lord Jesus for the Church were fully dwelt upon, and very real and definite blessing to many has been given.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

"ON THE POTTER'S WHEEL."

(Jeremiah xviii. 4.)

He fixed thee mid this dance
Of plastic circumstance,
This present thou, forsooth, wouldst fain arrest:
Machinery just meant
To give thy soul its bent,
Try thee, and turn thee forth, sufficiently impressed.
R. Browning.

One day, beneath the impulse of the Divine Spirit, Jeremiah went beyond the city precincts to the Valley of Hinnom, on the outskirts of Jerusalem, where, in a little hut, he found a potter, busily engaged at his handicraft. "Behold, he wrought his work on the wheels." Amid the many improvements of the present day, the art of pottery remains almost as it was as many centuries before Christ as we live after.

As the prophet stood quietly beside the potter, he saw him take a piece of clay from the mass that lay beside his hand, and having kneaded it to rid it of the bubbles, place it on the wheel, rapidly revolving horizontally beneath the motion of his foot driving the treadle. From that moment his hands were at work, within and without, shaping the vessel with his deft touch, here widening, there leading it up into a more slender form; and, again, opening out the lip. So that from the shapeless clay there emerged a fair and beautiful vessel, fit for the Temple court or the royal palace. When it was nearly complete, and the next step would have been to remove it, to await the kiln, through some flaw in the material it fell a shapeless ruin, some broken pieces upon the wheel, and others upon the floor of the house.

The prophet naturally expected that the potter would immediately take another piece of clay, and produce in its yielding substance the ideal which had been so hopelessly marred under his hand. Instead of this, however, to his astonishment and keenly excited interest, the potter with scrupulous care gathered up the broken pieces of the clay and pressed them together as at the first, and placed the clay again where it had lain before, and made it again into another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it. Perhaps this second vessel was not quite so fair as the first might have been, still it was beautiful and useful. It was a memorial of the potter's patience and long-suffering, of his careful use of material, and of his power of repairing loss and making something out of failure and disappointment.

O vision of the long-suffering patience of God! O bright anticipation of God's redemptive work! O parable of re-made characters and lives and hopes! To us, as to Jeremiah, the Divine thought is flashed, "Cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel."

The purport of this vision seems to have been to give his people hope that even though they had marred God's fair ideal, yet a glorious and blessed future was within reach; and that if only they would yield themselves to the touch of the Great Potter, He would undo the results of years of disobedience which had marred and spoilt his fair purpose, and would make the chosen people a vessel unto honour, sanctified and meet for the Master's use.

The same thought may apply to us all. Who is there that is not conscious of having marred and resisted the touch of God's moulding hands? Who is there that does not lament opportunities of saintliness which were lost through the obdurateness of the will and the hardness of the heart? Who is there that would not like to be made again as seems good to the Potter? "But, now, O Lord, Thou art our Father; we are the clay, and Thou our Potter; and we all are the work of thy hand. Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever."

I.—THE DIVINE MAKING OF MEN.

(1) The Potter has an Ideal.—Floating through his fancy there is the vessel that is to be. He already sees it hidden in the shapeless clay, waiting for his call to evoke. His hands only achieve so far as they may the embodiment of the fair conception of his thought. Before the woman applies scissors to her silk she has conceived the pattern of her dress; before the spade cleaves the sod the architect has conceived the plan of the building to be erected there.

So of God with nature. The pattern of this round world and of her sister spheres lay in his creative thought before the first beam of light streamed across the abyss. All that exists embodies with more or less exactness the Divine ideal—sin alone excepted. So of the mystical body of Christ, the Church, his Bride. In his Book all his members were written, which in continuance were fashioned when as yet there was none of them. So, also, of the possibilities of each human life. I know not if we shall ever be permitted, amid the archives of heaven, to see the transcript of God's original thought of what our life might have been had we only yielded ourselves to the hands that reached down from heaven moulding men; but sure it is that God foreruled, foreordained, and predestinated us, each in his own measure and degree, to be conformed to the image of his Son.

See that mother bending over the cradle where her firstborn baby son lies sleeping! How a smile goes and comes over her face, like a breath of wind on a calm summer's day! Why does she smile? Ah! she is dreaming; and in her dreams is building castles of the future eminence of this child—in the pulpit, or the House; in war, or art. If only she might have her way, he should be foremost in happiness, renowned in the service of men. But no mother ever wished so much for her child as God for us, when first cradled at the foot of the Cross.

To be like Christ, the type of perfect manhood; to be as much to Christ as He was to his Father; to reflect the face of Christ on men, as He the face of God; to fulfil the commission of Redemption; to take up the Cross; to be crucified with Christ; to rise and reign with Him—all this is God's ideal.

(2) The Potter achieves his purpose by means of the Wheel.—In the discipline of human life this surely represents the revolution of daily circumstance; often monotonous, common-place, trivial enough, and yet effecting, if it may, the ends on which God has set his heart.

Many, on entering the life of full consecration and devotion, are eager to change the circumstances of their lives for those in which they suppose that they will more readily attain a fully-developed character. Hence, much of the restlessness and fever, the disappointment and wilfulness of the early days of Christian experience. Such have yet to learn that out of myriads of circumstances God has chosen the lot of each as being specially adapted to develop the hidden qualities and idiosyncrasies of each soul whom He loves. Anything else than the life which you are called to live would fail in giving scope for the evolution of properties of your heart and soul, which are known only to God, as are the colours and fragrance which lie enfolded in some tropic sea. Believe that all has been ordered or permitted, because of that which lay entombed within you waiting for his call, "Come forth!"

Do not, therefore, seek to change, by some rash and wilful act, the setting and environment of your life. Stay where you are till God as evidently call you elsewhere as He has put you where you are. Abide for the present in the calling wherein you were called. Throw upon Him the responsibility of indicating to you the change when it is necessary for your further development. In the meanwhile, look deep into the heart of every circumstance, for its special message, lesson, or discipline. Upon the way in which you accept or reject these will depend the achievement or marring of the Divine purpose.

You complain of the monotony of your life. Day in day out, the same round. Year after year, the same path trodden to and fro; no horizon; no space or width; only the same lane of sky between the high houses on either side. What scope is there here for the evolution of noble character! There is no opportunity to meditate and achieve great deeds. Yet remember that the passive virtues are even dearer to God than the active ones. They take the longest learning and are the last learnt. They consist in patience, submission, endurance, long-suffering, persistence in well-doing. They need more courage and evince greater heroism than those qualities which the world admires most. But they can only be acquired in just that monotonous and narrow round of which many complain as offering so scant a chance of acquiring saintliness.

(3) The Bulk of the Work is done by the Potter's fingers. How delicate their touch! How fine their sensibility! It would almost seem as though they were endued with intellect, instead of being the instruments by which the brain is executing its purpose. And in the nurture of the soul, these represent the touch of the Spirit of God working in us to will and to do of his good pleasure. He is in us all, his one purpose being to infill us with Himself, and to fulfil through us "all the good pleasure of his goodness, and every work of faith with power; that the name of our Lord Jesus may be glorified in us, and we in Him."

But we are too busy, too absorbed in many things to heed the gentle touch. Sometimes, when we are aware of it, we resent it, or stubbornly refuse to yield to it. Hence the necessity of setting apart a portion of every day, or a season in the course of the week, when we seclude ourselves from every other influence, and expose the entire range of our being to Divine influences only.

The wheel and the hand worked together; often their motion is in opposite directions, but their object is one. So all things work together for good to them that love God. God's touch and voice give the meaning of his providences; and his providences enforce the lesson that his tender monitions might not be strong enough to teach. Whenever, therefore, you are in doubt as to the meaning of certain circumstances through which you are called to pass, and which are strange and inexplicable, be still; refrain from murmuring or repining; hush the many voices that would speak within, and listen until there is borne in on your soul a persuasion of God's purpose; and let his Spirit within co-operate with the circumstance without. It is in the equal working of these two—the circumstance supplying the occasion for manifesting a certain grace, and the Holy Ghost supplying the grace to be manifested—that the spirit soars, as the bird by the even motion of each of its wings.

II.—GOD'S RE-MAKING OF MEN.

"He made it again." The potter could not make what he might have chosen; but he did his best with his materials. So God is ever trying to do his best for us. If we refuse the best, He gives the next best. If we will not be gold, we may be silver; and if not silver, there are still the earthen and the wood. How often He has to make us again!

He made Jacob again, when He met him at the Jabbok ford; finding him a supplanter and a cheat, but after a long wrestle, leaving him a prince with God. He made Simon again, on the resurrection morning, when He found him somewhere near the open grave, the son of a dove—for so his old name Bar-jonas signifies—and left him Peter, the man of the rock, the Apostle of Pentecost. He made Mark again, between his impulsive leaving of Paul and Barnabas, as though frightened by the first touch of sea-sickness, and the times when Peter spake of him as his son, and Paul from the Mamertine prison described him as being profitable.

I have been told of a gifted son, who, when night has fallen, and his aged father has gone to the early couch of age, comes into the studio where the old man's hands had been busily engaged all day modelling clay, not without some fear that they are losing their skill, and removes all trace of senility or decay. So does God come to our work, when we have done our best and failed; and when men have turned from us with disappointment. He perfects that which concerns us, because his mercy endures for ever, and He cannot forsake the work of his own hands.

Are you conscious of having marred God's early plan for yourself? His ideal of a life of earnest devotion to his cause has been so miserably lost sight of! Your career, as parent or child, as friend or Christian worker, has been such a failure! The grand chord struck in your early vows, at the marriage altar, or on the day of ordination, has been lost beyond recall; and the whole music has been so halting and feeble! For such, science and the competition of modern life have little encouragement. There seems no alternative but to go off into the rear, and let others carry away the prizes that come so easily to them. And into the soul this conviction is burnt: "I had my chance, and missed it; it will never come to me again. The survival of the fittest leaves no place for the unfit. They must be flung amid the waste which is ever accumulating around the furnaces of human life." It is here that the Gospel comes in with its gentle words for the outcast and lost. The bruised reed is made again into a pillar for the temple of God. The feebly-smoking flax is kindled to a flame. The waste products are shown to be of extraordinary value, and yield the fairest colours, or provide the elementary principles of life.

III. OUR ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE GREAT POTTER.

Yield to Him! Each particle in the clay seems to say "Yes" to wheel and hand. And in proportion as this is the case the work goes merrily on. If there be rebellion and resistance, the work of the potter is marred. Let God have his way with you. Let his will be done in you as in heaven. Bear it, even when you cannot do it. Be sure and say "Yes." There are times when we are not conscious that He is doing right. Life is often like the grey aspect of nature in February, when Spring waits just outside the portal, longing to touch all things with her magic wand. It seems as if no one is concerned about "all the miles of unsprung wheat," or responsible for leaf or bud. Yet in myriads upon myriads of graves where seeds lie buried, God's angels are busily at work, rolling away stones, and ushering in the new heaven and the new earth of Spring. So when we have once committed ourselves to God, we must believe that He does not lose a single moment, but is ever hurrying forward the consummation of his ideal.

We cannot always understand his dealings, because we do not know what his purpose is. We fail to recognise the design; the position which we are being trained to fill; the ministry we are to exercise. What wonder, then, that we get puzzled and perplexed! Yet surely it is enough to know our Guide, if we do not know which point He is aiming for in the long chain of hills. He knows all the mountainspasses, and will take the easiest.

There is special comfort in these thoughts for the middle-aged and old. Do not look regretfully back on the wasted springtide and summer, gone beyond recall; though it be autumn, there is yet chance for thee to bear some fruit, under the care of the great Husbandman. In all, He inspires hope. He can turn the battle from the gate; and make the lost iron swim; and replenish the empty pitchers with new good wine; and restore the years the cankerworm has eaten; and make failures into victories. He who was able to transform the Cross from a badge of shame into the sign of victory and glory must surely be able to take the most hopeless, disreputable, and abandoned lives, and make them bloom with flowers heavy with fragrance and full of blessed promise. Only let Him have a free hand. Whatsoever He says, do it, or let it be done. Seek forgiveness for the past, then restoration, and re-making at his hand. Reckon on God, and according to your faith, it shall be done unto you.

HYDE PARK MISSION.

On the evening of Tuesday week the twenty-fifth anniversary of Mr. Charles Cook's Hyde Park Mission was held at Stafford Rooms. Mr. Frank A. Bevan presided. The report said that every meeting held was distinctly spiritual. Mr. Cook had personally dealt with 1050 persons about their souls during the past year, to each of whom, with his wife's help, he had written once, to many more often. During his last visit to America and Canada, with one exception, he met in every village, town, or city, one or more who had been saved through their meetings in Hyde Park, or in the Hall. They had laboured in the neighbourhood for twenty-five years, in the park for twenty-three years, in Hyde Park Hall twenty years, and in the Metropolitan Music-hall in the winter for eighteen years. During that time they have seen persons of fourteen nationalities, besides Jewish brethren, brought to Christ; have an indoor congregation of 2000 people, and at present are preaching Christ every night, five evenings of which are in Hyde Park, and it was an exception for them to leave without seeing men and women definitely brought to Christ.

Some deeply interesting testimonies were given, by a young Jew, two Germans, and a man of forty who had spent twenty years in penal servitude.

The writer of this spent last Sunday afternoon and evening in Hyde Park, and can bear witness to the experience, organisation, excellent singing, and general ability and power, manifest at the stand which Mr. Cook and his helpers have occupied for so many years.

After the Chairman, Mr. T. A. Denny, and other friends had congratulated Mr. Cook on his silver anniversary, £150 was contributed towards £250 necessary for the repair of Hyde Park Hall and other expenses; friends will no doubt supply the rest. The mission otherwise is out of debt.

A visit to the Park is an education: you hear what the people, good, bad, and indifferent, talk about or listen to, on time and eternity, life and death, heaven and hell; on anarchy, socialism, temperance, amusement; and those who want to speak to their profit may profitably listen first to what these numerous orators are saying. ## EVANGELISTIC TOUR IN CHINA.

By Rev. E. S. LITTLE.

Accompanied by Rev. R. O. Irish, I have recently made an evangelistic tour, making for Hu-k'eo. We called our native preachers and colporteurs together, and spent half-an-hour in earnest prayer that God would open our way for us, and bless our visit, to the good of the city. Having packed up our books as conveniently as possible, we made our way to the streets. Here we remained on the tramp backwards and forwards, selling our books and preaching, for six hours. I have visited this city several times before, and always had a more or less rough reception; but God had answered our prayers, and we had a splendid time. We were not crowded, stoned, or struck, and only moderately (if this word can be used in this connection) cursed. I was politely received into many of the shops and stores, and read portions of the Gospels and tracts, and explained their meaning.

At length, thoroughly tired out, and with voice hoarse and weary with all these hours' sustained talk in Chinese, which, according to the testimony of almost everybody, is more wearying to the vocal chords than our Western speech, we retraced our way to the boat to dinner. We had visited every shop and house along the street, offered or sold the Word to every countryman passing by, and stood selling and preaching in the stream of people passing to and from the native theatre, which was in full swing. We sold about six hundred books and tracts. Surely God will acknowledge and bless all these efforts put forth in his name.

After dinner we met again and spent a period in prayer that God would bless all the people who had bought our books or heard any of our preaching. I have long been anxious to obtain a chapel in this place, but cannot get the funds; £120 would give us a splendid site and buildings. To whom will the Lord send a message to pay this money to me for this heathen city without a single Christian place of worship, or, as far as we know, a single believer in Christ? I should think the population of this walled city would be about 25,000 or 30,000.

Continuing our journey up the Lake, we had a very swift current against us, and no wind. The united strength of all of us aiding the boatman, rowing and poling, scarcely moved the boat, so that in half-an-hour we had not travelled a hundred feet. However, we got at last into a little bay a mile or so above and out of sight of the city, and as it was almost impossible to make headway, we decided to anchor for the night. We strolled ashore over the hills; there were but two houses to be seen anywhere in this wilderness. One of these was an opium den for the use of travellers. The other may have been also, for aught I know; I did not inquire. While here a well-dressed literary man, whose name we found to be Cheo, came along, and entered into conversation with us. Of course, we gradually led the talk to the one great theme. Mr. Cheo went with us to the boat, and we sat on some rocks on the shore. Here we read through one of our tracts. I gave him an account of the plan of salvation, and urged him to accept Christ as his Saviour there and then. He asked many questions, of course; these I answered fully, and then, under God's spreading heavens, I led him in prayer that God would bring him to the light. As the sun had set behind the hills, and he had some distance to go, he could not stay longer. I made him a present of several books, and he went on his way. May he find peace in believing in Jesus!

Next morning at daylight we were off again with a little help from a slight breeze, but our progress was very slow. In the middle of the lake was a sampan carrying a Buddhist priest and another man. This we hailed, and entered into an arrangement for him to take us over to a celebrated island, Ta Hai San, while our boat went on to Ta Ku T'ang. Getting into the sampan, we rowed for over an hour the three miles to the island, but in the meantime found an opportunity for preaching Christ to the priest. I asked him questions about his life, and he seemed to be one of a very few honest priests one meets. He said that about twenty-four or twenty-five years ago, when he was over thirty years of age, he left his former home, wife, relatives and all, because he wanted to lead a better life. Now, he said, he took no stimulants, opium, or tobacco, and abstained from meat, leading a celibate life in a temple, and was without any sin of any kind. We told him the story of the Saviour of the world, and very gently and respectfully led him to consider the present and future life, urging him as a true seeker after truth to look to Him who said, "I am the truth." We urged him to come out of the temple and abandon idolatrous worship and return to his own family. Then, in the middle of the lake, I prayed with and for him, and commended him to our Heavenly Father. The native teacher also talked with him, and when I had finished praying he also interceded for the priest. Thus do we sow seed by all waters, knowing that God's Word will not return to Him void.

By this time we were at the base of the rocky island. The name Ta Hai San means the Great Boot Hill, from its resemblance to a Chinese shoe. The island is a great resort for those who have favours to seek from the idols, for it is a renowned Taoist stronghold. Steps have been cut in the solid rock, at considerable labour and expense, to the very summit from the water's edge, and all the way up are shrines containing more or less formidable idols. We saw several in process of making; the ingredients were a few bamboos, half a dozen loads of clay, two baskets of sand, a few pounds of straw, and a little water; these were fashioned together and would then command the reverence of all. The old priest and a few others who followed us up were, I thought, a little ashamed when they saw their idol in all its naked absurdity. I tried to emphasise this. Boats come over from the mainland at all times when the weather permits. We saw men going through the noisy methods of calling the god's attention. Some young women also came to beseech the gift of sons. The aged priest of the place set tea and native sweetmeats before us, to which we did ample justice, for we were hungry and thirsty. We then left him with some tracts and cash.

After an hour's sail and row, we came to our boat, and anchored in the afternoon in the inner harbour of Ta Ku T'ang. Here a crowd collected around us and enjoyed themselves by bullying us. They snatched our books, knocked our hats off, struck, and stoned us. We were considerably jeered at and cursed, but kept on at our work till after dark, when we had sold all our tracts, and only had a few books left. The next morning we went ashore again, and went to all the houses and streets we had not visited the previous evening. We also went to all the brothels and opium dens, and sold our books and preached.

The China Inland Mission have a very prettily-situated house on the top of the hill, commanding a very pleasing view. We called and spent a season of prayer with them. We returned to Kiukiang for our Sunday work. So we sow the seed year after year, and pray the Lord of the Harvest to allow us to gather some sheaves of golden grain.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE MISSION.

We have just returned from a ten days' mission at Malvern Wells, where we have had encouraging meetings in the tent, which we found insufficient to hold the numbers which came together to hear the message of life. We took the two carriages with us, the one standing at Malvern Wells, while with the other, the smaller, we traversed the highways and bye ways day after day.

By this means we reached the villages of Poolbrook, Welland, Hook Common, Upton-on-Severn, Guildford, Hanley, Rhyd, Castlemorton, and Broadwas. We covered 147 miles during the ten days, visited upwards of 100 houses, at each of which we left a Gospel book. In the course of one week we sold, at a reduced rate, 139 bound volumes, such as "Grace and Truth," "Shadow and Substance," "Traveller's Guide"; we cannot estimate what a rich blessing these books may yet become. Let us seek to water, with our prayers, the seed thus sown.

We are anxious to visit several other needy villages during the coming months. It may be that some of the Lord's people would like to defray the cost of a similar mission. We should be glad to give a detailed report to such a one at the close of a mission.

THE STATE REGULATION OF VICE.

ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The conversazione of the Federation against the State Regulation of Vice, which was held last Wednesday, afforded a pleasant opportunity for friends from almost all European countries to meet and exchange greetings. The work of a small handful of devoted men and women against one of the most arrogant and most deadly of modern evils has extended throughout Europe, India, America, and our colonies, and now enrols a wide constituency. The disadvantage of speaking in a language which is known only by a section of the audience was a restraint upon enthusiasm; nevertheless, almost every good point got its due prominence.

The prayer meeting on Thursday morning was full of gracious influence and help. Mrs. Josephine Butler presided, and after reading the account of the passage of the Red Sea, spoke with much insight on the spirit which, resting in God, at the same time goes forward in active service. Very touching was one autobiographical reference to her girlhood. When she was but still in her teens her eyes were opened to see what a dreadful degradation of the idea of marriage and of the home had been perpetrated in the ruin of women. This thought so possessed her that in her north country home she used to wander alone in the woods and fields, pondering it, and would return with her dress bathed in the dews of the night. The atmosphere of her life's work was evidently created, and thrown around her then, although the idea of the work itself was in the future. She had been brought into the state of one who wrestles with God, but not of one who rests in Him. Following her address, earnest prayer was offered for workers, for the poor women victims of vice, and for the men who had fallen into unchastity; our friends, Alfred Dyer and his fellow-sufferers, were commended to the faithful care of God.

The conference itself had to spend a long time in preliminary arrangements, but, once in motion, some direct and concise deliverances were given on the condition of India. Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., stated lucidly the work done and the work needing to be done. The delays and the evasions of the Indian Government to carry out the will of Parliament, and its quiet determination to continue the regulation of vice as long as possible, were forcibly set forth. It has repealed small measures and upheld great and far-reaching ones, thus misleading the popular mind.

Mr. Naoroji, M.P., pointed out that the power of England in India rests on a moral, and not on a military, foundation, and that by the system of regulation we are destroying the very basis of our rule. He exposed the way in which the just demands of his fellow countrymen are set aside, and the ideas of Government officials carried out, too often in defiance of righteousness and truth. The political consequences of this policy were dwelt upon, and a solemn warning given to our country to amend its practices before it is too late. Rev. J. Dymock, delegate with Rev. Dr. Scott from the Free Church of Scotland, reported how the Free Church had decided to oppose State regulation in every place where it (the Free Church) has influence; and instanced how, owing to its representations, regulation had been abolished in Fiji and also in Singapore and the Straits Settlement. Rev. J. P. Gledstone spoke of the readiness and emphasis with which many are now throwing their influence into the scale against regulation, and how promptly they had condemned our Indian cantonments system. It was, he said, a painful, though perhaps profitable and useful, thing for them as English people to see themselves as they appeared to the eyes of Indians, and as Mr. Naoroji had described them. The difficulty was the official class, and a prayer meeting for their conversion might be of great use. There were good officials, no doubt, but it was an astounding thing to reflect that Alfred Dyer is in prison, and other good men with him, because he had dared to uphold righteousness. If officialism had done that to him, would it spare even Mrs. Butler if she were in India, and it could get hold of her? These remarks were warmly applauded.

Reports were read from various countries, giving an account of the progress of reform, and before the morning session ended, Mrs. Butler, whose rising was greeted with ringing cheers, suggested that a resolution of sympathy with Mr. Dyer should be passed. The president asked her not only to move such a resolution, but also to put it to the conference. This she did, with the observations that although Mr. Dyer was actually in prison for his action in regard to the opium trade, he was one of the most earnest and self-sacrificing opponents of regulation, and well deserved the sympathy of the Conference.

At the afternoon session, M. H. Pierson, of Holland, presided, and gave an interesting account of how the work had advanced in his own country, several cities, some of them important, having abolished regulation, and the Young Men's Midnight Mission, which seeks the deliverance of young men from immoral habits, having achieved a great amount of direct good, and having also created a deep impression on society generally. At one place a brothel had been turned into an evangelistic station, and its keeper had been turned from sinful practices. The police were here, as everywhere, one great difficulty. One main point of the conference was the announcement that the Roman Catholics of Belgium had decided, as well as the Protestants, to oppose the regulation. An address had been sent from the whole of the Roman Catholic Episcopate of Belgium, praying the Pope to use his influence against regulation. A few sentences may be quoted: "The fact of the attempt to regulate vice implies a sanction given to the monstrous theory of a necessary evil, it incites young men to immorality, and strikes a fatal blow to the dignity of humanity by compelling a multitude to endure the deepest of all insults. It is a slave-trade, it is a slavery more revolting than that of the negroes. The woman who is inscribed in the register of the Police des Mœurs is enslaved and enchained to an impure and hateful trade, fatal alike to the soul and body. The system imperils the public health under the pretence of guarantees which are a deceit, but also to obscure most elementary principles of right and wrong by sacrificing those principles to the gross gratifications of selfishness. To make an end of patented prostitution would be to attack immorality in its beginnings."

Mr. A. M. Powell, of New York, had a story of vigilance to tell which was full of warning. Various cities, acting on their municipal rights, are giving a quasi recognition to regulation. In Omaha as much as 24,000 dollars per year had been paid by keepers of bad houses and by fallen women to the town, and it had been applied to purposes of public education. The children paid for out of the market of vice! The lumber camps of Michigan, which Dr. Kate Bushnell had exposed, were again the home of shameful practices. Everywhere there was danger from the police; in some cases they actually were the "regulators," and held and exercised the power, and the spoils of the system corrupted city life. Nevertheless, vigilance committees were in operation almost everywhere.

On Friday, Mrs. Butler, who was to have presided, felt herself unequal to the task, and only spoke a few words on the greater ability of women to understand the proposals for the treatment of disease which would come before the Conference. She mentioned one lady in Norway who had already won all the women to the right side, and gave promise, if she continued steadfast, of also winning the men. Professor Stuart, M.P., pointed out that the principles of the Federation were against all compulsory examination of women, because, in any form, it amounted to legalisation of vice, and was unjust to women. All attempts in England to carry any such method had been opposed and defeated. He could easily understand how in countries which did not quite grasp Federation principles, and which had not advanced so far as England in the contention against all regulation, it might still seem possible to form some feasible plan of dealing with the disease. No such plan, however, had ever been discovered, or, he believed, could be framed. Mr. Stansfeld, M.P., analysed the proposals of Dr. Getz, of Norway, for the checking of debauchery and the disease that springs from it, and condemned them as certain only to amount to regulation in its worst and most objectionable form. This analysis was marked by all the knowledge of the latent "frauds," which are in every form of regulation, and all the firmness of grasp of truth which guided Mr. Stansfeld so successfully through his long parliamentary struggle. Nothing could have been more impressive than his assertion of the unity of the moral and hygienic law. But all his work was only slaying the dead.

Dr. Getz's proposals found not a particle of sympathy among the English delegates, who only out of courtesy to their Continental friends endured the discussion. For the education of the Continental mind it was felt that the Federation might need to spend some time in this way; but the English would not accept such views as M. Larsen, of Copenhagen, expressed when he said that what would do for one country might not do for another, and that it was a mistake to look upon the subject from the point of view of the woman, who made money from her manner of life, whereas the man did not. He was in favour of all the principles of the Bill. Pastor Stoylen, of Bergen, opposed the Bill. M. Westerberg, of Sweden, condemned it as containing all the bad points of the old "regulation," though he thought the intention was good, in some points at least. Pastor Hoffet, of Alsace, opposed the Bill, so did also M. H. Pierson, of Holland, who protested against calling the immorality of women "a trade"; there can be no trade of such a kind; immorality is immorality. A resolution was then passed in the sense of most of the speaking of the morning, leaving it to the committee of the Federation to draw up a memorandum which should carefully express the views of the Federation, and state what had been the experience in England.

At the last sitting Mr. H. J. Wilson, M.P., pointed out evidences of a persistent attempt to reintroduce regulation into England. Mr. Gledstone and Dr. Nevins pointed out the only right plan by which the State could deal with diseases arising from immorality.

On Friday night, at a meeting of the Ladies' National Association, an address was presented to Dr. Kate Bushnell and Mrs. Andrew in acknowledgment of their services in India.

THE "ARETHUSA" BOYS.

An interesting afternoon was spent on Tuesday week by a numerous company on board the "Arethusa" training ship, off Greenhithe, the occasion being the distribution of prizes by the Countess of Jersey to the lads. The ship is conducted by the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, and the lads there trained have for the most part been rescued from the very depths of degradation. That the course the youngsters go through is at once a practical and thorough one is shown by the excellent reports the committee receive from time to time regarding those who have left and are now earning their livelihood on the sea.

At Tuesday's ceremony, after a few preliminary exercises, Mr. Scott addressed the company. At the outset he took exception to a statement made at the United Service Institution that training ships did not produce the best class of boys for the mercantile marine. Few who had seen the boys that day would, he thought, fall in with that opinion. His opinion was that some of the best sailors had been produced by training ships. In the course of the year just ended, 147 boys had been passed from the "Arethusa" into merchant ships, twenty-one into the Royal Navy, and six into the Marines. Since the boat had been opened more than 5000 lads had been started in life, and most of them were doing well, and some even brilliantly. Concluding, he urged that any institution which was the means of giving 5000 boys a livelihood and sending them out to serve their Queen was well worthy of assistance.

The Countess of Jersey addressed the lads, remarking that the interest of herself and of Lord Jersey in them and in the "Arethusa" was in no way abated through their visit to Australia. No one, she thought, could go round the world and see everywhere English men, women, and children, working with all their might and main to build up and increase our great empire, without being deeply impressed with the absolute necessity of bringing up boys to take a noble and true part in that mighty work. Nobody could see, as she saw, our great men-of-war lying in our harbours in distant lands, and our merchant ships carrying the flag of England across every ocean and along every river and canal throughout the world, without feeling that the career of a sailor was one of the very best that could be adopted by the boys being thus trained by those who took an interest in their welfare. Lady Jersey concluded with a few words of advice to the lads. The prizes were next distributed, and then the proceedings closed with a hearty vote of thanks being accorded to her ladyship for her presence.

MR. H. COLLINS, of the Evangelisation Society, has just concluded a three weeks' mission at Great Tey. On Sundays there were crowded attendances, and much blessing rested on the word spoken. Former missions in this place have been greatly blessed.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JULY 22.—EZEKIEL XXII.

The Sins of Jerusalem (1-12).—The prophet acts as judge of the guilty city, described as full of blood, because of her crimes and sins. Various allegations and charges are made against her. (3) Prov. viii. 36. (4) The years of God's long-suffering run out at last. Jerusalem has reached the allotted term of mercy. (5) "Thou infamous one and full of tumult." (6) Each, according to his power, shed blood. And now as they stand before the Divine tribunal, the prophet charges the chosen people with their crimes, closing in the last verse with the root of all, in forgetfulness of God.

The Sentence (13-22).—Jehovah smites with his hand in token of the fixedness of his purpose, and the indignant vengeance which He would execute. (14) How searching is this inquiry. Woe to him that striveth with his Maker, there can be but one issue! (15) Note the Divine object in the punishment of the Jews! Bless Him for the remedial purpose that runs through trial. (16) "And thou shalt be profaned in thyself in the sight of the nations" (R.V.). (20) They had been as silver and gold, but had degenerated terribly; and would be left as worthless metal to the mercy of the cruel flames. Yet there might be a remnant from the furnace. He who would refine with fire is sometimes driven to destroy by fire.

The General Corruption (23-31).—The land needs cleansing from weeds, and rain for the refreshing and growth of its products. But Israel was a moral wilderness. Prophets, priests, and princes had alike dishonoured God, and disgraced their position as the leaders of the people. They would be involved in a common doom. (28) A man may strive with mortar to conceal the cracks that yawn all through his house, but he will not be able thus to save it from destruction. With all their assurances of peace, the false prophets would not be able to save their land from impending judgment. You cannot empty hell of its prisoners by saying that there is no such place. (30) One man would have availed to avert their doom, but he was not to be found. There was one in Sodom, not in Israel. Blessed be God for our Advocate who stood in the gap for us.

MONDAY, JULY 23.—EZEKIEL XXIII.

In this awful chapter we have a description of two women, of infamous character, and sisters. Aholah, which means "her own tabernacle," is Israel; Aholibah, "my tabernacle is in her," is Judah. We shrink from these comparisons, but we do not realise how exceedingly loathsome and abominable sin is in the sight of God.

The Taint of Egypt (1-4).—There are several indications that the children of Israel contracted evil manners in Egypt, which constantly broke out in after days (ver. 19, v. 8; Josh. xxiv. 14). The Red Sea ought to have been an impassable barrier, across which these germs of evil should not follow. Let us remember that the Red Sea of the blood of Jesus lies between us and our former conversation received by tradition from our fathers.

The Sins of the Ten Tribes (5-10).—The northern kingdom sought after the idols of Assyria, and entered into alliance with them (2 Kings xv. 19). These were the cause of her downfall. If we yield to the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, or the pride of life, we sow the seeds of a bitter harvest. (10) "Famous," rather, notorious, infamous.

The Sins of Judah (11-21).—Judah saw the awful result of Israel's sin, yet she was not warned, but followed in the same track. Nay, she exceeded, for she was fascinated by the accounts given of Babylon, its idols, its temples, its sins, and entered into an alliance. (19) Beware how memory plays around the sins of the past. Beware also of the eyes through which impressions are received, that become the seeds of impurity. The Chaldeans prided themselves on their richly-ornamented tunics, scarves, and girdles. Vermilion seems to have been a favourite colour.

The Penalty (22-35).—Evil love turns at last to bitter hate. Israel's downfall came from those whose alliance she had relied on. Our sins make our scourge. (25) The punishment of adulterers. (27) Their captivity in Babylon effectually cured the Jews of idolatry, which they learnt first in Egypt. (34) They would have to drain every drop of vengeance and punishment, and even scrape the sherds of the vessel.

A Vindication of God's Dealings with His People (36-49).—The day the people sinned thus they still frequented God's holy temple. This greatly aggravated their crimes. They also courted evil from afar. Therefore they would be judged by "righteous men," the prophets, and would suffer without remedy. Beware lest, having been married to another, to Jesus, raised from the dead, you wander from Him, and fall under the inevitable judgment.

TUESDAY, JULY 24.—EZEKIEL XXIV.

The Symbol of the Caldron (1-14).—Ezekiel was three hundred miles away, but was nevertheless able to announce the exact day when the siege of Jerusalem began, in the ninth year of Jehoiachin's captivity. Referring again to the people's boast about the caldron (xi. 3), he predicts that instead of it being a protection to them, it would add greatly to their anguish. They would so to speak boil in it. (6) The same fate would involve rich and poor, high and low. The scum rises to the surface to be skimmed off, but in this case it remained. They were to fall "piece by piece," and none would be able to escape by the casting of the lot, which frequently determined who should escape, and who should be slain. (7) Blood on the surface of a rock would not be absorbed, as it would be when shed on the ground. As she had sinned shamelessly, so should she suffer.

The Death of Ezekiel's Wife (15-24).—What his wife was to Ezekiel, the temple was to the Jews, the excellence of their strength, the joy of their glory, and the desire of their eyes. As he might not mourn for the one, so in their anguish they would not have time to think about their loss of the other. The Orientals are profuse in their outbursts of sorrow, but in the fall of Jerusalem they would have no opportunity to express their sorrow for their dead. (27) During the infliction of the last awful strokes, Ezekiel's mouth was closed from prophesying, to be opened when the fate of Jerusalem was accomplished. Let us so act that those who look on may be constrained to seek the secret springs of our behaviour.

WEDNESDAY, JULY 25.—EZEKIEL XXV.

In this chapter Ezekiel turns from the Jews to utter his prophecies against the surrounding peoples. These are continued for the next seven chapters.

The Doom of Ammon (1-7).—The Jews never forgot the insolent exultation of Ammon described in Psa. lxxxiii. Ammon was descended from Lot, and helped Babylon in the destruction of Jerusalem (2 Kings xxiv. 2). (5) Rabbah was the metropolis of Ammon. (6) As they had treated Israel with derision, so would their foes rejoice in turn over their fall.

The Doom of Moab and Seir (8-11).—They had said deridingly that the worship of God was no more effective in securing deliverance than that of their own idols. This taunt touched God's honour, and could not pass unnoticed. The whole frontier of Moab was therefore laid open to the incursion of her foes. The cities mentioned here mean respectively "the city of desolations," "the city of the worship of Baal," and "the double city."

The Doom of Edom (12-14).—Edom's hatred against Judah was implacable (Psa. cxxxvii.). (14) This prophecy was fulfilled through the Jews under Judas Maccabeus.

The Doom of the Philistines (15-17).—The Philistines had constant war with Israel. Their enmity had been perpetual, but God would pour great vengeance upon them. So do they perish who set themselves against the Lord, and against his Christ, and who say, Let us cast their bands from off us. God becomes the personal enemy of those who set themselves against his people.

THURSDAY, JULY 26.—EZEKIEL XXVI.

The Exultation of Tyre against Jerusalem (1-6).—This prophecy was uttered immediately after the fall of Jerusalem. Tyre had scarcely uttered her proud taunts against Zion when Jehovah announced its own doom. We should remember that the word Tyre means Rock-city. Tyre was jealous because Jerusalem was a great centre of commerce, and rejoiced in her fall as promising the hope of increased gain. (5) For thirteen years Nebuchadnezzar besieged it. Then Alexander, by connecting it with the land, made it easily accessible. Now, a miserable village stands upon her site. (6) Her daughters were probably her tributary cities.

Nebuchadnezzar's Assault (7-14).—He was king of kings, because so many subject monarchs owned his sway. We are reminded of the title given to our Lord in the Apocalypse.

The Alarm and Lamentation of the Nations (15-21).—Utica, Carthage, Tarshish, these widely scattered colonies would be deeply agitated. (20) There is an intimation here that God would set his people again in the land of the living, whilst the inhabitants of Tyre would descend into the pit. The imagery of the fall of this renowned city is very sublime. We may well think of the port of London, Liverpool, or Glasgow, and ask ourselves whether our sins as a people may not incur a fate as terrible.

FRIDAY, JULY 27.—EZEKIEL XXVII.

In this noble ode, Tyre is described in the imagery of her own splendid vessels.

The Building of the Ship (1-25).—(5) Senir was the native name for Hermon, part of the Lebanon range. (6) "They have made thy benches of ivory inlaid in boxwood from the isles of Chittim." (7) The sail was made from Egyptian linen. Elishah probably means the islands of Greece. (9) Gebal, a Phœnician city near Beysout. (10) Lud, Lydians, Phut, Libyans. (13) In these words we find a hint of Tobolsk and Moscow. (14) Togarmah, Armenia. (15) Dedan, near the Persian Sea. This enumeration of the nations with which Tyre traded is introduced to show how far-reaching was her influence, how deeply she had struck her roots. "Horns" would probably be tusks. (17) Pannag, says the R.V., was perhaps a kind of confection. (18) Elbon, or Chalybon, now Aleppo, was famed for its wines. (23) These places were in Mesopotamia. (25) "Ships of Tarshish were thy caravans," that is, they did on the oceans what caravans did over the deserts. England occupies to-day the place that Tyre did of old. She is endowed for special opportunities, let her see that she does not misuse them.

The Wreck of the Ship (26-36).—The great vessel, manned and filled with all that would make for her successful voyage, is caught by the east wind, the Levanter, and founders in the great waters. Of how many may it be said, Thy rowers have brought thee into deep waters. Our passions often do this, and then there is no help for us unless the Master walk upon the tempestuous waves, and hush the winds. (30) Compare Rev. xviii. 17, etc.

SATURDAY, JULY 28.—EZEKIEL XXVIII.

In this concluding chapter on the fall of Tyre, we surely meet one greater than its king, and students of prophecy have thought that it must be referred to the prince of the power of the air. The King of Tyre was the culmination and embodiment of carnal pride.

The Assumption of Divine Attributes (1-10).—What boastful arrogance! (3) All but omniscience. (4) Infinite wealth. (5) The uplifted heart. And yet the inevitable destruction. The proud boasts of the King of Tyre were fostered by the fact of the city standing on the holy island sacred to Hercules, and by a long course of golden victory. It is not always a matter for congratulation when our life is a succession of triumphs. By these, pride is increased.

Penalty Proportioned to Misused Responsibility (11-19).—The great king of Tyre is represented as the type of humanity in its most beautiful form, and here especially are the words that seem applicable to Satan himself. "The sum," that is, the full measure of beauty. Satan has been compared to Michael and Gabriel, the archangels. (13) He, too, was in Eden. (15) Then iniquity was found in him. (17) By pride the angels fell. (18) And the fire of God, which was meant for worship and offering, was turned to destruction.

The Doom of Zidon (20-26).—It was famous for its fishery, afterwards for its commerce. Its idolatry deeply infected Israel through Jezebel, the daughter of one of its kings. It had been a pricking briar to Israel (Numbers xxxiii. 55) (25-26). This was partly fulfilled under the restoration of Ezra and Nehemiah, but its full completion is yet future. God longs to restore the backslider to the place he has forfeited, to make him again a plant in his temple. When God forgives, He does not send the prodigal into the kitchen, but gives him the robe, the familiar seat, the child's portion.

WORKING BOYS AND WOMEN.

The leader in the Red, White, and Blue Christian Institute for Lads, Cumming-street and Collier-street, Pentonville, N., writes:—At the end of May two of us went down to the neighbourhood of Bournemouth to get a house for the holiday trip of our boys, and came upon the very thing we needed—a boys' school at Southbourne—vacant for August, quite close to the sea, and with charming country all round. The house is large and airy, with plenty of beds. Our work has grown very greatly this past season, and we now have numbers of women and girls who seem to belong to the 'Red, White, and Blue' almost as much as the boys. Many of these need change and rest more than words can describe. We want to utilise this beautiful place at Southbourne for some of these women, but they are mostly so poor that they can hardly pay anything towards their outing. If anyone, on reading this, should feel able to send a few shillings towards giving these poor mothers a few days' release from their ceaseless drudgery, and the enjoyment of God's lovely world, they would indeed be grateful; for many wish to go, and we can meet the expenses of but a few.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN MINNEAPOLIS.—Dr. William Ashmore writes an interesting account of a new departure in Minneapolis, in the way of "kerbstone preaching for Sunday afternoon." The workers are organised into bands of from a dozen to twenty or more, with bands of singers. Where a band of these workers take their stand, they have a dozen chairs or so placed around in a semicircle in the street on the shady side, just off the sidewalk. At one of these services lately, standing on an empty box, Dr. Wayland Hoyt delivered a short and forcible sermon on the passage, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JULY 29.

THE YOUTH OF JESUS.—Luke ii. 40-52.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 52.

THE growth of Jesus from infancy up to the age of twelve is in verse 40; while the Golden Text summarises the whole of his life from twelve to thirty. His development was that of a real human life. His mind grew as well as his body. He learned at his mother's knee, in Joseph's workshop, from the beauty of the surrounding hills, and especially from his perfectly sinless communion with his Father. He was made like unto us in his childhood, yet without sin. Childhood's difficulties and temptations are not unknown to Him.

THE VISIT TO JERUSALEM (41, 42).—To Joseph and Mary this was an annual event (41). The law required the men to be present at the three great feasts of Passover, Pentecost, and Tabernacles (Deut. xvi. 16). At the age of twelve a Jewish boy became "a son of the law," and could take part in the celebration. The meaning of the Passover feast was well known to Jesus. Possibly He had already learned something of what it foreshadowed. The sight of the innocent victim, offered in sacrifice, and afterwards forming the feast for the household, must have suggested strange thoughts to Him. Was He able even then to see in it all a type of what He should suffer? From this visit to the temple parents may learn the duty of making their children familiar with the house of God. A mother took her daughter to the theatre, hoping to give her a pleasure. The child wept so bitterly that she had to be taken out. When asked the cause of her grief, she said, "O mother, Jesus was not there." The taste of a child can be cultivated in the right direction as well as in the wrong.

THE PAINFUL DISCOVERY (43-45).—While the caravan pursued its journey towards home Jesus tarried in the temple, attracted by all He saw and heard there. There was no intentional disobedience on his part, nor any culpable neglect on Mary's part. That she did not think of seeking Him until the day's journey ended proves how fully she trusted Him. It is well when the absence of Jesus causes pain. There are many who are without Him, but do not grieve over it. They have not known Him as Mary had, therefore they do not miss Him. No child could be to a mother what Jesus was to Mary. And as she remembered what danger had surrounded his infancy, it is likely that her mind was now filled with greatest alarm. See how possible it is to mistake. They "supposed" Jesus was with them when He was not. Don't too readily take things for granted. Examine before you conclude that you have really got Jesus with you. Some may accomplish the whole of their life's journey before they discover their mistake. Don't be content with "thinking," and "hoping," but be sure that you have Jesus.

THE SUCCESSFUL SEARCH (46-51).—"Every one that seeketh findeth," if he be a sincere seeker after Jesus. You may seek for other things which you deem to be valuable, and may never find. You are sure of success in this. They sought sorrowing (48). It was the best relief for their sorrow to occupy themselves in such a search. They who sorrow because of their sin, and of their want of Him, are truest seekers. They found Him in the temple (46). Where they left Him, there they found Him. If you have lost the presence of Jesus follow the same rule. Where did you part from Him? What was the sin for which you forsook Him? Go back to that, and in making confession of it you will find Him again. "What did you do with your first sin?" was the question which arrested a hopeless backslider, and showed him the way of return.

They found Him, not teaching, but learning. It is a mistake to attribute to Him any unseemly forwardness. He listened and questioned—the two things which we should encourage all our scholars to do. The one showed Him willing to learn; the other indicated that He thought about what was taught Him, and desired to know more.

Special interest attaches to his first recorded utterance (49). Mary spoke of Joseph as his father (48). Jesus referred to "My Father," in whose house and among whose affairs He ought to be employed. This word is the text of his whole life. See Jno. iv. 34; ix. 4. And yet just after uttering it He went down to be subject to his parents! This was as much a part of the Father's business as his learning in the temple and his after work. You can find his business for you in very ordinary things.

Learn (1) that in Jesus you have a Saviour who understands all the difficulties and temptations of boy life. (2) Make the example of Jesus to be yours. Subjection to earthly parents and devotion to the house and service of God were combined in Him. (3) Make his first recorded utterances (49) to be your life motto. Other things you may do, this you must do.

For the Young.

FLOWER MORALS.*

THE word morals means manners, ways. You all know what we mean by the saying: "That is John's way," or "That is mother's way." Because morals means ways it has come to mean "teachings," or "lessons," because most of the teaching in this world is not done by books or in words, but by the manners or ways of people with each other.

So flower morals are the ways or the teachings of flowers.

Deep down in everything that grows is found God's thought in making it. Some people never get at this. Of such people a poet once said:—

A primrose by a river brim
A yellow primrose was to him,
And it was nothing more.

I mean to speak of three flower morals this time, just to set you to watching for others. First, the way of

THE GRASS.

Nothing does so much toward making God's great garden beautiful as the green grass. It is a silent yet always victorious army, and its aim is to hide all ugliness, and make every place rich and sweet.

Last winter, as I went about in the country, I saw a good many little dwelling-places that made me sad, they looked so lonesome and barren and poor. The houses were unpainted, the steps rickety, the roofs looked as if they leaked, and I pitied the people who had no cosier shelter from winter storms. But a day or two ago I drove by again, and they looked like dear little nests for happy souls. The grass army had taken possession and worked the change.

Take one grass blade up in your hand and look at it, how very small, how very frail it is! What is the secret of the power of the grass army? It is togetherness. Keeping together, working together, "having the same mind," the Bible calls it. Oh, if children and everybody else could learn the Divine way of the grass!

To live and work together, in school, in the family, in the church—what glorious victories of peace there would be! Homes are not happy unless all the family mind (care for) the same things. If the father loves quiet evenings at home, and the mother hates them and cares only for parties and excitement, there cannot be any true togetherness there. If one cares only to make money and hoard it up, and another cares only to make people happy with money, there is no harmony in that home. If ten boys in a school wish to make the best possible use of books, and teacher, and time in building up manhood in themselves, and ten other boys care only to have what they call fun, you can see how much of time and strength are wasted in that school just pulling different ways.

"Let him that is taught communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things," the Bible says. Communicate means "to have fellowship," to seek the same things, to pull together. Remember this when you look at the grass. In its togetherness is its power. When the storm comes all the little blades bow before it together; when the sun shines they all lift up their heads together.

When they are going to attack some new bare spot, one blade never goes out alone: they march together. Then ask yourself whether you are working with or against the powers that are making for rightness in this world. See if you can say, "We are labourers together with God."

NOW FOR A ROSE MORAL.

"Queen of the flowers" we call the rose. Did you ever notice the soil in which roses grow best? It is not clean and light, but dark and heavy with dead and decayed vegetable life. Out of the ugliest surroundings and the most unlikely materials, by some subtle power in herself, she distils the glory of rosehood.

Do you sometimes feel like complaining of your place in God's garden? You haven't room enough—you have nothing to help you to be good or beautiful? If you only had a good disposition, or a pretty face, or talent! If your father had plenty of money so that you could go to a fine school and learn to paint and draw and play on the piano; if only you had a chance to do brave deeds like the heroes of old, to lead a children's crusade like that which tried to rescue the Holy Sepulchre from the Turks in the Middle Ages! If only you were something or somewhere that you are not, how good and great you could be!

Consider the way of the rose. Out of ugliness and death, it makes life and beauty. To be the creature of circumstances, however beautiful, is no credit to you; but to be a beautiful creature in spite of circumstances, that is the true glory of a soul.

Then there is the persistent teaching of

THE PANSY.

One day I saw a little girl working in her garden. She offered me a great bunch of pansies. "Oh," I said, "don't give me so many; you are robbing yourself."

"No, indeed," she replied. "I have to keep gathering them; that's the way to make them grow and bloom more. If I left the flowers on the plant to wither and die, it would soon stop blooming, or else the flowers would grow small and poor." Then I understood what it is the pansy is saying that gives it such a knowing look! "Give, if you would live. If you deny, you'll die!" It is hoarding up your treasures that makes you poor.

"Give and it shall be given unto you," the Bible says, and I know it is true; the more you give of time, talent, labour, money, love, the more you will have. Think of the great people whose names you know so well, whose birthdays are thanksgiving days for the whole world. They lived for the good they could do, and not for the good they could get.

And is it not the pansy lesson, writ large, in the life of Jesus, who "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister"? And did He not say: "He that saveth his life shall lose it"? Because He gave Himself, "God hath given Him a name that is above every name."

Now go out into the old garden and see what the vine says, and the daisy, and finally what a weed can teach—the weed your father calls quitch grass.

An old man told me that if you pulled up quitch grass, hung it by the roots on the fence to dry, and then burned it and put the ashes out on the land, it would sprout up as lively as ever. If that is true, the quitch grass must have something very important to say. Can you understand what it is?

THE MALAGASY SLAVE.

OUR young readers who so willingly helped to ransom the Christian lad in Madagascar will be pleased to read the following:—

About a year and a-half ago, the wife of one of our Malagasy missionaries (Rev. J. Peill) made an appeal through THE CHRISTIAN for the redemption of a slave (Rajamaria by name), who had already proved his worthiness by his work as a teacher here in Madagascar. Twenty pounds was generously raised, and Rajamaria was redeemed, and became at once a candidate for the ministry. He entered our college as a student, and has now completed his first year. I enclose you the result of the examination just held, from which you will see that out of a total of 1170 marks, he has actually got 969, or more than 82 per cent., in all subjects. We who are his tutors are extremely pleased with him. As I have taken him into my house to live under my roof, I can speak very highly indeed of his gentle character and earnest Christian spirit. Very frequently he will walk to villages twenty to thirty miles away, to preach to those who still grope in the darkness of heathenism and superstition. I should say that never was £20 ever better invested than in the redemption of our Malagasy friend-student, Rajamaria.

THE MADRAS Y.M.C.A.

An interesting meeting was held the other day in Kent House, Knightsbridge, in connection with a forward movement in Madras. The Y.M.C.A., in such a land as India, carries on its work under circumstances differing considerably from those prevailing at home. The membership is European and native, and the natives include many heathen and Mohammedans. The aim is definitely to bring these to decision for Christ, but in pursuing this aim varied means are employed for the intellectual, social, and physical welfare of the young men who are thus brought within range of the spiritual activities. The Madras Y.M.C.A. is admirably typical of a vigorous and thorough-going Association in India. The nationality of the members is as follows :—

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| European | | 38 |
| Eurasian | | 90 |
| Indian—Hindu | 202 | |
| Christian | 85 | |
| Mohammedan | 12 | |
| Parsee | 3 | 302 |
| | | 430 |

The committee in their latest report say :—"The best work done by an Association such as ours must necessarily be unseen until that day when the secrets of men's hearts shall be made manifest. A great deal of real work is done—in health improved, mental activity stimulated, manners refined, business capacity increased, character moulded, lives made brighter and more useful, souls saved from the power of sin here and from its penalty hereafter. Such is the enduring work which the Young Men's Christian Association is doing daily in Madras."

During the year at least ten of the associate members have confessed Christ and entered actively into his service. The Gospel meetings, the training class for workers, and the devotional meetings appear to be especially encouraging. We have been greatly interested in perusing various letters from young men blessed by the work of this Association. Young Englishmen tell how they were saved from temptation and led to a new life; a Eurasian (type of many such) says: "My change of life from a careless and impenitent existence has been effected through the meetings and classes held at the Association rooms." A Hindu writes :—

> The Association helped me to perceive the real truths of Christianity. After repeated requests, I attended some of the religious meetings with great reluctance, but in the long run I became an ardent and earnest seeker after Christ, and I found Him in the Association rooms. In fact, it was in the Association that the seeds of Christian truth were sown in my heart, it was there that the seed sprung up, it was there that the tender plant of Christian faith was nourished, and it was there that I beheld the power of the mighty Saviour of mankind in converting me, who entered the Association doors as a heathen and a detested sinner, with no real happiness of mind.

The whole work has for some years been carried on with some difficulty, owing to the lack of suitable headquarters. Now, however, a site has been secured, plans have been prepared, as our illustration shows, for a fine building, the local friends have risen to the occasion and given according to their means, but large and liberal help is needed from friends at home, many of whom have, or may yet have, sons serving in India to whom such a place may be a true home and a means of blessing. In planning this building, the directors have considered not alone the needs of Madras, but also the fact that the work in Madras, in a building of its own, will be an object lesson, showing the adaptability of the Association to reach young men in India; and what is even more important, it will be a school for training men to become secretaries of the Associations that are now springing up everywhere. With a building, the Madras Association may become a model; without it, even the vantage ground already won cannot be held permanently.

Mr. T. A. Denny was in the chair at the meeting, and the speakers were Dr. Pentecost, Mr. David McConaughy, Y.M.C.A. secretary in Madras, and Mr. Arbuthnot; while Lady Ashburton, Lady Hope, Mrs. Locker Lampson, and Sir George Williams each said a few words.

The result is that about £1200 have now been subscribed towards the "purchase of site and building fund." Of this sum, Lady Ashburton gives £400, a gentleman who wishes to be anonymous £140, the Hon. John Wanamaker (late Postmaster-General, U.S.A.), 500 dols., say 100 guineas; Sir George Williams £100, Mr. T. A. Denny £100, Mr. John Cory £100, and the rest was contributed in smaller amounts.

THE PRESENT POSITION.

Mr. W. R. Arbuthnot writes :—"We have a most suitable piece of land available for purchase, right in the middle of the student population of Madras (there are over 5000 students and nearly 90,000 young men altogether in Madras), and it has been offered to us by the Hindu owners for 30,000rs., which we might be able to reduce to 25,000rs. (say £1600), were we in a position to put down the money, while we should require a further sum of from £4000 to £5000 for the building—say £4000, if exchange should remain at its present level. We have already seen fruit in the conversion of Hindu and other young men to Christ, and we have much to be thankful for, but we long to be in a position to do more. Our present rented rooms are far too small; they consist of two long narrow rooms, one above the other, measuring 70ft. by 13ft., and are ill-adapted to our requirements."

Communications may be sent to Messrs. Arbuthnot, Latham, and Co., 33, Great St. Helens, London, E.C.

MADRAS Y.M.C.A. PROPOSED NEW BUILDING.

INEBRIATES IN SYDNEY.

The Echo Farm Home for Male Inebriates at Middle Harbour, Sydney, is a sanatorium having two distinct advantages: The isolation of its members from all worries, noises, and distractions of the outside world, and their inability to procure the smallest supply of alcohol. The Home is kept afoot by the charity of a few persons interested in temperance reform. Its proceedings are regulated by a committee of thirty energetic and enthusiastic ladies, who are unsparing in zealous labour.

The farm covers an area of twenty acres of land, the products of which will, it is expected, make it self-supporting in the course of time. The tending of fruit trees, preparation and tilling of the vegetable and grain gardens, and care of the live-stock, constitute the principal labours of the members, who are expected to devote eight hours a day to the systematic and continuous fulfilment of their respective industrial or manual duties. The rationale of the curative system is in the following sequence of ideas :—First, Godliness; second, cleanliness; third, habits of industry; and fourth, inoculation with an atmosphere of purity. The hours of labour are judiciously regulated.

As regards material comforts, there is, within reason, no stint. The place is not a place of restraint, but a Home. The patient enters the Home voluntarily, and is at liberty to leave whensoever he chooses. Gentle manners are insisted upon, and harsh words between fellow-members are absolutely unknown. There have been in all about a hundred inmates; eighty have left, of whom a considerable number are now leading steady and useful lives. The Home was founded, and is directed, by Mr. Courtenay Smith, Seamen's Missionary, Trafalgar House, 9, Princes-street, Sydney.

ROMANISM AND IGNORANCE.

Rev. J. Bourgoin, principal of the Pointe aux Trembles Schools, Quebec, in his new report, says that a strong desire for a higher popular education is everywhere expressed by the Roman Catholics of the Province. He says :—

We are convinced that the opposition of the clergy towards our schools has never been greater than to-day. Of course, they know very well that that it is not exactly the education we give to a few young people that will endanger their powerful system, but they fight against us because they are compelled in self-defence to improve their schools in many localities. It is not the few who become Protestants in our schools that will empty their churches, but the danger lies in their contact, their influence, their intercourse with others to whom they shall communicate their ideas, and give the Gospel. Their wrath is not excited only by the few who come to us in spite of their warnings, but by the hundreds who every year ask their permission.

Our great need at present is not only a larger number of missionaries, but full of the Spirit of God, who, in the carpenter's shop, the blacksmith's shop, in the fields, in the woods, and on the waters, shall be the brave heralds of the truth, the promoters of a spirit of inquiry, and the pioneers of a peaceful reformation.

Never before have our schools had so large a number of pupils as this year, one hundred and twelve boys and seventy-two girls—in all one hundred and eighty-four have been received. One hundred and four were children of parents who still adhere to the Church of Rome. The religious and moral progress of our pupils is always kept paramount, and though we endeavour to hasten their intellectual development by all means within our reach, we continue to devote the best part of our time in bringing them to a clear knowledge of the Gospel truth. It is only after having established the supreme authority of the Holy Scriptures that we bring the errors of Rome under their judgment. Every superstition or error is examined under the light of the Gospel.

But that is not all, it remains to rectify the conscience and judgment of our young people which have been distorted by and to eradicate the effects of long cherished prejudices. It is only with the help of the Holy Spirit that this difficult work can be accomplished. Towards the end of the session we have heard frequently some of the pupils say: "I am no longer a Roman Catholic!" and immediately scapularies and beads went to the fire. Twenty-five of our young men and young women have been converted to the Saviour during the session, and they are full of the desire of spreading the good tidings of the Gospel.

Probably very few of our supporters can imagine what an amount of humiliation, suffering, and vexation is the unavoidable consequence of the conversion of our young people from Romanism to our faith. To endure these persecutions, to face the difficulties of finding a living among their own people, and to overcome the opprobrium cast over them, require from our young converts more faith and courage than many would imagine.

THE SICILIAN CONVERT.—This convert, of whom a letter (from Signor Mauro), was published in The Christian of May 17th, has been removed from the scene of his persecution, through the kindness of those whose hearts the Lord had touched, and is now under the care of a missionary, to be trained and fitted for future work. He is said to give exceptional promise of usefulness, is resolute for the truth, and yet most humble and obedient. His gratitude for the kindness shown him he says he cannot find words to express, and he longs to be prepared for such a future as shall bring the richest blessings to man, and the fullest glory to his Lord and Saviour.

BARBICAN MISSION TO THE JEWS.

In his new report Herr C. T. Lipshytz gives much information about the Jews, and describes a large amount of effort for their spiritual enlightenment. The Mission House, 33, Finsbury-square, E.C., is the centre of a round of work among young and old. The daily Bible-class has afforded help to many inquirers; the mothers' meeting, conducted by Mrs. Lipshytz, has brightened and lightened some very cheerless lives; and the Sunday-school has shown what may be done among the Hebrew children. The Gospel meetings in the hall on Saturdays and Sundays have led to direct dealing of the kind which the true evangelist always seeks. The Home for converts and inquirers, persecuted by their "friends" to the point of destitution, has proved of real service. Inmates receive instruction in English as well as spiritual help; and when there they invariably arrive at a better understanding of Christian doctrine and acquire an improved sense of life among Christian people.

The report contains very readable accounts of colportage and itinerant work; and there is interesting corroboration of the experience of others as to the remarkable readiness of Jews to read the New Testament Scriptures. On board a steamer crossing from Dover to Ostend the director met an aged Jew, to whom he gave a New Testament. Writing to express thankfulness for the gift, the man says he could never have believed the New Testament to be so full of Divine teaching; he is now delighted with it, and reads it every day, and hopes soon to confess publicly that Jesus is the Christ. Another case is connected with the home work. A Jew who visited the reading-room found some New Testaments on the table; he asked for a copy, which was gladly given him. "After eighteen months he came again, with a face beaming with joy: he told me that through reading the Book he was led to pray for light from above to make him understand it. God had answered his petition, and he was now praising Him for having received eternal salvation."

The Mission employs a colporteur in Paris, and assists work among Jews in Marseilles and in the province of Brandenburg, Germany. Mr. Lipshytz describes tours by himself in the latter country, and also in America, preaching in churches and visiting Jews in their homes. At Mayence he went to the synagogue on the Day of Atonement, and at the close spoke to some Jews of the great and permanent atonement wrought on Calvary. He says:—"I pointed out to them that unless they believed in Jesus, who died for their sins, they could not have true forgiveness. Some sought to oppose me, but not a few listened most attentively to all I had to say, and I trust the Lord will cause them to think about their souls' need. At Darmstadt I visited some Jews, who willingly listened to my words, when I declared unto them Jesus, who had atoned for our sins once for all, and had made peace between God and man. I found a Jew putting up his tent, for in a few days the Feast of Tabernacles was to take place. In speaking to him, he told me he was sure the Messiah had yet to come. I replied, 'Quite true. I also believe He will come; but let me tell you that you will never understand the Messiah's coming in glory, unless you see that He came first to suffer and die for the sins of his people, as Isaiah liii. tells us.' We had a long and deeply interesting conversation, and he left me with many expressions of gratitude for the explanations of Scripture I had given him." These incidents are typical of others given in the report.

The case is mentioned of a young man whose heart was touched by the Gospel story after attending the meetings at the Mission House. At length he confessed faith in Christ, and in a letter to the missionary said: "I feel constrained to thank you for what you have done for me, in bringing me to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus. I am happy to say He is now my Redeemer, who has delivered me from everlasting death and condemnation, and I know I have eternal life in Him. When all else fail, and all forsake me, I know Jesus will not leave me. I have in Him an everlasting Friend, and my daily prayer is that I may serve Him faithfully through life, and confess before men what He has done for my sin-stricken soul."

BISHOP TUGWELL.

OF WESTERN EQUATORIAL AFRICA.

The story of mission work in West Africa has often been outlined in our pages, and all that we propose at the present time is to refer to a detail in its development. The death of the venerable Bishop Crowther was a keenly-felt loss to the Niger Mission, and when his widely-known and devoted successor, Bishop Hill, was carried off by fever, on the very threshold of his career of responsible duty, a feeling of real discouragement came over the hearts of those to whom the work had become endeared by many past sacrifices and great present opportunities.

During his last moments, Bishop Hill was tended by Rev. Herbert Tugwell, who had for several years laboured in Western Africa under the auspices of the Church Missionary Society. There is a sad element of poetry in the circumstance that, having already done useful pioneer and administrative work on the spot, Mr. Tugwell should at length succeed in office the Bishop whose lamented death he had to report to the world.

Bishop Tugwell is the son of a clergyman, and a graduate of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge. He was for a time curate of Petworth, in Sussex, and afterwards joined the Yoruba Mission, of which he became secretary. He sailed for Africa in 1890, with Bishop Crowther, after that good man's last visit to this country. He also enjoyed the friendship of Rev. J. A. Robinson and Mr. Graham Wilmot Brooke, whose mission to the Soudan is still well in mind. A man of considerable mental activity and physical vigour, he was wisely chosen to exercise an oversight of other workers. He came to this country after the death of Bishop Hill, and is now toiling in the sphere in which God's wonderful providence has placed him.

BISHOP TUGWELL.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. H. Salmon, 77, High Street, Winchester.)

The native assistant Bishops, Drs. Phillips and Oluwole, who had learned to love and trust Bishop Hill, have, it is gratifying to observe, declared their full confidence in his young and energetic successor. In a letter published in the initial number (July) of Niger and Yoruba Notes, edited by Dr. Harford Battersby, published by Mr. Elliot Stock, Dr. Oluwole says, "Those of us who know Bishop Tugwell have been very thankful for his appointment. May his life be spared, and may he be endued with power from on high."

We conclude our brief notice of this witness for Christ in the appropriate words of Miss Sarah Geraldina Stock in her very attractive "Story of the Year," 1893-4, of the C.M.S.:—"If, as Dr. Krapf said, 'the victories of the Church are gained by stepping over the graves of her members,' there is a bright future before this now sorely-tried Mission. Not with downcast spirits, but with more hope and expectation, may the soldiers of Christ step forward and occupy the vacant places, knowing that the battle is the Lord's, and that He will indeed give the victory."

THE GREAT LONE LAND.

Bishop Newnham of Moosonee, writing from Moose Fort, James Bay, to The Record says:—"We have just passed through an experience that I have no desire to have again, but to which we are more or less exposed every spring, from the combined attack of ice and flood when the river breaks its winter's chains. I will do my best to describe this shortly, but it is almost impossible for any to realise the scene, the anxiety, and fear and helplessness but those who have been through it. But could you stand with me at my front window and see the ruin of fences and strong posts up to my very door, and the stranded masses of ice which did the mischief, and look round my fields and see the litter of fences, stove-wood, and rubbish, and view my drowned-out cellars, and mud-covered stores, and ground-rooms, and the spoiled goods exposed to dry, you would know that some mighty force had been at work."

After a description of the first night of flood, the Bishop proceeds to describe the grand catastrophe. "The flood soon came in double force, and again the warning bell rang out, and the bridge which connects our group of houses with the part where are the church and the rest of the houses was washed away. Now we were indeed prisoners. Baby slept peacefully, but my poor wife, whose greatest need was sleep, of course was far too anxious to sleep, though she tried. I sent the servants to bed, while I sat up to read, write, and, above all, to watch for danger from the ice. We now knew that even the things on shelves five or six feet high were doomed; our weighted piles of tables had been overturned; filter, heavy pots, and bags of beans, oatmeal, etc., etc., had gone to the bottom; while tables and beds floated about, and smaller articles threatened to float out of the open windows. Our great danger was not from water, but lest when the ice gave way the huge mass should descend upon us and break up the house. When you have seen huge trees snapped like pipe-stems, you know that a log-house cannot withstand the pressure. But I hoped that the edge of the bank would catch the submerged parts of the ice, and form a barrier for us. By 3 a.m. Sunday morning, April 29, I could see dimly the threatening aspect. The water was up to the top of our garden fence, a great part of which was broken down by heavy ice, which now floated in our garden; but immediately in front of the house the dangerous ice was stranded à few feet from the fence. As the morning grew, it turned out a lovely day, bright and hot. My next winter's fuel, some hundred cords of wood, and my sawn lumber and fence rails and posts, wanted for repairs, were scattered over the island, many houses were deserted, and the Indians in my barge and two canoes were floating on the edge of the bush. At noon things looked very serious, and two old residents, one an experienced Indian, came again and told me all the others had left, and that should we be suddenly threatened with ice it would come in such a way as to shut us off from the 'Factory' and their help. So at length my wife and I agreed to move. They carried word to the chief factor, and he at once sent a large boat and men to carry us off.

"There is not much to tell after this. The water rose again later on, and the ice in front of the house was hurled against the fence, breaking it into atoms, and depositing tons of ice at our very doors; but the house itself was unhurt, though some masses of ice passed close to it, and now lie in our field. It was not till the evening of Tuesday, May 1, that the ice in the river gave way, and went crashing and roaring towards the Bay, and the water fell rapidly. That night I was able to walk or wade home to sleep there, but I did not fetch my wife home until Ascension day (May 3). But oh! what a sight met my eyes when the water fell! The water had been seven feet high in the kitchen, etc., and took a day to pump out, everything upset and covered with a thick deposit of mud—except those wonderful vegetable dishes—many pounds' worth of groceries and provisions either destroyed or much injured. Outside only a few feet of fence left standing out of some hundreds of feet, the rest utterly broken up, my garden and fields covered with ice, and a large part of my year's fuel gone. A new house on higher ground must be built."

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

BY A MINISTERIAL MEMBER.

The 151st yearly Conference of the people called Methodists opened on Tuesday last in the Islington Wesleyan Chapel, Birmingham. It is fifteen years since the Wesleyan Conference was last held in the great Midland centre, and during the interval the Methodists have made more rapid progress in the city and suburbs than during any former period of like length. During that time the membership has increased by nearly forty per cent.; on an average one chapel has been built every year; and never was local Methodism more vigorous or hopeful than to-day. Miserably inadequate is the provision made for religious worship for the 670,000 inhabitants of Birmingham, and the existing churches and chapels are far from being filled. It will be well if the visit of many hundred ministers and laymen, and the numerous public services held in connection with the Conference, have the result of intensifying the religious zeal and quickening the aggressive spirit of the churches of Birmingham.

The delegates from all parts of Great Britain and the representatives of Conferences in other lands will have the opportunity of seeing in active operation the agencies of one of the great missions which are a characteristic feature of the present-day activity. The story of is one of remarkable success. The Central Hall, in Corporation-street, built by means of funds realised by the sale of the Old Cherry-street Chapel, which was required by the Corporation for a scheme of city improvement, has been the scene of many Gospel triumphs. Rev. F. Luke Wiseman, M.A., who made the somewhat unusual exchange of a college tutorship for an evangelistic sphere of labour, commenced the work in 1887. The congregation belonging to the old chapel which the Central Hall superseded had dwindled to about 100 adults, but within five weeks of the opening of the Mission the hall was crowded every Sunday evening, and overflow services had to be instituted. The character of the service differs from the plainest Methodist order only in the substitution of hymn-sheets for hymn-books. The workers rightly attribute their success to the continued presence of the Holy Ghost, and for this prayer is continually offered by a band of self-sacrificing men and women.

A paragraph in the last report is worth remembering. "A Methodist preacher, once speaking on the miracle of Christ raising Lazarus, dwelt on the fact that many of the Jews believed after the miracle had been wrought, and remarked that if any Church would draw the people, and have a following, it must first have its Lazarus raised. This we believe to be true, and to this miracle being constantly repeated we owe whatever success has followed our efforts in these services." Several old chapels are now worked under the direction of the mission committee, and the results achieved may be estimated by the light of the statement that within an area in which seven years ago there were but 400 persons in attendance on Sunday evening Wesleyan services, to-day there are at least 4000. Within that time 3000 inquirers have been pointed to Christ, and over 8000 have signed the temperance pledge, while to-day there are more than 1000 church members.

That there is need for much more work of this kind in Birmingham is evident from the fact that, with a population of nearly 670,000 persons, all the religious bodies only provide accommodation for 180,000. The recent adoption of a system of parochial visitation, and the formation of a Nonconformist Council, with that Christian philanthropist, Mr. Geo. Cadbury, as the first president, are signs that the Christian conscience of this great city is being aroused to a deeper sense of the spiritual needs of its vast population.

The numerical returns presented to Conference show that during the last year there has been an increase in membership greater than any in recent years. An increase of nearly 6000 is a matter for devout thankfulness to the great Head of the Church. And the labourers in other denominations may well rejoice with their brethren in their success.

The retiring President, Rev. H. J. Pope, can look back with gladness upon a year of office thus marked by the Divine blessing. No man has more intense sympathy with the distinctively aggressive work of the denomination. When he was raised to the chair, he told his brethren, "I do not exaggerate when I say that I went forth in a white heat of enthusiasm, and I am glad to say after thirty-five years of service, one half spent in official life, that the old fire is burning still." The ex-President's enthusiasm has found appropriate expression in the able discharge of the important duties of his office, and it is the prayer of many that the fire may burn for years to come.

On Tuesday morning, the chief business was the election of President for the coming year. The choice of the brethren fell upon according to general expectation. The new President is chairman of the third London district, and for many years has acted as treasurer of the Worn-out Ministers' Fund. He is an able preacher; a man of kindly heart, and of great business capacity. It is not too much to say that his action in raising a sum of £25,000, to be paid during four years, for the Worn-out Ministers' Fund, in addition to the ordinary income, has saved that fund from a serious crisis. Mr. Green is therefore pre-eminently the friend of the widows and the aged ministers worn out by toil in the Master's service. Mr. Green's ministerial career has been spent chiefly in the neighbourhood of the Metropolis, with the exception of three years in Bradford and six years in Manchester. His private means have enabled him generously to help the work of God in his district, and Mr. Peter Thompson's East-end Mission owes much to the interest of Mrs. Green and a band of ladies inspired by her example.

Amongst the important questions that will come up for consideration during the Conference are Dr. Rigg's scheme for the re-organisation of the district and the separation from circuit work of their chairmen, which under the name of the "Methodist Bishop" scheme has attracted wide attention in the Press, the increase of efficiency in the work of local preachers, and the modification of the itinerant system. The election of a lady as lay-representative will raise the interesting question of the eligibility of ladies to sit in the representative session of the Conference. Opinion seems divided as to the innovation.

WHITE TO HARVEST.

(John iv. 35, 36.)

In the golden sunlight, beaming
Over valley, hill, and plain,
Lo, behold, as silver gleaming,
Smile the fields of waving grain.

Vintage lands with joy are ringing,
And from orchard, garden, field,
Sons of toil with joy are bringing
Fruits the teeming earth doth yield.

God our Father, kind and tender,
Hath for us his table spread.
Glad thanksgivings would we render Unto Him for daily bread.

Lo, behold, of every nation,
In the Love Sun's glory light,
Firstfruits of his blest creation,
Wave unto the Harvest white.

Lift your eyes, for ripe to reaping,
Brave and fair the corn doth stand,
Reapers true his mandate keeping,
Go and reap in every land.

Bring your sickles, fields once vernal
Now are in the silver ear;
Gather in the sheaves eternal,
For the Harvest Home draws near.

When the Master's face beholding,
Shall each labourer find reward,
And receive the guerdon golden,
At the hands of Christ the Lord.

HARRIET JULIA EVANS.

The Evangelist.

"THAT EVERLASTING QUESTION!"

"Oh!" says some poor, sin-sick soul, "how can I bear it! I am tired of life—tired of self, tired of sin; weary of the perpetual struggle to do right; of the failure, of the regret—of everything! After all, is life worth living? One seems to be so heavily handicapped at the start that it is all wrong somewhere!"

That everlasting question—Is life worth living? Why not face the fact that, as long as there is life it must be lived? The real question is—How? There are many ways of living life. Ask yourself—How shall I live mine? and you have half the answer. The weariness, the defeat, the regret will be impossible if you decide to make it worth your while to live.

"How can I do that?" you ask.

I do not know who you are; what you have been; how you have used the years of your past; but I do know that you are someone whom Jesus came to save—whom He loves; for whom He ever lives to intercede; and to whom He looks for some reflection of his earthly life.

You do not deny or disclaim this, you say. No; you simply ignore it, to your own loss and hurt.

Oh, you, for whom my Lord lived and died; draw near, that He may speak to you, for I cannot!

"My child," He says to you, "are you tired, weary of sin and self? Come unto Me, and I will give you rest—rest from sin; from fear; from regret; from self-reproach; from everything that drags you down, and away from my heart of love for you.

"O my son, my daughter, 'you have grievously sinned,' you say? I did not come to call the righteous—I did not come to tend the whole—I was not sent to any but the lost—I cannot heal where there is no sickness; and you say you have sinned, and are weary; you are sick, and need healing; you are lost, and would be found! Child, child, you are mine! Come to Me, and I will guide your feet in the hard and narrow way. Come to Me, and my arms will enfold you and strengthen you as you go out into the fight and fray, and together we will conquer. Come to Me to be taught to understand what is the perfect love of God; what the joy of forgiven sin; what the power and the beauty of life when you yield yourself entirely to Me!

"I came—it was for you—will you not receive Me? I lived—I suffered—I died for you—Will you believe it? I am here to save, to help, to comfort you—Is it in vain? You tell me, my child, that you are handicapped—that you feel your life to be a mistake? Well, shall we say perhaps it may be so? And yet I can change all that. You are hampered by sin, dear child; I can and will give you a new heart; I will wash away your sin. Come, my child, let there be a fresh start—let Me help you to lay aside every weight; that clamorous sin which so easily besets you; that useless regret which spoils and mars all you do; you shall run and not be weary; you shall walk and not faint; and that which you see not now, you shall be taught, and you shall rejoice and live for Me. Come, my child; together we will go over the rough roads; together we will journey to God."

O you to whom He speaks, shall it be said of you—

So near the door—and the door stood wide
Close to the port—but not inside!
Near to the fold—yet not within!
Almost resolved to give up sin!
Almost persuaded to count the cost!
Almost a Christian—and yet lost!

Ah, no, you cannot resist his pleading, his power, his love, and his mercy; the whole, one cry of your soul must be:—

Saviour, I come, I cry to Thee—
Oh, let not those words be true of me:
I do want to come to a point to-day;
Lord, suffer me not to be turned away.
Give me no rest till my soul shall be Within the Refuge—yes, safe in Thee!

MELKSHAM.—On Tuesday week special meetings were held in a tent at Giffords, Melksham, when two addresses were given by Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Christ Church, Westminster. The afternoon subject was "Christian Living," and the evening, "The Gift of the Holy Spirit." A large number of people gathered, including nearly twenty ministers from the neighbouring towns. It was a time of great heart-searching and blessing.

The Might of the Spirit.

BIBLE-READING AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

By REV. HUBERT BROOKE.

WHEN he asked Elijah for a double portion of his spirit (2 Kings ii. 1-14), Elisha was no doubt alluding to the law given under Moses, by which the firstborn son of a family had a right to twice as much of his father's property as any of the other children. Turn to Deut. xxi., and you will see in verse 17, that when a man had more sons than one, he should acknowledge the right of the son who had the advantage to be the firstborn by giving him a double portion of all that he had. So, if you turn again to Gen. xlviii., you read that, because Joseph was reckoned the firstborn of Jacob's sons (in verse 22), "Moreover I have given to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite with my sword and with my bow." This is a very important point, and proves that Elisha, in his answer to Elijah's request, claimed from his master the place, as it were, of the firstborn in his family, "Give me a double portion of thy spirit." Elisha was Elijah's spiritual child, his spiritual descendant; and he asked for the equipment of the life in which he was to live, that he might have the firstborn's portion, namely, twice as much as any other of the sons of the prophets whom God was blessing in those days. So, then, we should understand that, in things natural, an Israelitish father, if he had five sons, would divide his property into six portions, of which the elder son would have two and all the rest one apiece. You see, too, that Elisha was claiming from his master the firstborn's position in his household, "Let a double portion of thy spirit be upon me."

I think it is that point of it which brings it home as something personal to us to-day. You know that your position and mine, as believers in the Lord Jesus Christ, is the very same position which Elisha asked he might have at the hands of Elijah. Look at Hebrews xii., a book so full of allusions to Old Testament prophets and subjects under the Mosaic dispensation. You read there, "Ye are come unto Mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the firstborn." And as members of the church of the firstborn, we, too, have a right to ask of our Father of the Holy Spirit, a two-fold presence, a two-fold gift, a two-fold working of the Holy Spirit in our lives.

We have the Spirit of Sonship first of all. That we must have, of course, or there can be no question of anything else. But we who have received the spirit of sonship are told of a further gift to us, "Ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost not many days hence." They who had the spirit of sonship received also the power of the Spirit for service. They who were already born of the Holy Ghost were now to know what it was to be filled with the Holy Ghost. And the right and privilege, the heritage and lawful possession of every member of the church of the firstborn to-day, is a double portion of God's Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit comes to give us life, first of all. "If any man hath not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." We must be born of water and of the Spirit before we can enter the Kingdom of God. But after those who have been born do see and have entered the Kingdom of God, there is a further gift. Those who have already the spirit of sonship have a right to go to their Father, and say to Him, "Give me thy Holy Spirit." "How much more shall your heavenly Father"—He to whom you are already sons and daughters—"give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him?"

But this story tells us something more. There is not only the right and privilege—we need to understand that clearly—but we also need to come to God with definite prayers. It does not please Him nor does it profit us to come and ask vaguely such things that we do not know when we have received them, or whether we have received them or not. God is very definite in his promises, let us be at least as definite in our prayers and expectations. If we have known what it was to ask Him to give us life in Christ, let us not be afraid to ask as simply, and expect to receive as definite an answer and blessing, when we ask for life abundantly and the fulness of the Spirit.

This story tells us something more. It pictures to you a little journey, lasting perhaps not more than a few days at the outside. This journey gives you the significant steps by which the one who asked for a double portion of his Master's spirit was prepared to receive this wondrous gift. I see meaning in God's Word when we find a short space of time with a long description given to us, and a long space of time with a short description thereof. After the story of Elijah, in chapters xvii. to xix. of the First Book of Kings, comes seven years' interval before the next chapter, and yet as these years go by not a word is recorded about them. But when there is something of importance to be narrated, some crisis in the Kingdom of Heaven, some great principle to be established for our use as well as for use by the saints of old, then the Spirit of God can give us full details, magnifying, as He does here, the little walk for a few days of two among his own faithful servants.

Now, if any of us were walking this afternoon over the site of some famous battle with which our history is bound up, such as the plains of Waterloo, or some of the famous sites in the Crimea of which our history has so much to tell, we, as members of Britain's race, would be certain to be talking of the past scenes with which those sites are associated, we could not avoid talking of such events and places first and foremost. And when these two men of God walked as they did that day, from one place to another, to four of the most important places in all Israel's history—two of them, Gilgal and Bethel, receiving their names from events of God's dealings with his people; and two others, Jericho and Jordan, bound up with God's judgments in the past—we cannot doubt that they were talking, as they went to those places, of what God had done in days gone by. We, too, can start from Gilgal, and ask, if they were talking of God's dealings, what kind of a starting place it was for such as wish to possess the double portion of God's Spirit.

If you turn back to the Book of Joshua, three out of the four places dealt with in this chapter of the Kings are found mentioned in the close of chapter iv., from verse 19, "The people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month, and encamped in Gilgal, in the east border of Jericho. And those twelve stones which they took out of Jordan did Joshua pitch in Gilgal." So it was the first place their foot rested on when they left their wilderness life behind, and in the land of Canaan. They had been God's redeemed people for forty years. It was forty years before that they had come out of Egypt. They knew the lesson of the Passover and of the blood sprinkled upon their doors, and the feast upon the flesh of the lamb. Forty years had they known the lesson of baptism when they passed through the Red Sea; and for forty years they had known much of God's dealings with them and provision for them. But here they came into a new experience; and the first place in which they rested was Gilgal. What did that mean? They not only set up the pillar there which told that they had done with all their wilderness life, with its murmurings, its looking back into Egypt and longing for the old things which they had left behind there. In Gilgal they set up a pillar to show that the old things were done with for ever, buried at the bottom of the river Jordan; and they started out upon a new life of victory with the Lord from that day. Then, in Josh. v. 2, we read, "At that time"—not till then—"the Lord said unto Joshua, Make thee sharp knives, and circumcise again the children of Israel the second time." Yes, that was God's most significant emblem, the sign of his covenant and the seal of his promises, to make them know that God's people are those who have no confidence in the flesh; that reliance upon the flesh, confidence in the power of the flesh, never brought a man to Christ, and will never carry him on in Christ. From beginning to end the flesh can never be used in God's service.

Is there anyone here so foolish as to think that, having begun in the Spirit, he is going to be made perfect in the flesh? In Josh. v. 9, we are told, "The Lord said unto Joshua, This day have I rolled away the reproach of Egypt from off you. Wherefore the name of the place is called Gilgal unto this day." The reproach of Egypt, what was it? Glance for a moment at Isa. xxxi., and there you hear the Lord say, in the first verse, "Woe to them that go down to Egypt for help; and stay on horses, and trust in chariots, because they are many, and in horsemen, because they are very strong; but they look not unto the Holy One of Israel, neither seek the Lord!" Verse 3, "The Egyptians are men, and not God; and their horses flesh, and not spirit." When Israel that day took up their resting place at Gilgal (rolling), and God so named it because of the rolling away of the reproach of Egypt, it meant that, from that time forth, they were not going to reckon their earthly powers and forces, but were going forth in the name of the Lord alone to cast down those who were mightier than themselves. When they had looked at the land, thirty-eight and a-half years before, they had said they were not able to go up and take possession; but now, when the forty years are done, such an idea has no place in their thoughts. In the Lord's name they went up and conquered.

You can see, then, what Gilgal was, the place of starting out, the place of new food. As the verses which follow tell you (Joshua v.), Israel ceased to feed on the manna, and took to the food of the land wherein they now dwelt. They learned the powers of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus Christ, the gift which comes to God's people when they know the risen and glorified Saviour, who, not until He so rose and was glorified, poured out the Holy Ghost upon his people. Therefore Gilgal tells us of the starting point or pathway of power in the walk of blessing—

NO CONFIDENCE IN THE FLESH.

Oh, friends! come in here to communion with God, and ask of Him that whatever is meant by the might of the Spirit—none can define it or exhaust its definition—at least something of it may be ours; that whatever is meant by "the love of Christ" in all its boundless fulness, at least more of it may be ours; and that whatever is comprised in all "the fulness of God," at least something more of that fulness than we have ever known before may fill us ere we leave this place. Are you ready to take your start from this place of Gilgal, to lay aside the confidence hitherto placed at least in something of your own, in your gifts of mind, in your gifts of body, in your gifts of grace, in your power of speech, in your past experience, in your bygone blessings? Is it those upon which you have been relying in some measure for the life in which you may glorify God and overcome his foes? If you wish to come and live in knowing the fulness of the Holy Ghost, it is the humble and contrite heart, it is the poor and lowly soul in which He dwells, the heart which has made its foundation rest to be this Gilgal, no confidence in the flesh, that the Lord and the Lord alone may be relied upon every moment that we live.

As Elijah and Elisha went on and talked together of how Israel in those days of their weakness found the power of God to be so wonderful, and, perhaps, contrasted it with their own days wherein Israel and Judah, strong in self-reliance and confidence, were so weak for God and for his glory, how they must have longed to see something of God's old-time work in glory back again in the midst of his people. The Lord sent them away to Bethel, where they learned their second lesson. Bethel takes us back to Gen. xxviii., the story, so familiar to us, of Jacob's first journey from his home, when he was on his way to Laban. There he went out, lighted on a certain place, tarried all night, taking of the stones of that place, putting them for his pillow, and lying down in that place to sleep. When he lay down to sleep that night, I think he had, for the first time in his life, learned the lesson of Gilgal, no confidence in the flesh. Up to that time he had been working in all the power of the flesh to gain spiritual blessings.

Do not be surprised at that; it is always happening again. Almost the first thought of a truly converted soul is, "How shall I go and serve Christ? Let me see what I can do, in order to follow the Master," instead of seeing that I am not to have a voice in the matter at all. If we are redeemed and belong to the Lord, it is "What wilt Thou have me to do?" Here was Jacob, with the grand central blessing in his heart. He wished to get all he could of blessing, and it is right to have such a wish; but it was the wrong way in which he went about it. He joined deceit and lying with all his skill, power, and confidence in the flesh, until he got his "blessing," and much good it did him. Look at his condition as he lay down at Bethel; he who was to have vast possessions, and through whom was to come blessing to the whole world, now with nothing but a staff in his hand, and without more than a stone for a pillow.

OUTCAST, PENNILESS, A WANDERER, not knowing what lay before him, all these things come upon him through confidence in the flesh.

As he lay there he dreamed, and behold a ladder set up on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven, and behold the angels of God ascending and descending on it. And, behold, the Lord stood above it, and said, "Behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee in all places whither thou goest, and will bring thee again into this land; for I will not leave thee until I have done that which I have spoken to thee of." So he called that place Bethel, the house of God, the place where God was, because God said to him, "I am with thee, and I will not leave thee." Why, then, from that day on, wherever Jacob was, there was Bethel, the perpetual presence of God. That is the blessing of Bethel, the perpetual presence of God, "I am with thee, I will not leave thee," a blessing carried down to us to-day. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," so that we may boldly say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." Oh! what a filling is this, when one's heart is empty. What a wonderful exchange it is when we give up confidence in the flesh, receive in return this promise, take in return this step with God. "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." You see it is a promise, which belongs to us as it belonged to them, of God's presence. The great thing for us to ascertain is what they went on to ascertain when they took the next step together; that is

WHAT IS THE POWER OF GOD'S PRESENCE?

Intellectually and doctrinally, every one of us here to-day says we believe in God's perpetual presence. If any of us were asked, "Do you believe God is here in the midst?" we should reply, "Of course; He said He would be here." "Do you believe He is everywhere with you in your life?" "Yes; He says so." But what is the power of that presence? What does that presence do when it is known and proved? As the two men spake together at Bethel, remembering God's promise to Jacob there, they realised, nine hundred and seventy years after the event with which that place was associated, that God had never removed from his people the promise of his presence then given. A promise of God is not broken; enjoyment of it often is, through man's fault. If in our lives there has either never been a knowledge of what God's presence and power are, or if there have been interruptions to that knowledge, if we must say that we once did know it, but now we do not, let us remember that his promise has not ceased.

God's promise has the same power to-day as of old. What the power is, is called to the servant's mind as the Lord tells him and his master to go on to Jericho—the third step which the two took together. That was the place, you remember (Joshua v., closing verses), before which Joshua once walked alone, looking at those high walls built up to heaven which stood before him, as the first of all the mighty cities which he and his people were to overthrow and win. Doubtless, he was, in his heart, crying to God, saying, How can those great walls go down before feeble Israel? And there before him, behold, there stood a man with a drawn sword in his hand, who answered for Joshua the very question which, in various forms, has ever come before God's people through all the years of this Conference. There was the Angel of God's presence, manifest to his servant. Then you know what we read in the next chapter. Israel, in silence, marches round those walls. What a sight it must have been to the inhabitants of Jericho, as they looked down upon Israel from the walls of the city. The invaders raised no battering-rams, used no engines of war, but marched, in perfect silence, round those walls day after day. When the seventh day had come, and the seventh circuit was accomplished, Israel lifted their voices in one shout; and then men saw what they may still see if they will—what the power of the presence of God is. The walls went down flat, and every man went straight up before him. That was how it was in the days of old.

Then contrast it with what the prophet and his servant saw. Those walls on which the curse of Joshua had been laid, and those foundations, they had been built again in the lifetime of these two men. Men had openly defied God's curse, and had built up Jericho. In Ahab's, Elijah's, and Elisha's day did Hiel the Beth-elite lay the foundation in his firstborn, and set up the gates in his youngest son. Though nigh five or six hundred years had passed between the two events, God's curse was as fresh as on the day it was spoken for those who defied Him. Would not Elijah and Elisha say then, that God's blessing must be as fresh as on the day it was spoken for them that trust Him? Did it not tell them of an all-present God, to see before their eyes this city which had just been built again? Would they not say, "God's promise of blessing must be still true. God's presence is nor to the ark before which those waters once opened, and those walls went down. God's presence must be fresh as ever. Why not prove it to-day?"

God sent them on to Jordan. There they learned the last lesson. Not only did they find what is the power of God's presence. That we can search out for ourselves in God's Word, finding that we can heap up wonderful stories of what his presence did in days gone by, getting our hearts warmed and our appetites whetted until we long for the same kind of things in our own lives. Then God will take us, as He took them, to a place where they not only knew the power of his presence, but the presence of his power. At Jordan that day they proved the presence of his power. They stood by Jordan, probably at the very spot where Israel once passed over, and they talked together of how the ark of God, carried by the hands of the priests, had come down to the water's edge, and then how the waters were parted asunder right and left, just as the mountains trembled before God's presence. But was that presence confined to God's ark? No, because God's ark had been led captive between that and this. Was it confined to the city of Jerusalem, wherein He said He would dwell? No, because there was idolatry in the city of Jerusalem, and God's presence was going out of it. It was to be found then, and is to be found now, in every heart which has as its foundation Gilgal, no confidence in the flesh. In every lowly heart which turns to Bethel as a home is the perpetual presence of God, in every heart which looks back and knows what God has done in the past, and in every heart which trusts God to do the same in the present.

As Elijah took his mantle and smote the waters, they divided asunder, and they two went over on dry ground—the very phrase, word for word, which is used in Israel's history five or six hundred years before. It means that God was the same in the year 960 B.C. as he was in the year 1450 B.C. He was the same then, and is the same to-day, as in the former days when He answered his people's cry. We must not think such things are for Elijah and Elisha alone. Only this we can say, and, when we put God to the test like that, we are told to offer and to accept things we perhaps could not have had the courage to ask before. What a wonderful request that from the elder prophet seemed,

"ASK WHAT I SHALL GIVE THEE."

The whole wide world is before thee. What had he best take? He took the highest and the best good, the double portion, the firstborn's place, to tread in his father's steps and to follow in his faithful work. A hard thing? Yes, a hard thing for hearts not opened to see the ascending glory, and hearts not opened to believe in a present Christ; but quite easy for him who did it then to do it now.

As Elijah was taken up, Elisha saw him, we are told; and the latter wanted no more his old garments of servitude. He took them, rent them in pieces, and cast them away. He took the new garment which had fallen from above, stood by the waters, smote them, and said, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Elijah had perhaps said, "Where is the Lord God of Joshua?" and, before him, Jacob had asked, "Where is the Lord God of Isaac and the Lord God of Abraham?" and now the inquiry is for us to-day. That God bids us come along the same path, take the same way for us, too, claim that same blessing, and put Him to the same proof as they did. We, too, have the call to go forward and to prove the presence of God. We must not look outside at the Church of Christ. If they had looked at the chosen people, what would the prophets have found? In Gilgal and Bethel, altars to false gods springing up in heaps in the fields; Jericho put up, with its lesson almost forgotten. You may look to professing Christians, and they will tell you you are talking of fables if you speak of these things. "Pentecost?" they will say, "that was fourteen hundred years ago; we have nothing to do with it now. The Holy Ghost? no man can know what it means." It is not from the language of the professing Church that you will be taught in any branch of it. No, the language of the Word of God is the place to which we want the professing Church to come back, but some poor souls think they know better. It is not always by argument that we can convince them they are wrong; in that way we mostly fail, for the

is very strong. But there is one proof which I do not think the whole arguments of the world can stand against—the lives of men and women filled with the Holy Ghost. That is the answer which we want to go out from our conference into the world, proofs which should make men know there is something in God which they never dreamed of before.

There was one who told me this story of his father, long years ago. His father and another able scholar were two of the most brilliant men of the year at Cambridge, I suppose now something like seventy years ago. They finished their college course together, coming out two senior scholars of Trinity College. The father's associate said to him: "I do not believe now that there is any power in the world which can convince me that there is a God, or that it can be known." That was a fine height for walls to be raised against God. In such a spirit as that, he finished that portion of his life's training, thinking himself to be in an impregnable fortress, which no power of God could break down. A little while after taking his degree he was spending some time in a country house. Amongst the guests came a lady who, within a few weeks, had lost her husband and three children, the only three she had, at a single blow. She was there in that house, in the presence and company of this atheist, just after the blow had fallen upon her. All knew the story, and pitied her for it; but about that woman there was such an unearthly peace, such an unanswerable calm and presence of God, that the proud man was bowed to the dust, and said to himself: "There is a God whom I do not know." For weeks he fought against the conviction, and during weeks the Spirit of God strove with him, breaking down one by one the turrets, fortresses, and walls which he had built up, until it brought him—thanks be to God—a humble child at the foot of the Cross. It was the power of a life filled with the Holy Ghost that broke down the atheism of the most cultured man of his day. It does not take wisdom and earthly power, human gifts and natural forces to do that; but a humble, lowly, contrite heart, which casts out its own fears, and, goes out to put Him to the test, saying: "What Thou wast, Thou art to-day; what Thou didst then, Thou canst do now; and what men trusted Thee to do of old, I, thy child, am going to trust Thee to do for me to-day."

LEANING UPON THE PRESENCE OF GOD,

Will you say that to Him? You are here for conference with God, and you will severally be going back to hundreds of different homes. You may go back as different as Elisha did, back to his old home and haunts. You know he went back to some of the places to which he had been before. He goes back again, and comes to the very sons of the prophets who had seen him just before. He tarried at Jericho, and found that God can bring life and blessing even into the very city of the curse. He can go out to rebuke in the name of the Lord, to win victories in the name of the Lord, to bless and humble and abase the proud, because he has the double portion of the Holy Ghost upon him. Why talk the old life to such a new man? Oh! friends, the old lives we have been living! Are they not like death for new men and new women to live in? Is it not what the poor world is asking for? unanswerable proof from the lives of those who live, that the presence of God is a reality to-day, and that the might of the Spirit can be proved in the lives of those who trust God. We may go back to our daily lives with some of the blessed possession in our hearts that Elisha had in his. You must start out in emptiness every morning, and, when the day's service is done, come back to Gilgal and tell God you have been an unprofitable servant, and that it is in his fulness you want to be kept.

Man's weakness, leaning upon God,
Its end can never miss,
For man on earth no work can do
More angel-like than this.

Shall we take to Him his own Word, and ask Him, in our own hearts, each one of his own children, to pour out the gift which belongs to us of right as members of the Church of the Firstborn, that from our lives, glory may be brought Him, through Jesus Christ our Lord?

NORTHFIELD SUMMER SCHOOL.—I.

The eighth annual Students' Conference, at Mr. Moody's home, commenced on July 1 with about 400 representative students present from colleges such as Princeton, Amherst, Pennsylvania, Harvard, Yale, Lafayette, Oberlin, Washington, and Syracuse, besides the Indian Training Schools.

Mr. D. L. Moody, in his welcome address, took as his theme Nehemiah—bringing many valuable and pointed lessons from the life of that ancient servant of God.

On the following morning the services were held in the Congregational Church with an audience of about 1200 people. The first half-hour was devoted to a song service.

THE LESSON OF MOSES.

Mr. Moody delivered an address on "The Call of Moses." Moses was a university man, and had been in the best society of those days. He started out with a big head and a little heart. Many people to-day start out with a big idea of themselves, and think other people are small. God never uses a person of that kind. When Moses heard the call he had grown smaller, and he said, "Who am I?" God had had his eye on him, and he was the man of all others whom God wanted. When a man to-day learns that he is nothing and God is everything, then God will use him.

Moses then went on making excuses and asked who he should say had sent him. He had failed once and he did not have confidence in himself. God, however, had taken him into partnership, and all he had to do was to look to God for aid. Make sure of your call; make sure that God has sent you and you will be mighty. It sometimes looks as if your mission had failed, but you may be sure that it has not. All the apparent failures recorded in the acts are victories. Forget yourself and let your message and not self, be the most important. It is not eloquence the Lord wants. Did you ever think what Moses would have lost had God taken him at his word, and not sent him into Egypt? Anything God asks—do it, and He will be with you. I believe that God has a call for every one, and it is our place to listen for his voice.

Rev. Dr. H. Mabie, of Boston, then spoke on "Contrasted Patterns of Life," taking as the subject of his remarks two passages in Genesis, the first being "Go to—let us build...let us make," and the second, "Get thee out and I will make of thee."

On Monday the Bible-classes were organised. In the principal meeting an important address was given by Professor Winchester on "The Bible as Literature." The Round Top meeting (held in the open-air) attracted one of the largest audiences ever gathered in that famous spot. Rev. H. P. Beach presided, and opened by explaining that the Round Top meetings were for the purpose of aiding young men in choosing their life's work. Dr. McBride's subject was, "What Constitutes a Call?" He believed that God calls a man to secular as well as spiritual work. God's call is not always to the Christian ministry. There is need of Christian lawyers, physicians, engineers, mechanics, and tradesmen. Men, however, should seek to know what occupation or profession they should take up. How are we to know to what we are called, and how are we to know God's will? We should first consider our fitness and our adaptation. That goes a long way towards deciding our call. Go where there is the greatest need, where you can best glorify God. If you ask the guidance of God, you will be surprised how the way will open to you. The call comes also as an inward conviction.

Dr. H. C. Mabie followed on "Principles which may assist us in deciding upon our life work." Young men should cherish a belief in the reality of their call. God has a plan for every man, and no man has a right to lead a selfish life. Consultation with spiritual-minded friends often aids in helping you to decide your life's work. You should also cherish providential tokens in your life. Mr. E. Lawrence Hunt had as his subject, "Helps for a student who wants to decide."

There was a large audience at the platform meeting, which followed in the Stone Hall. Professor W. W. Moore delivered an address on Rom. xiv. 17: "The kingdom of God is not meat and drink, but righteousness and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Meat and drink, the speaker explained, meant external forms of religion, while righteousness and peace and joy are inward spiritual graces. Baptism and church membership are not essential to Christianity. By this he did not mean that they are not important. Yet a man may have been baptized and be a church member, and not be a member of the kingdom of God. The speaker dwelt on several means of grace, and added, "It may be that some out of these 300 or 400 students feel conscience-stricken because of something left undone. If you do not go away from here with a firmer trust and a more definite determination to use what God has given you, then this conference has been a failure as far as you are concerned. God's religion is not only one of righteousness and peace, but it is a joyful religion, although many people do not recognise it as such.

The principal speakers on the Tuesday were Revs. A. McKenzie, D.D., and A. T. Pierson, D.D. The morning was given to the Conference on Missions, from which, it is held, not a few were called out, and will yet be found in the foreign field.

Wednesday, being "Independence Day," was observed by the students in the manner customary amongst young Americans. In the evening a new auditorium was opened on the highest point of the seminary grounds. The building, although not yet completed, is nevertheless so near done that one gets a very good idea of its outer and inner beauty. For several years past the attendance at the July and August conferences has been so large, that Stone Hall has been inadequate to hold all who attend, and the need of a larger building has been greatly felt. Last August, on the day following the close of the conference, an informal meeting was held of those interested in putting up a new building, and in half an hour 25,000 dols. were pledged. The building is built of brick, with terra-cotta and brownstone trimmings, while the foundation, which extends several feet above the ground, is of granite. The interior of the auditorium is no less grand. The floor surfaces are arranged with curved inclines, so that the platform can be easily seen from any quarter of the large room. The seats are placed about the platform in a semi-circle, and will accommodate 1400 people, while above is a gallery in the horse-shoe form extending on three sides, and this will seat 900. In addition to this there are 300 seats in the choir gallery, at the rear of the platform.

ZAMBESI INDUSTRIAL MISSION.

Mr. W. Graham writes:—"Praise God, amidst all the sickness and deaths, He has always kept some of us strong enough to go out to the villages bearing the glad tidings of salvation. On Sunday last, David Livingstone and I had a most interesting meeting at Chief Binda's village. The old chief and about twenty of his village people all gathered under the verandah of one of the huts, while David and I sat outside in a pouring rain. For about an hour we spoke to them about Jesus. This old white-haired chief and two of his sons, with many others, have given themselves to Christ.

"As I was telling them about how God wished us to live in order to please Him, I spoke of the sin of drinking and about smoking, adding how nice it would be if the chief and those in his village, instead of gathering to drink pombe and smoke pipes as they used to do, and as some of them perhaps still did, should gather and speak and sing of Jesus, telling each other how Jesus loved them and how they loved Him. You should have seen the old chief looking from one to the other, and then he began to speak to them, telling them that what the white man had said was good, and that he was going to stop smoking. Some of the others said they would do the same, not merely to please the white men, but to please God. It is wonderful how God can work by his Spirit on these dark-hearted as well as dark-skinned people." Our readers will note with pain the tidings in our obituary column of the recent deaths in the Mission.

SAILORS' ORPHAN GIRLS' HOME.—The annual report states that the work has been carried on successfully, and that the health of the children under their care is very good. At the last election twelve girls were admitted to the school. Four girls having arrived at the age for leaving school, situations were found for them. Seven girls have been withdrawn by friends who are now in a position to support them. To fill vacancies seven girls who received the highest number of votes were admitted. The office is 50, Bishopsgate-street Within, E.C.

A WOMAN'S QUIET WORK.

What God can do even by the weakest instruments when they are yielded to Him, and fully prepared to do his will, in reliance on his strength, has again and again been witnessed in Christian history. A fresh illustration is supplied in the following story.

Miss S. A. Sewell was in 1869 a poor invalid, who sought only to sit in the corner or behind the door brooding over her physical afflictions. In that year, however, she believed that God called her to personal service. She heard people talking of the prisons, and made up her mind to visit the State prison of Ohio. This she did, and came away broken-hearted over the fallen and desperate men she had seen inside the prison walls. "Lord," she said, "if you want me to visit the prisons, send me; I am willing."

On the journey home she noticed in the train a poor suffering girl in great distress. Those with her did not seem to understand her, and could not quiet her. Said Miss Sewell, "Let me take charge of her for a little. I've been an invalid myself, and I have One who will help me to deal with her." They were surprised that a stranger should thus come forward, but consented to let the volunteer try. "I just asked the Lord to help me. I did what I could to make the girl comfortable; and in ten minutes she was quietly sleeping in the car. They looked at me as if I was a magician. Then the superintendent of the line came and said, 'Do you know that is my daughter? How did you do it?' 'Oh,' was my reply, 'God did it: I asked Him.' 'Well,' said the superintendent, 'what can I do for you, for your kindness?' 'Just give me a pass to travel on your line to talk to your men, and to visit the prisons.'" He was amazed at this answer, but gave her a note to the president, "Give this lady a pass." The president was astonished at the request; his lips said "No," but his pen said "Yes," and he wrote out the pass, allowing her to travel as she chose on a line extending 2,000 miles. She told him she would never cease praying for him, and she did pray until he is now one of the Christian workers in his city.

This opening incident is typical of Miss Sewell's whole experience. She carries now a series of passes entitling her to travel on the chief lines in the United States, and every one of these permits is a token of prayer answered. She started in Ohio, her own State, and went on to Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana, and Kansas, gradually pushing further, as she believed herself led, until now she has visited the principal prisons, gaols, insane asylums, and other public institutions from New York to San Francisco, and from Chicago to Washington.

In all her journeying the one aim has been to set forth Christ, and many have been won to Him; In one prison, for example, the Governor said, "There's so-and-so, we can do nothing with him; if you convert him, we will let you visit freely." She went to this man, found him a hardened sceptic, talked gently to him again and again, but never mentioned religion. At last he said, "You talk religion, I know, to the other men; why don't you to me?" "Because you don't believe in it at all," you say." This opened the way; she talked to him in her own quiet manner, and to-day he is a truly changed man, and is as a brother to her who came as a messenger of mercy to him in his cell. In some such way she has been made a blessing to very many poor prisoners.

But in going to and fro she was always dealing similarly with the brakesmen on the cars and at the depôts, and amongst these she has been marvellously used of God, as evidenced in changed lives and happy homes.

Then Miss Sewell found much to do for poor girls—many of them rosy-cheeked, fresh English and European girls, coming over without means, failing to find work, and led astray. Many of these has she been the means of rescuing. Often, too, has she been led to some innocent girl, betrayed into entering unwittingly an evil house, whence, humanly speaking, she could not escape. Numbers of these have been saved in time by Miss Sewell.

Among the emigrants, crowded together in the depôts, and in the cheap lodging-houses among the poor and friendless, much personal work has also been done—always by simply following the leading of God.

A short time ago Miss Sewell visited London. While here we interviewed her. Now, however, she has gone in her own characteristic fashion, going where she believes God has sent her, and for the present we cannot give her address.

SIN.

By Pastor LEVI PALMER.

Sin is not "an upward step in the world's history," nor merely "the sour stage through which humanity is passing into ripeness." We know too much of ourselves, and have seen too much of others, to regard the doctrine of total depravity as only a theological tenet. The Bible uses at least twenty different words to denote sin, and each emphasises the fact that "sin is the transgression of the law." But the law is the index of God's character; sin therefore is a revolt from God. In this sense we believe that the depravity of man is total. We do not mean that any soul has reached the climax of sinfulness. "Even Satan himself has not sinned his last sin." Neither do we deny that excellent traits of, what men call, virtue, may be found in unregenerate hearts. But these are deeds between man and man, and do not arise out of the soul's allegiance to God. It is possible for man to appear morally good in the eyes of men and be totally bad in the eyes of God. This possibility arises out of man's two-fold relationship—he is related to God, and he is related to his fellow-men. His allegiance to God has been destroyed by sin, but his relationship to man may still survive. Though no longer a son of God he is still a member of society. He loves life, and is interested in the welfare of the commonwealth. He therefore cultivates morality, seeks to improve commerce, and by politics seeks to safeguard society. In this way arts, poetries, philosophies, and sciences arise to adorn and elevate life. But all these may arise out of man's relationship to man, and not out of true loyalty and passionate love to God.

Now, the chief end and the first duty of man is to glorify God and enjoy Him for ever. To fail here is to fail totally. It reduces virtue to vice and turns obedience into disobedience. So-called noble traits of character become but splendid sins. The refusal of the young ruler to surrender all to Christ turned his righteousness into unrighteousness. Those whom Christ describes as "the whole who need not a physician" are not the sinless and the perfect. When in the parable he speaks of the "ninety-and-nine," these are not the unfallen sons of Adam. Even in the parable of the Prodigal Son the elder brother is not a perfectly obedient son, nor a very estimable character, "but an unbelieving brother whose self-righteousness is yet more repulsive than the poor Prodigal's unrighteousness."

In this light we have to view most of the advances in civilisation and most of the refinements in society. National prestige, social grandeur, moral elevation, and even religious display, may all exist apart from the power of true godliness. In the past Greece and Rome rose high in the scale of human greatness; to-day France and Germany, England and America, stand higher still. But no nation has ever risen so high as the Jewish nation; they were exalted to heaven by privileges, and distinguished from the whole world by their religion. Yet their pedestal of honour and garb of religiousness only served to exhibit the depravity of their nature. Human sin culminated in a form of godliness that denied the power, so that when God Himself became incarnate his only crown was a thorn crown, his sceptre a reed, and the shout of his subjects was, "Crucify Him! Crucify Him!"

If depravity in our nature were not total, our truest wisdom would be to discover the guilty faculties, and seek to suppress them, and develop those that are unfallen. Men will have a diseased limb amputated because a maimed body is better than a diseased body. In like manner a maimed soul is preferable to a depraved soul. If sin is limited to some faculty or power, it would serve our highest purpose to find out what principles are depraved and what are perfect. Is it the heart apart from the mind that sins? Or is it the mind apart from the heart? The one would take away the moral and the other the rational element of sin. Is it the memory or is it the will? The one would limit sin to the past, the other would fix it in the present. Is it only our material nature that would deprive sin of its spiritual element? No! The soul as an indivisible unit sins. All the principles that constitute manhood are implicated in sin. Scripture emphatically states this. The guilt of the soul is ascribed to the will, the imagination, the mind, the heart, the understanding, the tongue, the throat, the lips, the eyes, the mouth, the feet, the hands. "From the sole of the foot even to the head there is no soundness in him."

If we think of the period when sin often reveals itself it does not improve matters. It is not an after-development in man's life. The blight is in the opening bud. Not only does sin stay late, but it comes early. No man can remember his first sinful act, much less his first sinful thought. It not only sprung upon our first parents in a paradise of blessings, but it has stained our souls amid life's fairest prospects and in the most blessed moments of our experience. As Doeg was found by the side of David in God's temple so sin often accompanies us. "Old Adam," as Bunyan calls it, grips us whilst we preach and torments us even when we pray. Probably if we could penetrate the depths of our souls we should find that there is no sin which Satan has ever yet sinned of which the germ and possibility is not within us.

We feel also that the stain of sin is as deep as the grip of sin is strong. Conscience will reveal it, but it cannot remove it. It will condemn and torture, but it cannot cleanse and purify. The penal fires that it kindles in the soul consume the sinner, but the sin remains. We may loath it, but we cannot remove it. Tears will not wipe it out: suffering will not atone for it: even the imperial will cannot stem it. Misfortune hardens and success inflames it. "It flourishes amid the glare of worldly prosperity, and thrives beneath clouds of human sorrow." If we look back it peoples the past and sets the revolving sword at the gate of Eden. If we look up it surrounds the throne of the everlasting Father with the terrors and lightnings of Sinai. If we look around we find that it is the disease of which the whole world is sick and ready to die.

CELESTIAL FIRE.

How promptly fell the Heaven-sent fire,
What time Elijah prayed,
God's glory his supreme desire
In all that he essayed!

And thus the fire from Heaven shall fall
In answer to our prayer,
As we, too, consecrate our all,
And for that fire prepare.

Success shall then our efforts crown,
The Church on earth shall grow,
While streams of grace come richly down
And o'er our spirits flow.

Nor need we long the promise wait;
Let faith but trust the Word,
And lo! before the open gate
There stands our risen Lord!

He knocks, but we had closed the door!
He speaks, we failed to hear!
And yet He loves us evermore,
And longs to draw more near.

Did faith with understanding grow,
And consecration too,
What mighty power the Church would know,
What wonders might she do!

God's Spirit should these temples fill
With his consuming flame;
And bid our inmost bosom thrill
Responsive to his claim!

Thou Spirit of Eternal Grace,
Come, we entreat Thee, come!
Make every heart thy dwelling-place,
Thy temple and thy home!

THE POLAR REGIONS.—The brig Alert left Peterhead on Friday for Noble's Station, at Black Lead Islands, Cumberland Gulf. This vessel goes out annually with stores for the station, and brings home the stores which the manager and the natives have been able to collect. The Alert also takes out Rev. E. J. Peck, of the C.M.S., and Mr. Parker, a young man with medical knowledge, who is to assist in the work of the mission. It is intended to give the new mission a two years' trial, at the end of which time Mr. Peck will return, but if experience shows that the work is hopeful, Mr. Parker will remain and carry it on. Mr. Peck has prepared three books in the Eskimo language, printed in syllabic character. The alphabet contains forty-eight characters, each of which represents a whole syllable. The system was invented by a missionary to the Cree Indians in Rupert's Land, and is easy to acquire. The Eskimos can learn it in a comparatively short time.

FREE SPEECH IN BOSTON.

The city of Boston, Mass., has now for some years had the distinction, with some other cities, of imposing upon the freedom of speech restrictions which many good citizens consider both needless and unjust. Ordinances and rules forbid public meetings on public grounds, such as parks, unless certain public officials see fit in their discretion to authorise them by granting a permit. Prior to their enactment, for over 200 years Boston seems to have done well without them. Of late, however, they have been in part enforced.

For several years numerous requests, by the Young Men's Christian Association and others, for permission to preach the Gospel on Boston Common were refused, until in 1884 the city journals announced that the authorities had voted to refuse all such requests thereafter. For preaching without a permit to quiet and peaceable assemblies on the Common several reputable evangelists of Boston were arrested, brought into court and fined, two were thrown into jail until their fines were paid, and one, Mr. Wm. F. Davis, receiving the maximum penalty for several violations of the ordinance, suffered imprisonment for a year. It was only after much public indignation was expressed by various mass meetings and numerous published documents, and after vigorous legal measures had been instituted, that any permission to use the public grounds for public address was granted, and then only to a limited extent.

Under these rules the Y.M.C.A., the Evangelistic Association, the Central Labour Union, and other respectable bodies have been denied for years, and still are denied, all permits to preach the Gospel or to hold public meetings in Franklin Park, Roxbury, and Marine Park, South Boston, where it is claimed no injury to the parks, and no intrusion upon the quiet of those not desirous of attending such meetings, would result. Various organisations have from time to time taken formal action, by way of protest against this condition of things, or by petitioning the authorities for "the abolition of such rules or ordinances as prohibit public speaking on the public grounds without a permit."

The effort to secure the repeal of the ordinance failed, and frequent public expression was given to the importance of securing a decision in the Supreme Court of the United States upon the validity of the ordinance. The opportunity to prosecute such an appeal has just now arisen. While in the quiet prosecution of his work as a preacher of the Gospel, Mr. Davis was arrested on Boston Common on Sunday, June 10, and on the 13th was arraigned before the Municipal Court for preaching without a permit. The case was postponed. In view of the great importance of the matter, many prominent citizens have expressed their earnest desire that the present opportunity to determine the rights of free speech on public grounds should be embraced; and as the contemplated appeal to the courts involves the rights of the American people at large, it is taking the shape of a popular movement, and receiving encouragement and support from sympathisers throughout the country. Mr. A. N. Cook, 337, Washington-street, Boston, has consented to act as treasurer.

THE STUNDISTS.—Measures of repression continue to be enforced in Russia against the Stundists. In the province of Kieff, where they are most numerous, all members of the sect convicted of having attended a prayer meeting are liable to a fine of fifty roubles, or a fortnight's imprisonment. The Stundists have several times petitioned the Government for greater liberty to practise their religion, asking that they may be permitted to worship under similar rules to those applied to foreign anarchists. Their request has been refused on the ground that the granting of it would be prejudicial to the Orthodox religion.

THE VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—Sir G. Gabriel Stokes, Bart., F.R.S., took the chair at the annual meeting, held on Monday at the house of the Society of Arts. The hon. sec., Captain F. Petrie, in reading the report of the Institute—whose object is to investigate all philosophical and scientific questions, including any alleged to militate against the truths of Revelation—referred to the value of the work recently done. Reference was made to the Institute's increasing membership abroad and in the Colonies. The annual address was given by Professor Duns, F.R.S.E., the subject being Archæology and Anthropology, especially as connected with Folk-lore, and more particularly Stone Folk-lore.

EVANGELIST OR SPY?

A FEW weeks ago, while at Tlemçen evangelising amongst the French, a letter reached me, written in German, and signed by seven soldiers of the "Légion Etrangère," who were placed in the convict post of "Ain El-Ouessek," in the south of Algeria. "Since we have left our country," said they, "several years since, we have never once been visited by a Protestant minister, nor have we been able to attend any evangelistic service."

To go to this far-off Ouessek, from which came this Macedonian cry, necessitated a long journey of one day and half by railway, and another day by coach, and, of course, the same time to return, a journey which, besides being costly, was exceedingly fatiguing. I felt impelled to go. The sixty-nine kilomètres to be traversed between Tiaret (the railway terminus) and Ouessek were accomplished in an old coach, which during the ten hours of the journey rolled on over the almost trackless desert. Not a house, hardly a tree, was to be seen; here and there one met a solitary rider on a mule, donkey, or horse.

Ouessek is one of the farthest military posts of French Algeria; it comprises the convict settlement, a public-house, and a second house. The adjutant was informed of the object of my visit, but the soldiers who had written me, being convicts, were under strict discipline, and as the lieutenant, who alone could give them permission to see me, was absent, I feared that my journey might prove in vain.

It was evening, and my arrival caused a little sensation, for strangers are exceedingly rare personages at Ouessek, and ministers are never seen; but I put all in the hands of the Master and waited his directions. On the morrow, whilst strolling around the little public-house, in which I was forced to lodge, I saw two soldiers directing their steps towards me, so I immediately turned to meet them. One was a Wurtembourgeois, a Protestant, son of a pious mother; and the other a Westphalian, Roman Catholic, but son of a Protestant father. They apparently did not know that others had written me to come; but they declared that God must have brought me, for, said they, we long to hear the Gospel of Christ once again.

Close by was a little brook, on the borders of which grew a weeping willow, so, withdrawing under its friendly shade, and taking my Bible from my pocket, I read and explained several passages of Scripture. There they sat, those two worn soldiers, drinking in the sweet draughts of living waters so long desired. One left for a minute to seek a comrade, a Bavarian, who was trying hard to stifle the voice of his conscience. When he returned in company with his comrade, I continued, and whilst telling them of God's pardon and grace, the power of God laid hold on us all.

THE ONE CRIED FOR JOY, and the other could hardly speak for very gladness of heart! These new brethren went off as true Andrews, and brought back others, and there we sat in conversation the whole of that hot June day, from 9 a.m. till 7 p.m, without even a moment to eat. They continued coming in groups of two to five soldiers, so great was the desire to hear the precious Word! Two in particular, one a Fribourgeois and the other a Balois, were found of the Saviour. Besides these, eleven others, of whom one was a Spaniard and the other an Italian, besought us to send them New Testaments.

The next day, from 7 a.m. to the moment of departure, a little while later, the same scene was re-enacted. With the exception of one, who wished me to try and reconcile his sisters with him, but one idea seemed in the minds of all—their supreme need of salvation. They remembered the Lord's death far away there in the Great Sahara, and we were seen and rejoiced over by the angels, and comforted by the Saviour Himself; it was, indeed, a precious moment!

As the old coach rumbled by the military post, there they were, those dear fellows who had passed some little time with me the day before, drawn up in a line, giving me a real military salute as I passed. The evening before, one of their number, who plays the zither admirably, came to my room, and regaled me with his sweetest melodies.

A Waldensian sought a private interview with me, but did not succeed until the evening. "I want a new Testament, sir!" "Very well," said I, "all in good time, you shall have a Bible." Then, putting my finger on his heart, I said, "Isn't there some worm which gnaws you here? I can see you are far from happy!" Trembling, he tried to answer, and then the rumbling of the drum announced the entrance of the soldiers, and we were obliged to separate for the time being. The next morning very early I found him, and in the presence of several officers I handed him my own Bible. "I will be sure to read it," said he, decidedly.

That same evening, on arriving at Tiaret, having retraversed the sixty-nine kilomètres, I invited all the soldiers of the "Légion Etrangère"—the Swiss and other Protestants—to come and see me in the little hotel where I was lodging, and during two evenings many came and heard of the Way of Life. The third day, at three o'clock in the afternoon, I was seated under my open window reading in the book of the Acts the account of Peter and Cornelius, when suddenly I realised such a fulness of joy and gladness in my soul as to overwhelm me; the heavens seemed open, and a voice said, "Fear not!"

At nine o'clock the same evening, whilst walking outside in the cool air, I saw a light in my room, and hastened in to see what was the matter, and was confronted by the inspector and brigadier of the police! "We are come to see your passport or other papers," said the inspector.

"I have none," I replied. "I live in Algeria, and have travelled from one end to the other, and have never yet needed papers; so, of course, I came here never expecting to be asked for any."

"IN THAT CASE WE ARREST YOU, THEN!"

"Very well, sir, I am at your service!" "Where is your valise?" "Here it is, sir."

Turning it over hastily, he seized an Italian-English dictionary, of which he understood nothing; two guides on Algeria, one of which appeared to him particularly suspicious, as it contained a plan of the city of Algiers, a packet of illustrated text cards—also very suspicious—and some Sankey's hymn-books in French!

"Ah! here we have something," said he, pulling out of a cupboard, where it appeared concealed, a long thin packet. "Geographical charts, without doubt," said he, in an undertone. Unrolling the packet with obvious satisfaction, and with dignity worthy his high office, what was his disgust and surprise to find nothing but a stick and an umbrella!

Wild with himself, and baulked in his desire, there he stood, twisting the handle of that poor umbrella as if he fain would produce in some fashion or another some maps of the country. "Have you any money with you?" said he, to hide his confusion. "Yes, I have my purse." "Have you no papers whatever?" "No." "Then, I arrest you."

In a few minutes we arrived at the police-station. The officer wrote my name, address, etc., and then requested me to leave my money and pocket-book with him; because, said he, there were already a Frenchman and an Arab in the gaol. I obeyed, and followed the gaoler into my prison cell, the door of which soon shut upon me. It was a low vault, foul and damp; nor was there any other person therein.

At midnight I again appeared before the inspector and several other policemen, who interrogated me for some minutes. The inspector insisted that I was a German; because, said he, you are from Berne, in Switzerland. The canton of Berne belongs to Swiss-Germany, and Swiss-Germany belongs to the Germans, therefore without doubt you are a German! He could not make out how I could be a pastor and yet a traveller at the same time. Therefore I must be a German spy!

Evidence of imposture, according to him, was afforded by the fact that I had gone to Ouessek to preach the Gospel to a lot of convicts! Had I made so long a voyage for some good person it might be probable, but for such a set of ruffians—never! I must have had another end in view, and that end for him was to help to enable some of the German convicts to escape! "I have the proof," said he. "Here in your pocket-book are letters from them to you, with a list of their names!"

I repeated that in going to Ouessek I had no such intention. The reply was:—"In spite of your grey beard, I declare you are a liar! Now, come, declare to us, on your oath, what did you go to do at Ouessek, and why are you here?"

"I went," replied I, "in answer to the desire expressed by those men whose names and letters you have found in my pocket-book, and I am here to do as much good as I can to any other soldiers I may meet!"

"And who pays you for that?" "No one. I pay my own expenses!" "What! You have but £4 in your purse, and you make these journeys at your own cost!" "£4 are sufficient for my present needs, and when I wish more I can get it," replied I. "We shall see," said he fiercely. "I'd rather leave you to die in that hole there! Shut him up," said he, to a subaltern!

And again I was led back to my old, dirty dungeon. I stretched myself on the hard, bare board, and turned over in my weary brain all the strange adventures through which I had just passed. My heart rejoiced to be thus allowed to suffer for my Saviour, and the revelation which He had so graciously given me that afternoon had just fortified me for the trial which was to follow. Towards morning, heavy with fatigue, in spite of the hard bed, I fell asleep, rejoicing in my Saviour.

On the morrow, in the morning, I appeared before the judge, who understood my simple explanations, and set me at liberty immediately. On leaving the tribunal I telegraphed to the nearest pastor, who replied that I was well known, and had lived for years in Algeria. I also passed to the judge a letter, which I had received but a few days previously from the Prefecture of Oran. On seeing it he asked why I had not shown this before, as it was quite sufficient to set me free. I replied that the inspector had seen it in my pocket-book, but in his infallible judgment my hymn-books were more suspicious of my guilt than the letter was evidence of my innocence.

Two days have elapsed, and my papers and books have not yet been returned to me, but it is clear that my imprisonment was but a matter of officialism. Such are our difficulties of evangelisation in dark, dark Algeria. Nevertheless, the Lord was working, and had, during my stay at Tiaret, who yielded themselves to the Saviour.

TOUCHED THE HEARTS OF FIVE SOLDIERS,

The evening before my departure, they came for the last time to see me. We read together several passages of Scripture, after which we celebrated his death together, and remained in silence for some time in communion with our risen Lord. Then followed the touching adieu of these dear brothers in Christ, who immediately left me to enter on their duties.

A short while afterwards I descended to the street for a little stroll, and there I found the soldiers in company with the inspector of police. When asked why they had come to see me, they were immediately sent off to the barracks. In my turn I was again questioned, and at length arrested for the second time. A second hunt took place in my room, my books and papers all taken off to the police-station, and again I had to make acquaintance with my dungeon.

The next afternoon I was again set at liberty, the inspector of police finding, as did the judge three days ago, that I was guilty of nothing, except having told those weary soldiers of the place of rest. May the Saviour keep these solitary brethren from the attacks of their enemies!

ALBANY INSTITUTE, CAMBERWELL.

THE annual report of this vigorous and self-helping institution shows a large circle of earnest work. Gospel services have been held each Sunday evening. The Christian Workers' Association, numbering fifty members, hold open-air and other services, beside Sunday-school and tract work. Out of the Young Men's Bible Classes nearly all the work of the Institute has grown, and notwithstanding the fact that many of the members have become Sunday-school teachers, this root continues strong and vigorous. One very encouraging feature is the steadily growing attendance. The Women's and Young Women's Bible Classes, meeting at 3 p.m. on Sunday afternoons, have more than maintained their numbers. These three classes have united to provide a Mission Band to conduct open-air services on the banks of the Surrey Canal on Sunday afternoons. The Sunday-school and other branches of work are maintained with vigour and success. The secretary is Mr. W. J. G. Ramsay, 157, Camberwell-road, S.E.

THE W.W.C.T.U. will meet in London next year at the Crystal Palace. Miss Willard is to preside, and an effort will be made to make it the greatest temperance demonstration ever held.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF FOREIGN MISSIONS.

THE ETHICAL AND SPIRITUAL VALUE OF VARIOUS RELIGIONS.

It has been shown in a previous article, that Christianity has a power to civilise and elevate communities, possessed by no other religion. It has a power to do so beyond what is seen, if men would submit to be guided by its principles and spirit, for it could easily be shown that the noblest, strongest, and happiest features of personal, domestic and national life spring from Christianity, as from no other source; whilst the great evils which undoubtedly exist in many Christian lands, spring, not from our religion, but exist in spite of it.

On the other hand, heathenism nowhere purifies and elevates social or national life. Some, indeed, of the most festering, fatal sores which afflict men, can be traced to false religion, which seldom has been known to protest against vice or wrong, or the cruel usages of society. What great reforms anywhere attest its power for good, or where does it change evil men into good ones, and produce men and women, in any number, of a pure, noble, benevolent, saintly type? It is not the highest aim of our Divine faith to do this, but it is important to notice that it does it, and that more or less invariably. And for this reason, it is what we might expect from a religion given by God, when contrasted with the religions produced by men.

It is important to notice in these times of false liberality—when the inclination is to depreciate or disbelieve Christianity, and to speak apologetically, if not well, of the veriest superstitions—the superiority of our sublime faith to every other religion where they can be compared.

And thus, too, we vindicate the Gospel from depreciation and misrepresentation. Unbelieving men affirm that Christianity is but a little superior to the great systems of the East, and that our remarkable place in the world is more owing to our race qualities and geographical position than to our religion. We have undoubtedly great gifts, but the greatest is our religion, and we sin against God and tempt our own humiliation when we fail to acknowledge His Word as the main element in our greatness.

Then, also, in the superiority of the most Christian countries, there is a strong though subordinate argument in favour of foreign missions. We value the fruits of civilisation, secure as large a share of them for ourselves and families as we possibly can, and seek after them with undue eagerness. If they are desirable for us, they are so for others. Therefore, even benevolence and philanthropy should induce us to desire that others may share in those blessings, and the surest, safest method of securing their diffusion is to bring as many of the heathen as possible into the Kingdom of God.

But for reasons yet higher and more important, we should desire the universal spread of the Gospel. It is from God. It has a Divine authorisation. It is needed by all, and to all it can bring the greatest of blessings. It saves. It prepares all who truly accept it for a future life, and all the possible eventualities of the awful future. This cannot be said of any other religion. They are of human origin. They have no certitude or authority. They bring no message from God. They lack even moral and spiritual force and efficiency. They do not save.

Men always and everywhere need four things, and the deeper and truer their insight into their own state and that of others, the more conscious are they of the need.

1. They need, in some true and adequate sense, to know God.
2. To know how sins may be forgiven.
3. How a sinful nature may be changed.
4. If there is a future life, and how to prepare for it.

Men have been searching after light on these awful mysteries, which concern all, for thousands of years, and none more profoundly or persistently than the races of Asia, who have come to accept Mohammedanism, Buddhism, and Hinduism as their solution of the great enigma—that is, variously, a belief in the stern, unlovable Allah of the Koran; or of a god who neither sees, nor hears, nor cares for the wants or woes of any creatures; or Pantheism; or hundreds of millions of gods! Whose ideas of the future are a heaven of sensuality, or metempsychosis, or a state hardly to be distinguished from annihilation, and which offers nothing to the sinful but fatalism, or dreadful sufferings, or expiation by physical torture, or deliverance wrought out by self through countless transmigrations!

There is no doubt a most pathetic interest attaching to those "religions of the East." On their philosophical, speculative side they display wonderful subtlety and intellectual power, in dealing with the most solemn and mysterious questions which can engage human thought. They reveal an ardent desire "to find out God" and sacred truth. They contain many wise, beautiful, elevated, and pure sentiments. This is their best side. But many of those who study comparative religion overestimate its value, because they look too much at its philosophical, and not sufficiently at its practical, aspects. They pass by too leniently the triviality, grossness, and filthiness with which it is so often associated, and its inherent inability to meet the deepest needs, sorrows, and cravings of ordinary humanity; that is, of the great masses of mankind.

The practical influence of religion is most worthy of consideration, and it is here that every non-Christian system fails. Yet it is the side our "philosophers" least notice, and sometimes entirely ignore. No heathen religion has a rational theology, an all-round system of ethics, or a power above and beyond man to raise him toward what he should be; and in many instances, instead of curbing the downward tendencies of our humanity, they pander to human weaknesses and passions. Therefore it is that all through the East the people are gloomy, hopeless fatalists; ignorant, poor, suspicious, and morally weak; and oppression, wrong, falsehood, fraud, and vice are so prevalent. And all this in spite of great intellectual and physical qualities! Truly "the world by wisdom knows not God"! *

The great questions, then, which all the ages have been seeking to answer, and which it concerns all to have answered, receive their only true and satisfactory reply from the Bible, and especially from the life and lips of Jesus Christ. The revelation there given of God, of the forgiveness of sins, of the life everlasting, and the renewing power of the Holy Spirit, is not only transcendently superior to what is anywhere else taught, but it commends itself to the judgment and experience as rational and philosophical; as in agreement with our consciousness of what men are, what they require, and what they should be. It meets, as nothing else does, our wants, our hopes, and our aspirations, and it is associated with a divine, practical power, able to change the moral nature, and to make men victorious over sin.

Thus, as a system of belief relating to the sublimest and most important of all subjects, as a most definite and authoritative system of morals and the principles on which they are based, as a force enabling men to rise toward God, and always making for righteousness and goodness, and as the means of imparting a Divine life to the soul—the highest of all blessings—it stands immeasurably above and beyond all other religions. It is the substance, they are shadows only. It does what they pretend only to do.

And here arises a practical aspect of our subject of the utmost importance—our relations and our duty toward those vast multitudes who "know not God," nor "Jesus Christ, whom He hath sent." Some think only of what their future may be. We should rather consider what we are able to do for their salvation.

The future of the heathen we must leave with God, sure only of this, which indeed is sufficient: the infinitely wise and good One, "the Judge of all the earth," will "do right." Butno one who thinks of what God must be, and of what men naturally are, can be unconcerned about the future of living men. The masses around us, and the yet greater masses of heathendom, give no evidence of preparedness for a future life. "But they are saveable; and the vital question for us to ponder is, not whether the heathen will be saved without the Gospel, but can they be saved by it? The former question is too mysterious, too speculative, for us to decide; the latter is clear, practicable, and hopeful. It is enough for us to have settled this salvability, as over against the immensely preponderating danger of their perishing in their sin without it." * Therefore, all Christians should feel bound to do their utmost to make known to all heathen people the New Testament revelation of God and redemption.

To do this is surely the will of God; the command of Christ; the duty and the privilege of the Christian, and should be the impulse even of benevolence and philanthropy. Edward Storrow.

* More than thirty volumes of "the Sacred Books of the East" have been made accessible to the English reader. They have an important value to a few scholars. But to the great mass of even intelligent readers they are intolerably dull, and, as a help toward God and goodness, any single Gospel outweighs them all. But how many other "Sacred Books of the East" are there which no virtuous men would dream of translating, and for publishing which any one would be prosecuted for circulating immoral literature?

PROGRESS IN CORSICA.

Rev. J. G. Cunningham, of Great Queen-street Free Church, Edinburgh, writing from Corte, in the Island of Corsica, says:—"On Sabbath we had two meetings. On both occasions the hall was full. All young people were excluded so as to leave room for their seniors, and only four women appeared. The audience numbered at least 140 men, of whom, perhaps, the half were students. I was introduced at the first meeting by M. Laboyrie, a devoted evangelist, a native of Corte, who, along with an earlier evangelist, M. de Matra, labours under the direction of Miss Grant Brown, the friend at whose request I came to Corsica both last year and on this occasion.

"It would be impossible to give details of the remarkable work of God which I have been permitted to see and to share in this place. From 1 to 3 daily I am at home in my quiet lodgings, up one stair in Rue de la Sainte-Croix, to meet any who ask specially for a long talk. To-day two young men of talents and piety have asked permission to come for an hour or two, bringing their Bibles and proposing to discuss (the word used by them is approfondir) the passages which they have marked as "hard to be understood." From 4 to 6.15 I remain in the hall near Miss Grant Brown's lodging to meet any who wish to converse with me individually about spiritual things, and hitherto every minute of these hours has been fully occupied. Looking over my memorandum of yesterday's conversations, I find that the first who came was a retired officer in the gendarmerie, and after him ten students, six of whom are looking forward to taking the degree of B.A. At the evening public meetings the large hall is always filled, every seat occupied, and usually sixty or seventy men standing patient and attentive; not more than five or six women take courage to come, and for the children we have no room; it vexes me greatly to see them turned away.

DUBLIN VISITING MEDICAL MISSION.

Just now, when so many have their thoughts directed towards work amongst Irish Roman Catholics, perhaps a few facts concerning the above Mission may not be out of place. This work opens its doors to all sects and denominations, yet it is located in a district mainly consisting of R.C.'s, and they are in a large majority as patients at the dispensary.

During the spring months the attendance increased very rapidly, reaching eighty-six at the dispensary, and about fifty or sixty at our short, bright Gospel services, held three mornings weekly before the patients are treated by Dr. Lang; but the priests in the district found the Mission was getting too hot for them. The Lord in his love for these poor sick people was truly working in the hearts of not a few so their spiritual advisers interfered, and warned them, under penalty of eternal punishment, not to enter the doors of the Medical Mission. The home all round were visited, and the same note of warning sounded. Letters were put in one or more Roman Catholic newspapers, and for a time this took some effect. Thank God, even in the face of this opposition, the poor hungry souls have come back, and they sit with deepest interest and rapt attention listening to the message of a Saviour's love, told forth in simple language by the Lord's children, who willingly come and tell them that they can obtain full and free salvation through a crucified and risen Saviour.

Will not those who take an interest in Ireland join us in heartfelt thanks to God for this work? Truly his hand alone has protected us in the midst of many dangers, and He continues day by day to supply our need. At present we have only about £3 in hand, but we are sure the Lord will not fail us, but will send the needed funds for maintaining this great work. We are hoping to do something for the mothers and children during the coming winter if sufficient money is sent us to do so.

Letters to the Editor.

WITHOUT SIN.

Dear Sir,—The communication from our esteemed brethren in Madras, contained in your issue of last week, I heartily welcome. I am persuaded that we mutually desire to exalt the truth of God and by interchange of thought we may enrich one another on the important subject of holiness. I greatly long after increasing light and knowledge. Is it not written, "Follow peace with all men and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord"? In the light of these words the deepest interest becomes the children of God.

What I fail to see in the letter of our beloved brethren is any Scriptural reply to the propositions and arguments contained in my letter, entitled "Without Sin." Let me at once assure our brethren that I was not, neither am I, afraid that my letter would be "liable to be a stumbling-block and an injury" to any. Had that been the case it would not have been written or sent to you for publication. I believe important issues belong to this whole question. I am already in the midst of much service in this city, and have not time to write as fully as I could wish. In your next issue I shall be grateful if you will spare me space for reference to this vital theme. Henry Varley.

Salisbury.

OUGHT.

Dear Sir,—May I add a few words to your very suggestive remarks upon the word "ought"? May we all feel "the Divine necessity laid upon us," as did our Master? But the Greek word dei signifies a little more than this. It suggests that God is pleased, and that the act is seemly and grateful to Him. May we all learn "how to walk and to please God." The same Greek word is used in 1 Thess. iv. 1.—Yours in Christ, John Hawker.

OPEN-AIR WORK IN IRELAND.

Dear Sir,—Let not the letter of "One Who Knows," which recently appeared in your paper, discourage any who wish to testify for Christ in the open air in the towns of this country.

To be a loving, gentle, and skilful controversialist in dealing with any who reject, or add to, the sacred Scriptures, is most important; but, at the same time, men who wish to avoid controversy, and who desire only to speak of what they have found in the Lord Christ, can do a vast amount of good amongst my fellow-countrymen.

As to the proposed holiday visit to Ireland of some of the Harley House students, "One Who Knows" will be glad to learn that, if possible, all the students will be Irishmen. They will be formed into small companies, each company will be in charge of a skilled Irish open-air worker, and all controversy will be declined.—Yours faithfully,

George Williams,
Organising Secretary, Open-air Mission for Ireland.

THE GOSPEL IN ASYLUMS.

Dear Sir,—Regarding the letters on the subject of Asylums, I should like to mention that a women's Bible-reading is held every week with the patients in an asylum in Canada, at which twenty-four are generally present; one of them plays the organ, another leads in the singing, and several engage in prayer. It is in connection with a young women's guild of a Presbyterian church, and is, at least, a break in the monotony of their lives.

When I go, I often read Dr. Whyte's lectures in The British Weekly, and the prayer and poetry therein contained; we are now taking up the Psalms as a study, and find nothing more suitable for those afflicted "in mind, body, and estate." With fear and trembling regarding my fitness, I joined the others, and find it one of my pleasantest recreations. The inmates seem so pleased, and like something to read. In fact, I begin to think that in such a condition as some of the more refined of them are, the Lord reveals Himself in another way, and they see more than we know or imagine. Nurses in hospitals and asylums should be earnest Christians, like missionaries. Why? Because they need a double portion of the Spirit of love, and patience, and experience, and hope. A. C. M.

Kingston, Ontario.

HORSES AT KESWICK.

Sir,—May I again remind those of your readers who hope to be at the Keswick Convention that the last week of July and the first in August are the hardest in the year for the horses in the Lake District. Their generous toil can be considerably lessened and their services rewarded, by a little consideration on the part of the visitors, whom I earnestly beg, therefore:—(1) To refuse to employ lame or tired horses. (2) To go on foot up steep hills. (3) To insist on humane treatment by the drivers. (4) To help the funds of the local branch of the R.S.P.C.A., were it but to the extent of one penny.

The services of our Inspector are in special demand at Keswick during the Convention, and his utmost vigilance is necessary to prevent cruel over-loading and over-driving. I would urge visitors to remember that the Lord, in whose name they are assembled, notes even a sparrow's fall, and that "his tender mercies are over all his works."—I am, Sir, faithfully yours, P. H. Johnston,

Co-Hon. Sec. for Cumberland and Westmoreland.

JEWISH NOTES.

Miss Stuart and Miss Seth-Smith, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, hope to leave for Morocco in October to work among Jews and Arabs. The former worker has a good knowledge of Arabic and some experience of North Africa, while the latter has a large amount of nursing experience and medical knowledge which will ensure access to the people.

From some interesting journals of Rev. J. E. Hanauer, published in the Jewish Intelligencer, we learn that he has found many open doors for work amongst the Jews at Jaffa (the ancient Joppa), which is rapidly increasing in size and importance. At the New Book Depôt of the London Jews Society, Jews of all classes congregate in large numbers, and here Mr. Hanauer meets them and finds "numberless opportunities to set before them, not merely the claims of Jesus of Nazareth to be the Messiah, but their own personal need of a new heart, of an atonement and a Saviour." A model of Herod's Temple has proved of great value in explaining the spiritual significance of the old dispensation and its fulfilment in Christ.

Owing to the movement to revive the use of Hebrew as a living language, numbers of Jews are desiring to obtain copies of the Hebrew Old Testament. To those too poor to buy, Mr. Hanauer has promised copies on condition that they accept the gift of a New Testament, and study St. Matthew's Gospel, so as to be able to answer questions in it, and several have accepted these conditions. During a visit to the flourishing Jewish colony of "Rishon le-Zion" an opportunity was afforded of speaking to a class of boys and girls who were being taught the geography of the Holy Land from a fine map, based on the surveys of the Palestine Exploration Fund. Mr. Hanauer, having once travelled with the explorers and witnessed the exactness with which prophecy has been fulfilled in regard to Heshbon, Elealeh, Rabbath, and other towns, was able to point out that the same word of prophecy concerning the first coming of Messiah had also been fulfilled in the coming of that Just One whom the nation rejected.

The experiment recently carried out by the Mildmay Mission to the Jews of sending forth a band of young converted Jews to preach the Gospel in various towns and cities of England, has proved successful, and much blessing has already been vouchsafed to their labours. The band, which consists of the following five Jewish brethren:—Messrs. Levy, Valenski, Samuel, Redwood, and Goldstein, commenced work at Grimsby on June 18 at the invitation of Rev. T. R. Mackay, a Presbyterian minister, who had been stirred up on behalf of Israel by a previous visit of Messrs. Goldstein and Goodman to that town. The Jews at Grimsby manifested a kindly spirit, and there is every reason to believe that stumbling-blocks have been removed out of the hearts of some earnest seekers after truth. One Jew said that his religion was hanging over his head like a black cloud, and that he was anxious to be shown the way to heaven. What has been most remarkable in the work of the band at Grimsby is the fact that numbers of Gentiles have yielded to the Lord Jesus through their preaching, backsliders have been reclaimed, and Christians brought to a sense of their responsibility; while those who have been taking part in the Mission have been filled with joy and the Holy Ghost.

From Grimsby the brethren proceeded to Sheffield, where they began work on July 9. Here they have found the Jews more indifferent than at Grimsby, but manifest blessing still follows their labours among the Gentiles, and Christians have been aroused in regard to the Jews living in unbelief around them. Any friends desiring to invite the Jewish Mission Fund to their town should communicate with Mr. Samuel Wilkinson, Central Hall, Philpot-street, London, E. No financial guarantee is asked for, and no collections are made on behalf of the work, though the members of the band are glad to receive Christian hospitality where it can be offered.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Henry Varley is now evangelising at Salisbury, where he has in the past been greatly used of God. Will many friends pray for rich blessing?

Mr. William Forbes held open-air services at the Crystal Palace temperance fête on the 10th. He began these meetings about twenty-three years ago, and only on one occasion has he met with opposition. One of his helpers last week, who spoke with great animation, was in his eighty-first year.

St. Albans.—Cathedral cities are said to be dull and lifeless; whether that be true or not, St. Albans has undoubtedly been far from the front in spiritual matters. No evangelistic mission of a united character has been attempted since 1887, and there are many earnest Christians who are longing for a renewed blessing. Open-air services are held on Sunday evening, and large crowds assemble. A "Saturday Evening Mission" has also been launched by mission workers of various denominations. Will all pray that success may follow these efforts?

Forest Gate, E.—A series of tent services are being held in this populous suburb by Mr. J. J. Sims. Great interest has been manifested, and some of the cases of conversion present features of much encouragement. A young Roman Catholic came repeatedly to the door but refused to enter, adding that the priest had forbidden her to do so, but at length she ventured to take a seat, was completely broken down under deep conviction, and ere the evening closed found pardon and peace in believing on the Lord Jesus Christ. Another young woman strolled in listless and heedless, but was soon arrested by the Spirit of God, and with breathless attention listened to the good news that Christ came into the world to save sinners, and that to neglect the offer of salvation was a terrible sin. She left deeply convicted, but hearing the announcement of a morning prayer meeting at 7 a.m., she came to it and laid her burden down at the feet of the Man who receiveth sinners, and left rejoicing. Prayer is desired that a great work may yet be done.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. James Stalker, D.D., of Free St. Matthew's, Glasgow, has definitely declined the call to Edinburgh.

Rev. James Baillie, of Bloomsbury, having suffered from a severe attack of quinsy, has been ordered away for a brief rest at Folkestone.

Rev. F. B. Meyer gives his last Thursday evening address at Christ Church before his trip to America this evening (19th). He hopes to resume on September 13. Meanwhile he will be glad of prayer for much blessing on his Northfield visit.

Rev. G. C. Lorimer, D.D., of Tremont Temple, Boston, and one of the most eloquent pulpit orators of America, is in England attending the School of Theology Session at Mansfield College. He is to preach on July 15 and Aug. 5, at Westminster Chapel; July 22, at New-road, Oxford; July 20, in the City Temple, Glasgow; Aug. 12 and 19, in Marylebone Presbyterian Church; and Aug. 26, in Bloomsbury Chapel.

NOT NEGLIGENTLY.

"Cursed be he who doeth the work of the Lord negligently" (Jer. xlviii. 10 R.V.). How many temptations we have to do the work of the Lord negligently, even when we do not neglect it altogether! We are weary; the weather is hot; we have pleasant engagements. A thousand things come in the way, and tempt us to do God's work hurriedly, yea, negligently. And how much we lose! That letter which we wrote so hastily might have been so different, and might have done so much good, if we had been prayerful and thoughtful over it! That visit which was so unsatisfactory might have been so fruitful of good if we had only been careful. May God help us to be watchful lest this curse come upon our heads.—Anon.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

The Association at Greensill, Kilwinning, has lately been resuscitated.

The annual meeting of the Scottish Conference of Young Men's Christian Associations is to be held this year at Galashiels, from 11th to 13th September next.

Rev. J. Burton Rudduck, Superintendent of the City Mission, Melbourne, on his way to India, to inspect the missions there, paid a visit to the Y.M.C.A. at Adelaide.

The membership of the Johannesburg Y.M.C.A. now numbers over one hundred, and the Association is doing a very vigorous work. Mr. Hastings, of the Standard Bank, has been elected president.

The Camden-road Association held this year a midsummer breakfast. Mr. James Robertson presided, and Messrs. R. McBurney (New York) and Thane Miller (Cincinnati) were among the speakers.

A resolution has been arrived at to amalgamate under one committee the two Central London Associations, Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street. This is part of a scheme which is contemplated for the reorganisation of the work of the metropolis.

In Cape Town, the local clergy were most ready and hearty in their response to preach for the Y.M.C.A. on the occasion of the jubilee celebration. The Dean of Cape Town made warm references to the Association from the Cathedral pulpit.

The Govan branch of the Glasgow United Young Men's Christian Association have decided to build more commodious premises. A site has been secured at the Cross, and plans for the building have been made out. It is to cost between £8000 and £10,000, and about half of this sum has been already subscribed.

An advice from Chefoo, North China, says:—"Native Y.M.C.A. work opened lately. Dr. Corbett, of the American Presbyterian Mission, presided. Four or five Christian natives spoke. We have opened a second place (off the great street), and at present it is hoped to work the two, three nights a week each. Please gird us with prayer. We mean to uplift Christ. Satan will rage, but we fear not."

The fourth party of young men sailing together this year—the 130th party since the commencement, in Manchester, of the Emigration Advice Branch in 1882—sailed last week for Canada, under the leadership of Mr. Walker, an old member of the Y.M.C.A. They met at the rooms of the Manchester Association the day before, to be introduced to each other, and to receive advice about passage, rail-journey, farm-life, and letters of introduction.

We are glad to hear that the marks of success which have manifested themselves at Clapham Y.M.C.A. during the last few weeks are phenomenal. There is evidently a spiritual revival. Scarcely a Sunday passes without some young men being anxious about their souls, either at the afternoon class or the open-air meeting. One Sunday night no less than six young men were among the inquirers. The attendance at the meetings is good, the workers full of zeal and energy, and a general spirit of brightness and hope pervades the Y.M.C.A. atmosphere.

As an outcome of the conferences on Village Missions, held at Aldersgate-street, the Hackney Y.M.C.A. has started a Village Missionary Society, the object of which is to hold meetings and house-to-house visitations in needy villages within a radius of fifty miles. The society was inaugurated April 29, and in co-operation with friends in the country we have sent workers to North Bucks, South Bucks, Northampton, Oxon, and Hertford, who have visited from house to house in fifty-three villages and hamlets, besides holding open-air services in several small towns and villages. There has throughout the work been manifest blessing, and we have to thank God for many evidences of decided conversions. We should be glad to hear from any who would engage in this work at their own expense or who would help those who do go.

Robert Nash.

SYDNEY.—The Y.W.C.A. and the W.C.T.U. have co-operated in a special evangelistic meeting in the Y.W.C.A. rooms. These services are made as bright and attractive as possible in order to reach many girls and young women, and bring them under a Christian influence.

CAMP AT ALDERSHOT.—Inspector Poate, North Camp Station, S.E.R., writes: "In addition to the 15,000 troops (regular) in the camp, other regiments are coming. On July 21 we shall have Welsh, Somerset, Gloucester, and other volunteers, in all 10,000 are expected in the camp this summer for drill. I shall be very grateful for Gospel books and leaflets for free distribution in the highways and in the camp." We trust many will be prompt to seize the opportunities presented by these Militia assemblies for evangelistic service.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The report of the Shrewsbury Society (Claremont-street Chapel) is encouraging.

A gathering of the Chester and District Union was held in the Northgate Congregational Schoolroom, to bid farewell to the president, Rev. W. Bainbridge, who is removing to Hull.

The first anniversary of the Pudsey Baptist society was presided over by Rev. F. W. Turner, who, along with Revs. H. Webb, L. Lawry, and D. A. Henderson, and Mr. R. C. H. Drabble, gave addresses.

A very successful district conference has been held in Great Missenden. The societies represented were Chesham (2), Missenden, Risborough, Speen, Wendover, and High Wycombe (3). Rev. W. Dorey occupied the chair, and gave a very warm testimony to the good work accomplished by the Christian Endeavour movement. He regarded it as a movement instinct with the life of God. It was not so much a new power as it was the young life of the Church being filled and energised with the power of God the Holy Ghost.

IRISH NOTES.

During the last decade there has been an increase in the membership of the Episcopal Church in the united diocese of Down, Connor, and Dromore, of 8456 persons.

A largely-attended and successful Sunday-school conference for the Ards district has been held in Glastry, co. Down, under the presidency of Rev. R. Workman, when papers were read and discussed on various topics connected with Sabbath-schools.

Much regret is felt in the North of Ireland at the death of Mr. Samuel McKinstry, who for over a quarter of a century was an active ruling elder in connection with High-street Presbyterian Church, Lurgan. Deceased took a deep interest in Mission work and in the evangelisation of Ireland, and had a remarkable knowledge of the Bible.

The late Mr. Wm. McComus, J.P., of Monkstown, Dublin, has left £1000 each to the Meath Hospital, the Royal Incurable Hospital, and the City of Dublin Hospital; and £500 each to the Convalescent Home, Stillorgan; Macgeough Home, and Cripples' Home, Bray; besides £5000 to the Kingston Christian Men's Institute, in addition to £5000 given to the same object during deceased's lifetime.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Up to last Saturday the total number of children sent this year for a fortnight's fresh air to coast or country by the Glasgow Evangelistic Association was 3670.

The directors of the Night Asylum for the Houseless have decided to carry out extensive alterations and improvements on the home in North Frederick-street, Glasgow.

The Sabbath School, which is held in a hall belonging to Thread A.U.P. Church, Paisley, has been so successful that the hall is to be greatly enlarged by Mr. Stewart Clark, of Kilnside.

The death is announced at Annandale of the Rev. Brice Johnstone Bell, who from 1846 to 1884 laboured in the very heart of the Lanarkshire mining district as minister of Gartsherrie.

Lord Provost Russell, of Edinburgh, on whom the honour of knighthood is about to be conferred, is an elder of the Free Church, and an active Christian worker in many spheres of usefulness.

Rev. Ebenezer Ritchie, who recently resigned his connection with the original Secession Church, has made a very successful commencement of his ministry in St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn.

The new parish church of St. Cuthbert's, Edinburgh, was formally opened last week. Upwards of 2000 persons were present. The building, which stands at the west end of Princes-street, has cost considerably over £20,000.

Dr. Stalker, of Free St. Matthew's Church, Glasgow, feels "the claims of his present congregation to be paramount," and has, therefore, declined the invitation to succeed Dr. Walter Smith in the pastorate of the High Church, Edinburgh.

---

FARM TRAINING FOR EMIGRATION.—The Church Army have concluded the arrangements for taking possession of the whole of the Thelnetham estate, near Thetford, Suffolk, which will now, under the direction of their manager, Mr. T. R. Johnson, be fitted up in every way as a preparation for young men without means for colonial life. The training will include a slight knowledge of carpentering, tailoring, boot-making, blacksmith work, etc. The farm will work in close touch with the Emigration Agency of the Society in Montreal, and also with the Labour homes of the Society.

OBITUARY.

REV. J. DIXON.

This faithful worker, who passed away lately at his residence, Claremont, Willows-lane, Accrington, at the age of sixty-seven, was for forty years a Congregational minister. About six years ago he came into Lancashire to take charge of Holy Trinity Free Church, Oswaldtwistle, remaining there about two years. He then removed to Accrington, since which he has not had a settled pastorate. He preached his last sermon on June 10 at Whalley-road Congregational Church.

PROFESSOR DILLMANN.

The death is announced of the well-known Orientalist, Dr. C. F. A. Dillmann, Professor of Theology at Berlin, aged seventy-one. A native of Wurtemberg, he occupied professorial posts successively at Tübingen, Kiel, and Giessen, finally, in 1869, taking up residence at Berlin. He was the author of valuable works on the Old Testament, although his specialty lay in investigations regarding the Ethiopic language, of which he published a grammar and dictionary that are held in high esteem.

TWO LADY MISSIONARIES.

The Zambesi Industrial Mission has lost by death from fever two of its members—Mrs. Miller and Mrs. Graham. There are brief letters from the bereaved husbands, as well as Dr. Fallon, deputy superintendent of the Mission, in an Occasional Letter just issued. "Weep with those that weep" has been the order, and the sympathy shown was by no means confined to the members of the Mission. The natives sorrowed, and kind attention was received from Dr. Scott, of the Church of Scotland Mission, and Mr. Fotheringham, of the African Lakes Company.

Mr. Miller writes of his wife:—"She prayed for friends individually; also for me, that I might get strength even to be glad in God's will through this trial. Then she prayed for the baby, and afterwards for herself, asking that she might be led by the Lord through the valley of the shadow of death. Shortly before the end came, she suddenly, in a firm but quavering voice, sang:—

Away over Jordan, with my blessèd Saviour;
Away over Jordan, to wear a starry crown.

"After a little she asked that baby might be lifted to her. She silently kissed the child and laid her down, and then bade me good-bye, telling me not to be sorrowful, as we should soon meet again. She then said, 'Good-bye, all'; and immediately adding 'Lord Jesus, receive my spirit,' she sank into unconsciousness about 5 a.m. on Thursday, March 30."

In his letter Mr. Graham says: "My dear wife dearly loved these black people, and they were most attached to her, especially the 'boys' about the house. I have more than ever proved that his grace is sufficient, and that Jesus is not only mighty to save, but also mighty to keep in all times of trial, of difficulty, or sorrow. I have of late so wonderfully proved the promise which I have so often proved before, but never in such a deep, true sense as during the past days (Isaiah xli. 10).

"I am glad that God has counted me worthy to come here, and to lay my dear wife here for Christ's sake, on behalf of the poor heathen; and my one prayer is that I and all of us, whether at home or in the field, may be kept very true and faithful to God under all or any circumstances."

AS THE SNOW GATHERS TOGETHER, so are our habits formed. No single flake that is added to the pile produces a sensible change; no single action creates, however it may exhibit, a man's character.—Jeremy Taylor.

BISHOP RYLE, speaking at Bootle on Saturday, said some people wanted to present him with a pastoral staff—a silver poker to be carried before him. He declined, saying, "If you send me a pastoral staff, I will lock it up in a cupboard and never see it again." A bishop wanted a Bible, and not a pastoral staff. He did not find fault with bishops who were happy with their pastoral staves or crosiers. He was happier without them.

REV. JOHN WILKINSON, of the Mildmay Mission to the Jews, recently received from Mr. Abraham Hornstein, who claims to be "resident missionary and secretary of the West Central Provincial and Continental Mission for Promoting Christianity among the Jews," an abusive letter, because he has, as we hold, very properly declined to answer an appeal for money. He replied on a postcard, "You must not think that your threatening letters will frighten me into giving you money. Your letter this morning renders you liable to severe punishment." Mr. Hornstein followed up his threat by summoning Mr. Wilkinson to answer the charge of libel at the North London Police Court last week. The summons was dismissed.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Secretary of State for Scotland has appointed a committee to inquire into the subject of dealing with habitual offenders and inebriates.

The Wesleyan Bands of Hope now number 4,222, an increase of 187 during the past year, with a membership 435,141. The adult temperance societies in the Connexion number 1153.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson again denies that temperance reformers are opposed to the Gothenberg system. He is content that a trial should be made of it in some district, leaving other localities free to say whether or not they desire liquor shops in their midst.

The Society for the Study of Inebriety met to take a farewell of the new Dean of Hereford on his departure from London to take up his new appointment. He urged that if clergy and medical men acted in union the curse of intemperance would be greatly diminished.

The Congregational Total Abstinence Association has accepted the resignation of Rev. Burford Hooke as secretary, in view of his appointment to the secretariat of the Colonial Missionary Society. The autumnal meetings of the Association will be held in Liverpool in October, when the new secretary will probably be elected.

The National Temperance League has just received a donation of 200 guineas from an old temperance worker—a convert of the late Samuel Bowly's—whose convictions are so strong that in a large business, from which he has now retired, he persistently refused for many years to execute any contract for those engaged in the liquor traffic.

The British Temperance League held last week its sixtieth annual conference in Southport. The conference has sat for three days, the evenings being devoted to public meetings, addressed by leaders on the Temperance platform. Miss Conybeare read a paper on "Scientific Instruction in Schools," and Dr. Wood (Mayor) one on "The National Aspects of the Drink Question." The Mayor, who is a pronounced teetotaller, is son-in-law of Rev. Charles Garrett.

The Middlesex magistrates recently called the attention of the Home Secretary to the large and increasing amount of drunkenness, and requested him to press upon the police the desirability of keeping a watch upon the publicans. Mr. Asquith, in reply, said most stringent orders had been given to the police to proceed against publicans found guilty of serving drunken people, and also to deal with instances in which inducements are held out by publicans for the purchase of intoxicants by children.

The Bishop of London's Licensing Bill, promoted by the Church Temperance Society, was defeated in the House of Lords by forty-nine votes to twenty. It proposed that the granting of licences should rest with the magistrates; that there should be only one public-house to every 1000 inhabitants in London, and one to every 600 elsewhere; compensation for a period of five years to be paid by the remaining publicans to those whose licences were not renewed. It was also proposed that all clubs should be registered, and that special inspectors should be employed instead of the police to see that the law was enforced in licensed premises.

CHRISTIAN BLIND RELIEF SOCIETY.

A meeting was held on Friday week, at the house of Lord Egerton of Tatton, in St. James-square, W., in support of this society. The report, presented by the secretary, Rev. J. Pullein Thompson, states that the number of pensioners has gradually increased, until there are now 472 pensioners on the books, forty-eight having been elected during the past year, whilst fourteen have had their pension raised either from ten shillings to a £1 per month, or from five shillings to ten shillings per month, the amount paid in pensions during the year being £1856 7s. 4d., as compared with £1612 the year before. There are, however, still a number of deserving candidates waiting for help. There are no expenses, no paid secretary, no waste of income, everything being done on the most economical scale possible. The society is unsectarian, and if a man be blind, poor, and moral, he is considered a worthy recipient for a pension. There are no weary years of waiting before help is granted.

The Bishop of London gave the society his hearty commendation, not only on account of its excellent work, but also because of its small cost and admirable management. We could never make up to the blind for the darkness in which they were moving, we could not make them as happy as our Lord could have done by restoring their sight, but we could do something to alleviate suffering, and to take away the feeling that they were a burden to their friends. It was the work the society was doing, and his lordship made a very telling appeal in its behalf.

The Book World.

SOUTH AMERICA: A MISSION FIELD.

South America: The Neglected Continent. Being an Account of the Mission Tour of Rev. G. C. Grubb, M.A., and Party in 1893, with a Historical Sketch and Summary of Missionary Enterprise in these Vast Regions. By E. C. Millard and Lucy E. Guinness. (1s. and 2s. 6d. Marl orough.) In the preface to this admirably illustrated book, Mr. Grubb says: "Our chief object in publishing this volume is to cause a stream of prayer to flow forth from the hearts of Christians. For nearly four hundred years Romanism of the most corrupt type has spread its blighting influence over this vast continent. The true and unfailing harvest of Romanism—namely, indifference, sensuality, infidelity, and anarchy—is being plentifully reaped. Praise be to God, there are sure signs that the Spirit of God is moving over this dark waste of waters, and soon 'Let there be light' will sound from north to south, from east to west." The mission tour, in the course of which English communities were visited in Argentina, Uruguay, and Brazil, is described with succinctness and animation. Miss Guinness's sketch and summary occupies about two-thirds of the book, and the goodly body of information on the dark region is a strong and urgent constructive appeal for its evangelisation.

THE LATE DR. DOUGLAS, OF MONTREAL.

The volume of Discourses and Addresses by the lamented George Douglas, D.D., LL.D., Principal of the Wesleyan Theological College, Montreal, will be welcomed by those who knew that gifted preacher of the Gospel. (William Briggs, Wesley Buildings, Toronto.) The discourses are on great subjects and remarkably eloquent; the addresses were delivered at œcumenical congresses, and on other important occasions. There are three introductions—one British, by Rev. William Arthur, M.A.; one American, by Rev. Dr. Foster, of Boston; and one Canadian, by Rev. Dr. Potts, of the Educational Society of the Methodist Church of Canada. An excellent portrait of Dr. Douglas is prefixed to the book, and a biographical sketch is also given. We welcome this latter, as affording definite information on points that were either left doubtful or misrepresented in earlier sketches. It seems that Dr. Douglas's father was a miller in his native Scotland, and found worthy employment in Canada as clerk in the Customs. George was the youngest of three brothers, and studied under an able and conscientious tutor, thus laying a good foundation for future culture and usefulness. Combining a strong mechanical taste with an absorbing passion for the sea, he conceived the idea of becoming a marine engineer, and in order thoroughly to qualify for this, he entered the establishment of a firm of ironworkers, his evenings being in the meantime spent in attending classes for designing and other studies. He was the most delicate of the family, and this severe work told heavily upon him. His conversion at the age of eighteen turned the course of his life, and secured for the Christian pulpit his extraordinary gift of language and ever-enlarging mind. While engaged in ministerial work in the West Indies, he came under the power of the dread malaria, and, returning to Canada, decided to study medicine. When his health improved he resumed his much-loved pastoral calling. Henceforward, battling against physical infirmities, even to blindness, he laboured with characteristic vigour, serving the Church of his choice in a variety of ways, with honour to himself and to the greater glory of God.

No Heroes. By Blanche W. Howard. (2s. 6d. Gay & Bird.) A capital, high-toned, thorough boys' book, which will be read with delight, telling as it does of lads who were true heroes without knowing it.

Birdie's Benefits. By Ethel R. Boddy. (1s. Partridge.) The blessing a dear little one often proves in a home is once more illustrated in these simple chapters, written obviously from the point of view of the workers in the Letter Mission of the Factory Helpers' Union.

Christ's Prophetic Teaching in Relation to the Divine Order of His Words and Works (6d.) is a thoughtful pamphlet by Rev. Dr. Bullinger, calculated to assist all earnest students of Scripture. Another careful and suggestive piece of work by the same author is entitled The Structure of the Two Epistles to the Thessalonians. (6d. The Author, 7, St. Paul's Churchyard.)

William Pearce, of Poplar, by Rev. Cæsar Caine, is a very readable chapter in the history of Methodism in East London. While the pages will have special attractions for those who knew Mr. Pearce, the book is interesting as an outline, admirably written and illustrated, of a man of high Christian character and eminent usefulness. Rev. Dr. Moulton writes an appreciative introduction. (C. H. Kelly.)

Echoes from the Choir of Norwich Cathedral is a compact little volume, containing sermons recently preached, on the sacred edifice being reopened after reparation. The preachers were the Archbishop of Canterbury; the Bishops of Liverpool, Ripon, and Sodor and Man; and Archdeacons Farrar and Sinclair. Some of the discourses are of peculiar intrinsic excellence. But beyond this the work has a distinct historical interest, which is enhanced by a descriptive introduction from the pen of Dr. Lefroy, Dean of Norwich. (2s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.)

Five Minute Object Sermons to Children: Through Eye-Gate and Ear-Gate into the City of Child-Soul. By Sylvanus Stall, D.D. (4s. Funk and Wagnalls.) Here are upwards of forty addresses, not only terse and pointed, but directed to the enlightenment and instruction of young people in the Gospel of Christ. In order to reach children, Dr. Stall preaches within their understanding; and whether he starts by describing a piece of money, a camera, a measuring tape, a handful of corn, or a bunch of flowers, he arrives in due course at an appeal to duty, and urges the highest interests of his hearers, in the light of the claims of God and the redeeming work of Christ.

The Bible: Is it the Word of God or of Man? By H. D. Brown. (A. Holness. 1s.) The author has cast his useful papers in the form of a dialogue between John Plainman and his son, showing how an unlearned man may determine whether or no the Bible is what it professes to be. The book is one likely to be of great service to many perplexed by the conflicting voices of present-day speculation. Such questions as the relation of Revelation to science, the origin, claims, and sanction of the Bible itself, and verbal inspiration, are dealt with in a popular style; while the paper on "The Two Genealogies of the Lord Jesus Christ," which appeared in our own pages, is added by way of appendix.

Inebriety, or Narcomania. By Norman Kerr, M.D., F.L.S. (21s. H. K. Lewis.) Here we have the third edition, greatly enlarged, of Dr. Kerr's well-known work, wherein he treats of "inebriety as a disease, as curable as most other diseases calling for medical, mental, and moral treatment." The book seems to form a complete encyclopædia of the subject from a scientific point of view. The new matter includes: (1) A study of the origin, rise, and fall in Ireland, of the modern variety of narcomania known as etheromania: (2) A dissertation on the medical administration of alcohol, being an attempt to define the true place of alcohol in therapeutics; (3) The results of an inquiry into the relations of insurance to inebriety; (4) An extended consideration of the relation of inebriety to civil law.

The Higher Criticism is the title of a series of the "Anti-Infidel Library," by H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A. It is needless to say that the author of "Will the Old Book Stand?" writes with cogency and power. In order to test the work of the critics, Mr. Hastings suggests that a dozen of the more eminent should be shut up with Hebrew Bibles, Greek Testaments, paper, pens, ink, scissors, paste-pots and brushes, but deprived of the writings of German theologians and French infidels, each to remain in confinement until he has settled the authority, authenticity, inspiration, and inerrancy of each part of the Scriptures for himself! When they have all finished their work, the results should be compared. The author predicts that the comparison would show "a theological crazy-quilt beside which Joseph's coat of many colours would be as plain as a Quaker dress pattern." In this impression we thoroughly agree. Mr. Hastings' popular and racy exposure of learned fancies and follies should have a large circulation. (3*d. Marshall Brothers.*)

Begotten of God, is a series of nine Bible Readings from the Gospel of St. John, by Rev. J. Gelson Gregson. (6d. Marshall Brothers.) The pages are searching and stimulating in a high degree.

Preaching the Cross, an address by Rev. J. H. French, of Forest Gate, President of the Essex Baptist Union, is a thoughtful and faithful deliverance, and deserves many readers. (W. S. Caines, The Broadway, Plaistow.)

MR. SPURGEON'S SERMONS.—A society has been formed for the wider circulation of the discourses of late C. H. Spurgeon. The main object of the organisation is to make free grants to pastors of poor churches, and other Christian workers, for use as loan tracts to be exchanged from week to week. Further particulars may be obtained from Pastor J. M. Steven, Arnsby Villa, Romford, Essex.

SUNDAY WORK AFLOAT.—Sir John Burns, of the Cunard Company, has given directions that no ships of that company shall work cargo on Sundays in ports abroad any more than they would do at home. Sunday cargo work in foreign or Crown Colony ports puts an effective stoppage to Sunday worship on board British ships, and it is a fruitful source of discontent amongst officers and crews.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

A new church has been opened in Bourne Valley, Bournemouth.

Canon Basil Wilberforce has been installed as Canon of Westminster in the presence of a large congregation.

Rev. Jonathan Seaver, B.D., Vicar of St. John's, Upper Holloway, preached at the Foundling Hospital Chapel on Sunday morning.

Rev. E. A. Knox, who has done devoted work as vicar of Aston-juxta-Birmingham, has been appointed an honorary canon of Worcester.

Rev. J. E. Browne, B.D., Senior Curate of Banbridge, co. Down, has been appointed Association Secretary for the C.M.S. for South of Ireland.

The Archbishop of York, in the course of his recent visitation of his diocese, visited the Spurn Lighthouse, near Hull, and gave an address to the men on duty.

Rev. C. H. Wainwright, of Blackpool, who has been offered the Vicarage of St. Cuthbert, North Meols, Southport, is widely known and esteemed as a staunch Protestant.

Rev. R. Welchman, brother of Rev. W. Welchman, C.M.S., Ceylon, has just been accepted by the C.M.S., and after six months' training at one of the hospitals will be probably sent to North-West India.

Rev. A. W. Gough, who did excellent work at Wakefield, is now concentrating his energies upon a scheme of church extension in the parish of St. John, Highbury, to which he was appointed last September.

Mr. H. R. Allenson is about to publish a life of the late Bishop Hill, of the C.M.S. West African Mission, whose death and that of his wife occurred so sadly at Lagos, just as they had entered on their work.

Rev. C. G. Baskerville, vicar of St. Stephen's, Walthamstow, has been appointed to Tonbridge in succession to the late Rev. T. Howard Gill. The appointment is an excellent one. Mr. Baskerville is a spiritually-minded and faithful preacher.

The eighth half-year conference of Missionary Bands and Unions was held on Saturday last at the C.M. College, Islington. Twenty-eight out of a total of forty bands were represented, and four district unions. The total number of members who attended was 146. The afternoon and evening were spent in prayer and the consideration of missionary themes.

CONGREGATIONAL.

A new mission hall is being built in connection with Clifton Church, Peckham.

Rev. A. E. and Mrs. Claxton, late of Samoa, have been appointed to Chung King, China.

A congregation, which for some years has worshipped in an iron building at Belvedere, is about to build a new church.

Mr. Andrew Hamilton, senior student of Mansfield College, has been appointed assistant to Dr. R. F. Horton, at Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead.

Kirkby Stephen Church, where there was for many years a flourishing cause, but which has been closed for some months, has been reopened by the Yorkshire Union.

Rev. Robert Mackintosh, of Dumfries, has accepted the chair of Christian Ethics, Apologetics, and Sociology at Lancashire College, in succession to Rev. Dr. Hodgson.

"As the result of a week's mission services in connection with Mill Hill Church, Blackburn, conducted by the pastor," writes a correspondent, "200 persons have professed conversion. Open-air meetings have been a special feature of the services."

Rev. Jas. Jefferis, LL.D., for seventeen years the friend, counsellor, and guide of young men in Adelaide, has, after an interval of seventeen years, resumed the pastorate of the North Adelaide Congregational Church, and has been accorded, as he himself said, "a right royal welcome."

A large number of American ministers have already reached this country for their summer vacation, while others are expected to arrive in time for the Summer School of Theology at Oxford. Quite a number of them will occupy leading pulpits in London and the provinces during the next few months.

"After Twenty-one Years." Under this title a pamphlet has been issued on the work of the London Congregational Union, which has "collected and expended above £114,500 in helping weak churches that deserved to be helped, in assisting the erection of new church buildings, and in ameliorating the condition of the outcast, and taking to them the words of life."

Calls.—Rev. W. D. Edmondson, of Silverdale, to New Mills; Mr. G. Saunders, to Emmanuel Church, Leicester; Rev. S. Jones, of Widnes, to Prescot; Rev. W. F. Pascoe, to Dawlish; Rev. J. T. Leslie, to Salem, Hull; Rev. D. Lloyd, of Newhaven, to Fishersgate, Brighton.

Resignations.—Rev. M. T. Eastwood, of Union-street, Brighton; Rev. James Bell, of Wycliffe Church, Hull.

BAPTIST.

A new church has been formed at Northallerton.

New chapels are being built at Wandsworth-road, Stoke Newington, and Hillsborough.

A girls' "At Home" in connection with Regent's Park Chapel has obtained a large measure of support. By means of a sale £292 was realised.

Rev. D. P. McPherson, B.D., formerly of Liverpool, in which city he succeeded the late Rev. Hugh Stowell Brown, has accepted the pastorate of the church at South-street, Exeter.

Rev. James Hughes, the well-known president of the South African Baptist Union, is expected to reach this country next week. He purposes a six-months' stay in England.

Ninety-six churches are now aided by the Baptist Union Home Mission. There is an aggregate communion in the mission churches of 5125, and 352 were baptized during the past year.

The German Baptist Union, which in 1851 had 3,220 members, has now 23,887 members in Germany, and 29,422 in the whole Union. The baptisms last year amounted to 3025. The 149 churches have 959 preaching stations. The sixteenth triennial conference is to be held at Berlin from August 20 to 24.

In an address on "Progress," delivered before the Cornwall Association, Rev. T. Gardiner said that their true progress as a denomination depended on their taking their rightful place. The Baptists were no odd accident of the ages—no Church with a distinct but unimportant peculiarity; they were the Church. Had they but one Baptist in this country, he might proudly stand as king in the realm of spiritual truth—a living example to unbelievers.

Calls.—Rev. Rees Pryce, of Cardiff, to Middlesbrough; Mr. J. O. Ogilvey to Malton, Yorks; Rev. F. E. Miller, of Redruth, to Earlestown; Rev. T. Philpot, of Histon, to Ilfracombe.

METHODIST.

Rev. Thomas Greer, who has done good work at Limerick, is very ill.

In Shantung district there have been 173 baptisms as the result of the year's work.

New chapels have been opened at Cove, Helston; Charltonbrooke, Sheffield; Lyminge, Folkestone.

New chapels are being built at Bloxwich, Walsall; Sholbrooke, Exeter; Burley, Leeds; Norwich.

In the Tientsin Theological Institution fourteen men have been studying for the native ministry during the year.

The Spanish Government has paid an indemnity of 15,000dols. to the missionaries expelled from the Caroline Islands, but has given no undertaking to readmit them.

In Kai Ping Circuit new ground is being broken, a new station has been opened by the gift of a chapel rent free for ten years by a native member; baptisms thirty-one, and an increase of thirty-five members.

At Tientsin, China, special attention is being given by the Methodists to school work, a large number of youths thus coming under Christian influence. Fourteen baptisms and an increase of members are reported.

A united camp meeting of the Methodists of Sheffield, including the Wesleyan, Primitive Methodist, Free Church, New Connexion, and Reform bodies, was held on Thursday in a field in the Intake-road. Besides addresses, a number of testimonies were given.

The medical work at Lao Ling is steadily making headway against the prejudices of the Chinese against Christianity; 10,059 attendances of patients have been registered during the year. A new women's ward has been built through the generous labours of Mrs. Innocent.

Rev. F. W. Macdonald, who has charge of the European missions (Wesleyan), has recently returned from Italy, and speaks most hopefully of the progress of the work there. Signor Capellini continues his successful work among the soldiers with most remarkable and beneficial influence. Signor Filippini, a well-known professor in the Lyceum of Rome, is about to be received into the ministry without pastoral charge. He is a most earnest evangelical preacher.

A considerable addition to the Children's Orphanage Home Estate on Edgeworth Moors, Bolton, has recently been made. A farm of ten acres, the gift of the family of the late Mr. James Barlow, has been supplemented by the purchase of about fourteen acres of moorland. This has been well drained, and it is proposed to erect forthwith a holiday home where poor children will be received for some weeks. There will be accommodation for about thirty children at a time.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Principal Dykes preached last week in Liverpool in connection with the anniversary at Catherine-street.

Open-air services, Dr. Dykes states, are carried on by Presbyterian bands each Sunday in five London parks.

Madame Antoinette Sterling sang unexpectedly the other Sunday at the close of the evening service in Marylebone Church.

Marylebone Church has been provided with the electric light. The building will be closed for alterations during August and half of September.

The Church Aid Committee of the North London Presbytery, in addition to assisting needy churches, are now entrusted with the oversight of evangelistic work.

The congregational contributions to the synodical schemes for the half-year amount to £5091, as compared with £4838 in the same period of the preceding year.

Four members of the North Wales Association, together with the same number from the South Wales Association, have been appointed to visit the eighteen centres in connection with the Forward Movement.

Members of the Union of Young Men's Fellowship Associations are offering their services for evangelistic work, and it is hoped by the winter to secure the services of an evangelist, if sufficient applications for such work are received from the churches to warrant the step.

The Forward Movement at Cardiff contemplates establishing a training home for nurses. Several young ladies in the denomination have expressed a desire to engage in the work. It is also intended to establish a Home for friendless girls, and to arrange for some of the trained nurses to assist the churches in different parts of the country to reach those who neglect public worship.

Calls.—Rev. John More, of Cheltenham, to New-road, Woolwich; Rev. D. Ness, of Bothwell, to Whiteinch; Rev. James Hall to Banchory; Rev. H. Morrison to Thurso.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

At the last quarterly meeting for London and Middlesex it was decided to discontinue the meeting for worship which, for many years has been held at Devonshire House on fourth day evening at 6.30.

The "Meeting for Sufferings," held on the 6th inst., was one of unusual interest. The spread of Friends' literature, introduced by Walter Morris, took hold of the meeting. Early Friends were exceedingly active with the pen as well as the voice, and must have spent great sums in their publications. Religious, benevolent, and political organisations of to-day are very careful to use the Press in the promotion of their work, and all the great bodies of Christians have their book-rooms.

As the result of a very interesting discussion at the recent quarterly meeting of London and Middlesex, it has been decided to hold a meeting for worship every Wednesday in Devonshire House, Bishopsgate Without—opposite Liverpool-street—from 12.45 to 1.25 o'clock, as punctually as possible. It is hoped that business men and others will take advantage of this quiet time set apart for rest and worship, and "that none will feel themselves deterred from attending because they are unable to observe the time appointed very exactly, but that there may be perfect freedom to go into the meeting or retire from it as may be most convenient to each individual." Such a meeting, if rightly held, ought to be a means of blessing to many, and we trust the experiment will be eminently successful.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Ballarat ex-Prisoners' Farm Home is crowded out.

During the past week the salvage collections have noted an increase of ten tons.

The number of men employed by the Labour Bureau during the month of June was 379.

Six hundred men were present at the Crystal Palace Festival from the different S.A. elevators and workshops.

The Social Wing has again been asked to tender for the wood supply for the London School Board for the ensuing year.

The opening of Mrs. Ballington Booth's New Rescue Home in New York City was attended by a large number of ladies. The offering amounted to about 400 dols.

The Salvation Army has already contributed 250,000 signatures to the great polyglot petition to be presented to the Governments of the world by the heads of the British Women's Christian Temperance Union.

THE FUTURE LIFE, AND OTHER SERMONS

BY THE LATE

REV. PREB. GORDON CALTHROP, M.A.

With Introduction by Archdeacon Sinclair, D.D.

POST FREE, 6s.

"One of the last acts of the late Rev. Prebendary Gordon Calthrop was to select a number of his Sermons for presentation to the Barbican Mission to the Jews, with the request that they might be printed and published for the benefit of the Mission."—EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster Buildings, E.C.

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY

Object.—To spread the knowledge of Christ in heathen lands.

Fields of Labour.—China, from 12 chief centres; North India, South India, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; New Guinea.

Centenary Fund.—A serious deficit at the end of the financial year, and the necessity of a much larger income if the 67 additional missionaries sent out are to be maintained and adequately provided with means for carrying on their work, have led to the opening of Centenary Fund contributions to which are urgently needed; they may be forwarded to Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., Home Secretary, 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C. c29

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

This Society, which has been doing good work on the Thames since 1844, is earnestly commended to the consideration of the Public.

The field of labour is from Richmond to the Nore, among a vast fluctuating population of Seamen, Emigrants, Bargemen, etc.

CONTRIBUTIONS are most URGENTLY NEEDED to carry on this important work. F. PENFOLD (Paymaster-in-Chief, Royal Navy), Secretary.

Offices, 31, New Bridge-street, Ludgate-circus, E.C. c3588

Notes and Comments.

Mr. William Quarrier has had again to defend, as Dr. Barnardo has so often done, his right to keep children committed to his charge by lawful relatives, though afterwards claimed by the Roman Catholics. The case was tried last week in the Court of Session, Edinburgh, and decided in his favour. The Glasgow Daily Mail has an article, deploring that the society which instigates these vexatious lawsuits, should devote its energies to harassing earnest workers, instead of seeking to save other destitute children.

A Welsh correspondent, writing on the work of evangelisation, says:—

The Gospel in its entirety has four parts, like the Cherubim. God's order is: Repentance, the Cross, the gift of the Holy Ghost, and looking for the Lord's Return. Howell Harris, of Trevecca, and Daniel Rowlands, of Llangeithio, whom God very mightily owned in Wales, preached the law to the people until they were so convicted of sin, that many hundreds cried aloud for mercy. Then they were pointed to the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world. Their conviction of sin was deep, and their subsequent joy very great.

There is profit in all such examples; but on points of detail there must, of necessity, be variety in the methods of preachers under different circumstances. Yet it is manifest that in proportion as men see "the exceeding sinfulness of sin," will they desire the mercy of God unto salvation.

Among the papers in the reviews for July, probably none is of greater interest and importance than Lord Meath's article in The Nineteenth Century, entitled, "A Land of Incredible Barbarity." After recounting the shocking barbarities perpetrated upon the hapless inhabitants of Morocco, a country but four days distant from London, the Earl of Meath says:—

The united influence of Europe and America could hardly be employed in a better cause than in compassing the delivery of six million inhabitants of Morocco from the intellectual darkness, physical torture, and cruel robbery and oppression which for centuries they and their ancestors have suffered at the hands of their barbarous rulers. The Moorish people have some right to look to Christian nations for relief, as the continuance of their sufferings to the end of the nineteenth century is partly due to the criminal apathy and jealousy of the leading Christian nations.

Reports of jobbery follow in the wake of the cries of tyrannical unfairness, which have been raised in India regarding the trial of Mr. Dyer and his friends. The magistrate who sent Mr. Dyer to prison in default of paying a heavy fine for denouncing opium iniquities, and assured him that he would be committed repeatedly until he paid the fine, was Mr. John Sanders Slater, of whose recent appointment as acting chief magistrate, the newspaper India says, "It has aroused a chorus of disapproval." A correspondent informs us that Mr. Slater is forty-fifth on the list of the Bombay lawyers, and his sudden transference over the heads of others to one of the highest magisterial positions in the Bombay Presidency has excited profound indignation. Favouritism is as prejudicial to executive government as injustice is fatal to popular respect for the law; so such an incident as this is not only regrettable in the extreme, but calls for prompt explanation.

More than once we have heard it said on the platform at public meetings that men do not reject Christ, but that what they reject is only the imperfect representation, or even the caricature, of Christ that is presented to them. This is usually a loudly applauded point. That men should applaud it is not remarkable, but that preachers should make it is a matter of surprise to us. Should we not need a new version of the Acts of the Apostles if this theory were true? The treatment accorded to Christ Himself is a still greater difficulty in the way of this theory. Was He not is his own person the embodiment of every excellency? If men have a natural love for what is morally beautiful, why did they give Him a cross of shame? We commend to the notice of these strange preachers such statements as the following:—"But the natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned." "The carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be" (1 Cor. ii. 14; Rom. viii. 7). Men who make this statement do but condemn themselves, and excuse the guilty.

Under the title of "Our Predominant Iniquity," Mrs. Lynn Linton recently wrote in the St. James's Gazette a paper, the substance of which is worth remembering:—

For liberty to worship God in the way which seemed to him the sole and only truth—for liberty to live the self-respecting life of a free citizen in a free land, a man would go to the stake in the days of the long ago; and the coward who would have faltered, the renegade who would have turned back, would have been of all men then the most miserable and accursed.

Times are changed, and these supreme tests of faith and valour no longer exist. We have loosened the bonds of personal and social obligation to their widest extent; and beyond obedience to the common law of the land, where disobedience would render us amenable to the policeman and the magistrate, we have no great principles to maintain. We have waxed fat, and we do what is right in our own eyes. Nothing is quite right, and nothing is very wrong; and things do not matter a hair's breadth one way or the other.

The age has lost its perception of lines and colours. In place of the old broad black unmistakeable lines of the archaic wood-block, we have come to the confused vagueness of the new process. Instead of the distinct dye, which left nothing uncertain, we have come to complex tints which are neither pink nor yellow, neither blue nor green. And in like manner, instead of things being absolutely right and absolutely wrong, we cherish an emasculate kind of via media, where the old distinct and separate spheres overlap and intermingle, and where we are not quite sure of anything. This is our predominant iniquity—this indifference to the choice made between good and evil—the doubt, indeed, as to what is good and what is evil—and the shrinking born of this cowardly indifference, when the criminal comes to his deserts and the sinner has to suffer for his sin. Then we find our voice and cry aloud, "What does it matter? Every one does it; and who is commissioned to condemn?"

A singular illustration of "this predominant iniquity" of an age which "has lost its perception of lines and colours" occurred in an editorial note of the same issue:—

Reluctance to discuss a particular question affecting the health of the army is overcome by the alarming and deplorable nature of the statistics quoted during the discussion in the House of Commons last night. General Sir George Chesney explained that the number of men who suffer from certain diseases amounts during a twelvemonth to one-third of the total strength of the British forces in India; and that of those who are returned as cured the great majority are quite unfit to endure the exposure of a campaign. And in Sir George Chesney's opinion the growth and development of this evil is the direct consequence of action taken at the instance of a few hysterical purists. Mr. Campbell-Bannerman says that it is "impossible" to go back. Why? It is clear that the only remedy that will avail is a return to the old system, and, if necessary, an extension of it.

Thus speak those whom Mrs. Lynn Linton describes as

"Of that pseudo-philosophic turn of mind which plays with physiology, and makes a scheme of the universe consonant with its own desire; they dribble unsound platitudes about heredity and the irresistible force of a man's natural tendencies, so that criminals are not responsible and punishment is therefore injustice."

Yes: this is our predominant iniquity—this indifference to the choice made between good and evil—the doubt, indeed, as to what is good, and what is evil—and the shrinking born of this cowardly indifference, when the criminal comes to his deserts, and the sinner has to suffer for his sin. Then we find our voice and cry aloud: "What does it matter? Everyone does it, and who is commissioned to condemn?" Only "a few hysterical purists," who fear God and keep his commandments.

The Review of Reviews has an article on "The Novel of the Modern Woman." "The Modern Woman Novel" it defines "as not merely a novel written by a woman, or a novel written about women, but it is a novel written by a woman about women from the standpoint of Woman." In the main the article, though wisely written and dealing with a phase of life which it would be wrong to ignore, is painful reading. We have often wondered what strange spirit had got into some of the women writers of to-day, and now the evil is so open and threatening that it will have to be written and spoken about. The quiet protest of parents against the novel-plague will become the vigorous protest of society so far as society is in harmony with purity. We are only sorry that in this, the earliest handling of the question, Olive Schreiner should not have been included. We think the conduct of Lyndall in her "Story of an African Farm" is as bad as can be, and the influence of such a character eminently calculated to corrupt all right thought and feeling.

Years ago we said that the root of George Eliot's bad life was in her novels. There is an evil taint and suggestion in them which is like the smell of a vault. But we did not expect to find that George Eliot's example would work such deadly harm to men and women as The Review of Reviews shows it is doing. People who live bad lives can neither write good healthful books nor exert a good influence. After this terrible exposure of what the famous woman novelist is doing, perhaps we shall hear a good deal less praise from Christian people of her marvellous genius.

How much truth is there in the words put into the mouth of a poor wandering girl—"I know them Homes. They kill you with their pious ways. Good people ain't good, like bad 'uns. I won't go. I don't want to be a good woman—not that sort, leastways." There is truth about good people not being good like bad ones; they are not and cannot be so easy, so accommodating, so complaisant. Moral distinctions count for something with them, and life has to them a serious and earnest aspect which it does not wear to giddy girls and depraved women. This must be said, while, at the same time, it must be allowed that many good people are lacking in sunshine, in geniality, in kindliness of manner, in affability, in sympathy. And the "pious ways" of some "Homes" would be all the better if they were made more human and less "pious." We never can think of the Son of Man living in one of them. But then we know also of other "Homes" where genial humour, patient gentleness, wise management, deep insight into character, are as manifest as religious ways.

It is computed that there are "more professional bookmakers who dedicate the whole of their lives to their profession than there are incumbents in the Church of England," and if their assistants are included, the number of men on the turf considerably outnumbers the ministers of all denominations. It is further said that in London alone there are fifty papers devoted to the turf, and in the country nearly every paper is compelled to dedicate some of its space to chronicle racing and similar news. The exceptions in the Press are few and far between, but we are hoping for more. The blame of the modern increase of gambling is laid, and, we believe, rightly laid, by The Review of Reviews on the Press and the Post-office. "Ninety-nine out of the hundred bets made to-day are directly due to the newspaper press and the telegraph department of the Post-office. They have not created the gambling instinct, but they have pandered to it, and done everything that the wit of man could devise in order to facilitate its exercise. The newspapers have become the effective medium by which the whole system is carried on." If this be so, the country should stop the use of the Post-office for such a purpose, and public opinion should be brought to bear on the Press. It lies with the Christian Church to create a sound and active public opinion.

---

As the hot work of harvest comes on, it would be worth while for farmers and others to supply their men with non-intoxicating drinks. We know that this is done very effectively in one part of a home county. Mr. Frederick Dolman also tells us how it is done by the Gas Committee of the Birmingham Town Council. At one time the stokers and others at the gasworks, who need a good deal of drink, went to the public-houses in the intervals between the twenty minutes' shifts in which they work. Some time ago the Gas Committee, after inquiring into the best kind of beverages for the purpose, "decided to provide at their works an unlimited supply of oatmeal water for the free use of the men, and this has been so well appreciated that the formerly crowded public houses have lost the greater part of their custom." That the oatmeal water is free may have something to do with its abundant use, and we expect the committee find that the men work better and more regularly, and that the cost is met. Besides, a man who keeps from intoxicants whilst he is working will be likely to keep from them when he is not working.

---

A correspondent writes to one of our contemporaries asking what will be the position of ministers now that the "Ascent of Man" has been published. "We cannot," he says, "shut our eyes to the fact that this new light will compel us to abandon or remodel our ancient theories concerning the Fall of Man, the Vicarious Sacrifice of Christ, and the Future State. The issues now raised are no less momentous than these." He has, however, to admit that multitudes of hearers never read a solid book, and yet he calls upon ministers to keep themselves in touch with the questions that are agitating thoughtful people, so that they may worthily educate their charges! His thinking is evidently confused. Do the "thoughtful" need this kind of preaching? Can the unread multitudes do with it? What so hopeless as to deal with such questions as he names in their relation to present-day theories, in the presence of an ignorant crowd? Let ministers make themselves acquainted with all that is written, but let them be wise in meddling with new books in the pulpit. As for the "Ascent of Man," the criticism of it seems settling down to this—that it has no status either as science or theology.

There was always a breezy candour about General Gordon which swept away conventional rubbish, and gave a sight of the truth, whatever the truth might be. In the new book "More About Gordon," he expresses himself very frankly as to his work, and gives his view of the easy goodness which, with a good wish, fancies it will convert the world.

I daresay, in spite of this long rigmarole, you do not care whether in the provinces of the equator there are blacks, or greens, or blues, and will most probably skip all this; and I am sure I do not, if—oh if!—I can get out of it. I do not care if there is one lake or a million lakes, and I do not care if the Nile has a source or not. Some philanthropic people write to me about "noble work, poor blacks," etc. I have, I think, stopped them writing by acknowledging ourselves to be a pillaging horde of brigands, and propose to them to leave their comfortable home and come out to their favourite "poor blacks," or to give up their wine and devote pounds to send out real missions.

This is the point to which the great possibilities of the mission field will compel real Christians to come—"give up their wine and devote pounds to send out real missions." And not wine only, but every luxury, every unnecessary thing. When the offerings of our luxuries shall have been brought into the Lord's house, then indeed there will be enough for all work.

The Governments of Europe will evidently have to reckon with their subjects in future wars. The peoples are learning that with them rests the power to decide whether wars shall be waged. At the Dijon Labour Congress, held last week, the representatives of 150,000 workmen had a discussion on standing armies. One said that the camp and barrack life to which the manhood of the most civilised States is now condemned is a persistent cause of physical, moral, and mental degeneration. As against the unwillingness of statesmen to listen to the appeals of reason, "there was one practical course open to the Labour Party. It was to make sure that on the day on which war might be declared between any two great nations, a general strike would be declared in both countries." The method may be open to discussion, but the thoughts leading up to its suggestion are the important things to note. This, too, was striking: "Immediately a French tramp changed his rags for a military uniform, he became wishful to fire on the people."

---

Nothing but satisfaction can be felt by everyone that the Miners' Conciliation Board has succeeded in arranging terms between men and masters which will give peace in the great mining industry for two years at least. The advantage to all kinds of trade will be great; but we are especially thankful for the triumph of good sense and good feeling, and for another illustration of the value of a court of appeal to which causes of dispute can be referred before a dispute has arisen. Nations are only larger combinations of men, and what has been done in the coal trade can be done by Governments. We are learning to behave like human beings.

---

Dr. Albert Shaw gives some alarming statistics in The Century of the death-rate in Berlin. "In a total population of 1,315,000, the 73,000 people who lived in one-room tenement quarters supplied nearly half the entire number of deaths. Their death-rate per thousand for the year was 163·5, or about one-sixth their entire number," whereas the well-to-do people, who had four or more rooms for their household, suffered by death only at the rate of 5·4 per thousand of population. "Half the mortality of the Berlin one-room dwellers occurred in households where five or more persons occupied the one apartment." Any one who visits the homes of the poor knows how impure is the atmosphere of the small rooms which are occupied day and night; and vitiated air means death. The narrow accommodation means also manifold temptations and disadvantages during the brief life of the poor. If a man in a four-roomed house has a thirty times greater chance of life, he has also a hundred times greater chance of at least a fairly moral life.

---

Dr. Fairbairn called the attention of the Oxford Summer School of Theology to a subject of great importance and suggestiveness when he enlarged on "The Oxford influence on English religious history." Evangelicals are chiefly interested in remembering that at Oxford Wycliffe lived and taught, and that in its colleges the Methodist revival began. Both periods are full of instruction. The "poor preachers" of Wycliffe are always needed. There is no way of spreading the Gospel in any land but by means of poor, humble, Christ-loving men, who feel that necessity is laid upon them to preach it. These "poor preachers" are always prominent in times of revival. Early Methodism showed the necessity for unconventional ways—living ways of living preachers for reaching dead souls. Street preaching, open-air preaching, informal gatherings—these were the ways by which the Oxford Methodists prevailed. If the increasing millions of our large towns are to be saved, the same elasticity of method must be observed.

But what are we to say of the reactions which have come from Oxford? The infidelity in one form and another with which we have had to contend since the beginning of the last century had its rise in the Rationalism of Locke, which again led to Deism, and this again to wider and harder forms of denial. The High Church movement had its rise in the same place as Methodism, and many of its leaders had been trained in the Evangelical school. Are we now to see another "movement"? If so, what? Is it to be an intelligent Evangelicalism which follows the Word of God rather than any human forms or human teachers, or the disintegration of the Scripture of Truth? Are we to see men coming from this ancient home of learning and religion pledged only in their hearts to loyalty to Christ Jesus? We are firmly of opinion that the conquering society of the future will be that which makes Him "Lord of all"—the sum of its beliefs, the example of its methods, the inspiration of its activities.

The School of Suffering.

Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing. They say unto him, We also go with thee. They went forth, and entered into a ship immediately; and that night they caught nothing. . . . And He said unto them, cast the net on the right side of the ship and ye shall find. They cast, therefore, and now they were not able to draw it for the multitude of fishes.—John xxi. 3-6.

To the pessimist this world is a howling wilderness and life itself a series of disappointments and vexations.

Certainly we err when we call this world of sunshine and flowers, of laughter and song, a howling wilderness; and life itself must have been passing drear if its whole history can be gathered up into a tissue of disappointments.

And yet it is true nevertheless that to many life is a constant struggle and uphill fight; a continual beginning and a continual failure to accomplish what we have begun; until the heart is weary and the energies flag, and the question comes, "Is life worth living?" Tennyson sang to us that

> "Men may rise on stepping-stones
> Of their dead selves to higher things."

And so it must needs be that we put a cheerful courage on, and make of our disappointments a ladder by which to reach our successes. Life is not all disappointment, whatever the pessimist may say, and we shall do well to remember that "our disappointments are God's appointments," and that the disappointments of life, as well as other trials through which we have to pass in the school of suffering, are every one planned beforehand by the infinite wisdom and infinite love of our Heavenly Father.

He who knows us best knows best when we can bear success; and when, in real mercy and love to us, to shatter cherished dreams and break down schemes of future greatness or bliss. And then, too, as we go on through life, can we not see for ourselves the wisdom of this? How many of us are grieved, or think God dealt hardly with us, because He disappointed us in many of our early expectations? Do we not smile nowadays at the thought of some of our early petitions; and thank God that He overruled them, and acknowledge that the best and kindest answer that God could have made to those early prayers was to answer them exactly the reverse of the way in which we wished and expected He would? Whenever God answers a prayer like that, we may always be quite sure that the reason He does not give us what we ask for is because He has something better in store for us.

Simon Peter got his nets together to go and get a few dozen fishes, as he and his brethren had done many times before. He was sorely grieved and disappointed because they had toiled all night and caught nothing; but the net was allowed to remain empty of all that it might be filled as it had never been filled before. The lesser blessing was denied that there might be room for the fuller one. Just when their hearts were ready to sink with hope deferred, the call of the Master comes to them, and when they had cast down the net at his command they were not able to draw it in for the number of fishes it enclosed. It is ever so! always the darkest before the dawn! And whenever we are the most discouraged and cast down, the time of deliverance may be the nearest.

But Jesus has some lessons to teach us by these trials; even disappointments have their definite purpose and place in the formation of character, which is, after all, the great end of our being called to pass through "the school of suffering." We ought to be richer in patience and perseverance for each disappointment, as we learn

> "The heights by great men reached and kept
> Were not attained by sudden flight,
> But they while their companions slept
> Were toiling upward in the night.
> Standing on what too long we bore
> With shoulders bent and downcast eyes,
> We may discern unseen before
> A path to higher destinies."

To many a one the road to success has begun, and perhaps continued for a considerable part of the way, too, along the pathway of disappointment. Disappointments, bravely overcome, drill and discipline and train the mind; and give solidity and strength of purpose to work; which, if too easily accomplished, might be liable to be done in a very perfunctory and superficial manner.

We need continually to remind ourselves that we are not sent here to make our own happiness and well-being the first object in life, and we have no right to be angry when we are thwarted in our pursuit of these ends.

If God sees that He can make us both good and happy, most assuredly He will; but if He sees that our head is not steady enough to walk the more perilous paths of prosperity, then He will, in tender love and far-seeing wisdom, choose for us those things that will help to make us good and strong Christians, rather than mere self-indulgent idlers in his vineyard.

Sometimes, again, our disappointments come to us in our spheres of Christian labour. We seem to have toiled all night and caught nothing; our best endeavours, so far as we are able to judge, have fallen to the ground; but then let us consider that we are at best but poor judges of our own work, and always apt to define its worth by its results. Christ has a different standard; and this thought should go a long way towards consoling us when our moments of discouragement come in connection with any work we are trying to do for Him.

The reward is promised not to the successful servant, but to those who are faithful, in the smallest as well as in the greatest things; and the praise that we as Christians should covet most of all should be our Master's "She hath done what she could." If our work will honestly bear that test, then, in spite of many disappointments and discouragements, our reward is sure, and we shall doubtless come with joy bringing our sheaves with us.

Let us always remember that amid all our disappointments, of whatsoever nature, Jesus Christ is as near to us as He was to his disciples, though, like them, our eyes may be holden that it may seem to us as though He had hidden Himself from our ken; yet He is there, ready just at the right moment to turn our sorrow into joy; and when the cross currents have done their work, to bring us out into the smooth waters and green pastures, and to give us the oil of joy for mourning. Let us learn, then, to trust and be still; in his strength, to be more than conquerors over all these things, for we know that "no chastening for the present seemeth joyous, but grievous; nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness to them that are exercised thereby."

MARY E. KENDREW.

THE LATE "A.L.O.E."—We are informed that the preparation of a biography of "A.L.O.E." (Miss C. M. Tucker), the well-known authoress and missionary, has been entrusted to Miss Agnes Giberne; and the family ask for the assistance of any who are able to contribute reminiscences, or to lend letters of interest. The greatest care will be taken of such if sent to Rev. W. F. Tucker Hamilton, Vicar of Christ Church, Woking.

Our Greatest Want.

"Seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."—Acts iii. 19.

DOES not every Christian need them? and every Church? Are they not the supreme necessity of the remarkable times through which we are passing? Is there not depression, more or less, everywhere, exhaustion, spiritual stagnation, a sort of death-life? What is the tale which religious, philanthropic, and missionary societies are telling? Is it not a tale of few results, of miserably inadequate funds, of pressing and increasing anxieties and burdens? And yet there never was so much wealth in the Christian world. Nor were the opportunities of the Church ever before so great and glorious; doors stand open in every direction; a work of preparation has been accomplished both at home and abroad, in which it is easy to see the hand of God, and the gracious meaning and purpose of which no one can fail to discern. God has designs of love and mercy for the human race, and providentially they are being rapidly brought to fulfilment; and their fulfilment providentially implies and guarantees their fulfilment spiritually—is the sure augury and prophecy indeed of their fulfilment spiritually. And one thing only is wanted in order to their fulfilment spiritually—genuine revival within the Church: "Seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

Attempts are frequently made "to get up" revivals; artificial stimulus is applied; certain human instrumentalities are employed; a kind of spiritual galvanism is resorted to; faith is divided in its objects; and the consequence is, more harm than good is done; the religious level is not raised, but lowered ultimately as a result of the temporary excitement, and otherwise matters do not turn out at all satisfactory. The special need of the times, and of all times, and the only efficacious remedy for the things so much deplored, is God's revival, not man's—"more life, and fuller," "showers of blessing," "seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

But a condition-precedent has to be fulfilled, and for its fulfilment the Church is responsible. In all the ages and under all the dispensations repentance—the confession and putting away of sin—has invariably gone before and prepared for the blessing. To that law there is no exception, nor can there be. And just here to-day is the difficulty, the hindrance, and the only hindrance; manward it is wholly, not Godward at all. There is no deep penitence in the Church because of the evils that abound in Church and nation and in the world, no earnest heart-searching, and humiliation, and confession. And until there is, until the conscience of the Church is aroused, and there is acknowledgment, and purgation, and a return to righteousness, and united, believing, persistent waiting upon God, "the seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord" will not come. "Behold, the Lord's hand is not shortened that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that He will not hear." . . . "I will go and return to My place till they acknowledge their offence and seek My face; in their affliction they will seek Me earnestly." . . . "I set my face unto the Lord God, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes; and I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession.". . . . "Repent ye, therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, that so there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord."

THE FIRE OF HOLY IMPULSE.

(Jeremiah xx. 9.)

There is a stay, and we are strong!
Our Master is at hand
To cheer our solitary song
And guide us to the strand! . .
Or if, for our unworthiness,
Toil, prayer, and watching fail,
In disappointment Thou canst bless,
So love at heart prevail!

Keble.

Jeremiah's nature reminds us of the Æolian harp, which is so sensitive to the passing breeze; now wailing with sorrow, now jubilant with song: so delicately strung, so sympathetic, so easily affected by every passing circumstance, was the soul of the prophet. The whole book mirrors the changefulness of his mood, as the ocean the perpetual heavens outspread above it—now blue as the azure sky, and again dark with the brooding storm.

There are many indications of this in the chapters before us. For instance, there is the exclamation: "Cursed be the day wherein I was born; cursed be the man who brought tidings to my father, saying, A man child is born unto thee. . . . Wherefore was I born to see labour and sorrow?" (xx. 14-18). But in the same breath there is the heroic outburst, "The Lord is with me as a mighty One and terrible; therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and shall not prevail" (xx. 11). How great the contrast between these moods! In the first, he is traversing the valley of the shadow, where the dark trees shut out the sky, and the swollen torrent rushes turbidly through the gorge; in the second, he stands upon the heights where the sun shines, and to the far horizon the landscape lies outspread, its cornfields goldening in the summer sun.

The same contrast appears in this verse. There we find the half-formed resolution to make no further mention of God, and to speak no more in his name. Then he is instantly aware of his inability to control the passionate outburst of the Spirit within. "There is in mine heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I am weary with forbearing, and I cannot contain" (R.V.). Oh, wonderful heart of man! Who can understand thee, who can estimate the heights to which thou canst rise, or the depths to which thou canst sink? What an infinitude of bliss and of sorrow is within thy compass! How radiant thy heavens, how dark thine abyss! It is well for us when we learn to distinguish between the life of our emotions and that of our will; and resolve to live no more in mood or emotion, but to build the edifice of our life upon the granite of the obedient will.

I.—THE CIRCUMSTANCES OUT OF WHICH THESE WORDS SPRANG.

Jeremiah's Half-formed Resolution.—"I will not make mention of Him, nor speak any more in his name." Not improbably by this time Nineveh had fallen. For six hundred years she had ruled surrounding nations with a rod of iron tyranny, exerting an imperial sway with merciless cruelty. At last her time had come. A vast host gathered from Asia Minor as far as the shores of the Black Sea, from the entire valley of the Tigris, from Armenia, Assyria, and the wandering tribes of the desert, and had settled down on her as swarms of hornets on a putrid carcase. For two years the siege had lasted under the direction of the trusted general of the last King of Nineveh, Nabopolassar, whose son, Nebuchadnezzar, was destined to be the "hammer of God." Rumours of this catastrophe were spreading through the world, carrying everywhere sense of relief and foreboding—relief that the tyrant was down, foreboding as to who should take his place.

At this time, Egypt was in the zenith of her power. Amid the decrepitude of Nineveh, Pharaoh had seized the opportunity of extending his empire to the banks of the Tigris. The kingdom of Judah, like all neighbouring nations, owned, at least nominally, the King of Egypt as suzerain. Confidence in the proximity and prowess of his great ally encouraged Jehoiakim in his career of shameless idolatry and sin. The whole land, as we have seen, was corrupt.

Jeremiah, the foremost of the little band that remained true to the best traditions of the past, never lost an opportunity of lodging his complaint or striving to resist the downward progress of his people. In doing this, he aroused an ever-growing weight of opposition. The plot of his native town of Anathoth was the first volcanic outburst, to be followed by a long series of plots, and snares, and manifestations of hatred on the part of those for whom he would have gladly given his life as he daily gave his prayers. He sat alone, cast out by prophet and priest, by court and people.

"Come," they said on one occasion, "and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet." He was a laughing-stock all the day. Everyone mocked him. The word of the Lord was made a reproach to him and a derision all the day. His associates and those whom he encountered watched for his halting, and whispered that peradventure he would be enticed so that they should prevail against him, and take their revenge on him.

Matters culminated finally in the episode of chapters xix. and xx. Beneath a Divine impulse he procured a common earthen bottle, and gathering a number of the elders, led them forth into the valley of Hinnom, beside the gate of the potsherds. In this neighbourhood the refuse of the city was perpetually exposed to the foul birds and the wild dogs. It was a place of abhorring and loathsomeness. Then he uttered a long and terrible enumeration of the sins of his people, accompanying it with predictions of the certain and irrevocable doom to which his people were hurrying. The men of Jerusalem would there fall by the sword before their enemies; in the straitness of the siege they would eat the flesh of their sons and their daughters and their friends. The city itself would fall in ruins of blackened stones, and the surrounding valley would be filled with the carcases of the slain making banquet for the fowls of the heaven and the beasts of the earth. To emphasize his words he broke the potter's vessel, pouring forth its contents as the blood of his countrymen, that would bedew and saturate the soil.

Not satisfied with this, he returned from Tophet and stood in the court of the Temple, perhaps on the steps that led up to the court of the priests. Crowds of people were probably at the time engaged in some sacred rite, it may have been the time of one of the great feasts. When his voice was heard there would be a running together of a vast concourse, whose angry faces and vehement gestures indicated the intensity of their dislike to the man who cast the shadow of impending destruction over their gayest hours. The endurance of one of them at least had at last reached its limit. Pashur, the chief governor of the Temple, to whose jurisdiction its order was relegated, gathering a band of Levites or Temple servants, seized the prophet, threw him on the pavement, and smote him after the Eastern fashion, which we call the bastinado, and then thrust him in the stocks, leaving him there the whole night, to the ridicule and hatred of the populace, and finally the cold night and the prowling dogs.

In the morning Pashur appears to have repented of his harsh treatment, and to have released the prophet; but his strong spirit was not for a moment cowed by the indignity and torture to which he had been exposed. Turning on his persecutor, he told him that he would live to be a terror to himself and all his foes; that all Judah would be given into the hand of the King of Babylon, now mentioned for the first time; that the people would be carried captives to Babylon, and slain there with the sword; and that all the riches and gains of the city, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the King of Judah should be given into the hand of their enemies to carry to Babylon. It is this fourfold mention of Babylon that gives colour to the suggestion that Nineveh had fallen; and that the strong hand of Nabopolassar and his son was beginning to show itself, and to wield the sceptre which was falling from the faltering grasp of the king of one of the oldest and greatest empires of antiquity.

Set free, Jeremiah went to his home, and there poured forth that marvellous combination of heroic faith and wailing grief which is recorded for us that we may know the weakness of his nature, and learn how earthen was the vessel in which God had placed his heavenly treasure. No brazen wall was he, but a reed shaken by the wind; no wise strong hero, but a child. All that he did and said when face to face with his age was due to no native strength or heroism; as he says himself, his was "the soul of the needy" (ver. 13, R.V.).

What a tale could be told by the walls of the secret chambers of God's greatest saints! What litanies of tears and sighs and broken sentences have beaten against them in successive billows of heartrending sorrow! Take, for instance, that outburst of Luther on the eve of his appearance before the Diet of Worms. Those who have seemed strongest and most rock-like in the presence of their fellows have sunk the most helplessly on the ground, confessing that none were so weak and helpless as they.

Our prophet seems to have gone even further. Then came a suggestion to his heart that he should relinquish his labours, and renounce public for private life. Why struggle any more against the inevitable? Why set himself to convince those who would not be convinced, and who repaid his love with hate? Why surrender any longer name, and comfort, and human love for the thankless task of seeking to stem his people's career? He came to the very point of saying, "Send whom Thou wilt send; entrust thy commission to some stronger soul, cast in a more heroic mould; let me go back to the seclusion and humble toils of my village home."

Not dissimilar have been the appeals of God's servants in every age, when they have measured their weakness against the strength of the evils they have combated, and have marked their limited success, the handfuls of seed wasted upon barren soil; the word spoken in the ear of the wind; the futility of opposing an Ahab or a Jezebel; the ingratitude of those whom they would gladly save. They have been disposed to cry, with the greatest of the prophets, "It is enough, let me die!"

II.—THE IRRESISTIBLE IMPULSE.

"There is in mine heart as it were a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I am weary with forbearing and cannot contain." "O Lord, Thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed." Three things arrest us here.

(1) The Prophet's Habit of Turning from Man to God. Throughout the book there are so many indications of the close fellowship in which he lived with Jehovah. God always seemed nigh at hand. His ear always bent down to the least whisper of his servant's need. Compelled to live much alone, this much-suffering man acquired the habit of counting on the companionship of God as one of the undoubted facts of his life. He poured into the ear of God every thought as it passed through his soul. He spread forth his roots by the river of God, which is full of water. There was no fear that his leaf would become sere in the summer heat, or that he would cease from yielding fruit in the year of drought. The Lord was his strength, his stronghold, and his refuge in the day of affliction, and to Him he opened his cause. "Heal me, O Lord, and I shall be healed; save me, and I shall be saved: for Thou art my praise, let me not be dismayed or ashamed" (xvii. 14-18).

Let us seek this attitude of soul, which easily turns from man to God, not foregoing the hours of prolonged fellowship, but, in addition, acquiring the habit of talking over our life with One who does not need to be informed of what transpires, but awaits with infinite desire to receive the confidence of his children. Talk over each detail of your life with God, telling Him all things, and finding the myriad needs of the soul satisfied in Him.

(2) The Burning Fire.—We have sometimes seen a little steamer, like The Maid of the Mist at the foot of the Falls of Niagara, resisting and gaining upon a stormy torrent, madly rushing seaward. Slowly she has worked her way through the mad rush of waters, defying their attempt to bear her back; calmly and serenely she has pursued her onward course, without being turned aside, or driven back, or dismayed. And why? Because a burning fire has been shut up in her heart, and her engines could not stay, but were impelled in their strong and regular motion. Similarly, within Jeremiah's heart a fire had been lit from the heart of God, and was kept aflame by the continual fuel heaped on it. The difficulty, therefore, with him was, not in speaking, but in keeping silent—not in acting, but in refraining.

This sheds some light upon the prophetic impulse, and helps us to understand what the Apostle Peter meant when he said, "Holy men of God spake as they were borne along by the Holy Ghost." As if the current of thought and feeling came so evidently from without, and, passing through them, swept them forward irresistibly. Thus it was possible for the prophets not to understand words which were put into their hearts by the Spirit of God, and into the meaning of which they had to search.

But, after all, our main desire is to know how we may have this heart on fire. We are tired of a cold heart toward God. We complain because of the effort in Christian life and duty; we would fain learn the secret of being so possessed by the Spirit and thought of God that we might be daunted by no opposition, abashed by no fear. The source of the inward fire is in the love of God, shed abroad by the Holy Ghost; not primarily our love to God, but the sense of his love to us. The coals of juniper that gave so fierce a heat in the heart of a Rutherford were brought from the altar of the heart of God. If we set ourselves with open face towards the Cross, which, like a burning lens, focusses the love of God, and if, at the same time, we reckon upon the Holy Spirit—well called the Spirit of Burning—to do his wonted office, we shall find the ice that cakes the surface of our heart dissolving in tears of penitence; and presently the sacred fire will begin to glow. Then the love of Christ will constrain us; whether we be beside ourselves, or be sober, will not be the subject of our consideration, because his Spirit, the thought of what He desires, the passion of fulfilling his will, will destroy the fire of self-esteem, and replace it with the sacred fire of passionate devotion.

And where that love once begins to burn within the soul, when once the baptism of fire has set us aglow, the sins and sorrows of men—their impieties and blasphemies, their disregard of God, of his service and of his day, their blind courting of danger, their dalliance with evil, will only incite in us a more ardent spirit. To see the multitudes rushing to destruction, to hear the boast of the blasphemer, the taunt of the infidel, the cry of the oppressed, the ribald mirth of the profane, the desecration of all that is holiest and best in man; to think of the grief caused to the Spirit of God, the dishonour done to Him; to anticipate the outer darkness, the undying worm, the bottomless pit—surely, these are enough to fan the smouldering embers until they break out in the least emotional; as when Jeremiah said that he was conscious of an impulse within him to restrain which was a weariness, to stay from obeying which was a sin.

(3) The Prophet's Safety.—"The Lord is with me as a mighty one and terrible; therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail." The presence of God is salvation. When Ezekiel describes the plot of Edom to possess herself of the land of the chosen people, he in a single stroke indicates the futility of the attempt, as he says significantly, "Whereas the Lord was there" (Ezek. xxxv. 10). It was enough, though Israel was in exile, that God's Spirit was brooding over their desolate land. He guarded its frontiers and filled its vacant spaces, and could not be dispossessed. For God to be there made every attempt abortive.

So Jeremiah felt. He might be the weakest of the weak, having neither might, nor wisdom, nor power of speech, apparently the easy prey of Pashur and Jehoiakim; but since God was with him, casting the mantle of his protection around his servant, and pledging Himself to be his stronghold and house of defence, he was invulnerable.

O weak and trembling soul, if thou art true to God, God is with thee, besetting thee behind and before, and covering thee with the hollow of his hand. Thou shalt be like the city of the great King—the kings may assemble, but so soon as they see thee, they shall be stricken with terror and pass away; whilst thou shalt be a quiet habitation, a tent that shall not be removed, the stakes whereof shall never be plucked, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken. "This God is our God for ever and ever; He will be our Guide even for evermore" (Psa. xlviii. 14, R.V. marg.).

CRIPPLE CHILDREN AT PLAY.—On Thursday last about 250 of Mr. C. L. Boyer's little cripples spent some hours in Bushwood, Leytonstone, on the confines of Epping Forest. They were collected in the East-end, and conveyed in three tram cars. After a substantial meal in the Aylmer-road Mission Hall, they were conducted to Bushwood, some going in a van, others in perambulators and vehicles of lower degree. The weather was fine, and drives, donkey rides, and other pleasures kept the children in a transport of delight. About five o'clock they returned to the Aylmer-road Hall, where tea was provided. After this repast recitations and songs were rendered by the children. The friends who provided the treat, and those who organised and administered it, should all feel joy in the brightness thus infused into some of the most cheerless of young lives.

THE OPIUM AGAIN.

The opium iniquity seems now to have attained to its ne plus ultra position, by the wicked persecution by Government officials of men, good and true, who have done their best to expose the fraud of opium traffic in Bombay. To show your readers how this matter stands it is necessary to state—

First—That though the vile habit of opium-smoking has been going on increasing year by year in India, to the social, moral, and physical ruin of tens of thousands of people, and though the degrading scenes of disgusting opium dens have been exposed again and again, and more especially so by the graphic series of letters sent home to the English Press by Mr. Caine, when he was out here some time ago, yet, as these cesspools of pollution were authorised to carry on their traffic by the licences they held from the Government, and as our Indian Government is despotic, nothing could be done here to abolish the iniquity which brought in a quantity of grist to the fiscal mill of the State.

I believe that it was Mr. Caine's letters home on the opium dens of India which led the Imperial Government, from very shame, to send out an order to the Indian Government to do away with such degrading places as soon as possible. On the 25th September, 1891, the Viceroy issued an order (No. 4033) to the Provincial Governors to abolish the opium dens as soon as that could conveniently be done. No date was fixed, and this gave the Excise officials a loop-hole for delay. The Viceroy in his resolution said that "the smoking or the consumption of opium, and its preparations in any other form, on the premises," was to be prohibited, and in Clause 6 of the resolution we read:—

> The adoption of this measure involves the risk of unlicensed places being established, so that local governments will adopt the preventive measures best calculated to minimise this risk. And he adds that "the orders should be brought into force everywhere on the first opportunity."

Such was the order of the Viceroy, and I have reason to know that the Province of the Punjaub was the first to attend to it.

In Bengal, the N.W., as well as in other provinces, the officials were very tardy in putting the order into practice, which no doubt was done simply to save the revenue. I found, in the course of my journeys, opium dens still in full flow in many places last winter, both in India and in Assam. In Bombay they hung on to the opium-smoking revenue as long as possible, and it was only on the 31st of July, 1893, that the order of September, 1891, was put into force in Bombay.

No more licences were issued to men engaged in opium-smoking dens, and for a short period there was a check to the vile traffic. But it has proved too profitable to the opium contractors to give it up without a special effort, and they pretty soon invented a scheme by which the commerce could be continued, without, as they thought, being liable to a breach of the new law. A number of places called "Smoking-Clubs" were opened for the consumption of opium without any licence for the same. One radical omission in the Viceroy's order was that while the dens for smoking opium were abolished, the sale of the opium preparation called chandoo was not prohibited. Raw opium is never smoked in India, and the chandoo is opium clarified by boiling it down on a slow fire for two or three hours. So that men could still purchase the smoking material and use it in their own houses, but could not congregate for that purpose. That was really all that the prohibition amounted to, so that it was a very imperfect order at best.

This, however, would have abolished the lucrative business of the opium-den contractors, as now each man could buy his chandoo, and smoke it at home. Hence the starting of the "clubs," and the smokers preferred the company of other victims in the vice to a lonely indulgence at home.

In a short time, a number (150) of these so-called "clubs" were at work in Bombay. The missionaries found them out and called the attention of the police and of the Excise officials to them, but to no effect. The illegal traffic was no doubt quietly winked at by the officials, as it helped to keep up the opium revenue.

At last on the 20th of January an article appeared in The Bombay Guardian exposing the whole concern, and giving the name of the chief agent of the opium contractor of Bombay, who pushed on these so-called "Smoking Clubs," and also respectfully soliciting the attention of the Governor of Bombay to his breach of the recently issued opium law. The article also, in pretty plain words, charged the officials of the opium department of wilfully winking at the whole thing for revenue purposes.

One would have expected that this exposure of illicit traffic, with abundance of evidence to back it up in a court of law, would have resulted in the prosecution of the men who were engaged in it, and with thanks to the missionaries who had exposed the fraud. But, strange to say, the person chiefly concerned in the work, and who was named in the article above-mentioned, was allowed to bring a charge of defamation in court against the three missionaries who wrote the said article, and instead of his being punished for his illegal work the missionaries were punished for exposing it on the paltry plea that there was not enough evidence to prove the culprit guilty, though to others the evidence was abundant and reliable. Mr. Prautch was fined Rs.150, out of which Rs.100 was to be paid to the prosecutor, or a month's imprisonment. He refused to pay the fine and went to jail. Then another of the party—Man Sukh Lal—was condemned to a fine of Rs.250, Rs.200 of which was to go to the prosecutor. He also refused to pay, and is now in the common jail as a criminal, and now Mr. A. S. Dyer has been incarcerated for a month.

In Mussoorie last evening, June 25, we held a public meeting to protest against these high-handed proceedings of Bombay officials, and to express our sympathy with these persecuted brethren. Resolutions strongly denouncing the official action in Bombay and calling for a strict inquiry were unanimously passed at this meeting. One result has been the appointment of a committee to draw up a memorial to the Secretary of State for India on this subject. We shall call special attention to the fact that our Indian executive officials are guilty of evading Imperial orders when it happens that those orders do not accord with their own notions and comport with their wishes.

We have now three special instances of this official disloyalty:—(1) In the case of the order to abolish the outstills in Bengal; (2) in the case of the Cantonment C.D. Acts; (3) in the case of the opium dens.

The educated natives of India are close observers, they see all this evasion of orders on the part of the Government officials, and will such an example not embolden them to do the same when any order is issued that they do not approve of? In short, this disloyal evasion of resolutions issued from headquarters by subordinate Government officials is subversive to all authority and most destructive to order and respect of Government, and it is full time that the British Parliament should put it down with a strong hand.

I know that there are personal considerations at the back of all such shirking of orders, but as this letter is already long I must not just now enter on that aspect of the question.

I do hope that the loyal people of England will be fully aroused by the present crisis which this opium question has assumed, and that the indiscreet and unjust action of the officials in Bombay will tend to flash such a lurid light upon the abominable traffic as to hasten on the total abolition of the glaring iniquity. When God raises up brave men to be willing to suffer for righteousness' sake in protesting against a national crime, there is strong hope of such martyrdom ushering in the day of redemption. Witness the case (among others) of the noble martyr John Brown, in America, before the awful Civil War which issued in the emancipation of four million slaves in the United States.

Yes, the day of deliverance is drawing nigh in India, too, and happy those whose noble testimony and undeserved sufferings hasten it on.

MR. GEORGE GROVE writes from Kew, Victoria, that he has been visiting Queensland, New South Wales, South Australia, and Tasmania. There have been many open doors for service, and blessing has been given with the Word.

CLIFF COLLEGE SUMMER SCHOOL.—Evidences of much spiritual blessing have attended the initial gathering, organised by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness, in this Derbyshire college. The reunion proved refreshing to mind, to body, and to soul. The addresses of Rev. Chas. Inwood on the Spirit's power were especially helpful, and those who shared in the rich things provided hope that another year may afford them a similar treat. About forty-five "students" enjoyed the fellowship. Rev. David Baron has been rendering good service with Bible readings and lectures.

STUDENTS AND MISSIONS.*

I am speaking to students, and I want, in a brief historical survey, to show you in the life of students that wherever there has been a little company of young men, or one young man, I might say, whose supreme purpose and end it was to get the enduement of the Holy Ghost, a great missionary movement had been started. Let us go back to the beginning of Carey's century; go back to 1792. There was in a German University one professor, I do not say that he was alone; but he is the name that stands for the movement, a man who, in the midst of universal formalism, sought to cultivate the life of the Spirit; who waited much before God that he might know the fulness of the Holy Ghost. Because he did this he was much spoken against by his generation. He had the name of "pietist" attached to him; not in the beautiful and attractive meaning which that word has to us, but in a sense of the utmost contempt. Yet that man simply prayed and waited for the Holy Ghost, and he received the marvellous blessing, as he has described in his journal.

He never proposed to have anything to do with the work of foreign missions; it is said that the thought never entered his mind. He simply wanted to re-live the life of Jesus Christ, and have a practical experience of the enduement of the Spirit, that he might set up a second Pentecost in the midst of universal death and dissolution. But what happened? Three men came under his influence. The first was Bartholomew Ziegenbalg. He caught the fire, and was moved as a mere youth to go to India, and thus the first Protestant missionary to India was given to India through the prayers of this earnest man, Francke, of Halle. A little after this Schwartz went, one of the first of the company of India's noble missionaries. Then came the third, that lad who at four years of age made a covenant with Jesus Christ, "Lord Jesus, be mine, and I will be thine;" that lad who while a mere youth made his motto, "Lord Jesus, I have but one ambition, 'It is Thou, Thou';" and a little later renounced his estates and his reputation and his family, and said, "Henceforth that country shall be my home where I shall have the greatest opportunity of preaching Christ to the perishing."

Just pause a moment on the last one. Zinzendorf, of whom I have last been speaking, was led by God to inaugurate that great missionary Church, the Moravian Brotherhood. Think of that great work; how it has lived on through that century and into this century without any apparent cessation of force; not like a spent ball, but with ever-increasing force, because it had in it a living vital force that swept it on; a Church that stands unique, one out of every sixty of the members becoming a foreign missionary; with three times as many communicants on the foreign field as at home; and a Church that has shamed us by its giving. I made a careful calculation, and I believe that Church gives per head 8.50dols. annually for foreign missions, while the per head among us is less than fifty cents. I beg you to think over how it all started in that little circle of prayer, where a few men determined to bring Pentecost back and get a new enduement of the Holy Ghost. I have stood, as some of you possibly have, in the City of Geneva, and have seen that wonder of the two rivers that flow together, the Rhone and the Arve, and how they keep perfectly separate far out into the lake. I did not know, when I gazed on the scene, the philosophy of it; but now they tell us that the Rhone has such a high source, that it gains such tremendous momentum in its current, that it has not time to mingle with the surrounding waters, but sweeps on without blending with the tides which it passes through. This Church, it seems to me, is just like that. It came from that high source of two or three consecrated men filled with the Holy Ghost, and it has swept on through the centuries. I rejoice and praise God for such a splendid example as that noble missionary Church.

That is one source of the movement of missionary effort. Let me take you to another. About a year ago, in the month of February, I was in the old town of Northampton, Mass., the home of Jonathan Edwards. I stopped over a train in order that I might visit what to me is a most sacred grave. I sought out the old churchyard and brushed away the snow and read the simple inscription, "David Brainerd, Missionary to the American Indians." As I stood there I said to myself, "I do not hesitate to declare that now I am standing at the fountain head of nineteenth-century missions." Why did I say it? He was a young man that had such religious enthusiasm while in Yale College that he was expelled from the college. And you remember how Jonathan Edwards tried afterwards to get his degree and it was not granted him. If I were on the corporation of Yale College to-day the first thing I would do would be to give the degree of A.M. to David Brainerd, because David Brainerd is the most illustrious man Yale College has ever had. That young man went into the heart of our American forests. Have you read his journal? I have read it twenty times if once. If I ever want to get preparation for an earnest spiritual campaign, I do two things: I re-read many parts of the Bible, and I re-read David Brainerd's journal. How he prayed!

And what was the burden of his prayer? That he might be filled with the Holy Ghost, and that God would be pleased to spread abroad the Holy Ghost among all the nations. He did not pray by snatches, as some of us pray, but all day, and again and again, from sunrise to sunset. He never intended that any human eye should read the record of his prayers, but we have them. In one place we read, "To-day my agonising was such that, though it was cool in the forest, my clothes were wet through with the sweat of my intercession." That is a man praying, and that is a man receiving the mighty power of the Spirit. What comes of it? He died at thirty-one, a young man yet. And after he had died, see what happened. Jonathan Edwards stood at his deathbed, and thanked God that he had heard the words of such a man. And the very year that Edwards died he sent out that appeal for universal prayer throughout the Church of God for the effusion of the Spirit upon all flesh. He had been so moved by the prayers of Brainerd that he sounded the trumpet-call of modern nineteenth-century missions. The philosopher and saint, Edwards, himself became a missionary, and he sounded the call that rallied the Church of God to begin that work abroad. Then what else happened?

That "Journal of Brainerd" went across the sea; it determined William Carey to be a missionary. And thus we trace back to that young man that great missionary movement beginning in 1792, whose anniversary we have been celebrating. And you see the second trophy which this man won by his prayers. Henry Martyn read "The Journal of Brainerd" in Cambridge University. It made Henry Martyn a missionary, though Henry Martyn, you know, was cut off very early in his career. But his work lives on, and in Cambridge University to-day there is a Henry Martyn Memorial Hall. You can see the names of a long company of illustrious missionaries that have followed this young man since he went out to the heathen, and the list is being constantly swelled; and among them you will see splendid men who recently went forth to China, and whose going forth so stirred the hearts of the young men of our generation. And that comes again from David Brainerd praying in the dark and dismal forest. Then Murray McCheyne in Scotland read it. Murray McCheyne was a leader in the movement for evangelising the Jews, and that movement has so increased in power that we have fifty missionary societies for taking Christ to the Hebrews. All this you can trace back to the influence of one man, who was out-and-out for God, and was filled with the Holy Ghost as few have been in any generation.

Let me now trace another stream of influence. Just the very year that David Brainerd passed through this profound experience of the fulness of the Spirit, in 1738, the same year precisely, the Spirit fell upon John Wesley. I need not describe that marvellous life. John Newton fell into the current of the great movement. John Newton saw a young man in his congregation who attracted attention. That young man was Claudius Buchanan, who wrote a little tract that fell into the hands of Adoniram Judson, and moved him to give himself to the work of foreign missions. And through Adoniram Judson the great Baptist missionary movement came into existence.

Then let me take you up to that most sacred spot in William College, where those young men, Rice and Newell, prayed into being that which we now know as the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. And its magnificent work for the century can be traced back to that little spot where the few students prayed and waited on God.

I close this historical sketch with another scene. In that Connecticut valley, where lies the body of David Brainerd, some young men met in the year 1886. I had the grateful honour to be there. And what was the theme in those very memorable days? We all remember what it was. I, for one, am sure I did not think particularly about foreign missions, but the great theme was the enduement of the Holy Ghost. There was deep and earnest searching of the Word. There were solemn addresses. I remember how little groups of students went off into the woods, and came back telling how God had visited them. It was a wonderfully spiritual occasion. I do not think many of us had special thought as to what would come of it. But it was to prove another memorable epoch in the missionary history. Look about and see. This great student volunteer movement sprung from just another such scene and such an epoch in the history of the Church as those which I have been discussing. I believe, as Dr. Pierson has said, "We have not so much to be anxious about foreign missions; if we have the Holy Spirit, and if we are in the power of the Spirit, missions will come inevitably. Bring back Pentecost, and after Pentecost there will be a mighty movement for preaching the Gospel from Jerusalem even 'unto the uttermost part of the earth.' The two things go together; get the power, and then will come the movement."

* This deliverance is from an address by Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, at the Student Volunteer Conference, held in Detroit, in March last. The whole address is given in the report of that Convention, entitled "The Student Missionary Enterprise." See The Book World, p. 29.

DR. JOHN G. PATON.

This veteran missionary has now closed his active campaign on behalf of his beloved field of service in the New Hebrides. In the July issue of the deeply interesting Quarterly Jottings, sent out by Mr. A. K. Langridge, of Southend, particulars are given of the Doctor's closing meetings in different parts of the country. Week after week, sometimes at several meetings on the same day, Dr. Paton has addressed assemblages of his fellow Christians, thrilling them with his vivid and realistic descriptions of missionary life and triumphs in the South Seas. The account of the London meetings in May is specially delightful.

His ceaseless labours, extending over such a lengthened period, have produced much physical exhaustion, and the doctor is now having a compulsory season of rest in Scotland previous to his departure for the Antipodes. He purposes to sail for Australia in the Orient steamer Oruba on August 10. London friends will be glad to know that they can have one more opportunity of hearing the doctor's voice before his departure. A farewell meeting is arranged at Mildmay Conference for Thursday evening, August 9. Tickets of admission can be had from the hon. organising secretary of the J. G. Paton Mission fund, Mr. A. K. Langridge, "Anewa," Southend-on-Sea. We doubt not there will be a great muster of friends to wish God-speed to our aged brother as he again sets his face Southward.

It is gratifying to know that Dr. Paton's effort has met with large success. Best of all, he has secured the help of four young men who have given themselves to the work in the New Hebrides. Two of these will leave for the far south in September, and the other two will follow in due course. It is probable also that Dr. Paton's third son, Frank, who has now concluded his medical studies at Melbourne, may give himself to mission work in the same needy field as that to which his father has devoted his life. Under these favouring and happy circumstances, the venerable and veteran missionary returns to the scene of his life-work, whither he will be followed by hosts of prayers, and good wishes. He returns to his work in the hope not only that the extra sum needed to sustain the hoped-for vessel will be forthcoming year by year, but that he will be able also to maintain the extension of the mission which the means placed in his hands will admit of his organising at once.

We regret to report that his endeavours on behalf of the victims of the Kanaka traffic to Queensland have not been so fruitful as they deserved to be. There are strong vested interests at stake, and they do not give way in such cases without a severe struggle. We commend to the attention of our readers a pamphlet giving the latest phases of this question, which is on the eve of being published by Mr. Langridge.

NORTHFIELD CONVENTIONS.

THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CONFERENCE.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Congregationalist writes the following sketch of the first three Northfield gatherings of the year:—

"The Woman's Conference at Northfield has finished its second session, the meetings surpassing those of last year in numbers and interest. The delegates, 250 in number, came from every part of the country, from forty educational institutions, and from many city Y.W.C.A.'s. Vassar led the number with twenty-two delegates, part of whom were members of the glee club and guests of the Conference. Smith, Mount Holyoke, Wellesley, and Bryn Mawr had large delegations. The Conference was managed by the International Committee of the Y.W.C.A., and Miss Effie Price, its general secretary, was the central force and inspiration of the meetings. The other secretaries present were women of rich spiritual and practical experience, and their interesting accounts and discussions of the work inspired many of the college girls with thoughts of entering the same profession. Miss Price's two talks on The Secretaryship as a Profession and The Responsibility of College Women were as earnest and impressive as any of the words spoken. The speakers were men and women of varied character and attainments, but 'the same spirit' possessed all. Dr. McKenzie (of Cambridge), Dr. Faunce (of New York City), Professor Moore (of Hampden-Sidney, Va.), gave addresses of high intellectual thought and spiritual power.

"The emphasis laid on Bible study as absolutely necessary for Christian life and work was, perhaps, the most helpful part of the Conference. Professor Moore's class for inductive study was very suggestive, scholarly, and sensible. Miss Emma Silver's class for personal workers was largely attended. Miss Bertha Wright, of Ottawa, Can., gave a short study one morning on 'The Elements of Strength' (1 Chron. xii.), which illustrated in a remarkable way what God's Spirit can reveal in what is ordinarily considered a dry Old Testament chapter. Another speaker of power and great magnetism was Mrs. Wesley Fiske-Smith, of New York, who says some very plain truths, but one gains courage from her to take a more decided stand for Christ.

"The missionary spirit permeated the meetings, and some of the best speakers pleaded that cause—Bishop Thoburn and Dr. Root, from India, and Miss Ben Oliel, from Jerusalem, among them.

"It was true of all the speakers at this Conference that their spirit and personalities even more than their words were influential. Around the halls and corridors, before and after the meetings, they were always ready with interest and sympathy. The informal meetings and discussions, the little groups on piazzas, even the talk at meals, will perhaps count more in the end than the formal meetings. The spirit of good-fellowship and cordiality was remarkable, and friendships were formed on deep bases in those five days. The college prayer meetings, which were held the last night, where the girls told what the Conference had meant to them, showed plainly that not emotion, but strong, quiet purposes were the result—purposes to live more Christ-like lives themselves, and to find and develop the Christlike in other people. College spirit also ran high, and the realisation of all it meant to be a college woman was fully enjoyed. Of the part that the beautiful country, the quiet river, and the sunsets play in the fuller revelation of God which Northfield brings, much has been said in accounts of other conferences. It was fully appreciated at this one."

THE SUMMER SCHOOL.

Writing near the close of the sessions of the Students' Conference, the representative of The Springfield Union said: "Never before have so many students attended a conference at Northfield, the number having increased to over 450, while fully 100 colleges and schools are represented. There has not been such a variety of speakers at this conference as in the past, but with such speakers as Mr. Moody, Dr. McKenzie, Professor Moore, Dr. Pierson, Dr. Torrey, Dr. Tuttle, and many others, the students have fared well, and have had many useful truths expounded to them."

Following on the report given last week, we note that Dr. A. T. Pierson gave, on July 5, an address designed to convince doubters of the truth of the Scriptures. Basing his remarks on Rev. v. 1, he thus stated his thesis:—

"I suppose these seals indicate the sanction of Divine authority on the word of God. The sevenfold seal indicates seven-fold completeness. Now let me put the seven seals before you.

1. Prophecy or prediction. 2. History, including biography. 3. Miracle, or the endorsement of the word of God by the works of God, including originality. 4. Morality, religious, or ethical and spiritual teaching of the word of God. 5. Unity, or the oneness of the entire book, though composed of sixty-six books of forty-four authors. 6. General accuracy. 7. Practical power, effecting transformation.

"Prophecy puts the seal of Divine omniscience on the book. History, Divine omnipresence, the present God working in all history. Miracles, omnipotence. Morality, Divine righteousness. Unity, Divine eternity; it is evident that a book composed through fifteen hundred years, and yet presenting unity must belong to the eternal God, for no man's life reaches over a long enough period to secure such unity. Accuracy, Divine truthfulness. Power, Divine benevolence or goodness."

The first point, as to inspired prediction, was amplified, and a strong case shown for the acceptance of revealed truth on the ground of fulfilled prophecy.

A larger share than usual of the speaking was taken by Mr. Moody himself, who gave at various times his weighty addresses on the Bible and on the power of the Holy Spirit. His words were so winged with power that many of the students were deeply impressed and broken down; so much so that on the Sabbath, which came at mid-conference, a large delegation of these young men met the evangelist at a retired spot on the mountain side for prayer and personal converse. An address on the baptism of the Spirit was given at one of the sessions by Mr. R. A. Torrey, of Chicago.

Y.M.C.A. work came on for a good deal of attention, and the claims of the Association on college men were ably advocated by such speakers as Mr. R. C. Morse, Mr. L. D. Wishard, and others. On one occasion Mr. S. M. Sayford, of Detroit, spoke, saying that all should rejoice at the wonderful growth of the Association, and speaking especially of the needs of the South and West. He closed by making a strong appeal for money, and after he had spoken Mr. Moody seconded the appeal. Cards were passed around, and 2500 dols. was raised by subscription. This is the largest amount ever raised by subscription at a conference of students, and it means a great advance in the work for the future.

Foreign missions were by no means forgotten; such a thing would have been quite contrary to the traditions of this Summer School, from which the Student Volunteer Movement has received such a powerful impetus in the past.

BISHOP THOBURN ON INDIAN MISSIONS.

The voice of this renowned Indian missionary has been heard before with great effect at Northfield. This year he gave an address on missions, which carried with it much weight of interest. We quote some extracts from The Springfield Union report:—

"I have been asked to speak about my work in India. One young man asked me to-night how large my field was. I replied that it was just about as large as he might see proper to consider it. He asked how many inhabitants there were in that part of the country. Mr. Wishard, who was with me, said there were about 284,000,000, and the young man seemed perfectly satisfied with the extent of the work.

"If you take a map you will find a little town on the western side of the River Indus in what used to be called Beloochistan, a little military town. We have a mission station at that place. If you can get on the train there, you can travel four days and four nights until you come to my home in the city of Calcutta, and you will not change cars all the way. When you get to Calcutta after four days and four nights, you step on board a steamer and go down the eastern coast of the Bay of Bengal until you come within ninety miles of the equator, to Singapore, about 1900 miles down, and you have thus a base line more than 4000 miles in length, longer than from New York to San Francisco. You can strike out on the right or on the left about 4000 miles, just as you choose. There is the field. There is in India and Malasia, the Malay peninsula, and the islands inhabited by the Malay people 325,000,000 of people. There are 284,000,000 in India proper, and that makes the field, which is a good deal more than twice as much as the Roman empire was when Barnabas and Saul went out from Antioch and began the missionary work of all ages." You ask me how we spread out so widely. We went here and there and yonder and worked our way. What has been the result? We have work of a great many kinds. We have men preaching to-day in sixteen different languages, more languages than you have the Gospel preached in the whole United States. We have been winning converts in every one of the sixteen languages. In some of them we have a great many preachers, and in others very few. We have work among the Arabs and Uranians; we have two colleges, eleven high schools and many primary schools. Among these different languages there are none of them which represent less than a million people—most of them would represent at least something like four millions—and the principal language in India, the Hindoostani, is spoken by one hundred and three millions.

"We have the caste system in India. The Brahmin is the highest, and then as it now exists the ramifications are endless. You go down until you reach a certain line, beneath which there is no social respectability. There are between forty and fifty millions below that line in India. Our work began among those six or seven years ago, to gain a headway that attracted attention. The Baptist missions in the Telegu country of the south have been conducted very much among a people of the same class. The Baptist missions in Burmah have been extremely successful because they were among an aboriginal people differing from the Hindoos entirely.

"In 1890 I had to come to this country. At that time we received during the year about 4900 converts of all ages, counting the children. That was a wonderful event in North India; nothing like it had ever occurred before. But we were standing there utterly helpless in the face of these people turning to God in increasing numbers, when I came to this country to collect money for the work. A good many of you will remember the time Mr. Moody sprang a collection on you, and when the young men and their friends collected 3000 dols., and that night I wrote to them to put a hundred new men in the field, and the result was that the work received a stimulus it has never lost. People heard about this, and all over the United States they began to send special aid, and that continues to the present day. From that time the work went on with constantly increasing strides.

"Someone asked me to what extent our people support themselves. They are so poor that in their currency a copper which is the basis of their counting is equal to three-quarters of a cent, and that is divided into sixty-four equal parts, and when we have a collection there will gather in what is thrown in, and a great many of them will throw in one of these pieces, which is equal to one-sixty-fourth of three-quarters of a cent. You ask me if these people are doing much in the way of self-support. When one of those fellows throws in thirty-two of these small pieces of money, he is putting a great deal more than George Gould does when he gives 500 dols. Among them are many who never have two full meals a day. There are millions of people in China and India and other non-Christian countries who are not familiar with the luxury of having two full meals a day. The average working man of India would be perfectly happy on an income of 2 dols. a month. I could hire a thousand men, common day labourers, to work for me by the year at 25 dols. a year.

"Now among those people, we have begun to introduce what we call the religion of Jesus Christ. We have taken Christ to them. Christ has said, 'Lo, I am with you always, even unto the ends of the world,' so we carry Him with us. When we go among these very poor people, you ask what we are going to do for them? My reply is, I don't see the step. Let Jesus Christ become enthroned in the human breast, and that human being will begin to rise. How those villages are going to get out of their extreme poverty, I do not know: but I know that the Son of God was incarnate here, and He was a poorer man in this world than any Hindoo to-day; the poorest man that ever trod this earth was the Man who made it. Jesus said, 'The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head.' If He were on earth again in his poverty, He would live and rise, and when we put Christ in the bosom of those people they rise, and God will say how it is to be done."

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JULY 29.—EZEKIEL XXIX.

The Desolation of Egypt (1-12).—This is the last of Ezekiel's prophecies against the neighbouring kingdoms, and occupies the next four chapters. Hophrah was on the throne at this time. He began by recovering what had been lost by the victories of Nebuchadnezzar in the reign of Jehoiakim. This will account for the boasts in these earlier verses. He was in the height of his prosperity at the time, and nothing but prophetic insight could have predicted his fall. (3) Dragon, i.e., crocodile. (4) The crocodile was caught with a hook. As the fish that clung to the horny scales of the crocodile shared his fate when caught, so the adherents of Pharaoh would suffer. (6) Israel's dependence on Egypt had been as a man resting on a slender reed. (7) "Madest all their loins to be at a stand," indicating the shock of sudden failure. (8) This was fulfilled when Nebuchadnezzar invaded Egypt. (10) The northern and southern boundaries of Egypt. (11) Forty is probably a symbolic number for its time of chastisement.

Prospect of Relief (13-16).—Pathros was Upper Egypt. After the defeat of Hophrah, Amasis became king in dependence on Babylon. Egypt has never regained its supremacy; to the present day it is the basest of kingdoms.

A Later Prophecy (17-21).—This should stand at the end of the series, but is inserted here to secure unity of subject. The bald head and peeled shoulder indicate the excessive labour of the Chaldean soldiers during the siege of Tyre. Very little result accrued to Nebuchadnezzar when the city was taken. The prophet intimates that the spoils of Egypt would more than compensate him. (21) The downfall of Egypt would be simultaneous with the rise of Israel (see Psa. cxxxii. 17). When the prophecy was fulfilled, Ezekiel would be able to speak with unabashed confidence, winning the attention of the people.

MONDAY, JULY 30.—EZEKIEL XXX.

Fear and Desolation of Egypt (1-19).—In these graphic words the prophet describes the anguish of Egypt, when Nebuchadnezzar and his army passed through it. (3) The Lord is in the desolations that befall the countries of the world. (4) Her pain would be like that of child-birth. (5) Her armies were largely made up of mercenary troops and various races, who were in league or covenant with Egypt. The term may include the Jews who had migrated to Egypt (Jer. xvii.). (9) The Ethiopians far up the Nile were careless of danger because they thought themselves too far removed from the scene of action, but messengers would go up the cataracts in skiffs to announce the advent of the conqueror. (13) Noph is Memphis, the capital of middle Egypt, the stronghold of idols. "No more a prince," i.e. an independent king. (14) Pathros (Upper Egypt) was famous for its capital, Thebes, in antithesis to Zoan, a chief city in Lower Egypt, in the Delta. (15) Sin was a fortress on the frontier, in antithesis to Thebes or No on the opposite side. The meaning is that from one end to the other Egypt would be filled with fire and sword, confusion and anguish. (17) Aven is On, where stood the Temple of the Sun; the Beth-shemesh of Jer. xxxiii. 14. The granite stones of a great temple at Pi-beseth attest its ancient greatness.

Tehaphnehes was the summer residence of the Pharaohs. Egypt's power to impose yoke upon other nations would be broken.

The Beginning of the End (20-26).—This prophecy preceded the one we have just considered. The reverses which the Egyptians had suffered immediately before it was uttered, and perhaps in their unsuccessful attempt to relieve, were only the beginning of the destruction of their power by the Chaldeans. How remarkable the recurring phrase, "They shall know that I am the Lord"! Does it not show that the vast political changes of the world are under God's control, and are intended to make him known? In this light every morning's newspaper is invested with fresh interest.

TUESDAY, JULY 31.—EZEKIEL XXXI.

The Destruction of Assyria: a Warning to Egypt (1-18).—Two months after the last prophecy Ezekiel uttered the present. The world had just been shaken with the tidings of the overthrow of Nineveh. That mighty city had fallen before the assault of the Chaldeans. It was not likely that Egypt would escape. Nineveh is described as "the glorious cedar." (3) "The shadowing shroud" refers to the thickness of the shadow it cast. (4) These rivers were the Tigris and confluent streams, which made Nineveh the centre of commerce. (6) Many tributary nations are represented as birds sheltering in a tree. (8, 9) There was no kingdom to vie with Nineveh, and her greatness was due to God; He made it so. (11) The mighty one is the King of Babylon. (12) Nineveh is likened to a tree that has crashed to the earth, and lies with broken branches. (13) Those that had sought shelter freely insult fallen greatness. (14) The fall of Nineveh was a warning to all other nations. They are compared to the tree of the forest. (15) The very Tigris is represented as covered with mourning for grief for Nineveh's fall, and Lebanon joins in the lamentation. (16) Hell means chaos or oblivion. The smaller kingdoms would rejoice because the great oppressor had become as weak as they. (17) The close confederates of Nineveh would certainly share her fate. (18) Egypt was in many points comparable to Nineveh in glory and power, and there would be great similarity in its downfall. It was as though men would pass by and point the finger of derision upon Pharaoh and his host lying unburied. Thus will all the enemies of God and his people ultimately perish, while they shall shine forth as the sun. There is a judgment of nations, as well as of individuals, and the sentences are constantly being executed.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 1.—EZEKIEL XXXII.

The First Ode of Lamentation over Pharaoh (1-16).—The King of Egypt, representing the country, is compared to a lion or crocodile, snared by a net. This was uttered about a year after the fall of Jerusalem. (3) The image is borrowed from the snaring of the wild beast in hunting. (4) The image is of a huge sea-monster drawn from the water and devoured by birds and beasts. (6) The blood as it streamed from the gaping wounds would become an inundation reaching to the mountains. (7) Its fall would be like the extinguishing of a constellation that covers the earth with eclipse. (9) The news of the fall of Egypt, carried afar, would make the smaller kingdoms tremble for themselves. (13) At the same time they would be delivered from further fear of Egypt, which would never trouble them again. (14) These words should be rendered, "their waters shall subside, and their rivers will run smoothly and gently," indicating that there would be no longer the inundation of Egyptian invasion, which might be compared to the overflowing of the Nile laden with silt.

The Second Ode of Lamentation (17-32).—In this elegy Pharaoh is taken in vision to the mouth of a great pit, where the mighty nations, overcome by Nebuchadnezzar, are represented as laid in niches formed on either side. The vision is formed on the model of Isaiah xiii. 14. The prophet assures him that his fate will be similar. (20) This is addressed by God to her executioners. (21) A voice out of the deep is heard addressing the fallen monarch as he descends into Sheol, taunting him with his impotence. And now follows the enumeration of the kingdoms which shared in the common overthrow. (22) Assyria. (24) Persia. (25) Notice the alliteration and repetition, giving a dirge-like monotony. (26) Northern peoples from which Moscow and Tobolsk get their names. (29) Edom. (30) Sidon and Tyre. (31) The comfort consists that Pharaoh is not alone in his fate. (32) "His terror" (R.V.). As Egypt had caused terror, so now he would be laid in the depths of Sheol. Thus, on the shores of heaven the ransomed hosts shall see the foes of the Church of God as Israel those of Canaan whom Joshua defeated.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 2.—EZEKIEL XXXIII.

Ezekiel is made Watchman for his Countrymen (1-9).—It is solemn work when people choose any of us to act as their watchman. We must carefully observe any peril that threatens them, and at all costs we must warn them. Do we watch over one another sufficiently, and when we see some fellow Christian taking the first step in the path of disobedience, do we lovingly and humbly seek to stay him? How many might have been stayed from evil courses if we had been more faithful! Our responsibility ceases only when we have done our best to warn them.

Turn ye! Turn ye! (10-20).—It seemed to some who recalled Ezekiel's previous prophecies as though it were in vain to turn. Surely they must give way under punishments so awful. (11) To such, Ezekiel gives the assurance that God does not desire that they should perish. We must speak to men in tones of tender compassion, mingling our warning with incessant assurances that whatever penalty may have been incurred, sin may be forgiven and its penalty averted by a penitent trust in the Sin-bearer. (12) There must be a definite forsaking of sin if the transgressor would pass, through faith, into the kingdom of life. (20) Each man stands for himself, and bears his own burden.

The Prophet's Ministry to the Exiles (21-23).—Tidings came a year and a-half after the capture of the city (Jer. xxxix. 2; lii. 5, 6). (22) The capture of Jerusalem was, however, known to Ezekiel before they arrived. (24) The exiles argued that if Abraham, a lonely man, became the parent of a nation, much more would they, being many, repopulate their desolate country. (25) They forgot that he had faith, whilst they were unbelieving and disobedient. Their fate, therefore, could not fail to be to the last extreme disastrous. (30) The people appear to have criticised the prophet behind his back, whilst they professed to admire him to his face. They were hearers of the Word, but not doers. The secret cause of this hypocrisy was a covetousness by which they transferred their affections from God to material things. Oh that we may be doers of the work, and not simply hearers of the Word. Above all, let us guard against the idolatry of mammon.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 3.—EZEKIEL XXXIV.

The False Shepherds (1-10).—The shepherds are not priests or prophets, but rulers, who were set up by God to judge his people, but who used their power for selfish ends. But what is true of them has a bearing also on those who are called to the ministry of God's Word in our day. It becomes such to consider whether in any way they have neglected their duty. (6) We have not only to preach to those that gather, but to search and seek for them that have been scattered and are in danger of becoming a prey. (10) If we are unfaithful to our trust, we are deposed. God will find someone else to do his work.

The Scattered Flock (11-16).—This exquisite picture of a flock of sheep harried by wolves, and scattered in the mists and clouds that brood over the landscape, serves to bring out the figure of the Good Shepherd, as He tracks the wanderers into all the places whither they have gone, and brings them again into the fold. (14) The high mountain probably refers to Mount Sion, and indirectly to the high advantage of Israel's position as the chosen people. (15) God alone can cause us to lie down. "He maketh me lie down." Ask Him to do this for thee in thy restlessness and fever. (16) The Bible is full of hope for the lost, broken, and sick.

The True Shepherd (17-31).—(18) We must take care not to make religion distasteful to others. This is like fouling pure streams. (20) God sets Himself against oppression and avarice. If we trace their history we should find that in a few years they pass away. (23) David, the prince after God's own heart, is a true type of the Messiah, He is the Chief and Good Shepherd. (25, etc.) There are spiritual counterparts to these. Those who abide in Christ dwell safely in this wilderness world; and sleep in the woods, the lair of wild beasts. None can hurt them who are God-enclosed. Theirs are the showers. For them the goodness of the Land of Promise; for them deliverance from the oppressor. (29) This is Jesus, the Righteous Branch (Jer. xxiii. 5). (31) We are the sheep of God's pasture. He is responsible for us. The sheep do not keep the shepherd, but the shepherd the sheep. Be at rest, He will deliver thee from the paw of the lion and the bear.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 4.—EZEKIEL XXXV.

The Destruction of Edom (1-15).—Edom had always opposed Israel. In the reigns of Saul, David, and Solomon, Jehoshaphat and Amaziah, there was constant enmity and wars. Edom rejoiced over Israel's fall (Psa. cxxxvii. 7), but Isaiah and Obadiah clearly anticipated her fate; their prophecies are repeated here. (3) There is not much hope for the soul that has God for its antagonist. (6) There is a Nemesis in life; they that use the sword perish by the sword. (6) "Sith" is old English for "seeing that." (7) The highways by which men go to and fro should be disused. (9) Israel's desolation was temporary, Edom's perpetual. (10) Edom expected to possess the two nations and territories of Israel and Judah, but reckoned without remembering that God was there, and that his presence would bar the execution of their design. Often Satan plots against the children of God, and counts that they will be easily his prey, but his calculations will miscarry, seeing that he has forgotten the presence of the living God with his people. He that touches them touches the apple of his eye. (12) God overhears men's blasphemies, and their unkind speeches against his people, and He will avenge and vindicate his great and holy name in their destruction.

"A BIT O' READIN'" is always very acceptable to fishermen, who are by no means particular as to its date—old magazines (bound or unbound), books—especially those having a religious tone—and illustrated papers are sure of a welcome on the North Sea. Old linen for bandaging the ugly wounds so frequently received by the men in their toilsome work, is also in constant demand.—Francis H. Wood, Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen, 181, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

THE COUNTESS OF HUNTINGDON'S CONNEXION, which has become largely identified with the Congregationalists, has decided to petition the Court of Chancery to widen their fourteenth article, which deals with Baptism. Should that court permit the change, the revised article will read as follows:—"Baptism may be rightly administered to infants or believers by sprinkling, pouring or immersion." So that if a Baptist minister can sign this article, it will be open to him as well as to Pædo-baptist ministers to become pastors of churches in the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion. It has also been decided to petition the court in favour of the unification of the various trusts of the Connexion.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 5.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS.—Mark i. 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 11.

THERE is much that is suggestive in the opening verse of this lesson. Gospel, i.e. good tidings, as announced by the angel (Luke ii. 10). Jesus, the name given by the angel (Matt. i. 21) in view of his birth; therefore suggestive of his humanity. Christ, the anointed, presenting Jesus as the Messiah, to whose coming the people of God had looked. "Son of God," his Divinity. The Gospel is called his, because it is from Him, and He is Himself the very substance of it.

THE FORERUNNER (2-8).—For a full account of him it is needful to read the other Gospels. See him (1) as foretold by prophets. The first quotation is from Mal. iii. 1, the second from Isa. xl. 3. The New Testament is not a contradiction to the Old, but grows out of it, and fulfils it.

See him (2) in his character and work. Everything about him was remarkable. He was a Nazarite from his birth (Luke i. 15); his locks and beard were uncut; his dress recalled that of the old prophets, especially Elijah, whom he so greatly resembled. "Camel's hair" was not the elegant cloth made from the fine hair of the camel, but a coarse stuff from the camel's long shaggy hair. This garment was fastened by "a girdle of skin," untanned leather. "Honey" stored by wild bees in the holes of the rock, and "locusts," a creature like our grasshopper in shape, but about three inches in length, were his food. "The wilderness" where he preached lay to the west of the Dead Sea and the Jordan. He baptized in the river, at Bethabara (Jno. i. 28), one of the fords of the Jordan, about five miles north-east of Jericho.

His work was to prepare the way for the Messiah. "I remember, when in Cairo, seeing some finely-formed Nubian boys running before the carriages of the nobles and rich men. They held a long silver wand in their hands as they cleared the way in the crowded streets. John likens himself to such a runner."—Macduff. His preaching anticipated that of the Gospel. In view of the Messiah's coming he called to repentance, in order to remission of sins, and the baptism of the Holy Ghost (4, 7, 8). Such was the Gospel Jesus committed to his disciples (Luke xxiv. 47-49); and Peter includes every part of it in one verse (Acts. ii. 38). The baptism in Jordan was a significant sign of the inward cleansing, and was a public avowal of discipleship. To Jesus it had a deeper significance (Luke xii. 50), which still attaches to it (Rom. vi. 1-4).

His popularity was remarkable (5). The crowds who went to hear him included all classes and conditions of men; and yet he spared them not. His denunciations of sin were not vague and indefinite, but personal. For 400 years the voice of prophecy had been silent; the expectation of Messiah's coming was general; John's earnestness and fearlessness—these all combined to explain his influence over the people.

THE BAPTISM OF JESUS (9-11).—The accounts given in Matt. and Luke need to be read with this. From Matt. we learn that He took the long journey from Galilee in order to be baptized; and that He regarded his baptism as a part of the "all righteousness" He had come to fulfil. Luke tells us that at the time of his baptism Jesus was "about thirty years of age," and that He was baptized "praying." The ordinance was one of deep and solemn significance to Him.

Why should He be baptized? Personally He had no sins to confess, therefore no forgiveness to seek. He sought thus to honour an ordinance of Divine appointment, that we may learn not to slight anything God has ordained. He identified Himself with his people, and passed through the waters of baptism Himself before He called them to do the same. But there was a greater reason still. He was the representative of his people. In going down into the waters in which (symbolically) their sins had been confessed, He identified Himself with their sin; that by the death and resurrection which his baptism foreshadowed He might put them away. His baptism expressed his identification with us in our sin, as our baptism expresses our identification with him in his perfected atonement.

All four Gospels describe the three marvellous occurrences as He came out of the water (10). The opened heaven was a vision of the glory which would result from his suffering, and in which his people would have a share. The descent of the Spirit marked Him as the Messiah (John i. 33, 34), and was his anointing for the work of ministry (Isa. lxi. 1-3). The Father's voice was a public acknowledgment of his obedience, a declaration of special love for Him (John v. 17), and an announcement of his good pleasure not only in his Son, but in those who are made "the righteousness of God in Him" (Isa. xlii. 21). See the Trinity concerned in the work of our salvation: the Son obeys, the Spirit descends, the Father speaks.

"BARMY" WILLIE.

THE following short but touching chapter from the annals of the London poor is from the pen of one of the women workers in connection with the St. Giles' Christian Mission. The superintendent is Mr. Wheatley, Brooke-street, Holborn, E.C.

"Barmy" Willie is a little boy who attends one of the Sunday-schools connected with St. Giles' Christian Mission. To be "barmy" is to be weak in one's intellect, but Willie is anything but that. He has earned this unenviable distinction by repeating to those who care for none of these things the lessons he hears at the Sunday-school. About twelve months ago poor Willie received a shock. One of the boys in the neighbourhood came running up to him with the news that his mother had got the brokers in. Although only a child, the message came with such a shock to him that he was delirious for some days after. When he recovered he learned it was all too true; the home had been sold up to pay the arrears of rent, and the family had to remove to Drury-lane, where we first became acquainted with the family of "Barmy" Willie.

A few weeks ago he said to his mother, "I wish we lived near the river Jordan." "Why?" asked his mother. "Well, I hayen't got the leprosy, but perhaps if I were to go down in the river Jordan seven times I might get better." Poor child, he was greatly disturbed when his mother laughed at what she termed his quaint saying.

We are anxious to send Willie and his little sister away for a fortnight to one of our holiday homes. Neither of these two children has ever been in the country before, and Willie is very anxious to know something about it. He asked his mother what the country was like. "Would there be any big ships?" His mother pacified him by saying "it was like the park, only larger." Now he is for ever wanting to know when the lady is coming to take them away to the country. That is just what the lady herself is most anxious to know.

The mission covers a wide area, and the funds required for all parts of the work are very low. There are so many little pale faces one would like to send away, but we are afraid to promise. I wonder how many mothers will read this short account of "Barmy" Willie who are about to send their own little ones to see ships, both big and little, who can rejoice in seeing the bright, rosy cheeks and sturdy limbs of their own little ones. Who among these happy mothers will help, so that the writer, in visiting the slums of Drury-lane, may select some of the little shrunken forms she is constantly meeting with to send into the "country that is like the park, only larger"?

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

A FEW friends gathered at the Home of Industry at the monthly meeting for Christian workers, on Wednesday week. A profitable time was spent in listening to an address by Mr. J. G. VICKER, who gave a line of teaching from the first eight chapters of Paul's Epistle to the Romans, showing, first, the utter lost condition of man, and then the all-sufficient remedy provided. Seven links in this chain—First, condemnation; second, justification; third, salvation; fourth, liberation from the law; fifth, union with Christ; sixth, sanctification; seventh, sonship.

Mr. JAMES MACPHERSON MERRY spoke of the work on the other side of the Atlantic. Miss Macpherson, with the 68th band of children, sailed per ss. Mongolian, June 14, and arrived at the Canadian home in safety on June 26. Letters, dated June 28 and 30, spoke of the happy time the children were spending together at the Home, and more recent letters told of the children having been placed in good farmhouse homes, where it is hoped the blessing of the Lord will rest upon each one. The applications for the children received at the home far exceeded the number taken out; good openings are still waiting for those Miss Macpherson hopes to send in the future. With our ever-increasing population, Miss Macpherson is convinced more and more that emigration to the broad acres of Canada is the finest thing for the orphan, and often neglected, little ones of our own land, provided suitable children are sent physically and morally healthy, so as to give satisfaction, and favourably dispose the Canadians to the reception of our children.

The following is from a letter to Mrs. W. H. Merry, referring to a little girl of the 68th band. . . . . "We reached home safely. Edith is as happy as she can be, and is greatly pleased with her new home, and many pet animals. She says she has been wanting to have a big dog so long, and now has one of her own at last. Judging from our short acquaintance, I think she is a very intelligent and good-natured child." . . . . This child is one of four fatherless little ones, three of whom we have taken to Canada this year.

Miss Macpherson is visiting as many of the children as possible during her stay in Canada. It is expected she will return to England in September.

CONNEMARA ORPHANS' NURSERY.

THE Connemara Orphans' Nursery has been in existence for nearly forty-five years, during which time hundreds of destitute orphans have been housed, clothed, and fed. They have been trained in principles of truth, honesty, and loyalty, and, above all, every effort has been made by the prayerful sowing of the seed of the Word of God in their hearts to bring them up as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem. Many of them are filled and are still filling positions of respectability in different parts of the world.

There are two institutions, one for boys, the other for girls, in one of the most picturesque parts of the West of Ireland. The report of last year states that unless an increase is made to the annual income the committee will be compelled to reduce the number of inmates, thus narrowing down the benefits hitherto extended to the poor orphans of Connemara.

Communications may be addressed to Miss Butcher, Glenowen, Clifden, co. Galway.

SABBATH OBSERVANCE.—Holland now has its Lord's Day Society. Newspapers are not issued on Sunday in the kingdom. In Russia, the post-offices are only opened for two hours at mid-day on Sundays. The Government is pressing upon the public the great advantage of Sunday rest to miners, artisans, and tradesmen. Progress in a like direction is also reported from Greece, while in Norway warehouses and factories are closed on Sundays, and the traffic in intoxicating drinks forbidden from Saturday evening till Monday morning.

HOMES FOR ORPHANS, SWANLEY, KENT.—In view of the great need of funds, the committee have decided to extend their work in these Homes, which has hitherto been confined to fatherless boys, by accepting a limited number of motherless boys whose fathers are able to pay a moderate fee to cover their education and maintenance. The boys will live in separate houses, and the full educational and technical training for which these Homes are justly famed will be given, with clothing, medical attendance, etc. For terms, application should be made to the secretaries, 25, Holborn Viaduct, E.C.

CHRISTIAN UNION FOR SOCIAL SERVICE.

In consequence of the publication last autumn of Miss Sutter's remarkable book, "A Colony of Mercy" (Hodder & Stoughton, 6s.), describing the mastery of the problems of destitution and vagabondage in Germany, by Freiherr von Bodelschwingh, a "Christian Union for Social Service" was formed, representing all denominations, to recommend, and, if permitted, to direct the application of the great object-lesson to the needs of our social life.

The chief features of this successful redemptive work are (1) labour colonies for the destitute, on which the will to work can be tested, and the willing helped and trained; (2) relief stations providing necessaries in return for half a day's work for those seeking employment; and (3) workmen's inns, combining independence with extreme economy.

The sympathy, oversight, and instruction needed must be sought in the churches, to which we should appeal to send us men fit to become "brothers" and "house-fathers" as in Germany. At the same time various boards of guardians have intimated their readiness to co-operate financially in any such well-arranged movement.

Obviously the initial step is to secure suitable land for the first labour colony. After examining several properties without meeting with the conditions of a successful experiment, we are satisfied, under the advice of an experienced agriculturist, that we have found an estate uniting these conditions with favourable terms of purchase. It is situated in Essex, and consists of 250 acres of good land adjoining hard roads, supplied with good water, and having suitable accommodation for the first overseers and labourers. £5000 would enable us to secure the greater part of this property, to stock the farm, and to conduct the operations of the first year. Our professional adviser, Mr. William Bell, of Gillingham, Dorset, who will reply to any applicant for fuller information, is satisfied that the land, being in exceptionally good condition, will return a fair percentage upon the outlay. The council would therefore lay the facts before God's stewards, believing that there are among them, even in this time of commercial depression, those who are at once able and willing to provide the means, by gifts or loans, to commence this national Christian work, so urgently needed here and so successfully accomplished elsewhere. Failing donations which would enable us to secure the freehold, we should thankfully hear from any capitalist who would secure the property for himself, and would grant the council a lease for the purposes of their experiment.

SERMON-LANE MISSION.—It is forty-four years since the inauguration of the Ragged School, which has developed into the more manifold operations at Sermon-lane, Islington, N. The report for last year tells of much work, attended by anxieties as well as encouragements. In Mr. W. H. Dawe the committee have a helper full of zeal and remarkable adaptability for mission work. Sick visitation is an important feature of the mission. The amount distributed in relief is very small, but administered tenderly and lovingly it works an infinity of good, and very rarely is it discovered to be misapplied.

REV. CANON LORD FORESTER.

The roll-call has just summoned from the Church on earth to that in heaven one whose long life and ministry has been a blessing from its earliest years. Orlando Watkin Wild Forester was born in 1813, the fourth son of Lord Cecil Forester. He graduated at Cambridge, and in 1836 entered the ministry of the Church of England, in the spirit of one who desired to make known to others the truth which had enlightened his own soul.

His first curacy was at Dunton, in Buckinghamshire, where he laboured successfully for five years, and then was appointed to the rectory of Broseley, where he rebuilt the parish church, and left, not only the visible tokens of labours, but many who this day testify to the power of his ministry in its clear and Scriptural tone. Thence, in 1859, he became vicar of Doveridge, and, after eight years, was appointed to the rectory of Gedling, where for twenty years, with unwearied zeal, he did a most useful work, and had great scope for the exercise of his organising gifts. Two new churches were built, and the endowments provided by a policy of far-sighted liberality; an institution and reading-room were built at a cost of £2500, and new schools, both at Gedling and Carlton, were built; and he erected, at his own cost, a temperance hall at Carlton. In many other ways Lord Forester threw himself into movements which, though common enough now, were in advance of the time in which he served.

LORD FORESTER.

(From Portrait published by Messrs. Morris & Co., 392, Strand, London, W.C.)

He was a Prebend of Hereford for many years, before his appointment in 1874 as a Canon Residentiary of York, a preferment which gave him to the end of life (for he had gone to York for his usual residence when he was called to his rest) what he greatly valued, the opportunity of preaching the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ in the grand old Minster. In his seventy-third year, by the death of his brother, he was placed at the head of his family, and inherited the Willey estates; but it was not to ease and retirement, for he at once made Willey Park the centre of efforts for the extension of spiritual and evangelical religion throughout the whole neighbourhood, and the old hall was the place of meeting, where prayer and praise often rose to God at gatherings of the tenantry and neighbours, brought together for hospitality and to hear of God's doings in heathen lands. Lord Forester cherished the gift of preaching, and to the end would help the neighbouring clergy, and few things called out his warmth of heart more than pleading for the Church Missionary Society, the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Church Pastoral Aid Society, the London Jews' Society, and other organisations whose distinct aim was to win souls, had his generous sympathy. The churches and schools on the estate had his ready help, and almost the last act of his life was to sign the contract for the restoration of the ancient church of Barrow, the last of the churches on his property which had not been restored.

Of his personal character, it may be said that it had these distinguishing marks—humility, self-denial, and unceasing activity in doing good. No more touching evidence of his real greatness and the appreciation of his character could be given than was afforded by the crowds of tenantry, neighbours, and friends, many of whom came from a great distance, who followed to his last resting place in Willey churchyard the one who, as a clergyman, had been an example of devotion to the study and preaching of God's Word; as a nobleman, an example of true greatness; and as a friend and neighbour, an example of a humble man of God. But, we may ask, what would birth, education, or station have done for him, to make his life an influence for good, had it not been for the grace of God which called and sustained him in his long life?

Lord Forester's circle of acquaintances was very large. In early life he had intimate relations with the late Cardinal Manning, and solemnly and faithfully admonished him against entering the Papal communion. He was also on friendly terms with Mr. R. W. Sibthorp, who, it may be remembered, left the Church of England for the Romish system, then retraced his steps, and afterwards re-entered the Church of Rome, although not to remain there. As the story was told in last week's Record, Mr. Sibthorp, who came out of Rome a second time, was visited on his death-bed by Lord Forester, to whom he said: "I don't believe in churches, but in my Lord Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." He said too, smiling as he spoke, "I am no Papist." Lord Forester replied, "I don't imagine you are." He then said: "I am a Catholic—an Old Catholic." On Lord Forester making a remark about the Word of God, Mr. Sibthorp said, "I am always finding fresh treasures in God's Word."

These incidents exhibit Protestant and Evangelical sympathies in consistent operation. Such lords of the soil and dignitaries of the Church are a blessing in every way; and may God give us more of them! Lord Forester was twice married, first in 1840 to a daughter of Mr. Richard Norman, and again in 1875 to Emma Maria, daughter of Mr. W. Tollemache, who survives her husband, and who has done much to promote all his Christian efforts.

MILAN EXHIBITION.

The meetings here have been crowded by attentive audiences. Unfortunately our hall can only contain 200, but many listened standing in the street, and the workers stood outside and spoke to those who could not hear. Tracts were distributed to the passers-by as well as those in the room.

On account of the great heat we have been obliged to suspend the meetings for a few weeks, but the mission-room is open for the sale of Bibles and religious books, for personal dealing, for distribution of tracts, crowds passing the door going to and from the Exhibition, as we are just opposite one of the entrances. I believe there will be a great blessing upon the reading of the open Bible, a page of which is turned daily, as well as other open books and pamphlets. There are generally several people reading them, often priests. One of the ministers who preached in the hall owed his conversion to this means.

All denominations have joined in this work in such a kind Christian spirit. We have had printed the addresses of the different Protestant churches, that that those attending the mission may go to the church nearest to them. Will Christian friends pray that there may be a revival among the church members, and that sinners may be saved?

I am unfortunately unable to leave Italy to hold drawing-room meetings in England, but should be very glad if friends who would have given at meetings will send to The Christian their donations. I can also send collecting cards. Jane Cox.

THE SOLDIERS' FRIEND WORK SOCIETY, started last year by Col. Sandwith as a "helping hand" to the Army Scripture Readers' Society, has, by the blessing of God, grown to considerable dimensions. The object is to raise funds for an additional Army Scripture Reader. Communications may be addressed to Mrs. Pope, Westfield, Bonchurch, Isle of Wight.

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION.

SHORTLY after the arrival of Miss Taylor's party in Darjeeling, the Deputy Commissioner of the district called, and informed her that the Government could not permit the party to enter Tibet. Miss Taylor requested him to put his communication into writing, but this he declined to do. She then wrote to the Governor-General of India, to ask the meaning of the order, as there was nothing in the Sikkim-Tibet treaty, recently concluded, that appeared to warrant the Government in excluding one class of British subjects more than another, and drew the Governor-General's attention to the case with China, when, in 1842, the treaty ports were opened, and missionaries had the same liberty of residing in them as had any other British subject.

Before any reply was received to this, the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal (Sir Charles Elliott), whilst taking the chair at the annual meeting of the Union Church in Darjeeling—at which meeting Miss Taylor and her party were present—took occasion to refer pointedly to the subject, saying that the time had not yet come for undertaking missionary operations in Tibet, and that he was sorry for the disappointment that this must be to Miss Taylor and her party, but that they must accept the opinion of the Government in the matter.

Miss Taylor thereupon addressed a second letter to the Governor-General of India, asking whether she was to regard Sir Charles Elliott's speech as the answer of the Government to her first letter, and if so, why missionaries were to be denied the rights granted to British subjects in general, when it was a well-known fact that missionaries had ever been to the front in entering new countries with the Gospel, and by their peaceful operations had made the way for trade and civilisation to follow. At length, an answer was received from the secretary to the Governor-General, saying that the Government had issued no orders in the matter, and that Miss Taylor's letters would be passed on to the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal, as being a matter coming within his particular province.

From letters and paragraphs in some of the Calcutta papers, it would appear that the Government are afraid that any movement of missionaries towards Tibet will embarrass their political officer in certain negotiations with the Chinese authorities which are said to be still going on; and one of the papers in question, under a paragraph headed "Meddling Missionaries," says:—

> As it is not likely that missionary fanaticism will be influenced by considerations of this nature, it will be all the more necessary for the Government to take a firm stand and absolutely prevent any members of the so-called Tibetan Mission at Darjeeling from crossing the frontier.

It is possible that the publication of sentiments like these has encouraged the adverse action of the Bengal authorities, as they do not appear to be under any orders on the subject from the central Government.

However, the difficulties thus apparently thrown in the way of our pioneer party do not daunt them, as they (and we also) are fully convinced that, when they are themselves prepared, both with the language and otherwise, for making an advance into the country, God will assuredly open them a way, in spite of all the barriers that may oppose themselves to the progress of the Gospel. In some respects the opposition has been a blessing, as it has undoubtedly had its measure of influence towards drawing all our brethren closer together in the one aim of their lives.

It must not be thought that the Lieut.-Governor of Bengal is naturally averse to missionary enterprise. On the contrary, he is believed to have much sympathy with it, but, like other good men who occupy high political and official posts, he probably looks at matters from an exclusively official point of view.

The discussion of the subject, however, has now been transferred to this country by a lengthy communication to The Times of July 2, headed "Indian Affairs," where the same aspect of the matter is presented, and in the course of which not a few inaccuracies are to be found. One of these it may be as well to refer to and to correct. The writer, after drawing unwarrantable inferences and conclusions from the omission in the Sikkim-

TIBETAN PIONEER MISSION PARTY.

Tibet treaty of any mention of missionaries, proceeds to state that two ladies of the "Tibetan Pioneer Mission" had made an attempt to penetrate into Tibet, but had been brought back under custody by the border police. As many of your readers will know, our pioneer band is composed exclusively of men, except as regards Miss Taylor herself and Mrs. Mackenzie and child. The two ladies referred to belonged to the "Scandinavian Alliance Mission," U.S.A., which has been located in or near Darjeeling for some considerable time. As references to this matter and another similar case may have been observed by many in the daily press, it may be mentioned that the missionaries thus turned back did not, in either case, belong to our Mission, and that it was not the Tibetans that hindered their attempt, but Chinese and British authorities acting in concert. There is good reason for believing that the Tibetans themselves would have welcomed the new teachers.

Turning to more personal matters, we regret to have to mention that one of the party, Mr. Tom Craig, met with an accident to his knee, which, after having been carefully treated for some time, but without success, at the hospital at Darjeeling, has (by the advice of the doctor there) necessitated his return to England, and he will probably arrive about the first week in August. This, needless to say, is a great blow to our brother's hopes and expectations, and we beg for him a sympathetic interest in the prayers of our friends, in the hope that he may soon be restored and rendered effective again for service in the foreign field.

Another item of interest is that the Mission has received an addition to its number by the birth to Mrs. Mackenzie of a little boy. This little one and his baby sister (who was shown from the platform at the farewell Exeter Hall meeting) take their share in creating and sustaining that family interest which does so much towards happily cementing the whole party together.

Later news just to hand tells of an interesting missionary "at home" given by Sir Chas. and Lady Elliott, at which Miss Taylor and her band were present, and were very cordially received, and where Miss Taylor had the advantage of conversing with some of the Government officials present about Tibet and Tibetan feeling towards foreigners.

They also give accounts of interesting work amongst the soldiers of the garrison there, of their open-air meetings, and of medical work amongst Tibetans.

They further tell us that Noga, Miss Taylor's treacherous Chinese guide, who robbed and nearly murdered her during her perilous journey through Tibet, has recently appeared in Darjeeling, and called upon Miss Taylor, bringing with him some fine cloth and some beans as a peace-offering. His appearance has created much interest amongst our band, who believe that God has brought him there for some special purpose; and they hope and pray that this purpose may be his conversion, and subsequent service in the carrying of the Gospel into Tibet. Shall we not join them in this prayer and expectation?

Will all our friends further remember Miss Taylor and the whole party in frequent prayer, and keep believing for the breaking down of all barriers that oppose themselves to the opening of Tibet to the Gospel? We have, so far, much to thank God for, and wish to continue the recipients of his blessing.

William Sharp, Treasurer
(For Miss Annie R. Taylor).

The Keswick Convention.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Once more the circling months have brought us to Convention time in this charming valley, garrisoned by its towering mountain ramparts. For popularity Keswick continues to hold the field, and is likely to do so. Conventions multiply throughout the land year by year, but the number of those who make annual pilgrimage to this northern retreat shows little sign as yet of a falling-off. No spot is likely to be found within our sea-girt isle where so many favouring circumstances combine to attract those who would commune with God at once through his works in nature and his manifestations of power in grace. This year the summer beauties of hill and dale, of wood and water, are unusually satisfying to the sense of vision. Plentiful rains have clothed the landscape in a garb of living green, which in its varied but harmonious shades of colouring makes a fitting framework for the glassy depths of Derwentwater. To those who dwell in the dusty town, and pass their working hours in the busy haunts of men, no change could be more welcome than a temporary transportation to these sublime solitudes, which are yet so eloquent of the Divine goodness and love to mankind. As these lines are written on the Sabbath afternoon, the eye wanders over an ineffably lovely panorama of mountains—peak behind peak piercing the blue vault of heaven with a purple haze clinging to their sides, while the bright sunlight is bathing the earth in unstinted measure, unhindered save by a few white fleecy clouds that slowly sail across the upper ether.

Though the Conference proper does not begin till to-morrow (Monday) evening, the little town (which is getting bigger and bigger every year) has been astir during the past few days. The prophetic conference, noticed on another page, brought its contingent of interested visitors, and Saturday's trains from north and south largely swelled the population. A month or two ago it was whispered to us that the purveyors of lodgings were banding themselves together to raise considerably the price of rooms during Convention week. This will probably account for the fact that some apartments are still unlet, but the inrush of other visitors for the next two days will doubtless tax the accommodation of the town, as well as the places round about.

A second tent this year, conveniently pitched, will be utilised for overflow and other meetings, the Drill Hall being turned into a refreshment room. The two tents being in simultaneous regular use for the week, a large band of speakers will be needed. Of these there will be no lack; the programme gives the names of two dozen gentlemen save one, while the four ladies who have in past years exhorted their sisters will do a like service again. A few fresh names are found in the list of speakers, and almost all the familiar voices in the Keswick tent will this year help to swell the chorus of testimony and teaching. We miss the name, as we shall surely miss the gracious voice, of Principal Handley Moule. Mr. Grubb, it appears, will not be here to stir us with his moving recitals of answers to prayer, but the Keswick Mission will find an able and experienced advocate in the person of Rev. Barclay F. Buxton, from Japan. We learn with much regret that Rev. Hubert Brooke has met with a cycling accident, which will prevent his attendance.

SATURDAY'S PRAYER MEETING

was very largely attended; very few vacant seats were seen in the great tent by the hour of assembly, at half-past seven. The ever-welcome burly form of Mr. Robert Wilson was in the presidential chair, and his introductory words and prayers were grave and earnest as ever. Was it a happy key-note to the proceedings of the week, we wonder, which he struck in one of his terse remarks? Referring to the farewell saying of our Lord to his disciples that He sent them out into the world as sheep among wolves, Mr. Wilson observed that surely the sheep under these circumstances ought to be very kind to one another. Plenty of coldness and criticism and ostracism will greet them from the outside world; within the fold there ought to remain not a single root of bitterness one toward another. Very earnest, too, were the pleadings in prayer uttered by Rev. F. W. Ainley, Rev. J. J. Luce, and General Hatt Noble. The single address of the evening was given by Rev. W. S. Standen. It was a plea for the cherishing of a clear and constant hope of our Lord's second advent as a stimulus to holy living.

SUNDAY'S MEETINGS

were numerous, as the custom is, numbering seven, besides the church and chapel services. The early prayer meeting in the tent was well attended. It was mainly a time of prayer, freely offered from platform and pew. One of those in the audience who prayed was Mrs. Amanda Smith, whose fervid and direct manner of utterance made her petitions all the more impressive and uplifting. A short exhortation was given by Rev. J. Gelson Gregson.

The morning sermon in St. John's Church was preached to a crowded congregation by Rev. W. S. Standen. At the tent overflow Rev. J. J. Luce spoke very practically on some things that need to be righted. A full audience in the Congregational Church listened to weighty words from Rev. John Sloan, of Glasgow. The morning speaker at the Wesleyan Chapel was to have been Dr. White, of Winchester, but indisposition prevented. The youthful Professor Lloyd-Snape, of Aberystwith, had a somewhat meagre audience in the Primitive Methodist Chapel. With Methodist fervour of spirit, and not a little freshness and breadth of treatment, he expatiated on the power which Christ alone has to satisfy the thirstings and aspirations of the human spirit. Those who attended the Friends' meeting in the Lecture Hall, had an unexpected treat in listening to a characteristic testimony from Mrs. Amanda Smith, who told something of her experiences in bygone days, which she has related so graphically in the pages of her autobiography.

In the afternoon a young ladies' prayer meeting was held. Almost at the same hour there was an evangelistic meeting in the tent; which was followed by a children's service.

The preacher at the evangelistic service in the tent was Mr. W. R. Lane. From the words in Ezekiel xxxvii. 8, "But there was no breath in them," he gave a very direct and cutting message, both to saint and sinner. We may reproduce a few of the terse, pregnant sentences that were plentifully interspersed through the address: There is a great deal of so-called religion, about which you must say, there is no breath. There is a great difference between one who is just a Christian and one who is all alive. The fires of Smithfield used to separate between and distinguish the wheat from the chaff; but there is no such test now. We have got only as much religion as we have in our hearts. The face may mirror, but it may also mask, the heart. Men may carry heaven in their face, but hell in their heart. You may not be able to lay your hand upon the day of your second birth, but make no mistake about the fact. However magnificent the structure of a man's religious life may be, the crash will only be the more terrific if it is not on the sure foundation.

In the evening, at St. John's Church, Rev. E. W. Moore, of Wimbledon, was the preacher. The discourse was one that will dwell long in the memory of those who heard it. The text was John xvii. 17, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth." Our Lord Jesus Christ (said the preacher) did not share the difficulties of the higher criticism. He had no doubt as to the authenticity, the genuineness, and the absolute trustworthiness of the Word. "Thy Word is truth." "Thy Word"—not Moses' word, or David's word, or Isaiah's word. These men were writers; they were not authors; this Book has but one Author.

After some further introductory paragraphs as to the sacred circumstances in which the words of the text were spoken, the preacher proceeded: There are four petitions in this prayer of our Lord: Preservation—"Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou has given Me"; Sanctification—"Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth;" Union—"That they all may be one, as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee;" and Glorification—"I will that they whom Thou hast given Me may be with Me where I am, that they may behold My glory."

What is Sanctification? The word primarily means Separation. In this sense in the old dispensation the priests were separated to God's service. But now the world fraternises with the Church and the Church mingles with the world, so that it is impossible to distinguish the one from the other. The confusion and bewilderment that ensue are well nigh endless and hopeless.

While this is the fundamental and primary idea of sanctification, the secondary meaning naturally arises out of the first. As Archbishop Trench, in his "Synonyms" says:—"Since person or thing devoted to a holy use should necessarily itself be separated from defilement, this word in the original speedily acquires a moral significance." While the primary idea is separation, the secondary and subordinary thought is purification or renovation. There is also a third aspect which we may mention—that of transformation. For there is a purification which is immediate and a transformation which is gradual.

Why is this great character so necessary for the Church of God? It is necessary for our happiness. Happiness and holiness are the obverse and reverse sides of the medal. What God hath joined together let no man put asunder. There is no link between gloom and Godliness. The Man of Sorrows, acquainted with grief, was yet anointed with the oil of gladness above his fellows. Sorrowful? Yes; but always rejoicing. A fount of joy within, springing up like the geysers of New Zealand; independent of surroundings and circumstances. How sad to see Christians going to God for salvation and somewhere else for pleasure. What will they do when they enter heaven? If you are not happy as a Christian to-day, it is not because you are a Christian; it is because you are not enough of a Christian.

Sanctification is also necessary for our usefulness. Not until Isaiah, convicted by the vision of ineffable purity, had received the touch of the purging fire, did he hear and respond to the Divine utterance, "Whom shall we send, and who will go for us?" If the Church had but recognised the Divine order—saved, sanctified, sent—what a mighty missionary Church she would have been! Have you never in the path of service for Christ had your lips closed? An opportunity came, but you did not use it. You were not in the mood just then. Inconsistency in the life, sin allowed in the heart, closed your lips for testimony and service. We are going to a holy heaven; to be a companion of holy angels. We are going to the presence of a holy God, and to follow holy pursuits. Is there anything so reasonable as that the Church of Christ should be holy?

Mr. Moore went on to show that while the work of sanctification is in different passages ascribed to each Person of the blessed Trinity, there are different instrumentalities employed. Sometimes affliction is spoken of. Here the Word of God is said to be the instrument. And this, rightly understood, embraces all other instrumentalities. It enlightens, searches, cleanses, edifies, and conquers. Above all, the Word sanctifies because it has a Christ-revealing and Christ-communicating power. There is an indissoluble link between the Living Word and the Written Word. You remember the journey to Emmaus, when the two disciples walked and were sad. Jesus drew near. He took them from their sorrows to the Scriptures. Do you go to the Scriptures for your remedy when you are downcast? Then the Master led them from the Scriptures to Himself. Their eyes were opened; their hearts burned. Christ came in and gloom and darkness fled. Yes, the written Word revealed the Eternal Word. Do you use your Bible merely to get information from it, or as a medium of communication with Christ? The secret of sanctification is an indwelling Christ. Let the Word of God dwell in you, and Christ will dwell in you too. Ere you are aware, as you open wide the door of your heart, He will come in and settle down there, and you will understand what He meant when He said: "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy Word is truth."

THE GOSPEL MEETING

in the tent after the church services were over, was a most memorable season. Mr. Wilson, jun., presided over the large company, and the preacher was again Mr. W. R. Lane, though suffering from weakness of voice. His earnestness of spirit enabled him to surmount this obstacle, and the service was carried through without any vocal breakdown. He gave a most telling Gospel address from three texts—Gen. iii. 18, "Thorns and thistles shall the earth bring forth"; Matt. xxvii. 29, "When they had platted a crown of thorns they put it upon his head"; and Isa. lv. 13, "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the briar shall come up the myrtle tree." These three texts, he said, might stand for the old-fashioned Gospel doctrines of Ruin, Redemption, Regeneration. The first gives a picture of a sin-cursed earth, telling of man's ruin. The second shows to us a thorn-crowned Saviour—God's remedy for man's ruin. The third is a beautifully-poetic description of the change that comes over human life and character when renovated and regenerated by the Holy Spirit. The great part of the address was a powerful expansion of the first of the three texts, with briefer but yet sufficient application of the blessed truths embodied in the other two. Very deep and general impressions were evidently created in the congregation by the earnest words and touching illustrations of the evangelist. In the after-meeting quite a number responded to Mr. Lane's loving, brotherly invitation to confess soul concern, and many of those who stood up were afterwards conversed with personally by the workers present. It was a joyful and a fitting termination to the services of the pre-Convention Sunday.

GOSPEL WORK IN IRELAND.

By the prescriptive right of established custom the early prayer-meeting of Monday is now devoted to the needs of Ireland and to notes of the progress in the work of its evangelisation. This theme always attracts a large gathering at the early hour, and the present year was no exception. In the course of the opening devotions Mr. Wilson, the chairman, referred to a request that had been sent up to him for presentation in prayer, desiring the removal of some differences that had arisen between certain Christian workers in Ireland. The chairman said he knew nothing as to the persons implicated, so he was free to deplore the existence of such divisions and disagreements. Whoever they were they had better shut the doors of their mission halls or houses till they had become reconciled, for God could bestow no blessing on the labours of brethren at variance with one another. Very earnest and heartfelt were Mr. Wilson's petitions to God that a spirit of brotherly love and of mutual esteem might prevail among all God's children and servants throughout Ireland. Other friends also engaged in prayer for increased Gospel blessing throughout the distressful sister isle.

THE CORK OPEN-AIR SERVICES.

The first brother to speak was Mr. George Williams, of the Open-air Mission, who has been in the front of the recent movement for establishing out-door Gospel meetings in the city of Cork. Mr. Williams, judging from his demeanour and speech, is a man not to be easily daunted by opposition, and his account of the Cork Sunday meetings wore a much more rosy complexion than that which has been provided for the public by the daily newspapers during recent months. The regular and stated open-air preaching of the Gospel, he said, has now been established in Cork. It is intended soon to extend such work to Limerick, Galway, Athlone, and other large towns in Ireland. There has been a good fight in Cork, but every Sunday there are now two or three, and sometimes four, large open-air services held in the city. These are attended by from 1000 to 3000 persons, not more than 200 of whom are Protestants. The people listen with interest and attention to the preaching of the Gospel. There are, of course, disorderly persons in every large town, and unfortunately in Cork they are allowed an extraordinary amount of liberty by the police. Some meetings are carried on without the presence of any policemen, and even where they are present, if the people chose they could in five minutes stop the whole business. All through the eight months during which this effort has lasted no person has been hurt, not a pane of glass has been cracked, and no damage has been done; nobody has been boycotted, and in fact nothing serious has happened. It was said that blood and murder would result, but all these gloomy prognostications have come to nought. Mr. Williams said there were doubtless at Keswick young men of independent means who are thinking where they shall spend their holiday. To all such he gave a cordial invitation to visit Ireland for a month or two in the autumn, and help in the work in the open air in the south and west of Ireland. They had been greatly cheered by interesting cases of conversion in Cork, amongst men and women, Roman Catholics and Protestants. A vast amount of religious education had been also pushed along through this open-air work, so that multitudes have learned the Gospel hymns, and may be heard singing them in the streets. The people have, moreover, been trained in toleration, which is no small thing in Ireland. A prayer union has been established in connection with the work.

Mr. Giles, from Dublin, gave a highly encouraging account of the great progress witnessed in Christian effort in that city since the Keswick Convention set apart a morning of prayer for Ireland. Homes for destitute children have sprung up, and now at least 500 children are being cared for. A medical mission has been started at which many Roman Catholics attend three days in the week, and are present at a religious service before the doctor sees them. Within the past two years not less than a hundred Roman Catholics have come publicly forward renouncing the Romish faith, and declaring that they belong to Jesus Christ alone. Some very interesting cases were related by Mr. Giles of those who had experienced this change, though at the cost of no small persecution from the priests.

Mr. Mumford, whose lively recitals have awakened much interest at former conventions, again had a deeply gratifying story to tell of the growth of itinerating Gospel work in Irish fairs and markets. He described the modus operandi of himself and his companion, telling how the attention of the people was secured, how the Word of God was read out to the crowds attending the fairs, and how the Douay Testaments and Gospel portions are purchased in large numbers. The priests do all they can, of course, to hinder the work, but in spite of this it goes on and spreads. It would really seem from the reports of these brethren that a new era of liberty and of increasing knowledge of the way of life has dawned in old Ireland.

THE STUDENTS' CAMP

presents this year indications of a larger attendance than ever. There are considerable delegations from the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Edinburgh, and Glasgow. The Student Volunteer Conference comes off next week, following this year, instead of preceding, the larger Convention. The presence of the two American brethren, Messrs. Mott and Speer, will be a tower of strength in the line of able, helpful speech, and a profitable time is anticipated. Doubtless many of the young people of both sexes, who are attending the Convention in large numbers, will stay on for the Students' Conference, so as to catch a portion of the zeal for foreign service that will be generated.

Mr. W. G. Carr, an American brother who took part in the Prophetic Conference, gave on Sunday afternoon, in Victoria Hall, an exposition of "The Holy Place," which is favourably spoken of by those who heard it. On Monday afternoon, in the presence of a goodly company gathered on Friars' Crag, he gave a Bible reading on "Water," taking up passages throughout Scripture where water is mentioned, and unfolding his conceptions of their spiritual meaning, typical or otherwise. He gave utterance to many good and pregnant sayings, though the general effect was of a somewhat miscellaneous character.

MONDAY EVENING'S MEETING.

The afternoon and evening trains of Monday brought large accessions from north and south, and by the time of the opening meeting at 7.45 the large tent was crowded, and the second tent was requisitioned for the overflow. Mr. Robert Wilson was in his wonted place, and the platform well filled. After a song of praise, prayer was offered by Dr. Elder Cumming, largely mingled with deep confession. Prebendary Webb-Peploe also besought the Divine blessing on the Convention from commencement to close, and much resulting fruit in all the ends of the earth.

Rev. Evan Hopkins gave the first address, based on 1 Samuel vii. 3. His message was the need of reality. He gave three pivot words—

RETURN, PUT AWAY, PREPARE.

Our bodies have returned to Keswick, but we must return to the Lord with all our hearts, in contrition and humiliation, resting on the atoning blood. Let there be re-dedication to God's service. But God wants more than profession—all strange gods must be put away for ever. The separation must be thorough and complete. Then come heart preparation and direction, and heart establishment. What unveilings, self-revelations we need! Before fulness of joy there must be abasement in the dust, and honest dealing with sin. Beware of a critical spirit of controversy with brethren, and seek a restful attitude of soul and receptivity of mind. Guard vigilantly against temptations to distraction.

The second address was by Rev. C. A. Fox. "We are here," he said, "to emphasise some truths connected with the parable of the ten virgins. The bridal procession is rapidly, secretly being formed. The bride must take the oil with her. Calvary cannot be separated from Pentecost. Many in the churches and everywhere are crying out for this oil of the Spirit. We do not come here merely to pray, praise, and hear addresses, but to deal with God Himself. What we hear must become a living experience. Our garments must be white if we would meet the coming Lord with joy.

TRIMMING LAMPS

is dirty work, perhaps, but most necessary. Many are burning charred wicks, old truths which have become dead letters. We need fresh wick to make our lamp burn brightly. There are half-trimmed lamps, partial views of Christ and truth. Others are overtrimmed, self-centred, introspective Christians, not looking enough at Christ. God send a fresh anointing of the Spirit! We have to shine for Jesus on life's highway, as we go to meet the Master. A fresh vision of Him in his Majesty is needed. What will it not do for us?

Expounding Isaiah lxiv., the preacher said there must be combined confession. Even as believers the holiest men in Scripture were most ready to confess sinfulness. There must be also the holy daring of individual action to take hold on God, and an unreserved surrender, that Christ may do what He will with his own. "Lie still, and let Him mould thee," said Luther. Let reputation go, and join those who are wholesale for truth and for Jesus. Then will come rending of the heavens, and Jesus only will be seen. The fire of separation will be followed by the fire of fusion of all souls at the feet of Jesus. Then cometh the feast of the holy communion of meeting the Lord—it may be in some lonely place. A deep impression was created by Mr. Fox's solemn words.

General Noble presided in the second tent, with an audience of over seven hundred. After a brief exhortation from the Chairman, applying the lessons of Jonah's flight from the post of duty, Rev. J. J. Luce spoke on the blessedness of the Master's touch. As a preparation for this, we must be ready to confess failure, whether to man or to God, whatever be the cost. We must also get rid of which is but the energy of self. What do we want fresh blessing for? Are we willing to have it anywhere, through any channel? Let us not seek great things for ourselves. Be not afraid of the Divine hand; it will humble only to exalt us.

Rev. Chas. Inwood prayed that all might be saved from mere sentimental desire to have a good time. He then spoke powerfully and practically on the appearing of the adversary among the sons of God in the story of Job. The most active personality in the Convention next to God will be the devil. If we have come merely to enjoy a delightful religious picnic, or to get brushed up after the wear and tear of a year of work, or for any other purpose than to meet God, we have come with a wrong purpose. Many of us have failed through our self-inspired methods of doing God's work. We must mean business; do not play in the presence of God. If we are in earnest, so will be the devil, to hinder blessing. Christ did not die that we might live a trembling, halting life. Satan will present varied temptations to different souls. Some he will tempt to criticise and compare teaching with theological preconceptions; others will be tempted to self-satisfaction. But every past experience only means larger need and larger capacity for further attainment. Some will be tempted to rebel if God touches a weak spot, but we must not flinch or kick. To some the temptation will be to delay till the end of the Convention; others will be fain to adopt some compromise, or to keep back a part of the life from God's possession. Some will incline to yield to despair when the blinding light reveals failure; others will try to gain blessing by struggle. God is able to make us resist and overcome all these temptations. At the speaker's invitation, nearly the whole audience stood, indicating an earnest desire to be strengthened not to yield.

HOLLAND.—In a "letter from over the sea" to The N.Y. Evangelist, Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, describes his visit to the land of his paternal Dutch ancestors. He says that "Holland, like Germany, needs another reformation, and another uprising of Evangelical faith most sadly. The good leaven of Gospel orthodoxy is too small for the lump."

PROPHETIC MEETINGS, KESWICK.

As a fitting prelude to the meetings of this week, a series of gatherings was held at Keswick on Thursday and Friday to consider the teachings of the Word as to the coming of our Lord. For this the Convention Committee had granted the use of the smaller tent, employed last year for refreshments. Here some three or four hundred gathered on Wednesday evening for preliminary prayer, and as visitors arrived, the numbers rose to seven hundred next evening, and to over a thousand on Friday.

The teaching of the speakers was that Christ's second coming will be personal and pre-millennial, and throughout a literal interpretation of the prophetic Scriptures was insisted on. Coming out of a previous meeting of this series in Aberdeen, one old lady was overheard remarking to the other "Weel, they canna be far wrang, fur they stick to the auld buik." That explains the position.

The meetings were presided over by Mr. J. E. Mathieson, and were addressed by speakers from various religious bodies. Most impressive addresses were given by Dr. Neatby on the relation of the coming of the Lord to the Church, on sanctification, and upon the judgment-seat of Christ. In the second of these great power was felt. It was on the call to the Church to-day as to the Israelites of old to "sanctify yourselves, for to-morrow the Lord will do wonders among you." "We want weakness, my friends," said the speaker, "because our weakness is our Master's strength. We want to be as clay in his hands. But do we really and loyally desire this sanctification? Are we ready for anything He sends us? Do not let us pray that Christ may have the first place only. Christ as a guest with others is a very uncomfortable guest. He must occupy the whole."

The aspect of the question dealt with by Rev. John Sloan was the relation of the coming of the Lord to the nation, and that of Rev. John Wilkinson its relation to the Jews. In this Mr. Wilkinson was quite at home, making wondrously clear the front place all through of the chosen people, and the duties of the Church that owes so much to them to-day. His first theme was Israel Past and Present, in which he traced in an exhaustive and able way the hand of the Creator in his dealings with them, showing that in them we can still find the clue to very much that without them would be altogether unintelligible in our Bibles. With regard to their future restoration, in answer to a question sent up, Mr. Wilkinson pointed out that the prophecies of Ezekiel could not have exclusively referred to a return from their temporary exile, for the distribution of the promised land which that prophet foreshadowed was a different one from any that has yet been made. They therefore still remain to be accomplished; elsewhere it was foretold that Israel should be gathered from the four corners of the earth, into which they had never been driven till long after the old captivities were over, and it had been possible for centuries for all to have returned.

With regard to the judgment of Matt. xxv. he held that it would turn upon the Church's treatment of Israel. There were, he said, four judgments taught in the Bible—of sin at the cross; of rewards for the work of the Church of Christ, in which first quality then quantity would be considered; of living nations at the opening of the Millennium, and the final judgment of the great white throne.

In replying to a question as to the meaning of the prophecy in Gen. xlix. 10, rendered in our version that the sceptre should not depart from Judah till Shiloh came, he explained that the word translated "sceptre" really meant tribal adhesion, not necessarily kingship, and that Judah, which was to give birth to the Messiah, was called home to its original centre for this purpose, but was subsequently dispersed, when its "sceptre" did depart from it. Shiloh, he added, had always been recognised as the Messiah in Jewish pre-Christian literature, and without suppressing this it was impossible for the Jews to avoid the inevitable conclusion.

Among the other speakers were Pastor F. E. Marsh of Sunderland, who dealt with Israel's future and the Resurrection; and Mr. W. R. Lane, who eloquently called attention at the final meeting to the purifying hope. The remaining speaker, Mr. W. G. Carr, of Rochester, N.Y., was specially appreciated, for his refreshing unconventionality; his dry but pointed way of forcefully putting old truths in new lights was extremely happy. Seated on account of the infirmity of what he on that ground described as his "vile" body, he was at his best in answering queries, which fell to his lot at the question meeting, one of the most interesting of all. Dwelling on the value of Holy Scripture, he urged his readers to leave off reading theological books till they knew enough of their Bibles whereby to try them. "I never read a new book," he said, "but I ask God to read it with me. . . Study your Bibles, each part in the light of the rest. You cannot understand Leviticus excepting in the light of Hebrews, or Hebrews otherwise than through Leviticus."

Speaking of the philanthropic agencies of the present day, and all the efforts that are being made to stem the tide of iniquity, Mr. Carr called on Christians to cease trying to put out a fire which God, in his almighty wisdom, had permitted, and, instead, to pull men out of it. "Only make sure you're out of it yourself. If there is any doubt, you're in danger yet. Get out of it now; the Lord is waiting to save you at once. . . . Moreover, when you are saved, your place is not to stay at the foot of the cross, but to rise to the foot of the throne. Brother, when God has prepared high places for you, get there, and stay there."

In concluding the conference, Mr. Carr remarked on the wonderful unanimity which had prevailed during this and others of the series on such complex subjects, between speakers of different schools, without any previous concert as to what should be said. This alone he held to be a proof that the teachings they had held forth were God's truth, and nothing else.

"HID WITH CHRIST."

(Col. iii. 3.)

Hid with Christ, oh wondrous word!
Can it be I've rightly heard?
Can I be with God's own Son
Hid? Oh wondrous love, 'tis done!
"Hid with Christ in God."

This, indeed, is glorious rest!
Hid with Christ I'm fully blest;
Yet, e'en more, the Word doth say,
Your frail life is through each day
"Hid with Christ in God."

When our Lord upon the height
Was transformed with wondrous light,
Moses and Elijah came,
And with heart and face aflame
Looked on Christ their God.

While the favoured three did gaze,
Filled with wonder and amaze,
God's own glory shut them in:
Thus were they, the cloud within,
Hid with Christ in God.

Jesus, Lord, transform e'en me,
Let my life transfigured be,
Make thy light through me to shine,
Let my life be ever thine—
Hid with Thee in God.

THE SHIPWRECKED MARINERS' SOCIETY.

The fifty-fifth annual meeting of this Society took place on Friday at the Sailors' Home, Dock-street, E.; the chair was occupied by Admiral E. S. Adeane, C.M.G. Amongst the speakers were Admiral Sir Houston Stewart, G.C.B., Admiral Halliday Cave, C.B., Admiral Hamilton Beamish, C.B., Mr. F. D. Mocatta, Captain C. W. Dickinson, R.N., Captain David Mainland, and Mr. Costall May.

The annual report referred to the wreck statistics for 1893, and the disastrous results of the memorable great storm of November. The sufferers directly aided by the Society, in connection with the November storm alone, numbered 724 mariners and fishermen and 450 widows and orphans, or 1174 persons in all; while for the whole year the numbers reached a total of 10,514 persons, as compared with 9742 in 1892; making a grand total of 458,350 persons relieved since the Society was instituted in 1839. The income of the Society for the year was £22,451, and the expenditure £23,396. The report concluded by earnestly urging that the Society's national cause is that of humanity and of charity alike, and that its national claims are those of our mariners and fishermen themselves, their widows and their orphans.

THROUGH INDIAN VILLAGES.

MR. W. G. SCOTT, of the Baptist Mission, Palmoor, Janumpet, Deccan, describing a tour among the Telugus, says:—

"We set out the beginning of January, and did not return to our station until April 5. Besides myself and Mrs. Scott, our party included eight preachers and a Biblewoman. We had a most enjoyable time, preaching the glad news of salvation to multitudes of the perishing from day to day for over three months. We visited 230 different villages, and thousands of people heard and confessed that all we preached was true.

"In many places the people became so stirred up that the Brahmins were moved to jealousy, and did their utmost to hinder the crowds from listening.

"We remained twenty days at Gudwal, one of the largest towns we called at. A feast was being celebrated, and about 12,000 people were gathered. It was an excellent opportunity to preach the Gospel, and we tried to improve it. For six days, while the feast lasted, we were busy from morning till night, preaching and selling books. We kept a table filled with Scripture portions and tracts, which we exposed in a public place. Our little organ was a great help to gather the crowds together.

"One evening, while preaching to a large crowd at a corner where four roads met, a Brahman, who used to live in Madras, filled with indignation and prejudice, came rushing into the crowd, and began pushing the people in all directions from us, elbowing some and striking others with his cane. When he could not succeed much in scattering the crowd he began to preach himself, yelling with all his might just opposite us, saying to the people that all we said seemed very good outwardly, but we had some evil intention or plans at the bottom of it all, or why should we take such trouble to come and preach to them? As we had told the people before of the deceit and witchcraft of the Brahmans, in order that they by them might get their living, this opposition was well understood.

"The next day, after we had gathered a large crowd, and had begun preaching, this same Brahman, with several others to help him, came and troubled us again, calling together some dancing women, with their stringed instruments. We told them we had power to punish them severely for such conduct, and that we had a written paper from Government giving us authority to preach where we wished. We made a complaint to the king, telling him that as we had come to preach the Gospel of Peace we wished to be at peace with the people if possible, and not to put any trouble on them if they would cease to oppose us. The king, wishing to take the part of his subjects, said if we would forgive them this time we might punish them if they ever troubled us again. The next day we left the place.

"In many of the villages in which we preached during the remaining part of our tour, as soon as the people saw us coming, they would say, 'These are the people who had such combats with the Gudwal Brahmans. Come, let us see what they have to say.' Wherever we went the people thronged to hear us, both day and night. Sometimes we would play the organ, sing, and preach to them until past midnight, and they would listen with rapt attention, and at length declare that they would worship idols no more."

MISS WESTON is about to enlarge the Royal Sailors' Rest at Portsmouth by the addition of a new story, which will contain forty-two cabins and beds. 3,000 more sleepers have been accommodated at the Portsmouth Sailors' Rest this year than during any previous year, and hundreds of men have had to lie on the floors. Enlargements are contemplated at the Royal Sailors' Rest, Devonport, which is all too small for its present requirements.

THE LATE REV. J. C. HARRISON.

THIS venerable and beloved servant of Christ, whose illness we announced a week or two since, passed to his rest on Thursday at his residence, 12, Carlingford-road, Hampstead, at the ripe age of eighty-one. For the past few years he has been living in quiet retirement, but for well-nigh half a century previously his life had been singularly active and useful. Born in 1813, he was trained in the Lewisham School for the Sons of Congregational Ministers. He began business life in 1831 in the house of Messrs. I. and R. Morley. When so employed he broke a blood-vessel, and during the ensuing illness was led to resolve on giving himself to the work of the ministry. After a short pastorate at Tottenham he was called as the first pastor of Park Chapel, Camden Town, then newly formed. This was in 1846, and for about forty-five years he ministered in this chapel with marked blessing, building up a strong and useful church, and being used of God in the conversion of many. In 1870 he was chairman of the Congregational Union.

As we mentioned in a sketch of his career, given in these pages in 1888, one of his humble hearers said, when asked why she loved his ministry, "Sir, his face is a sermon." All who knew him will recognise the aptitude of the description. His personal spiritual influence was very marked. The power possessed by one in close communion with God made itself felt on all around.

THE LATE REV. J. C. HARRISON.

(From Photograph by Mr. W. Goodfellow, 179, Regent-street, London, W.)

While he was careful in the preparation of his sermons, he did not read in the pulpit, preferring an easy extemporaneous style, which often seemed like a personal narrative, as, wrapt in his message, he told out the love of the Lord Jesus Christ as Saviour and Friend, as well as Lord and Master. "No uncertain sound was heard in his proclamation of Christ crucified as the basis of atonement and regeneration; while the Holy Spirit was set forth as the inspirer of faith and the medium of all spiritual life and power. His ministry to the young was eminently successful." Indeed, he is said to have been one of the earliest to adopt the plan of speaking specially to the children on Sunday mornings, apart from the regular sermon to the adults.

The funeral took place on Monday afternoon at Abney Park Cemetery, preceded by a service at Park Chapel, where he so long ministered, and where he had many warm and loving friends. Both in the chapel and at the cemetery there were large and representative gatherings of those who knew and valued his long and faithful service.

BEARING TESTIMONY IN MEXICO.

I HAVE returned from a visit to two families in Jojutla, who were compelled to leave their home in the state of Guerero by the fierce persecution. Their brother and uncle were murdered, and many threats made by their own relatives, so that they abandoned their home. They "take joyfully the spoiling of their goods." I found them working for the salvation of souls in their new home.

My predecessor was from London. His father moved to this country when he was a small boy. He was most cruelly murdered in 1880. I came to Mexico in a private conveyance. There were no railroads at that time between the United States and Mexico. I had to pass through the country where the wild Indians were daily committing depredations. I met some of those who had been converted through the labours of John O. Westrup, who had just sealed his faith with his blood. They impressed me most deeply with their childlike trust and faith. I told them that I could not leave my work to come to them, but that I would get someone else to come. I prayed for "the other brother" to come, until the Lord called me, and I came.

Thomas M. Westrup, a brother of the martyr, is one of our best workers. He has composed and translated most of the Evangelical hymns used by the Christians in this country. My native helper in this city is the son of an English gentleman who lived for thirty years in Guanajuato. His name was Stephenson. The son was educated in Glasgow, and later in Germany and France. He speaks equally well four languages. The first Gospel work done in this country was by Elder James Hickey, an Englishman. He died in 1864, after having organised four churches in the State of Nuevo Leon. At first he had to smuggle his Bibles into the country. He was hunted like a wild animal, and for two years could not hold services twice in the same place consecutively.

Now we can preach in every part of the Republic. The Government is anti-Catholic; the convents have been closed, and the inmates banished as pernicious characters. It behoves us to work while there is an open door. I believe that this is the finest field for Christian work in the world.

I thank those who have so kindly sent me parcels of tracts for distribution. Others speak of sending larger quantities. They can be shipped to me viâ Vera Cruz, but in that event it will be necessary to pay duties. Large packages weighing four pounds or less can be sent by post. To-day I leave home to go some 1500 miles on an evangelistic tour, and have less than four hundred tracts to take, when I should have five or six thousand. I can use all the tracts, text cards, pictorial leaflets, and Gospels that the friends can send me. I am sure I shall not plead in vain. We will be grateful, and the Lord will reward those who help us to evangelise this land. We also crave the prayers and sympathies of all God's people.

THE U.M.F.C. TEMPERANCE LEAGUE reports fifty-five adult Temperance societies, with 2830 members 647 Bands of Hope with 71,766 members, and seventy-five joint societies with 6823 members; total 777 societies with 41,422 members.

THE SLAVE TRADE is finding a door of exit on the West Coast of Africa, and a brisk traffic has been discovered, carried on with the Islands of San Thome and Principe. The passage is made on Portuguese steamers. A large proportion of the exports are children, and their destined field of labour is the coffee plantations.

The Evangelist.

A BELIEVER AND HIS SOUL.

(From Hart's Hymns.)

Believer. Come, my soul, and let us try,
For a little season,
Every burden to lay by:
Come, and let us reason!
What is this that casts thee down?
Who are those that grieve thee?
Speak, and let the worst be known,
Speaking may relieve thee.

Soul. Oh! I sink beneath the load
Of my nature's evil;
Full of enmity to God,
Captived by the devil:
Restless as the troubled seas,
Feeble, faint, and fearful,
Plagued with every sore disease,
How can I be cheerful?

Bel. Think on what thy Saviour bore
In the gloomy garden,
Sweating blood at every pore
To procure thy pardon.
See Him stretched upon the wood,
Bleeding, grieving, crying;
Suffering all the wrath of God,
Groaning, gasping, dying!

Soul. This by faith I sometimes view,
And those views relieve me;
But my sins return anew—
These are they that grieve me.
Oh! I'm leprous, stinking, foul,
Quite throughout infected;
Have not I, if any soul,
Cause to be dejected?

Bel. Think how loud thy dying Lord
Cried out, "It is finished!"
Treasure up that sacred word,
Whole and undiminished.
Doubt not; He will carry on,
To its full perfection,
That good work He has begun—
Why, then, this dejection?

Soul. Faith, when void of works, is dead,
This the Scriptures witness;
And what works have I to plead
Who am all unfitness?
All my powers are depraved,
Blind, perverse, and filthy;
If from death I'm fully saved,
Why am I not healthy?

Bel. Pore not on thyself too long,
Lest it sink thee lower;
Look to Jesus, kind as strong,
Mercy joined with power.
Every work that thou must do
Will thy gracious Saviour
For thee work, and in thee, too,
Of his special favour.

Soul. Jesu's precious blood, once spilt,
I rely on solely,
To release and clear my guilt;
But I would be holy.

Bel. He that bought thee on the cross
Can control thy nature,
Fully purge away thy dross,
Make thee a new creature.

Soul. That He can I nothing doubt,
Be it but his pleasure.

Bel. Though it be not done throughout,
May it not in measure?

Soul. When that measure, far from great,
Still shall seem decreasing?

Bel. Faint not then; but pray, and wait,
Never, never ceasing.

Soul. What—when prayer meets no regard?
Bel. Still repeat it often.
Soul. But I feel myself so hard.
Bel. Jesus will thee soften.
Soul. But my enemies make head.
Bel. Let them closer drive thee.
Soul. But I'm cold, I'm dark, I'm dead.
Bel. Jesus will revive thee!

AMERICAN INDIANS.—The Faithful Witness states that there are 50,000 Indians in the United States who have no real missionaries, but simply educational agencies among them.

THE BRIDGE OF HOPE.

The annual exodus is beginning. All whose means will allow of such choice have already decided whither they will seek change and relaxation—in bonny Scotland, amid the mountains of Switzerland, the breezy moorlands of England, by the sweet lakes after Keswick, or perhaps a trip to the western continent in one of our great ocean steamers, seems to some the only way to avoid the letters and telegrams which have made life for these past months such a rush, and exhausted the nervous forces. I think in these months the East-end looks at its worst. If in winter there is extra suffering, at least those who help are not so scattered, and cold and hunger more often bring food and coal.

I find my people are hungry in summer too, and perhaps the longing, so often unsatisfied, to get away for a little time from the rows of houses and the hot dusty streets, is as great as it is with their richer neighbours. We hear a great deal about "self-denial weeks," and how much joyous life may be given out to other less happy lives than ours by the lopping off of one little luxury. I wish, before our friends go away, they would spare one short self-denial day to visit those who must be left behind, to inquire into their needs, and to see what help or what sympathy they can render.

To many the year has been an anxious one; to us a time of unusual strain. The miracle of the loaves and fishes is a fact of to-day, or the doors of the "Bridge of Hope" could not have kept open all these months.

I will state the matter simply. There are sixty-eight inmates in the Refuge and London Homes—nearly all very young girls in their teens—all being taught a useful trade by which to earn their living by-and-bye. We have 130 little girls in our Children's Cottage Homes, all cases of real rescue. We have room for twenty in our Night Shelter, and daily, and even hourly, there are fresh comers, who want, not only food and clothes, but to be set on their way to an honest life.

Where the means are to come from to pay next week's bills, I do not know. There are times when we dare not look around us; it is only safe to look up. Only a few days have passed since little Maggie (eight years old) was brought to us. Her mother died when she was a baby; her father was taken to a lunatic asylum some weeks ago; the elder sister was working at a factory, supporting entirely her young brothers and sisters, and she dared not sign the permission for her emigration, required by so many societies, lest her father should come out again and blame her.

One of our little Cottage Homes is for such cases as Maggie. None, except those with such an experience as ours, could yearn so lovingly to keep a pure girl pure, and we felt, if only to ease the heavy burden on those young shoulders of nineteen years, we must do our best for the little ones.

Here is an instance of how the influence spreads—a type of true mission work. Nellie, one cold winter's day, some time ago, came to the shelter door. The wind blew through her miserably thin skirts, and the poor feet were bare. She pleaded that she had been sleeping for many weeks in the free shelters, getting food as she could, and now her clothes were so ragged and she herself so dirty, hope had almost died within her.

She was the black sheep of her family, and had gone as barmaid into a public-house, and her father refused to have her home again. "Every door is shut against me," she said, but she found the door of mercy open, and grasped the truth, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out."

After a while a place of service was found for Nellie. She struggled on, paid for her clothes, and at length her friends became reconciled. Her married sister took her to her own home, and found work for her at 12s. a week. Nellie had the missionary spirit. First she got her sister to come with her to the mission hall, and at length to become a communicant; and then the sister's husband, who at first had only jeered and hindered them, was drawn into the happy circle, and goes with them on Sunday. Now Nellie's face beams with delight as she brings others to us to be helped, "as you helped me," she says.

When will the circle of influence end? And yet it has been a serious question lately, must this sort of work cease? for if we are to go on with the work of God here, it must be honestly done, and we must pay our way as we go along. Our beloved helpers have the will, and the experience, and the love—and if the doors are closed, I do not think it will be to them our Lord will say, "Ye did it not unto Me." Perhaps the responsibility lies farther back.

In the name of the wearied "Christ, who sat thus on the well," and did none of his work by proxy, but who in the midst of a greater life-work than our busiest workers could dare to compare their own, yet found time to talk with one poor woman, we ask our friends, before they leave for their needed holidays, to cast one more look back, to hold out again the helping hand—perhaps even to spend a few hours among East-end workers. They would find the time thus spent not altogether unhappy, and by no means unprofitable.

RAILWAYS AND THE SABBATH.

Dear Sir,—The following memorial has been signed by over one hundred prominent shareholders of the Midland Railway Company, and will be presented in August. If there should be any other shareholder of that railroad who would be willing to authorise the addition of his or her name, a communication to that effect will be gladly received by the secretary at the address below. Any shareholder who would consent to second a resolution in the half-yearly meeting at Derby in opposition to the Sunday traffic complained of should also write to

Your obedient servant,
Jas. Fox Wilson.

22, Western-road, St. Leonards-on-Sea.

Gentlemen,—The undersigned shareholders of the company, in view of the very large and increasing Sunday business traffic involved in the carriage of goods and minerals on the lines of the Midland system, urge that, in their opinion, this traffic is indefensible, and that the company's employés have, in common with all mankind, a natural right to the enjoyment of their weekly rest from toil. They therefore respectfully beg that steps may be taken without delay for its gradual diminution and extinction.

THE AMERICAN MISSION IN EGYPT is opening a station at Daron, a point forty miles south of Assouan, and of some importance since certain rich Moslem refugees from the Soudan came there to live. Only five or six Coptic families are found in the place.

LEEDS RAILWAY AND LETTER MISSIONS.—A meeting of these missions was held on Friday in the Railway Hall, New Wortley, Mr. S. Southall presiding. Information regarding the Christian work carried on amongst railway-men was given, and addresses were delivered by Mr. R. Nixon, secretary; Mr. William Vicary, railway missionary; and Mr. F. Lingard, Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway guard. The work of the Letter and Packet Mission, chiefly carried on by ladies, was described by Miss Dyson. A second meeting was held in the evening, presided over by Mr. John Hepper. Mr. Nixon, Mr. Vicary, and Mr. G. A. Balance (Great Northern Railway engine-driver) gave addresses.

ST. THOMAS'S, LAMBETH.—The new vicar of this parish, Rev. J. B. Barraclough, is getting around him a band of devoted workers. In the report for last year, just issued, he addresses his parishioners in words of tender solicitude. He says:—"You know my object in coming amongst you—God's glory in the salvation of man; you know my great desire for you, individually and collectively, that as consistent and zealous believers in Christ Jesus, you should always abound in the work of the Lord; and you know my earnest longing for the prayers of those of you who frequent the throne of grace, that I may be enabled zealously, faithfully, and lovingly to reprove the sinner, comfort the penitent, and teach and edify my brethren in Christ."

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

BY ONE OF THE MINISTERS.

The public inauguration of the new President was an impressive service. The Conference Chapel, capable of seating some 1400 persons, was filled, the visitors overflowing from the gallery into the body of the chapel. The ex-President in a few well-chosen words introduced his successor, and handed over to him as the insignia of his office certain seals and keys, and the pocket-Bible which John Wesley himself used in his field preaching.

Any formal address on an announced subject is impossible for the Wesleyan President, since he is called upon to enter upon his duties within a few hours of his election, but Rev. Walford Green addressed some weighty words to his brethren. An interesting reference was made to Thomas à Kempis's "Imitation of Christ," which the President remarked had been his constant companion during his ministry. He had that day sought a quiet interval in his room, and opening the book had come across a sentence that specially appealed to him: "If I am left to myself behold I am nothing, but if Thou shouldest suddenly look upon me, I presently become strong, and am filled with a new joy." He prayed for that strength and joy. The President rejoiced in the social developments of Methodist work, and considered that they had contributed something to the solution of pressing social problems. He went on to utter words of earnest warning as to the tone and character of present-day preaching. I know, said he, that in the present day there is a great cry for short sermons, bright, brief, interesting addresses. We are told that our preaching must be up to date, adapted to the times. All that is true. The currents of everyday life should flow through the pulpit, and the preacher on the Lord's day should touch the thoughts and feelings in the hearts of the people, and yet that must be done without our neglecting or overlooking in the slightest degree the great central truths of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Preaching the central truths of the Gospel made the Methodism of the past, and the Methodism of today can only live as we are faithful to the truth. Amid the approval of the Conference, Mr. Green declared that brief, bright, beautiful moral essays, addresses on scientific semi-political questions, will never meet the deep moral need of humanity, will never regenerate the soul.

The President then urged the need of increased effort to retain the cultured young people of Methodism. There was no need for anything like a panic on the subject, but he coveted with an intensity of desire that words could not express, the fresh, young, bright life represented by those who had passed through the higher schools, the colleges, and the universities, first for Christ, and then for Methodism. He urged his brethren to take the initiative in seeking to inspire their young people with enthusiastic devotion to Christ.

Referring to the Conference Prayer-meeting, which was immediately to follow, Mr. Green thought himself happy that his first duty was to conduct a meeting for prayer and intercession. "We Methodists believe in prayer," declared the President. The history of their Church emphatically testified to the power of prayer. Their fathers were men of mighty, continuous prayer. The power of persuasive and convincing speech must be gained by obtaining power with God. The President then mentioned the honoured names of successful soul-winners in the past. John Fletcher, William Bramwell, David Stoner, and many others, gained by wrestling faith and long-continued seasons of prayer their wondrous power in the exposition of the truth and in grappling with the consciences of their hearers. They grasped with mighty faith the horns of the altar, and so pleaded that a fulness of power was given that thrilled the hearts of all who heard them. The President prayed for an outpouring from on high.

The Conference Prayer-meeting followed. God came very near while the fathers and brethren led the great assembly in prayer. Rev. Charles Garrett's words touched every heart. After pleading earnestly for the brethren absent through bereavement and sickness, he prayed specially for the young men who were entering on their ministry, and then for the brethren in the front of the battle, pathetically adding for the fathers, "We are entering the dawn of an endless day." It was good to be there.

During the week many questions of great importance to the Connexion itself were discussed, but a report of them would not be of general interest. There were several cases of resignation, the most prominent minister thus withdrawing being Rev. T. Charke, who has stated his reasons in the public press. There was a large number of candidates for the ministry, and long consideration was given to the question of their acceptance or rejection. Committees examine each man personally, and present a report, but the final decision rests with the Conference itself. Some seventy candidates were accepted, two or three being married men.

A RE-UNION CONFERENCE.

On Friday a most interesting gathering took place in the grounds of the Princess Alice Orphanage at New Oscott, a few miles out of Birmingham. Dr. Bowman Stephenson's work amongst the waifs and strays of our great cities is well known. Its headquarters are the Children's Home in Bonner-lane, London, and there are branches at Edgeworth, near Bolton, Gravesend, Alverstoke, and in the Isle of Man. The Orphanage at New Oscott was founded by Mr. Solomon Jevons, of Birmingham, who gave £10,000, to which £10,000 was added from the Thanksgiving Fund. Ten years ago the main block of the buildings was opened, and the sanction of the Queen given to the naming of the Orphanage after the lamented and universally-loved Princess Alice. Dr. Stephenson adopts the plan of separate houses for twenty-five children each, so that home-life may be brought as near to the children as possible. When the scheme is complete there will be twelve cottages, six for boys and six for girls, with twenty-five children in each. There is also a school and workshop in which some twelve industries are taught. The fifth home is now in course of erection, and on Friday last the Bishop of Worcester unveiled the memorial stone of this building.

In the afternoon a large gathering filled to overflowing a marquee erected on the grounds. A special musical programme was gone through by the children, who charmed all listeners by their sweet singing. The platform was that of an Evangelical Alliance in miniature. The Mayor of Birmingham occupied the chair. The Church of England was represented by Dr. Perowne, the Bishop of the diocese, and Archdeacon Colley, of Leamington. Rev. Dr. Berry, of Wolverhampton, spoke for the Nonconformists. America had a representative in Bishop Andrews, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Ireland in Dr. McMullen; while home Methodism was represented by the president of the Conference (Rev. Walford Green), Dr. Stephenson, Rev. Charles Garrett, and a host of others.

Dr. Stephenson explained the work and position of the Institution. Their annual income from subscriptions and donations amounted to £16,000, but they were in a serious financial position. Dr. Berry, in a sympathetic address, reminded the audience how Christ once set a little child in the midst of his disciples and silenced their bickerings and strife. So that day the little children in their midst harmonised their differences, and brought them to a common ground of faith, and a common sphere of work. The Christlike care for the helpless and the oppressed, Dr. Berry declared to be the best modern apologetic for Christianity.

After the ceremony of unveiling the memorial stone, the Bishop of Worcester said he was quite aware that in responding to Dr. Stephenson's invitation he was laying himself open to a certain amount of not very friendly criticism. He had already been solemnly forewarned that he was laying himself open to the charge of disloyalty to his Church. "Well," added the Bishop significantly, "if there is no worse disloyalty, no worse treachery to the Church of England, I, for one, have no fear for the Church or for her sons." He should be very sorry to think that the Church of England was so narrow, so bigoted, so intolerant, so exclusive, that she should forbid any of her sons to show hearty sympathy with any work of charity and mercy. He then referred to those ugly words "schism" and "sectarianism." He always liked to think of St. Paul's definition of schism, "not holding the Head," and he also liked to remember St. Paul's words, "Peace be with all them that love the Lord Jesus Christ with sincerity." And he believed that to be the spirit of the Church of England when rightly understood and rightly interpreted. He did not believe that extraordinarily uncatholic idea of the Catholic Church that it was to be the narrowest and most exclusive body in the world. He rejoiced to think that the Church of England had given them in her canons the largest, most generous, and most true definition of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, that is, "the whole congregation of Christian people dispersed throughout the world." The Bishop then went on to speak with warm sympathy of Dr. Stephenson's work.

MEDICAL MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

A very interesting gathering took place at the Cannon-street Hotel on Thursday morning, when over one hundred guests sat down to a breakfast at the invitation of the Medical Prayer Union, and the leading missionary societies. The subject of medical missions had been brought before the Union by Dr. Herbert Lankester at the annual conference in June. A great desire was then expressed that there might be more co-operation between the medical schools of London and the various missionary societies, and that there might be made a more definite attempt to maintain interest among medical students of the metropolis in missionary work. With these objects in view it was proposed among other schemes to hold an annual missionary breakfast for medical practitioners and students.

Dr. Lees, of St. Mary's Hospital, the retiring president of the Medical Prayer Union, occupied the chair, and explained the origin of the breakfast, and intimated its objects. Two fifteen minutes addresses were then given, the first by Dr. E. F. Neve, of Kashmir, spoke on "Surgical Aspects of Medical Missionary Work." He showed forcibly the value of surgical work as the means of securing an entrance into the homes and hearts of even the highest in the land, and said that medical mission efforts were in themselves a demonstration of Christ and Christianity. The statistics of the Mission Hospital in Kashmir were most encouraging.

Dr. C. Wenyon, of Fatshan, China, followed with an address, "Thirteen Years' Experience in Southern China," in a rapid glance at which he gave some of the most interesting details of the start and continued work in the self-supporting Mission Hospital. At first he was termed a "foreign devil," now he is known as the "angelic healer from beyond the seas." All classes of society come under the influence of the medical missionary in a very marked manner.

ST. GILES' CHRISTIAN MISSION.

This excellent mission continues to maintain its valued work of helping those who have fallen into evil ways back to honesty and happiness. Its helpful efforts are not confined to the criminals themselves, but extends to the relatives of criminals—a class more to be pitied even than the actual wrongdoers. A quite recent case in which Mr. Wheatley's aid has been invoked is that of a man who is now undergoing a term of imprisonment for an offence against good morals. He wrote, from his place of confinement, to his daughter, expressing great contrition for the shame and disgrace he had brought on her, and asking her to seek the help of Mr. Wheatley in procuring some employment during his incarceration, so that the little home might not be broken up. This service Mr. Wheatley has been able to render, and now the penitent old transgressor will have the assurance that after his period of punishment is exhausted he will be afforded another chance to set a better example before those who are in a measure dependent on him. This is but one of the innumerable instances in which the St. Giles' Christian Mission is proving itself a very bright spot in the centre of London's crime and consequent misery.

The work in the other departments of the mission is well and perseveringly kept up. In our column for the Young will be found a little story that will be sure to interest all readers.

REV. A. BEN-OLIEL and Mrs. Ben-Oliel, after having spent last winter and spring in the United States, are now in London on their way to Jerusalem, where they hope to return, D.V., in October to their work. Mrs. Ben-Oliel will be glad to take out gifts of unbleached calico, prints and flannelette for the women to sew for their children while she teaches them the Gospel, and would be especially thankful for materials for warm garments for the poor mothers themselves, who frequently have only rags to cover them from the bleak winds of winter. Mrs. Ben-Oliel intends opening a day nursery and kindergarten, where the poor Jewesses may leave their little ones to be cared for. Parcels may be sent to her, care of Mr. Alfred Sesley, The Ferns, Onslow-road, Richmond Hill, Surrey.

Letters to the Editor.

"WITHOUT SIN."

Dear Sir,—The letter which appeared in your columns from our esteemed brethren in Madras I now endeavour to answer. Their testimony, "that within the limits of consciousness we may be so fully saved as to be free from sin," and "that Jesus is a perfect Saviour, and that in proportion as we abide in Him in full trust and unreserved surrender He does save us all the time, which is a very different thing from saying that we have attained to sinless perfection," is a statement to which I offer no serious objection. The ability of our beloved Lord "to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by Him" is indeed a sheet anchor to the whole Church of God. This we joyfully recognise, and heartily believe.

The difficulty is not with the Lord, but it is with the natural sinfulness of the believer—that which the Holy Spirit led Paul to describe as "sin that dwelleth in me" (Rom. vii. 17). This is not a question of liability to evil action only, but of evil condition arising from, and a consequence of, the sinful nature which we have inherited, and which is common to all men. Our faith in Christ does not deliver us from that condition so far as experience is concerned, or so long as we dwell in the body.

From this humiliating condition the coming of the Lord, in order to "the manifestation of the sons of God," and the change of the "body of humiliation into the likeness of the body of his glory," alone can deliver. Then, but not before, shall we know freedom from the presence of sin. Until that day arrives, righteousness and true holiness are prospective possessions. Hence it is written, "For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness through faith" (Gal. v. 5). Meanwhile, our "life of faith upon the Son of God," which must be distinguished from, and not confounded with, our personal experience, truthfully guides and instructs us.

What is the testimony of the Word of God to the believer? Does that Word anywhere teach that the believer is personally righteous, or that in his experience he is free from sin? If so, where? Evidently, it is of the whole company of redeemed and accepted believers that it is written, "If we say that we have no sin we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 8, 9). Unrighteousness comprehends unlikeness to God, the coming short of righteousness and true holiness. In the light of these searching words, who can affirm, "I am free from sin so far as either personal experience or present condition is concerned"?

Further, what is the teaching of the Word of God concerning the life of faith? Here is the testimony "Ye have died, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with Him in glory." (Col. iii. 3, 4.) Now mark the solemn and startling words which follow. "Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth." (See verses 5 and 6.) Why is this exhortation given to the children of God? The reason is obvious. The "old man, corrupt according to the deceitful lusts," though judged, condemned, and altogether "put off," so far as Christ our life is concerned, is not altogether "put off" so far as the believer's experience is concerned. The command to every child of God is to "put off the old man." The failure to do this completely is the believer's sin, and, let me add, his great sorrow.

Inherently sinful and incapable of righteousness, the motions, activities, and passions of the "old man," though broken in power, have place in the believer. Liability to the sinful energies of "the carnal mind" and the corrupted body, is the Divine reason for watchfulness, prayer, and the mortification of the lusts both of the mind and of the flesh. The exercise of faith in Christ does not mean that we are at liberty to deny the humbling fact of present personal sinfulness. From this humiliating condition, God, in the exercise of his infinite grace, has delivered us. The method of that deliverance is thus stated: "God hath made Him (Christ) to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him" (2 Cor. v. 21). From the state and condition which Christ Himself describes as "being evil" (Luke xi. 13) there could be no cleansing. Deliverance is what is absolutely necessary. Where sin is, purity and cleanness cannot abide.

Here is the reason for the unutterable joy of the believer. We know that "our old man has been crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed, that henceforth we should not serve sin" (Rom. vi. 6). Sins may be, and are, forgiven. Sin, the evil virus which produces the awful variety of sins, must be "put away." In that wonderful submission on the part of our blessed Lord, when He was made sin for us, sin was judged and condemned in the flesh (Rom. viii. 3). Precious, and beyond language to describe, is the result indicated by the words that "once in the end of the world He appeared to PUT AWAY SIN by the sacrifice of Himself" (Heb. ix. 26).

What cause for intelligent gratitude is found in the testimony: "In that He died He died unto sin once. In that He liveth He liveth unto God," and what ground for confidence in the words which follow: "Likewise reckon ye also yourselves to be dead indeed unto sin, but alive unto God through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. vi. 10, 11). Thus does faith reckon; but faith in Christ is not the believer's experience, however exalted, neither his attainments, however advanced. Are we not in danger of confounding faith with experience?

Our beloved brethren, e.g., refer to what they express as "the realm of consciousness." Probably Paul's words, "I know nothing against myself," led to the use of this phrase. These words, however, do not countenance their thought, for he immediately repudiates consciousness as a court of appeal. He adds, "Yet am I not hereby justified, but he that judgeth (examineth) me is the Lord" (1 Cor. iv. 34). The realm of consciousness can only be found in the experience of the believer. This surely is not the abode of adequate knowledge, neither of undimmed light. The phrase is perplexing.

It is as though we had left the majestic courts of Divine definition as to what sin is, and were asked to accept interpretations fashioned in the looms of personal Christian experience. To speak of freedom from sin within "the limits of consciousness" is not desirable. The Word of God gives no countenance to the expression. I know of no ground for the supposition that any believer is personally righteous, or that in his walk and experience he is free from sin.

It is because of the believer's sinfulness and personal destitution of righteousness that "Christ is made of God unto us wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption: that according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord" (1 Cor. i. 30, 31).

In order that the position taken may be clearly understood, I suggest the application of the following test—it is one of many that might be used:—The great command stands thus: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy mind, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbour as thyself" (Mark xii. 30, 31). This command is as Paul expresses it, "holy, just, and good." My earnest and loving contention is that in the experience of every believer, he has repeatedly come short of the fulfilment of God's just and reasonable demands. Obedience to this holy law requires that every motive, volition, thought, desire, and action of our whole being should be in perfect agreement with the perfect will of the living God. In the light of this divine requirement, surely all believers have sinned and come short of the glory of God.

I am not now speaking of the sinner but of the believer. Neither am I dealing with the law in its power to condemn the sinner, but with the inability of the law in regard to the production of righteousness in the believer. The law is "weak through the flesh," which is in the regenerate, i.e., it is powerless to produce righteousness in the daily experience of the children of God. The law discovers the believer's sin also.

The Lord Jesus only in the competency of his sinless nature kept that law. He alone magnified and fulfilled its "exceeding broad" requirements. The nature of the believer, which is sinful, must not be confounded with the holy nature of Christ, nor the possibilities and attainments toward which we press, with the holiness and righteousness which are inherent in Christ Jesus, and which are ours by virtue of our personal union with Him.

I remember some years since reminding an estimable brother in Christ that, despite his teaching as to "taking sin out root and branch," he himself had never fulfilled the requirements of the great command for twelve consecutive hours in his life. With greater earnestness than wisdom he replied, "Then why was the command given if we are unable to fulfil it?" "To show us," I replied, "not only that we have fallen and cannot be justified before God by the law as sinners, but to reveal to us as believers also our sinfulness and destitution of personal righteousness."

In conclusion, may I not venture to ask our beloved brethren whether they go far enough in their testimony? Looking for freedom from sin in a sphere where it is not, and where it cannot be found, are we not in danger of unwittingly closing our eyes to the fact that freedom from sin is ours only by virtue of our position with Christ Jesus in resurrection? Here we are in Him that is true, pure, wise, sinless, and absolutely holy. Let us not forget that he that abideth in Him sinneth not, that "whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin! for his seed remaineth in him! He cannot sin, because he is born of God" (1 John iii. 9).

Here, as the very words "born of God" imply, we are on resurrection ground. Let us not vacate our high position and back down to the mistaken vocation of attempting to regard as free from sin a state and condition which God has solemnly judged, and in Christ delivered us from. With deeper emphasis than ever let the words be sounded out, "Abide in Me and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye except ye abide in Me" (John xv. 4). The "life of faith upon the Son of God" in resurrection, will produce more fruit unto God in one month than seven years' pursuit after freedom from sin within the lines of "the limits of consciousness." Such is my deep conviction.

How timely for these last days also are the words which the Holy Ghost gave to the believers at Colosse! Warning them against being turned aside, moved away, or spoiled through philosophy or vain deceit, from the high position of their union with Christ in resurrection, the Apostle writes, "And not holding the Head, from which all the body, by joints and bands having nourishment ministered, and knit together, increaseth with the increase of God." Hallowed warning, blessed testimony. Oh, for this resurrection nourishment! this increase of God!!

"LIFE AMONG FACTORY GIRLS."

Sir,—I am very glad to find someone has taken up, in your esteemed paper, the subject of life among factory girls. About eighteen years ago I was a forewoman in a wholesale manufactory for skirts and costumes, and there, although one of the most respectable of its class, the club and lottery system was in full sway; it has been growing ever since, until there are few girls now untainted with the vice of gambling in one form or other. Then there is the drink question. How many take intoxicating drinks as a stimulant to help them on! How little is really known of how these girls are fed! Some years ago the question was asked in one of our papers, "Where do women eat?" that is, the large majority of working women. I then tried to show where and what they eat. Where? Often sitting on the floor of the workroom with some penny dreadful in their hand, the contents of which they devour with more evident relish than the stale food which forms their repast. What they eat? Well, it would be hard at times to say; but certainly very rarely any nourishing food. So they take stimulants to keep up the "go" that is needed for their work. And these are the future mothers of our race!

Another of the evils of the workroom is the married woman who, while she neglects home and its duties, corrupts and demoralises the younger girls around her. I could say much on this subject, and of the baneful influence of some married workwomen over the girls. If I could, I would for ever banish married women who have no real need to work from all our workrooms and factories. There are, and always will be, some poor married women who must work, either to support themselves or sick and unemployed husbands, or to help an aged mother or father. For these one must have the keenest sympathy, and help them so far as we can; but for the women who take all the pleasure which married life affords, but none of its responsibilities, I have not a grain of respect or sympathy. Hundreds of girls who cannot get work to-day would, if these married women were where they should be, that is, at home, have the work for which they now seek in vain.

In face of temptations such as have been pointed out by your contributor, Miss Clementina Black recently wrote in the Nineteenth Century, in a plea for outdoor servants: "If I were a mother of girls, and had to choose between the factory and domestic service, I would unhesitatingly choose the factory for them." How little Miss Black must know of their life and temptations!—I am, Sir, yours faithfully,

L. Lewis.

[But Miss Black was doubtless thinking of the temptations to which, in many households, domestic servants are exposed. And there is this difference; that if a servant loses her character she is unable to get another place; while it is otherwise with a factory girl.—Ed.]

THE HOME TEACHING SOCIETY FOR THE BLIND has completed the thirty-eighth year of its work. It reports continued progress in teaching the blind poor throughout the country to read the Scriptures and other suitable books in Moon's embossed type. The Society's teachers find out every blind person in their various circuits, and the total number visited by them during the last year amounted to 2264, most of whom are too old for admission to any institution for the blind. During the year 57,107 loans of books were made. In many cases the teachers have cheered and taught the blind, and by these means helped to ameliorate their sad condition. The secretary of the Society is Mr. Ralph Tait, 31, New Bridge-street, Blackfriars, E.C.

A DEFINITION OF FAITH.

AN intensely interesting incident was related lately by Dr. J. G. Paton of the discovery of a term in the language of Aniwa for "Faith."

It seems that for a long time no equivalent could be found, and the work of Bible translation was paralysed for the want of so fundamental and oft-recurring a term. The natives apparently regarded the verb "to hear" as equivalent to belief. For instance, suppose a native were asked whether he heard a certain statement. Should he credit the statement he would reply, "Yes, I heard it," but should he disbelieve it he would answer, "No, I did not hear it," meaning not that his ears had failed to catch the words, but that he did not regard them as true. This definition of faith was obviously insufficient—many passages, such as "faith cometh by hearing," would be impossible of translation through so meagre a channel; and prayer was made continually that God would supply the missing link. No effort had been spared in interrogating the most intelligent native pundits, but all in vain; none caught the hidden meaning of the word sought by the missionary.

One day Dr. Paton was sitting in his room anxiously pondering. He sat on an ordinary chair, his feet resting on the floor; just then an intelligent native entered the room and the thought flashed to the missionary to ask the all-absorbing question yet once again in a new light. Was he not resting on that chair? Would that attitude lend itself to the discovery? "Taea," said Dr. Paton, "what am I doing now?" "Koikae ana, Misi," "You're sitting down, Misi," the native replied. Then the missionary drew up his feet and placed them upon the bar of the chair just above the floor, and leaning back upon the chair in an attitude of repose, asked, "What am I doing now?" "Fakarongrongo, Misi," "You are leaning wholly," or "You have lifted yourself from every other support." "That's it," shouted the missionary, with an exultant cry; and a sense of holy joy awed him as he realised that his prayer had been so fully answered. To lean on Jesus wholly and only is surely the true meaning of appropriating or saving faith. And now "Fakarongrongo Iesu ea anea moure," "Leaning on Jesus unto eternal life," or "for all the things of eternal life," is the happy experience of those Christian islanders, as it is of all who thus cast themselves unreservedly on the Saviour of the world for salvation.—Quarterly Jottings.

CHRIST CHURCH P.S.A. BROTHERHOOD.

THE half-yearly meeting of Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, P.S.A. Brotherhood was held on Thursday. The reports were of a highly satisfactory character. The average attendance for the session had been 637. £21 had been raised for general purposes, £23 for benevolent, and £40 paid in for books, whilst the benefit society and slate clubs were in a satisfactory condition; the educational classes have earned a splendid report from H.M. Inspector, and a grant of nearly £14. There were 150 certificates and 410 prizes for distribution. The general secretary, Mr. H. G. Turner, was presented with a purse of £10 in appreciation of his services, subscribed for by over 200 working men. Mr. Meyer said this was almost his last meeting for awhile, as this week he sails for America, but with very different feelings from that which he started with last time. Then, in fear and trembling as to what his work should be here; now, strong in the consciousness of an army of brothers whose hearts would beat with his, and keep in touch and sympathy though the Atlantic rolled between them. He had never known a movement that had won so many men and transformed so many lives in such a short time as this P.S.A. Brotherhood.

HACKNEY-ROAD MISSION.—The semi-jubilee meeting of this mission was held last week in the Hall, Union-crescent. Lord Monkswell presided, and there was a crowded attendance. Mr. Girling stated that upwards of 5000 addresses had been delivered in the hall and on the Triangle, and he estimated that half-a-million had heard the truth. The average receipts during the twenty-five years have been about £110 per annum. There are 181 names on the books in the Sunday-school, with ten teachers, also Band of Hope and a sewing school. Lord Monkswell distributed the prizes to the Sunday-school scholars. He hoped Mr. Girling might long continue the work. This effort was to reach those who did not attend churches or chapels. He felt strongly that if they wanted to get hold of people and do them permanent good, they must get hold of them young. Lord Monkswell then presented Mr. Girling with a purse of money subscribed by members of the congregation and others, as an evidence of their appreciation of his efforts for twenty-five years.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

THE Association at Niagara Falls has started a scheme for a new building.

The Scottish Y.M.C.A. Conference will be held in Galashiels, from 11th to 13th September.

Mr. Neason Jones, West Albany, has accepted the secretaryship of the Long Island work.

Mr. W. L. Pettingill, an active worker in Rochester, has accepted a call to the secretaryship of the Warren, Pa., Association.

As a Jubilee thank-offering Mr. Alfred Haley, of Wakefield, has contributed the sum of £230 to free from debt the purchase and building fund of the local Association.

The plans for extension of the Sunderland Y.M.C.A. building have been passed by the Corporation, and the work will soon be commenced. The sum already given and promised amounts to £3262, and £1800 is still required.

The Geneva (N.Y.) Association opened its beautiful building on Sunday, June 10th. The hall was filled and the interest very marked. The report of the building committee showed that the building was practically free from debt.

Papers to hand show that the Jubilee was commemorated by the Sydney association with great success. There was a large public gathering in the Y.M.C.A. Hall on June 6 (Jubilee day), in which the Dean of Sydney and many other persons of influence took part.

Mr. Miron A. Clarke, secretary of the International Y.M.C.A. Committee for Brazil, writes that he is now about recovered of the yellow fever, while Mrs. Clarke is also recovering from an attack of the disease. They do not fear a second attack, and therefore begin anew their work with courage.

At the seventh Railroad Conference in New York, 270 delegates were present from all parts of the United States and Canada. Dr. Theodore L. Cuyler and Bishop Potter took part. The conference emphasised the importance of aggressive effort in the religious work throughout the State, and demonstrated the high estimate placed by officials on the work of the Association.

THE Y.W.C.A.

UNDER the name of the West Side Settlement, the New York City Y.W.C.A. has just established a new branch of Christian and philanthropic work among factory girls. The settlement is located in 243 West Forty-seventh-street. The neighbourhood is well chosen, for great factories and crowded tenements are numerous in these quarters.

The Y.W.C.A. workers of Melbourne have been holding special thanksgiving days, in celebration of the blessing God has granted on the work. Amongst many other speakers Miss Kate Macartney gave a very interesting account of her recent visit to Europe, and of the Christian work she had had the opportunity of witnessing, as well as the Christian workers she had had the pleasure of meeting.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

AT the first anniversary of the Congregational Society, Pudsey, a report of the year's work showed an increase from forty to sixty-four members.

The members of the Swaffham Society have started a "Pleasant Thursday Evening" meeting in the village of Sporle, in order to help the work in connection with the Baptist chapel.

In connection with the annual meetings of the Exeter Congregational Society, the president, Rev. W. Justin Evans, preached a special C.E. sermon. At the public meeting, the secretary reported a membership of 112.

The Victoria-road Congregational Society (Northampton) held their annual meeting on Monday week. Rev. H. J. L. Matson presided. The report states that the society numbers thirty-four active members, thirty-five associate members, and twelve honorary members.

The International C.E. Convention has been held at Cleveland, Ohio. Dr. F. E. Clark thinks it will be remembered as "the Workers' Convention." "It will prove," he says, "that the spiritual electricity generated in our prayer-meetings and our consecration services has been harnessed to the dynamos to drive the wheels of good citizenship, missionary zeal, municipal reform, relief of the poor, and all those glorious objects."

The summer convention of the Liverpool district societies at Southport proved a pleasant out-door gathering. The Mayor of Southport—Alderman James Wood, LL.D.—had secured for the afternoon meeting a corner of the Recreation Ground in the marine park. In the evening a public meeting was held. The Mayor presided, and gave a stirring address on the efforts and objects of the Society.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

DURING last week Dr. Culross has been lecturing to the students of the Gospel Training College, Dunoon, and his words were greatly valued.

Dr. A. K. H. Boyd, of St. Andrews, is meanwhile preaching at Strathpeffer, a favourite health resort in the Highlands, where he is attracting large audiences.

Mr. Alex. D. Milne, a devoted Christian worker, and for many years an office-bearer in Queen's Cross Free Church, Aberdeen, has died from the effects of an attack of paralysis, at the age of sixty-five.

At the semi-jubilee service of the Dunoon Convalescent Homes it was stated that since the opening of the Homes 58,593 persons have enjoyed its advantages, and that a sum of £130,609 has been contributed for its support.

The announcement of the death of Mr. Edmund Boyd, one of the lecturers in the Glasgow Free Church Training College, has been received with deep regret. He was for long a leading elder of the Free College Church, and superintendent of the Congregational Sabbath school.

Earnest efforts have been put forth by many Christian workers to teach the show folks during the fair week in Glasgow. They were invited to tea and afterwards addressed by various speakers. The impression left upon them by all this kindness was good, as they are not always accustomed to be thus treated.

A large company assembled last Thursday on board the Clyde training-ship Empress, at the annual distribution of prizes, to show their interest in the institution, which is doing a good work in the way of reclaiming young lads and fitting them for useful service in the navy or mercantile marine. Mr. James Campbell of Tilliechewan addressed the lads.

IRISH NOTES.

THE Armagh Protestant Orphan Society has at present 130 children under its care, and is doing an excellent work.

The open-air services in Cork appear to have turned the corner. Now a crowd of about 1000 persons listen, with few interruptions, every Sunday to the preaching of the Gospel in the public streets.

A series of missionary addresses were delivered in Belfast last week by Dr. H. Grattan Guinness and Messrs. W. J. Sinclair and Ed. James, a coloured man, both of whom are going out as missionaries to Africa.

No less than thirty adult converts from the Church of Rome have just been received into fellowship with the Episcopal Church in Dublin. This brings up the number received in the Dublin centre alone since the spring of 1893, through the instrumentality of Irish Church Missions, to eighty-six.

The number of boarders in the Belfast Sailors' Home reached a total last year of 605, an increase of ninety-six over the preceding year, and included thirty-seven shipwrecked and destitute sailors, who were hospitably entertained and carefully looked after. The Home has been thirty-nine years in existence, and in various ways is proving a blessing.

Rev. S. E. Cotton, of the Carogh Orphanage, who some time ago was convicted at Belfast of neglecting and illtreating some orphan children placed under his care, has again at the Kildare Assizes been found guilty of a similar offence, and has been sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. The Lord Chief Justice, who tried the case, said that during the course of many years' experience of criminal law, he never felt himself so profoundly moved.

CANTON.—Of the twenty-five additions to the Second Presbyterian Church in Canton, recently reported, eleven had previously been treated as patients in the mission hospital. The missionaries regard the hospital as distinctly medical, and also distinctly evangelistic.

SOUTH LONDON POLICE-COURT MISSION.—Seven missionaries are now employed in the following courts south of the Thames: Southwark, Lambeth and Battersea, Greenwich and Deptford, Wandsworth, Woolwich, Rochester and Chatham, Kingston and the Richmond districts. As an auxiliary of the police-court organisation, the missionaries' efforts cannot be overrated. After a few hours' detention in the cells, most offenders, unless old and hardened, are in a subdued frame of mind, and only too glad to listen to any counsel that may be offered them. Each court has its individuality; Thames and Southwark dealing, perhaps, with the roughest types of character in London. At Southwark a large proportion of runaway boys are brought before the magistrate. The mission is a branch of the Church of England Temperance Society, and help should be addressed to the secretary, Mr. Evan Griffiths, 12, Gubyon-avenue, Herne Hill, S.E.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Gipsy Smith arrived in Adelaide during the last week in May, and was reported in The Christian Weekly of June 1 to be conducting a successful mission in the Franklin-street Church of that city.

Mr. Ernest Bailey, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding a tent mission at Barley, Herts, during the past month. The meetings have been well attended, and the Lord has graciously blessed his servant's labours to the stirring up of believers to re-consecration and in leading sinners to the Saviour.

Mrs. Baeyertz has been having crowded meetings during the past week in Cowcaddens Free Church, where this earnest and able evangelist has been delivering most impressive addresses. Many inquirers remained at the close of the services, and a great work of grace is being carried forward. No deeper or wider movement has been experienced in the history of the congregation.

Millwall.—Open-air meetings are being held during the summer months, under the direction of Rev. F. Waudby, assisted by members of several of the Young Men's Fellowship Associations connected with the Presbyterian churches in London. This is the sequel to the very interesting series of special services held at Millwall in the month of May last, in which upwards of sixty young men took part.

Mr. Rowland Sturt has concluded a fourteen days' mission at Hales, Norfolk. Great interest was manifested throughout the whole of the services, the people coming out nightly in large numbers. On the last evening of the mission Mr. Sturt was assisted by three of the neighbouring clergy. On August 5 he commences work at Bungay, and God's children are earnestly desired to pray that his visit to that town may be abundantly blessed.

Tent Mission, Old Ford.—A fortnight's mission has been held in a large tent near the Park gates by Mr. McCracken. Night after night during the mission the Gospel message was sounded out with clearness and power, and real work for eternity has been done. Many a heart has been cheered on the heavenly way, and many another brought into the kingdom of light during these "times of refreshing from the Presence of the Lord." The mission was held under the auspices of the Adult School, Old Ford.

New York.—An important movement of a missionary character among the masses of New York is being arranged by prominent leaders in the Protestant Episcopal Church. A society, of which Bishop Potter is president, has been organised to push a campaign of spiritual evangelistic work. A carefully prepared plan of operations has been arranged, according to which an aggressive "mission" will be carried on in New York during next Lent. The active labours of this campaign for the salvation of souls will be placed in the care of "missioners." Some of these may be invited from England. Not the least interesting feature of the proposed mission is the intention of its promoters to invite the co-operation of "all forms of organised Christianity," in a "synchronous movement for the salvation of souls."

Rev. Thomas Cook.—At latest accounts this evangelist was holding a successful mission in Kooringa, South Australia. Previous missions in Kent Town and Kadina appear to have been greatly blessed, souls being saved nightly, and much enthusiasm manifested. One minister writes:—"Looking over the list of converts, it is seen that all classes are represented. From the halls of the wealthy and the cottages of the poor have they come; many young, some old and grey-headed; fathers and mothers who have allowed their children to enter the kingdom of heaven before them, and some who now for the first time see how the most solemn parental responsibilities have been undischarged and unnoticed; children, in whose salvation the prayers of years have found their answer. Husbands and wives that were parted have been made one in the Lord. Many families are now as a whole joined in Christ, and are walking together in heaven."

Mr. George Back has removed from Dunton Green, Sevenoaks, to 11, Culmore-road, Peckham.

---

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The enthusiasm of the supporters of this influential Society must be due in a large degree to the measures, exceptionally vigorous and wise, that are taken to inform and interest them in missionary work. While the monthly periodicals of the Society are beyond praise, the annual reports are all that they should be in point of contents and get-up. Miss Stock's "Story of the Year," with its many illustrations, is for the "popular" reader; the volume of "Proceedings" is for the more serious student of missions. In the latter there are excellent maps, copious extracts from missionaries' reports, and lists of associations and the money raised by them.

PERSONALIA.

Captain F. D. Lugard, the author of the great book on Uganda, leaves England almost immediately for important work in the Niger territories.

Mr. W. R. Lane, we regret to say, is obliged to take several weeks' rest, on account of his voice having failed through overwork. He is one of our most useful evangelists. A sea voyage would be the best thing for him.

Dr. Murray Cairns, the young medical missionary in Formosa, has been laid hold of by malarial fever. He had to go across to the mainland for a change, and it is hoped that he has been able ere this to return to Tai-wan-foo.

Rev. Henry Montgomery, of Belfast, has refused a call from Trinity Church, Glasgow, to become its pastor. This is the second call of the sort from Glasgow Mr. Montgomery has refused during the last couple of months.

Prebendary Webb Peploe has (The Record says) been invited by Mr. Deacon to succeed the late Canon Hoare at Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, but he does not see his way to leave London, and has definitely declined the proposal.

Rev. Wm. McNeill, brother of our own John McNeill, is supplying the Presbyterian church at Corning, N.Y., where his preaching is attracting great audiences. He is described as "almost boyish, and with a countenance aglow and a pleasant voice, earnest and dramatic, with fine descriptive powers, and good at telling a story."

Rev. Charles Garrett found on his return from the Continent last week that his box was broken open, and among other things his pocket book was stolen. As this contained certain provisional engagements for this year and next, he fears others will be inconvenienced as well as himself. He therefore wishes to inform friends of his loss, and to ask those who will be affected by it to communicate with him.

Alderman James Duckworth, of Rochdale, elected last week to the presidential chair of the Methodist Free Churches, has long been a leader in that body. He has rendered splendid service in seeking to establish a Theological Institute, and previously he started the Car Mission for home evangelistic work, whilst his interest in foreign missions has been often practically shown. There is some hope that shortly he may make a foreign tour of inspection and visit the stations in all parts of the world.

Mr. Ira D. Sankey has been visiting Charlottetown, Prince Edwards Island, giving services of Gospel song in the First Methodist and Zion Churches. Great interest was aroused, and the places were densely crowded. As an intermission, Rev. D. Sutherland narrated some reminiscences of Moody and Sankey's tour through Scotland in 1873. So potent had been the influences of that revival through the length and breadth of Scotland that he had known boys (he had been one of them) who on their way home from school knelt together on the roadside to pray as devoutly and earnestly as any congregation in church had ever prayed.

Mr. H. L. Hastings, of Boston, U.S.A., writing to friends in Great Britain, says:—"On Saturday, May 12, Mrs. Hastings, accompanied by our eldest son, John K. Hastings, sailed for Liverpool en route for London. Our son has for several months been suffering from his eyes, from a cinder caught on a train in Chicago last fall, which has so inflamed them that they cannot bear the intense light of the American summer. The milder light of London on a former occasion gave his eyes the rest they needed, and restored him to health again. Mrs. Hastings goes with him, partly to care for him, partly to take some rest, which she much needs, and also to do such labour in the Gospel as her hand may find to do."

Pastor Archibald Brown's friends rallied round him very heartily on Wednesday week at the celebration of his fiftieth birthday. There must have been near 2000 people at the garden party held in the afternoon in the grounds of Harley House. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon and others spoke words of encouragement. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., and others delivered hearty addresses at the evening meeting in the East London Tabernacle. The "old paths," which so many have found to be "paths of pleasantness," were preferred before all modern improvements. Tender allusion was made to Mrs. Brown's protracted illness, and on the other hand the pastor was congratulated on the fact that with two daughters already in the mission field, he is shortly expecting to bid farewell to another, who is also going to "the regions beyond."

THE MAYOR OF TORONTO, Mr. Waring Kennedy not long since declined to welcome, as Mayor, a convention of liquor dealers which had convened in the city.

OBITUARY.

LIEUT. JOHN DAWSON, R.N.

This faithful servant of the Lord was, in his boyhood, the playfellow of the late revered Mr. F. C. Bland, and was through life a welcome guest at Derriquin Castle. Converted during the great revival in Ireland, he was associated with the most honoured and eminent leaders in that great movement. He was a reverent student of God's Word, a faithful preacher of the Gospel, a warm advocate of the temperance cause, and was largely used in bringing many souls to a saving knowledge of the truth in Dublin, Dovercourt, Glasgow, and latterly in Colchester, where he resided. On July 18, at Ellingham, Norfolk, where he had gone to deliver a temperance address, he was suddenly taken to be "for ever with the Lord."

MISS ELLEN WEBB.

This devoted worker passed away on Saturday week (14th) at her residence, 40, Ventnor-villas, Hove. She was apparently in her usual health on Friday morning, but was seized with apoplexy about mid-day, and soon after sank into unconsciousness, from which she did not again rally. A travelled and well-read woman, an authoress of no mean repute, an artist whose brush has earned, at least, £700 for charities; yet it was in her public work as a speaker upon temperance platforms that Miss Webb was best known. An earnest Evangelical Christian, a firm advocate of Protestant principles, an enthusiastic admirer of the policy of the Salvation Army and its leader, as well as one of its associates, though herself a Churchwoman, generous in her charities, rich and poor alike will genuinely regret the loss of Miss Ellen Webb.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The B.W.T.A. are arranging to hold special conferences in August, in South Wales and Yorkshire.

The newly-formed Royal Courts of Justice Temperance Society already has a membership of 203, including barristers and solicitors connected with the courts.

The second triennial conference of the Australian Women's Christian Temperance Union has been held in Sydney with an enthusiasm and a swing that augurs well for the cause of moral reform.

The executive of the U.K.A. have passed a resolution, urging that in no case in future should the support of temperance reformers be given to a Parliamentary candidate who is in the liquor trade.

Mr. Asquith stated in the House of Commons, that a bill embodying the recommendations of the Departmental Committee on the treatment of habitual drunkards has been drafted, and will be introduced in one of the two Houses before the end of the Session.

Rev. G. A. Bennetts, the secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Temperance Committee, presented an encouraging report to the Conference last week of recent successes. The increase in membership for the year will be reported as over 21,000, of whom a third are adults.

In connection with The Woman's Signal the B.W.T.A. has started a new monthly, the Woman's Signal Budget. It is largely devoted to compressed news of the movement, but gives also interesting sketches of Mrs. Eva McLaren and other workers in the Temperance cause.

The new Lord Chief Justice, addressing a meeting in Bermondsey, said he thought the cause of temperance could never be more efficiently served than by providing in clubs, under safe management, some counter-attractions to the garish and often fatal allurements of the public-house.

Mr. W. Tallack, describing in the course of an article in The Friend a visit to prisons in Glasgow, says:—"There, as elsewhere, 'it is the drink, the drink, the drink,' to use the threefold emphasis of a prison officer, which brings seven or eight out of every ten men and women to jail. It is of little or no use to send habitual drunkards to jail with repeated short sentences."

The Band of Hope Union has for the past five years been carrying on a school scheme, giving lectures and holding examinations on temperance themes in all parts of the land. Last year 2515 schools were visited in this way, and 117,769 reports of these lectures were written by the children. "The past year's work brings to a close the series of five years over which a fund of £10,000 was specially subscribed, and the committee are happy to state that the results secured during this first quinquennium have been so satisfactory as to render it possible to raise a second fund of £10,000 for another five years' work, this sum being subscribed, for the most part, by those who contributed to the first effort."

Notes and Comments.

The statements made in an appeal recently issued by Dr. Barnardo, on behalf of an institution threatened by the Romanists, having been challenged, the trustees and committee have investigated the matter, and have come to the satisfactory conclusion that the facts justify Dr. Barnardo's statements. This resolution (given on page 17) will be received with thankfulness by all.

Many of our readers will be glad to possess themselves of a copy of "The Bells of Is: or, Voices of Human Need and Sorrow," by Rev. F. B. Meyer. (Morgan & Scott. 2s. 6d. and 3s. 6d.) The volume consists of an autobiographical sketch of the author's earlier years, to which is added a deeply interesting account of the successful work carried on by him and his coadjutors among discharged prisoners, during his pastorate at Leicester.

Were there as many promising openings for trade as the Church of Christ has for spreading the Gospel, how quickly and effectually would they be entered. Rev. C. Jukes, who is just returning with his wife to Madagascar, says that the mind of the heathen on that island is turned in the most remarkable manner from idolatry to Christianity; they only want teachers to lead them forward. In some parts of heathendom the people have burnt their idol temples ready for the Christian teacher who has never come. Large districts of India are waiting to be evangelised. Rev. J. Goffin, of Kadiri, speaking of seven tours which he had made in that district, testifies that the people everywhere were most willing to listen, and in some places urged him to appoint a teacher to live amongst them and instruct them, and conduct schools for their children. He says, "There seems hardly any limit to the openings in this direction; we are only limited by our own lack of men and money."

Still more important even than these providential openings is the evidence of the fact that God's Spirit is going before human instrumentality, as if impatient of our delay, and rebuking us for it, and urging us forward. Mr. Goffin says there is evidence that the gracious Spirit of God is at work, and here and there, in out-of-the-way places, we meet with individuals who are turning in thought and desire towards the living God, and asking, in different ways, what they must do to be saved. Even the aged, who are usually too dull or too wedded to customs to want any change, are sometimes as eager as the young for the truth.

One old man was most eager in asking how he could be delivered from the bondage of Kama, Krodha, and Lobha, the evil passions of the soul, and listened to us with delight as we told him of the deliverance which Jesus can give.

To these facts add yet another, that the London Missionary Society, to which both Mr. Jukes and Mr. Goffin belong, has more offers of service than it can accept on account of want of funds. The fields are white unto harvest, labourers are ready, but means are not forthcoming, and yet Christian men are leaving behind them fortunes of hundreds of thousands of pounds. Something wants readjusting.

The labour war in America has called from Mr. Stead an expression of his views as to its cause; he believes it touches those eternal principles on which society rests. Men may go on for years with their buying and selling, forgetting God and his laws, but at last the consequences find them out. Mr. Stead says, while Mr. Pullman's refusal to allow the matter in dispute with his men to be referred to arbitration was the immediate cause of the labour war, the real root lies deeper. It is to be found in the distrust which is the canker of American civilisation. In business men have forgotten God, they have lost faith in man, and they are paying the penalty. In place of the co-operation of confidence, there is everywhere the fiercest rivalry of cut-throat competition, eating confidence out of the heart of man.

We are being taught everywhere by the unrest and distresses of the times that "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

We hope that Mr. Shaw-Lefevre sounded the death-knell of the barrack schools for pauper children when he promised the other day an inquiry into the system. If, as we believe they can, the opponents of the system make out their case, the country will insist on these poor children having a better start in life than they now get. To feed and clothe and educate them in a sort of way is not enough. At present we are, by the system adopted, "training them to be indifferent to vice and virtue, to praise and blame, to be sulky and passionate in temper"; they are declared to be ignorant of the ways of the world and of the uses of common things. So says Mrs. Barnett, a lady who has had 135 of them through her own hands; while Dr. Warner declares that they are lowered both physically and morally. The system is declared to be "flagrantly expensive." The cottage homes are as cheap as the cheapest of the barrack schools, and much cheaper than the most costly. Another evidence this, that the right way morally is also the right way financially and hygienically.

Fifteen hundred years have passed away since Chrysostom preached and suffered, but how startlingly like some parts of English society to-day is the picture which he gives of society as he knew it in Constantinople. He says:—

Gentlemen are acquainted with the characters, families, and native cities of charioteers and dancers, and can tell the breeding, training, sires, and dams of the horses that run in the races; but not one probably knows the titles of Paul's Epistles.

Some of the main pillars of the turf, no doubt, could give the names of Paul's Epistles, and could very likely add a few quotations from them, but the passion for sport and gambling shows that the spirit of his words has yet to enter into their hearts.

The very heart of ministerial work is always beautiful and attractive, bringing souls into direct contact with God and his truth. Thus it is related of Jacob Vernet, of Geneva, that his determination to embrace the pastorate was occasioned by his accompanying, when he was only a boy, Benedict Pictet, his pastor, to the bedside of an aged and dying woman. He remained in the adjoining room while his pastor conversed and prayed with her. He says:—

His words, and especially his prayer, overpowered my soul; the distressed countenance of the invalid, which became calm little by little, and assumed a celestial expression, impressed me indescribably, and I resolved to devote myself to that ministry, the blessings of which are so visible upon those who are suffering.

It is to this kind of work, the very work which Jesus Himself delighted to do, to which more and more attention should be given; its saving effects would appear on every hand.

The following sentences from Andrew Murray's "The Spirit of Christ" appear to us to be eminently true and suggestive:—

Men always expect the Kingdom of God to come with observation; they know not that it is a hidden mystery, to be received only as, in his own self-revealing power, God makes Himself known in hearts surrendered and prepared for Him. Christians are always ready, when the promise of the Spirit occupies them, to form some conception as to how his leading can be known in their thoughts; how his quickening will affect their feelings; how his sanctifying can be recognised in their will and conduct.

Very deep is the word, "He worketh in you of his good pleasure to will and to do."

Dr. Dale expressed, in his letter to the President of the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, the opinion that Methodism in Birmingham is more vigorous than it was twenty-five years ago. The spirit and vigour with which work is carried on is, to him, more striking than the increase in the number of places of worship, though that is considerable. The improvement he ascribes mainly to a change in the spirit of the people generally, and also to the zeal and power of the ministers, to the earnestness of some of the laymen, and to the College at Handsworth. It is gratifying to read this testimony to the evangelistic value of the College; it is as it should be. The old "academies" of such men as Dr. Doddridge and Timothy Jollie (a name only remembered now in Sheffield) used to be fountains of blessing in all the neighbourhoods round about. We trust that every improvement in Methodistic work in Birmingham will be more than maintained in the future.

In a criticism of Dr. G. Adam Smith's "Historical Geography of the Holy Land," in The Critical Review, Major Conder makes a remark on the various critical schools which, although familiar, cannot be too constantly kept before the mind, especially when new theories are advanced with the utmost assurance:—

The views of the present critical school differ, not only in detail but in principle, from those that prevailed when Colenso wrote a quarter of a century ago, and these again are already discounted by more moderate writers. The latest authorities on monumental study have, on the other hand, only repeated and confirmed the opinions and conclusions of Sir Henry Rawlinson, published forty years ago. Monumental study is no by-path, but rather the highway to the discovery of truth.

The ever-changing theories of men, and the steadily increasing mass of monuments and facts in support of the historic accuracy of Scripture, present a very impressive mental picture.

There is an important moral principle involved in the question which one of the labour leaders raised at the recent Miners' Conference, when he spoke of the early age at which boys are sent to work, and the early age, comparatively, at which men are dismissed. He put it thus:—

The boys of the working classes went to work at least four or five years before their proper time. The master liked boys to do his work. They did it more cheaply and enabled him to undersell his contemporaries. But this had a very hurtful effect upon labour generally. It glutted the labour market, prejudiced the chances of middle-aged men getting or keeping work, and completely swept out of the labour field men past fifty-five and up to sixty years of age.

Now this, wherever practised, involves harshness to boys, encourages a spirit of oppression, and treats experienced men with injustice. It is absurd to think of a man being practically useless at fifty-five or sixty years of age. If boys obtain a longer boyhood and a better training they will prove stronger men and more capable workers. Greed will defeat itself again unless it gives them this.

The Chronicle of the L.M.S. for August contains an article on the stoppage of the promising "Forward Movement," which we cannot but hope may lead to serious thought and prayer among all supporters and friends of the Society. It appears that out of a large number of additional missionaries recently sent out more than one-third have not yet been furnished with houses to live in. Five of them are medical missionaries who have not a dispensary or hospital for their special work. Nor can the directors, in the present state of the funds, vote money for them. Further, there are at present no fewer than twenty-three men and three women who will very shortly complete lengthened courses of study, and who have actually been accepted by the Society for service in the mission field; but if the Society is not to increase its staff of missionaries, it will not need more than nine or ten, at most, to fill up vacancies which occur in the ordinary course of events. What is to become of these young volunteers? What effect on other possible volunteers will the present delay have?

It is well that the tactics and principles of so influential an order as the Jesuits should never be lost sight of. Take the following incident:

The French Parliament on various occasions condemned the teaching of Jesuit theologians; and after the condemnation of Santarelli's book it summoned the Provincial Coton, the Superior of the three Jesuit houses in Paris, and three of the oldest Jesuit fathers, to appear before it, March 14th, 1626. On being asked whether they agreed with the contents of Santarelli's book, they replied that they disagreed, and were prepared to write against it. "Are you not aware that this vile doctrine has been approved by your general in Rome?" "Yes, but we who are here are not responsible for his unwisdom, and we censure it as strongly as we can." "Well, then, answer these two points, Do you not believe that the King is omnipotent in his dominions? And do you think that a foreign power can interfere therein or ought to do so, or that the peace of the Gallican Church may be disturbed in the person of the King?" The end of it was that they said, "He who is at Rome cannot do otherwise than approve what the Roman Curia approves." "And your conviction?" "Is exactly the opposite." And if you were in Rome, what would you do?" "We should act as those who are there."

No wonder that one or two members of Parliament exclaimed, "Heaven save us from such father confessors!" Jesuitism is the same to-day.

We have frequently spoken of the importance of extreme care on the part of parents in placing their children in schools or pensions on the Continent. Christians should not only concern themselves for the general safety of their children, but provide against their minds being poisoned. We recently heard of a school in Germany into which the children of Protestant parents are gathered with the distinct object of introduction into the Church of Rome. A correspondent in the town of G—— writes:—

It grieves me to the heart to see how the children of Evangelical parents are brought up in Roman Catholic establishments. To a living, joyous Christianity, through repentance and faith, such children can never attain under the guidance of Jesuits. Indeed, it may be that such a child will be lost to parents as well as to the Protestant faith. All the time, there are a number of pensions in G——, recommended by the Protestant pastor and others, where parents may send their children, and depend upon their being well brought up, both as to body and soul.

Whence it is evident that it is not safe to be guided by prospectuses or agents' statements regarding school and boarding-houses. Parental care and watchfulness should save inexperienced young people from the temptations of Rome as well as the blandishments of worldliness and sin.

A correspondent in Germany sends us a published account of a scene enacted in Russia some months ago, when a Roman Catholic church was forcibly closed at Kroze. The heartlessness of the attack that was made upon the helpless peasants defies description. The traveller, Kurd Hurtell, after seeing acts of rapine and murder, poor people chased into the river, and a man flogged to death with a knout, concludes:—

I see them yet—the drowning peasants, the blood-stained corpses, the drenched-red earth, the gaunt forms of those deported to Siberia, to the lead mines, the children fatherless, motherless, abandoned.

These atrocities were at the time reported in these unimpressive words: "Some peasants resisted the closing of the churches in Kroze, but order was speedily restored"! The millions of Russia call for our compassion, and need our prayers. All tell the same tale of tyranny and oppression, whether Stundists or peasants, Jews or other exiles.

An esteemed correspondent, writing on the extent to which Christian and philanthropic agencies over-spend their incomes, says:—

God does not require us to do this for his cause. If the money is not forthcoming, is it not a sign that in that direction we have gone far enough? The command to each one of us is, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do," etc. Individual effort is what we need (Prov. iii. 27, 28). If, instead of giving to an orphanage, Christian people would board out one orphan, which can be done for five shillings a week; or, if that is too much for one, let two friends join and personally care for one child, more good would be done, and more in God's way, than by shifting the obligation to monster institutions, which are always in debt, and quite unable, on account of their size, to take personal interest in the little ones. In Christian families debt is rightly considered a disgrace. Why should it be otherwise with charity? Our Lord clearly expresses his approval of individual effort (Luke vii. 37, John xii. 2, 3). Tabitha was an individual worker (Acts ix. 39).

While it is not possible for all to do personally what they may desire, and, indeed, be well able to promote, it is unquestionable that many require stimulating to do their duty in the direction of individual effort. The joy of direct service must be greater than the satisfaction which comes from merely rendering outside help.

The Sermon on the Mount, commonly looked upon as a code of precepts, also conveys some of the loftiest teaching concerning God. The light of his love shines through every verse. He is "our Father which art in Heaven." His care extends to the flowers and the birds, much more to the children of men, whose burdens He carries. He seeks to brighten our earthly life, to free it from care and worry. He lifts our thoughts up to spiritual things, to the treasure which fades not away, to the satisfaction which is in fellowship with Himself. He is the patter of every grace which we are commanded t possess and manifest. There is somethin peculiarly refreshing and strengthening i every thought of God which the sermo presents to us. An aged Christian worke used to turn in every difficulty and trial t the words, "Your Father knoweth."

---

"He that is bathed (R.V.) needeth not sav to wash his feet, but is clean every whit. Why "bathed"? Because it refers to tha thorough renewing of the nature which i given when Christ is received as Lord an Saviour, whereas the "washing" resemble that daily cleansing from the defilements life which are contracted by the feet as w move about. Both the "bathing" of the whol man and the washing of the fresh impurity are needed if we are to be clean as ou Saviour would have us be.

Keswick.

There are two ways of looking at every thing; there is a silver lining to the darkes cloud. We may take a cheering as well as gloomy view of the features of our time. it is depressing to observe the widespread declension from the faith of our fathers, it i invigorating to see an increasing love of th old truths, in the increasing numbers wh throng together at Convention time in thi lovely valley among the northern hills. An they represent thousands more who canno come here. The teaching grows in conformit to the soundest Evangelical doctrine, presse home to a practical result in heart experience

It is true that once and again "Keswic teaching" and "the Keswick blessing" wer mentioned, but "Keswick" is learning mor and more to say, with John the Baptist, "H must increase, but I must decrease." "H that hath the bride is the Bridegroom; bu the friend of the Bridegroom rejoiceth greatl because of the Bridegroom's voice. This m joy, therefore, is fulfilled."

The great tent never was more crowded though the second tent was also thronged and there was less than ever of anythin peculiar in teaching, less of anything lik friction, and more than ever of general genial, unconstrained fellowship.

One great cause of this is the growin development of the missionary spirit. Th morning missionary half-hour prayer meetin was (so some thought and said) the cream o the day's engagements. "The deepening o spiritual life" comes to be regarded not as a end but as a means to an end; and Heathen dom's bitter cry, "Come over and help us!" draws the soul from dwelling upon itself t consider and pity and help the larger half o the world's population, who have never hear the Name which is above every name.

Oh, wonderful cleansing,
Oh, wonderful filling,
That Jesus gives to me!

—not for my own enjoyment here or here after, but to qualify me for the work whic is the chief reason of my continuance on earth to be one of his witnesses wherever He ma need me. Such is the growing conviction an desire at this gathering of Christians, "al one in Christ Jesus."

---

THE ADORATION OF GOD.—There is no exercis in the whole compass of spiritual performances tha is more acceptable to God, more elevates the mind and possesses it with more generous notions than th duty of adoring God; either with wonder contem plating his attributes and great works, or with joy recounting the many mercies He hath bestowed on mankind, chiefly those through Jesus Christ.

World-wide Evangelisation.

In The Missionary Review for August, at page 636, will be found the following important question:

Query:—Are we still dwelling in the gloom of the dark ages? Seldom has anything more touching been seen in these hurrying money-making times, than the departure of a hundred Russian Baptists, Stundists, from one of the Baltic ports for America. A Daily Chronicle telegram says: "As the ship steamed away from the quay, they raised a well-known psalm tune, a great favourite among the Russian Baptists; it is stated that the tones of the sacred melody were heard for a long time after the vessel had left the harbour, and greatly affected the crowd remaining on the quay."

So ends the short paragraph in the magazine. How briefly we have read of another persecution, "They stoned Stephen...Lord Jesus, receive my spirit! And he kneeled down and cried with a loud voice, Lord lay not this sin to their charge...And Saul was consenting unto his death...there was a great persecution...and they were all scattered abroad...except the Apostles...Therefore they that were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the word [or declaring the glad tidings.]"

Now should not this fearful persecution in Russia call the whole body of believers throughout America and throughout the whole world to special prayer alone in our closets, and forthwith to gatherings for united prayer—not for these dear beloved Stundists merely, but that throughout the whole world every true Christian, every woman and every man, who has really been born again, should, wherever their lot be cast, whether in their native land or abroad, be imitators of the early Christians and of these Stundists? For surely it is folly to expect the heathen or the Mohammedans or the Jews to be converted by missionaries merely, any more than it is folly to expect the lapsed masses in London or Paris or new York to be reclaimed by missionaries merely.

In this futile attempt we have made, and are still making, a vain effort—vain because so opposed to the very spirit of Christianity, and so flagrantly opposed to the plainest teaching of the Saviour, who lovingly invited and demanded that every Christian, male or female, young or old, who has been really saved, should forthwith gladly share his joy with his fellows and with all around.

My own strength for public work is little. But I do not know that ever the Lord gave me such expectation and faith in prayer for a world-wide blessing. Poor, fainting Stephen! Which of us will venture to limit the benevolence of God when He meted out, or poured, or avalanched out an answer to dear brother Stephen's short cry or groan as he gasped out, "Lord, . . . lay not . . . this . . . sin to their charge"?

I have had the privilege, accompanied by my wife and daughter, of dwelling for a while in Russia, and each of us had there the joy of telling of the great love of God in giving his only Son to die for us. And I can say from my heart, God bless Russia, from the Tzar to the most helpless serf in the land! And what Christian that loves the Bible should not rejoice that the Russian Church commends, as so many of us in England and America do, the free circulation of the Bible?

Now, if these Stundists settle in America or in Britain, will they not bring to our homes and to our hearts the great Bible truth that the evangelisation of the heathen and the Mohammedans will never be accomplished even by all the faithful missionaries merely, but must be done by the whole body of true believers, both women and men, stamping into the heart of every English Christian that signal of Nelson to every man in every ship of his fleet, "England expects that every man this day will do his duty." And what will not our great Captain require of every believer? Let the telegram go forth to every church, and to every member of every church. The Lord expects each one this day to do his duty, and may watching angels be able to shout, "Behold, these modern Christians of 1894 have now returned to the good old practice of the Apostolic times!"

A Call for Intercessors.—I.

"The Lord wondered that there was no intercessor" (Isa. lix. 16). I ask myself, if I were to die to-night, what should I the most regret having left undone? My answer is, Intercession. This shows clearly its supreme importance. As "priests unto God," the practical work of our high calling is to offer up "spiritual sacrifices." We have the living Holy Spirit to inspire our thoughts. Thus our Lord continues to invigorate his people, having consecrated them as temples for his worship in spirit and in truth.

Intercession for just a few minutes—so forcible that the spirit seems to ascend to the Throne—will yield results which we and many others shall see extending through the various activities of millions upon millions of ages. Now we see only the tiny seed; afterwards we shall wonder at the giant tree. The value of those golden moments cannot be counted up by us. We only know that they will colour all eternity for those for whom we intercede. Out of the death of self and the culture of the spiritual life come forth fruit and foliage for the healing of the nations. This is the work denied to angels but given to human beings, who, suffering with Christ, shall also reign with Him.

"Strong in the power of his might," the Holy Spirit removes mountains of apparent impossibility, "because I go to the Father," said our Divine Intercessor. "All things are possible to him that believeth." "Greater things than these shall ye do." "Ask Me of things to come, concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands command ye Me," says the Almighty Sovereign of the Universe, to "things of no account, and things that are not." Dead to the world, they desire Christ's glory. "Ask of Me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance." "I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." Let us daily remember this command, and pray that God will baptize with the Holy Ghost people from among all nations.

The practical business of an intercessor is a noble destiny, leading through cycles of glory even during the earthly probation, as He in whom our life is hid was transfigured while He prayed. The mind may become one deep desire for the triumph and glory of the Saviour, and enter even here into his joy. Having his mind, nothing will satisfy us but perfect truthfulness in feeling as well as in word, for Christ Himself is the Truth. He answers more the desire of the heart than the words.

There is only one thing that travels more rapidly than light or electricity. It is prayer in the Spirit. "Before they call I will answer, and while they are yet speaking I will hear." It is through the power of the Holy Spirit. Let us thank the Almighty before we see the answers. "We know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him." Real spiritual success comes alone from God.

"The Spirit maketh intercession for us"; and "Christ ever liveth to make intercession." As "fellow-workers with God," let us be conscious of our consecration to this very practical calling. When writing busily some weeks ago, God called me apart. Stopping in the middle of a sentence, I went out upon the balcony. Beneath the stars that Egyptian night I listened intently; and silently I was taught that in Cairo I should be consecrated by God Himself an intercessor. I delayed my departure from Egypt. I felt certain that the call was not intended for me alone, but that it must be passed on to others, who will also listen to its voiceless prompting. May all intercessors enjoy the full privileges of their high calling in Christ Jesus! Four evenings before the Master had shown me that He wished to find "much fruit," and now He placed before me the means for producing the largest measure. "Be filled with the Spirit" is also his clear command. "Tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee."

One Easter morning, more than six years ago, I dedicated myself to God's service in a little chapel in Grasse, in the Maritime Alps, and now God has called me to more definite service. I earnestly ask the prayers of the readers of The Christian for "F. O. E." and all intercessors.

We learn much through failure. One plan after another drops out of the life, until only the things of God seem worth keeping. May the life be crowned, like the palm-tree, with fruitful intercession!

Nothing redeems the time so marvellously as prayer. An intercessor is able to "live a century within a year," the Lord working miracles of spiritual healing. "Pray for one another, that ye may be healed," says St. James. "She besought him . . . And Jesus said unto her, 'For this saying, go thy way; the devil is gone out of thy daughter.'"

Our great Example "went about doing good"; and He continually prayed to the Father. He showed us that active work and intercession should be combined. St. James tells us that "the effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." How much? "According to your faith be it unto you," said our Lord. St. James also teaches us that pure religion consists of active sympathy and unworldliness. An equal balance and just measure are what the Lord delights in. Not prayer without work, or work without intercession.

"I will go before you into Galilee." I believe in God's calls, and in acting upon them. One of these took me from Scotland to Japan five years ago. There I learnt that it is best to wait in each place until the Lord wishes one to remove somewhere else. The Lamb of God leads us among those for whom He wishes our intercessions. How easily He can work without our help, and what a privilege it is to be made just a willing slave of Jesus! I learnt in Japan that our visible works are very small things indeed compared with the spiritual miracles God will do through intercession, if we really love to follow Him.

The Apostles came "to Jesus, and told Him all things, both what they had done, and what they had taught." And He said unto them, "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile." He was followed by a great multitude. He healed their diseases, and then encouraged the Apostles to give away the five loaves and two small fishes—all that could be obtained there. It seemed very little to do, yet the result was the miracle which is recorded in the four Gospels. The very poor may have their mites increased, like the loaves and fishes, by the value of their intercessions. God looks not at the amount of the offering, but at the self-denial.

Then by a word from the mouth of God—which is always the bread of life—He answered the Apostles' wish that the people might have bread, by miraculously feeding five thousand men. So his spiritual miracles are worked when He sees that we really have the desire to do good, and, like his Apostles, are willing to distribute because He commands it. If we take care of our motives, God will take care of the results. Let us pray for five thousand or ten thousand parishioners, that God may nourish them with the bread of life, besides doing any little work in our power to help them in other ways. These efforts are the seeds of God's glorious miracles. When the boy handed to the disciples five barley loaves and two fishes, he no more imagined how celebrated they would become in sacred history, or how the Master would multiply them, than we imagine how much the Lord will make of true-hearted intercessions. We must believe that they will be answered, yet God gives far more than we ask or think. Infinite results are in the hands of the infinite God. He looks at the heart, and reads it like a book. "Give me thy heart," He says, with touching kindness. Then He puts all things into our hands. May He deepen our sympathies with our fellow-creatures! "Pray without ceasing," desire always the good of others and the glory of God. "I will give thee the desire of thine heart," is a promise that true intercessors may claim from the Father. He is always more willing to hear than we are to pray, yet He waits for our intercessions. These talks with Christ give us so much happiness, that we long to be no more a "foreigner on earth," but a citizen in heaven. F. O. E.

GEMS FROM DR. PARKER.

From Vol. XXIII. of "The People's Bible."

Christianity is crucifixion, self-dethronement, self-hatred, trust in Christ, death with Christ, resurrection with Christ; it is not a notion, but a sacrifice.

Christianity despises no one; Christianity is the shepherd that will not rest until the hundredth sheep be found. "Ninety-and-nine"—there is no music in these chiming syllables, because one of the flock has gone astray.

O preacher! every man is a congregation; the meanest, poorest creature that crouches within hearing distance is a nation—the world; know thy duty, and in Christ's great strength win the fight. Earnestness can always speak to the individual.

There is no affront that can be offered to the spirit of the Gospel more deadly than to withhold because the numbers are not overwhelming. If one soul is within earshot, he constitutes the supreme occasion of any ministry. The Gospel has thunder for the crowd, and whispers for the one listener.

He preaches to the times who says, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy-laden, and I, the Son of God, will give you rest." These are the eternal times, the other so-called times are flickering moments, changing their colour, changing their throb and pulse by an incalculable process; but the eternal need is forgiveness, the everlasting want is rest for the soul.

If any man want to follow Christ, he must first have his eyes opened. That was Christ's way in the days of his flesh. He did not say to blind men by the wayside, "Grope your way after Me, and we may see about your vision by-and-by." No; He stopped, gave eyes to the blind, and then passed on. Christians are not blind men, but men whose eyes have been divinely opened.

WITH JESUS IN THE MOUNT.

BY REV. DR. ELDER CUMMING.

Having read the account of the Transfiguration as given in Luke ix. 28-38, Dr. Cumming said: There are two scenes described for us in Holy Scripture, one in the Old Testament and one in the New Testament, which always seem to me to bear a great resemblance to each other. One was a dream and the other was a fact. The dream of Jacob at Bethel represented the heaven opened to the sight of man: a way by which heaven might be entered; the fact of Christ's Transfiguration given in the New Testament represents heaven brought down to earth. We have a picture first of Christ's return, and a picture of heaven behind it, represented in the words I have read.

This story of the Transfiguration is not entirely a thing of history; it is still a thing that is realised in the experience of many of God's people. There is very much the same difference between Jesus of Nazareth as He was seen from day to day by his disciples in his ordinary life and ministry, and the glory they saw on the mountain top at midnight, that there is between the ordinary sight of Jesus Christ by Christian people day by day in the Church of Christ now, and what those who love Jesus may see when they have a sight of his glory shown them here by the Holy Ghost. And because I believe we have already seen gleams of the vision set before us in this tent during the week, and because there is a fuller vision of it to be seen before the week is done, I ask you to go with me to-night, in so far as God may call us, to look upon this wondrous vision of the Transfiguration of Jesus Christ in the sight of his disciples.

It was night. The mountain rose close to the people. The disciples stood looking, and Jesus called those whom He would have to go up with Him to the mountain. The top of the hill of Skiddaw stands there at the side of this tent. Night is falling about us even now. Were the Lord Jesus to take three out of this multitude to go up with Him to behold his glory, who would these three be of all those who are gathered here to-night? I believe no surprise would be greater than the selection which the Lord would make from amongst us all. Perhaps the poorest, perhaps the most ignorant, perhaps the youngest, perhaps the one who feels the most useless, certainly I think the humblest, would be among them. Think of it. There is a sight of Christ here—there shall be to-night a sight of the glory of Christ within this place. There cannot but be; I rejoice to believe and forecast it. It may be that very few of us may see it. I cannot tell who they shall be; may it be you, may it be I, as God shall please. Oh, to be one of those that shall behold the glory of Jesus this night!

First of all, notice that in this story we have a record of a week of the ministry of Christ, over which absolute silence has fallen. Luke says "About an eight days after these sayings." Matthew and Mark say it was "after six days." There is the specification of a week—six free, entire days, not counting the seventh day which began and the eighth day which followed. Of all the proceedings of that week we have absolutely no record; but they must have been days of preparation for the wonderful sight and experience through which the Lord was to pass.

We have next a marvellous selection made. Let me refer to it again. There was a threefold selection made by our Lord. First, out of the multitude that heard the Lord speak, there were some selected as believers, as accepted of God for Christ's sake, who put their trust in Christ, and from that moment were saved souls. Then from the multitude who believed, Christ chose out twelve to be his apostles, followers, messengers, witnesses. But from the twelve apostles He selected three—Peter, James, John. Why? Not because they were naturally better than other men, or because there did not belong to them a fallen heart, or because they were unlike the others, or because his love is greater for some than for others. I believe if there was one reason on which we can lay our hand, and say, "That seems to be the principle of the selection," it is this—they were more fully yielded to Christ than any of the others. They had put themselves into the Lord's hand, to be, to go, to do exactly as He should please; that there was less resistance, less of the prominent self, less of the will that said, "Let me choose; let me go where I will." When He is about to show a marvellous sight, it is only the prepared ones that can go with Him to behold it. So He led these out from the crowd, out from the number of the disciples, and they approached the foot of the hill. There was not one who said, "Master, where goest Thou? What dost Thou want with me?" In absolute ignorance of what He was going to do with them, and the use He was going to make of them, they were as blindfolded to follow the footsteps of the Master, because He had said, "Come with Me." Has He been saying that to you at the Convention? Perhaps you begin to fear, "What will the Lord make of me? Dare I go with Jesus?" That is a question for every one of us to-night. Durst thou follow the Master, even if thou art the only one left? Dare you take his word for it, and go up the steep incline of the hill Difficulty, the hill of night, where the clouds fall, where the darkness is, where the awful solitude is made more awful by the presence of the Lord Himself? It is like Moses going up Sinai, and being alone there with God.

What next do we see? A watch in which these apostles have no part. No sooner had He taken them up than the claims of this poor miserable body—the weakness of the body which so many feel and lament, and which we feel keeps us back from the service of God so often—came upon the three. "They were heavy with sleep." And during the time they were heavy, something took place of which I suppose we have almost no record, and of which they saw nothing at all. I often hope and try to persuade myself that they did not actually fall asleep. They did so in Gethsemane undoubtedly, but possibly here they were only heavy and stupid with sleep. But during that time there was something they did not see; something they lost. Oh, how much we lose when we allow the weakness of the body to stand between us and Christ; when we fail to overcome it, and to say, "That too is in Christ's hand. Please God, the veil shall be rent, and through the opening of the veil I shall see the glory of the Master." They lost something because they had not faith to understand and see.

What happened next with them? "When they were fully awake"—so the word is rendered in the Revised Version—"they beheld his glory." Have you noticed the double description of the effect of the glory upon the Lord? There is, first, the appearance of his face: "his countenance shone as the light." That was the light from within. Nothing could make a man's face shine except something within the man's heart. Many of us here can remember how in years gone past there used to be on this platform, and to sit in the chairman's seat, one whose face veritably shone,* as we sat in wonder and looked at it in its beauty. It was the only face I think I ever saw that reminded me of what is said of Stephen, that his face was like that of an angel as he approached within the shadow of death. But my Lord's face on the Mount of Transfiguration was not like an angel. Matthew tells us that his face shone as the sun; and that was the word of a man accustomed to the sun in the East, and not the poor sun as we see him here. It reminds me only of one thing recorded in the Word—of the sight that Saul of Tarsus saw on the way to Damascus when he beheld a light greater than the light of the sun at noonday. What Saul saw on the Damascus road the three disciples saw on Mount Tabor. It was the glory of God within, bursting through the veil, the thin tabernacle of flesh, the hidden Deity of the Saviour (the glory of it renounced for a time when He had emptied Himself) that shone on this one occasion, through his face, as He was in colloquy with his Father Himself.

But there was another light that shone. His outer garments shone with a light so exceeding white as no fuller on earth could white them. That was a light from without, not from within. Light does not shine through garments; it shines upon garments, and is reflected. I suppose if a light is sufficiently brilliant, all other colours go in it to intensity, and it is only white. This was the glory of the Father's face shining upon the Son.†

When they were awake then they beheld his glory. There appeared unto Him Moses and Elias talking with Him. Talking of what? This is the third thing I ask you to notice—that there was communion with God in which the disciples could

* The late Canon Harford Battersby.

† Was it not rather the inherent glory of the Son of Man shining through his garments? It could scarcely be said that He was transfigured before them, if the light of God only shone upon his garments. The transfiguration was an anticipation of the Son of Man coming in his kingdom, in his own glory, and his Father's that of the holy angels.—Ed.

ve no part. The communion was between Moses, ias, and Christ. I believe there was another and re sacred and holy communion—that between us and the Father. But Moses and Elias were sent, and they communed with Jesus about his case which He should accomplish. The word dered decease literally is "exodus." We speak it as decease, but it seems to me it must have ered Calvary, resurrection, and ascension—exodus m earth and entrance into heaven. The positions h of Moses and Joshua were realised here—Moses o led out, Joshua who led in. They communed h the Lord Jesus, but, sad to say, Peter, James, l John were not admitted to it. It was too deep l high for them at that time. Blessed be God, position is better than that of these three dis- les. However few may be selected out of this ltitude to have to-night a sight of the glory of rist, they shall not be mere onlookers. When holy ransomed ones in glory talk with Jesus ut Calvary and about Ascension, they shall have t in the communion. We may talk to the rified Lord about this exodus. We may hear at He has to say about his way through and out leath.

What next do we find? Peter saw the vision en it was beginning to go. As the visitors were arting he interposed with a request, "Master, s good for us to be here." I should think it was. e whole Church of Christ joins Peter in that part t at least. Yes, the half-sleeping disciple is awake ast, and only when it is about to go he begins to derstand how good it is. "Master, let us make e three tabernacles"—three tents to abide in— ne for Thee, one for Moses, and one for Elias." at can he possibly have meant? It is the word d in the New Testament and in the Septuagint ignify the very Tabernacle or Tent of Testimony lf. But I cannot bring myself to think that er meant that there were to be three Tabernacles which Jesus was to be worshipped and Moses and as were to be worshipped. I believe it was the ught of abiding. Let us always see Jesus as the rified One; always know that I am so near to rist, and to the great lawgiver himself, and beside great prophet Elijah. All that was in the Law the Prophets was here represented, and they are company with Jesus.

Three tabernacles—that was Peter's request. prayers are often very poor and mistaken. I metimes think our prayers are just about as poor rt of our Christian life as I know of. I will tell why. I think the most selfish thing that we as a rule, is seen in our prayers. They almost ays begin with "me, me, me," and almost ays finish with "me, me, me." Then with our ily, our children, our dear ones; then with our k and our concerns; then we bring in those at stance; then perhaps the heathen world; and we may bring in at the very last, if we do not et it altogether, the cause of Israel. I say again I do not know anything in which the selfish- s of the Christian Church appears more than in r prayers. God forgive us all that it should o.

oor Peter is full of mistakes in his prayer. But tice one remarkable thing—that this mistake of r is the opportunity that God the Father takes ive a further vision of the glory of Christ, ch would not have been seen at all but for this ake. There would have been no testimony from heavenly cloud, no voice of God the Father, for that mistake. It was in connection with it the Father spake from the cloud, "This is My ved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye ." There are three things here. First, "My ." See the difference between the Son and the servants. Do you know that difference in your t and life? Here we have a present indwelling iour. Moses and Elias can never be that for "My Son, in whom I am well pleased," said heavenly voice. Never in the whole range of since Adam fell has God said that about any . He said it twice about Jesus Christ: once at baptism, and here on the Mount of Transfigura- . And I observe that Peter, in his Second tle, looks back on the past, and, though he seems ave forgotten the day he heard this word at st's baptism, he says, "This voice which came heaven we heard, when we were with Him in holy mount."

he third part of the testimony was "Hear ye ." That is to say, the Lord Jesus Christ is the reme Teacher, the only Revealer of God the ner. Yes, let us realise and understand it. But for Jesus Christ and his revelation in the Old Testament and in the New, we should have known absolutely nothing of God. Apparently, to our finite faculties God is not to be apprehended except through the revelation in his Son. For the truth of this I appeal to the fact that all heathen religions are a perfect caricature of the name and nature and character of God. It is in Jesus Christ alone that we can know God.

It was so in the past; it is so now; it shall be so throughout eternity. "I am the Way." "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." We cannot understand God except through Jesus Christ. How intelligible He is to mortal men, and how close we find ourselves to Him! Oh to realise that He is in our midst this night. If our mortal eyes could but be touched with his eye-salve, we should see in the midst of us the most wondrous sight that creation has ever witnessed—the glorified, crucified and ascended Christ. Even without the physical mortal vision we may see Him, may behold his glory. Do we not behold his glory, the glory as of the Only Begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth? Is not the whole object of this Convention that we may see the glory of Jesus? His glory as God, as man, as the God-man, as mediator; his glory in the manger, on the mount, on the cross, even in the grave, and his glory at the right hand of the Father? Come with me that we may look upon his glory. Hear his voice, ye yielded ones. Only an absolute yielding surrender and subjection to Him will enable us to receive that blessing, as He says to us: "Come with Me up yonder hill where the shadows are falling, and ye shall behold my glory."

PROFANING THE LORD'S NAME.

BY REV. G. H. C. MACGREGOR.

We are gathered here in the pursuit of holiness. The object of all such conventions is profoundly practical. It is well that we should keep this in mind, and should remember the steps by which God leads his people into fuller blessing. I believe one of the first things God calls for on our part is thorough, honest, deep examination of our own lives. There must be the most absolute honesty with God about our present condition before there can be any hope of improving it. It is only when we are willing to take this position that God will meet us and lead us on to more glorious experiences and more fruitful service. The process may be painful, but let us welcome it. If God takes us in hand, the deeper the work of searching the more abiding will be the blessing that will follow. If there is one thing that I fear for myself, and for those who are dear to me, when at such a Convention, it is that they slur over the work of the opening meetings, and do not give God the chance to break them all to pieces, and humble them in the dust; and lest they should snatch at a peace and joy which, if it is sought before God has prepared us for receiving it, can only prove

SHALLOW AND UNABIDING.

Turn with me to the very solemn verse in Ezek. xxxvi. 20, "When they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them: These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land." This text is taken from one of the most pathetic passages in one of the most pathetic books of the whole Bible. It contains God's lament over the faithlessness of his people; his sigh of sorrow for their refusal to fulfil the purpose for which they were chosen, and to walk worthy of their calling. To read this chapter aright implies a knowledge of the whole history of Israel. You will find that in this chapter the history is summed up, and it contains God's vindication of Himself for his treatment of a rebellious nation.

You remember what the history was up to this point. God had come to them in Egypt when they were no nation, downtrodden slaves of Pharaoh; with a mighty hand and outstretched arm He had delivered them. They had seen the wonders of God in the land of Egypt. He had welded their scattered tribes into a nation, and had led them forth towards the promised land. Then He entered into covenant with them, and chose them for a very definite purpose. He meant that their life as a whole, and that of each individual Israelite, should be a revelation of the truth of God; as Jeremiah beautifully puts it: God chose Israel "that they might be unto Me for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory" (xiii. 11). What is more important, God desired that this peculiarity of character should be of such a kind that whenever a Gentile saw a Jew he should say, "What a wonderful God He must be to have such a people as this; happy art thou, O Israel, whose God is the Lord." They were to be God's representatives in the world, so that men were to judge what Jehovah was from what they were What a glorious calling: to have the honour and name of God entrusted to them.

How did they fulfil their calling? What a sad story it is. They were meant to be the religious leaders of the world; to be the apostles of monotheism in an idolatrous age. Yet they became so enamoured of idols, that they outdid the very heathen in their idolatrous devotion. The prophet asks with scorn, "Whose graven images did excel those of Jerusalem and Samaria?" They were meant to be the leaders of the world in civil and social matters. God gave them a law fitted to produce

A HEALTHY AND VIGOROUS NATIONAL LIFE.

And if Israel had only kept up to it, they might have been the model on which all the states in the world would have been founded. But they forgot the law, and trampled it under foot. There is nothing more instructive to the reader of the Old Testament than the terrible indictments which the prophets bring against Israel. "They sell the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes; they pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor" (Amos ii. 6, 7). This went on until we are told in this chapter that God could stand it no longer. There burst upon them the fury and wrath of the very God who had called them to be his, and they were swept out of his land.

Is not the application very evident, very searching and solemn? What Israel was to Jehovah, that Christians are to Christ. The very words used about us are used about Israel. We are chosen to be Christ's, and to show forth his praise. "Ye are a chosen generation, a peculiar people." Why? That we may be to Christ for a people, and for a name, and for a praise, and for a glory. As it has often been said, we are to be the world's Bible, when the world will read no other. Christ has told us that men will judge of what He is by what we are; that He has committed to us the keeping of his holy Name. Surely, therefore, it is our duty to live as like Christ as possible. We are so to live that men will say of us Christians, "These are the people of the Lord." They will take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus. That is what the world expects of us. Even unsaved men are splendid teachers of Christians. Without being great readers of the Bible, in a country like this men have come to know a great deal about Jesus Christ. Many who utterly ignore his claims to be Divine, admire and reverence Him for the beauty and goodness of his life. They know that we who are Christians claim to stand in a very peculiar relation to Him, and therefore

THEY EXPECT CERTAIN THINGS OF US.

Because we profess to be the followers of Him who knew not where to lay his head, they expect that we shall care little for money, and shall be less covetous than other men. Because the world knows that Christ was truthful it expects that we shall be truthful; because He was kind, gentle, loving, patient, it expects that these graces shall appear in our lives. The quarrelsomeness, ill-temper, and selfishness which it condones in others, it sternly condemns as inconsistencies in the Christian. The world is very stern in its judgments of those who profess to belong to Christ. Look at its judgments of the way Christian men and women take their pleasure. The world has its own way of enjoying itself. There are certain things in which it finds pleasure, and which it counts right—horse-racing, gambling, dancing, theatre-going, and such-like. It is angry if you find fault with it for doing so; but it despises the minister of religion who goes to the theatre; it laughs at the clergyman who is seen in the ballroom, or is found at the card-table. As with ministers, so with professing Christians generally. The world will accept your company, but when your back is turned it will laugh at you. It feels that if we believe what we say we believe, and if Christ has satisfied us, we would not have to seek our joy in the world, but would get it elsewhere.

But there is something far more solemn even than this. What I feel so sorely is this—that the world judges of Christ by our life. And it has a right to do it. Do not misunderstand me. We say that Christ is not only a Teacher, but a Saviour. We preach not a dead Christ, but a living Christ. We offer Him to the world as One who is not only able to blot out the past, but able to deliver from the dominion of sin in the present. We preach Christ—and we can do it, thank God—as a complete Saviour to the uttermost of those who come to God by Him. But the world judges the worth of these statements by the extent to which we ourselves have experienced that deliverance. It is no use preaching to men that Christ can save unless they see that He has saved us. It is no use our telling them that He can satisfy them if they see by our faces that He has not satisfied us. They judge Christ, therefore, by what He is to us, and

WE HAVE NO RIGHT TO COMPLAIN.

This is what the world has been doing, and what has been the result? What opinion has the world of Christ to-day as the outcome of our lives? The world sees men who profess to be the followers of Him who had not where to lay his head, going into business for the sake of a few hundred pounds; and doing things that an honest unbeliever would shrink from. The world sees those who profess to be the followers of Him who came to seek and save the lost, making their money by a traffic that is sending thousands down to a drunkard's hell. The world sees ministers of religion, who profess to stand in intimate relation to Him whose heart was full of love, quarrelling with one another, and hardly on speaking terms. The world has seen professing Christians guilty of slander, back-biting, evil speaking, gossip, malice, pride, envy, touchiness, jealousy, and self-seeking of all kinds; and because the world has seen all these it is asking what kind of a Saviour Christ is.

It has seen men and women who profess that there is no name given among men whereby men can be saved, grudging a few shillings for the conversion of the heathen. They sing,

> Were the whole realm of nature mine.
> That were a present far too small;

and then give the inevitable threepenny bit in the collection. And what does the world say? Oh, it is unspeakably sad. They say Christ cannot be the Saviour He professes to be; else God's followers could not be what they are. Because our lives have been so weak and powerless and so full of sin, the world is thinking meanly of Jesus Christ. The Son of the God who loved us and gave Himself for us, and put his precious name on us that we might bring Him glory, is being sneered at and scoffed at because of our life. Surely we might have spared Him that. Surely He suffered enough when on earth, and we should have spared Him the pain of being crucified afresh and put to an open shame. Oh that God would break us down as we think of the mean thoughts that men and women have of Christianity and of Christ because of the lives we have been living. There is ground for deep abasement and contrition in this solemn searching thought.

But all true repentance is practical; so let us see the way out of this mess in which we have landed ourselves.

GOD NEVER LEAVES MAN IN THE DITCH.

How is the thing to be cured? In the same way as the condition of Israel was cured, and which is outlined briefly in this chapter. The first way out of this position is by a new consecration. A great deal of Israel's sin sprang from the fact that they forgot whose they were. They were the people of Jehovah, and they were living as though they were the people of Moloch. The first step in restoration was when they began to remember that they belonged to God. So it will be with us. The recollection of God's infinite goodness and love will make us ashamed of the past.

Then there comes the new call, "I will sanctify my great name which was profaned among the heathen. . . And the heathen shall know that I am the Lord when I shall be sanctified in you before their eyes. For I will take you from among the heathen and gather you out of all countries and will bring you into your own land" (ver. 23, 24). The moment you reconsecrate yourselves to the Lord He will give you a new and deeper fellowship, and a more fruitful service. Then also there will come new cleansing. God will unveil at the same time the power of the Lord Jesus to cleanse. When God reveals the sin of our life, do not let us try to put it away ourselves; let us ask God to put it out. That is one of the lessons we have to learn. We cannot cleanse ourselves. But what a magnificent promise we have here: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you and ye shall be clean; from all your filthiness and from all your idols will I cleanse you." After cleansing there comes what I would call confirmation—to preserve the alliteration. He stablishes the soul: "Ye shall be my people, and I will be your God."

Last of all there is contrition. It is only when the soul has been restored from backsliding, and when the life of God, like a mighty deep full river, is flowing over the soul; when the vision of Jesus Christ in his glory has anew broken in upon us, that we see and feel the full horror of our sin. "Then shall ye loathe yourselves in your own sight because of your iniquities and your abominations." So if we are to be blessed with all the blessings God has in his hands for us we must get down before Him and confess our unworthiness, our sinfulness, and our shortcomings. Then upon us from the presence of the Lord showers of blessing shall fall.

A SPIRIT-FILLED MAN.

BY REV. CHARLES INWOOD.

"Barnabas was a good man, and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith" (Acts ii. 24).

The filling of the Holy Ghost is the question of questions for all the Lord's saved people to-day. For this reason: Jesus Christ never gets his rightful place in the heart and life and service of God's people until they know what it is to be filled with the Holy Ghost. The more the Lord has turned my own thought to this question the more have I felt the awful sacredness of it. It seems to grow on one as we look prayerfully into God's Word for guidance and teaching. And as God commits a message to me for you to-day, in the quiet of my own soul (for thank God there is quiet there) I hear his voice saying, and I trust you will hear it, "The place whereon thou standest is holy ground." I pray that we may realise the great sacredness of this truth as in the Spirit's own presence we think a little while about Him.

We will look at one aspect of the great wide question—an aspect of it all the more simple and easy to be understood because we see it in the person, character, and life of one man. It would be very interesting and helpful to us to think of this subject in a general sense; but possibly the message this morning may be more helpful to some, because we shall see how the filling of the Holy Spirit affected the thought and purpose and life and service of one real, fallible, human soul like ourselves. As we look into it we shall see that in his case at all events the results of the filling of the Spirit were very practical, very unconventional, very revolutionising, very far-reaching, and very bewildering to the unspiritual man.

For the first recorded result of the filling of the Spirit in the case of Barnabas we will turn to Acts iv. 31-37. Here we have the first reference to Barnabas and his conduct, of whom we read that "having land he sold it, and brought the money and laid it at the Apostles' feet." So the first recorded result, in his case, of the filling of the Spirit was this, that the man

DELIBERATELY GAVE AWAY ALL HIS PROPERTY.

It was not a momentary act of enthusiasm. Sometimes in a missionary meeting, when our hearts are powerfully stirred by some voice from a distant land, we get so moved that we take our purses, and whatever may be in them we empty out into the collection plate. That I say may be merely a momentary enthusiasm. But this man had land, and there were certain legal forms to go through in the sale and transfer of it. If it had been momentary enthusiasm, I imagine all that enthusiasm would have cooled down before he got through what is sometimes the very cooling process of selling and transferring property in land.

It was a new departure in the matter of giving, and one which I am bound to say has not become very popular since. No doubt, then, as now, the action would be sure to be criticised. A great many people could not possibly understand it. Some people probably hearing about it would talk to another in this way: "Have you heard about Barnabas?" "No, what is it?" "Why, he went to a meeting the other day, and whatever came over him I don't know, but the man has gone and deliberately parted with all his property, so that he has no money in the world. You may depend on it the man's reason is giving way; no sane man would part with all his property like that." Then probably some others would say, and we know how the world echoes this to-day, "Well now, Barnabas, I think you have gone to an extreme. I believe in liberality, in devoting a portion of your wealth the Lord, but I do not believe in going to suc great extreme." Very likely someone said to h "Oh yes, it is all very well while you are yo and strong, but what about when you get old, w you cannot do anything, and all your property gone and you are without a penny in the wor As surely as I am talking to you to-day you will gret this by and by."

And yet, as we will see, this act, all unknown Barnabas I believe, was the first of a series of t put to him in his training for

to which God can call a saved and sanctified —the work of preaching the Gospel to the heat who have never heard of Jesus. First of a proved the real sincerity of the man. People mi question his wisdom, but nobody in the presenc that fact could doubt that, at all events, he sincere in the matter. Then it proved his fit for missionary work in one very important part lar. A man of wealth who cannot keep back an his money from God is in splendid training for larger sacrifices that God's will may demand. course, too, it set him free to obey the call, when in his providence uttered that call in the man's s Otherwise, when the call came to him later on might have said, "Oh yes, I should like to en in this work; I should like to go with Paul preach the Gospel; but you know I have my l my property; who is to look after that? I ca leave it to take care of itself." I daresay there troubles with property and land then. And if nabas had taken that position, in all probability Christian world would never have heard his na and no soul would ever have been impelled by example to lay all at God's feet, to be used in power of the Spirit only for the glory of God.

But the practical truth for us here (and I be it is one reason why God has moved me to sa is this—we have a larger number of wealthy well-to-do Christian people at this Convention perhaps in any other Christian gathering in United Kingdom. This becomes an opportun ay, it places upon us who are God's messenge tremendous responsibility, and one that al makes us tremble as we look at it. The truth us is this, that the real filling of the Spirit tou a man's purse just as definitely as it touches other part of a man's spirit and life. It pu changed aspect on life. The man who is r filled with God the Holy Ghost learns as r before to write across his stocks, his bank-book, all his possessions, "Not my own." He no lo uses that wealth to pamper self; he no longer it to gratify his own desires, or to live a life o travagance. He says now, as never before: " only a steward. All this wealth is God's wealth mine. And as I would not keep a steward tw four hours who would use half of my possession himself, so as God's steward I dare not claim right to use for myself, apart from the Lord, a s penny of what I possess."

As soon as the Lord's people waken up to th I know it is very practical, and it may seem r prosy—but as soon as Christians are awake to fact, so soon in two directions. First, we shall not as ser of God have our hearts wrung as we listen t pitiful appeals for money to carry on the L work. What is more important, the Chri churches of our land will be less likely to hav course to questionable—ay, to positively sin methods of raising money to carry on what call the Lord's work. (General murmurs o proval.) The wealth of the world belongs to and if God cannot get control of that portion in the possession of his own saved people, God and save those who are keeping it back from H

This is practical. Some of you have come t Convention to claim the filling of the Holy Gh perhaps you may have claimed it. But if, h as you think claimed that filling, you go back keep as tight and close and selfish a grip of money as before; if while you may be a little earnest in your praying, a little louder in you lelujahs, more regular in attending your chur there is no real giving back of your wealth to the world that has a keen eye for consistenc not believe that you have received any real ble at the Convention at all. I do not mean to say every man who possesses wealth is to go and with it all in this particular fashion. But I do to say that you are to be willing to do even that if God makes it clear for you. I do also say that you are henceforth to use it, and all of it, as a sacred trust from God for his glory and in the extension of his kingdom in the world.

Now let us turn to another point. "When Saul was come to Jerusalem, he essayed to join himself to the disciples, but they were all afraid of him, and believed not that he was a disciple. But Barnabas took him and brought him to the Apostles, and declared unto them how he had seen the Lord in the way" (Acts ix. 26, 27). One does not wonder that these disciples were afraid of Saul of Tarsus. Probably the very mention of his name in their little gatherings sent a kind of uneasy tremor into their hearts. He had been the most systematic, the most able, and the most successful persecutor of his day. So when they heard that Saul, or Paul, professed to be converted, they evidently thought he was doing what is done sometimes to-day. If there be some secret society, the Government, in view of the interests of the people, will send a spy, supported from the secret service money, to worm out the inner secrets of the particular organisation. I imagine that these Christians thought Saul was doing something like that. He had tried his ordinary method, and now, as with a master stroke, he was going to pose as a Christian, to get into the inner circle, and so sweep off to prison and to death the men and women who had hitherto escaped.

But there was one man not afraid of Saul, if all the rest were. Barnabas took him, brought him to the Apostles, and told how the Lord had met him in the way. The one truth which I want to leave with you before I pass on is this—towards young converts is one of the most delicate proofs of the indwelling of the Spirit in fulness in the believer's soul. There are many Christian people who do not know what it is to have suspicions swept out of them. I hear people say sometimes, when a great work of God has been wrought amongst the children in our Sunday-schools and families—most hopeful work as it seems to me—but I hear them say, "Oh yes, but you know they are only children; I would like to leave them for a year or so, and watch them, and if they turn out well I will believe that their conversion is genuine." Poor lambs! they are to get all the blasts and storms of the world without a shelter in any fold, and if they survive it all then you will believe that a real work of grace has been wrought in their hearts. Another will say "I believe in conversion, but do you know somehow I have great doubts about drunkards being truly converted." In our country of Ireland I am sorry to say we hear people say, "I am a bit dubious about Roman Catholics who profess conversion." Sometimes we hear them say the same thing about work among the Jews.

Sometimes this suspicion takes an ecclesiastical form. We are suspicious of anybody who professes to be converted in another section of the Christian Church, or, for that matter, outside all the sections of the Church. Now, this suspicion blunts and dulls the spiritual insight. It renders a man incapable of interpreting—ay, even of recognising—the need of those dear souls who have just been translated out of darkness into God's marvellous light. You need not wonder if these young converts do not go to you when temptations smite them right and left. It is a kind of spiritual instinct, I think, that prevents them; you have not said you are suspicious of them, but they know it. The dear child who has just been brought to God is no more going to you for sympathy than a man shivering with cold will rush to an icicle, and put his arms round it. It is a blessed thing when the Spirit of God comes and sweeps out of a man every breath of suspicion towards the newly-saved soul.

Let us go on to Acts xi. 20-24. There we have another aspect of almost the same truth, and yet not quite the same. There had been in Antioch a glorious revival of religion. Souls had been saved in large numbers. Tidings of the revival reached the Church at Jerusalem, and the elders very wisely said, "We will send someone down to look into the matter and, as far as possible, to guide and help in this important work." So they sent Barnabas. I wonder if they remembered that in the case of Saul Barnabas was right and they were wrong? Possibly they did. They said Barnabas is exactly the man to go to Antioch to look into the state of things and people there. We read, "When he had come to Antioch and had seen the grace of God." "Seen the grace of God!" Why, what is the grace of God like? Can you see it with your physical eyes? No! Can you see it with your intellectual eyes? No!

THE PROFOUNDEST INTELLECT IS BLIND

in presence of spiritual phenomena, when the eyes of the soul are closed. It is spiritual vision that is needed. Barnabas knew what the grace of God is like. He knew where to find it, and he knew it when he saw it. It was not a revival under the great Mr. So-and-so that he saw. We hear of Mr. So-and-so's work. What Barnabas saw was the grace of God. He had spiritual discernment. There are men who have come to Keswick this week who will go away and say, "Oh, it is nothing but just a kind of nice religious picnic." They do not see that God is here, and if you do not see that you do not see much. You may see the speakers and the mass of people, and you may go home and be not a bit the better, if you do not see God Himself in the glory of his grace.

What else do we find about Barnabas? Being a Spirit-filled man, he was glad when he saw the grace of God. Every saved soul is not glad over a work of grace. It makes some in our congregations terribly cross and uneasy when a revival breaks out even in their own church. I will tell you what is more common—not to rejoice before God over a revival if it happens to be in the neighbouring church, while ours is being left seemingly high and dry. It is easy enough to praise God for a revival under your own ministry, and in your own church. But when there is a great work up there in the parish church, and souls are being saved, it is not so easy to say: "O God, I praise Thee, I rejoice in Thee that Thou art saving souls every day there." It is only the Spirit of God filling the soul that will enable a man really to do it.

Being a Spirit-filled man, Barnabas had the very best counsel to give to the young converts. Those of us who have had much experience of evangelistic work know what it is to leave a church in which souls have been saved; and to leave it with fear and trembling because there were so few ready to give the needful advice to those who had just accepted the Saviour. How people blunder when they go and talk to young converts as to how they are to keep themselves! Sometimes this advice takes a sectarian form. If they belong to one church, you will hear people say: "The first thing you must do is to be confirmed and go to Holy Communion." That is all right in its place, as I shall show you presently. Another says: "Now you must get the Shorter Catechism and make yourself master of that." That is a helpful thing too—oh yes it is. I say that because I do not belong exactly to the church that would give that advice. Another says to the convert: "The first thing you must do is to be baptized—immersed." All right, I say again, in its way. Another says: "Well, now you must put on the coal-scuttle bonnet and take The War Cry." And some dear souls when they get hold of a new convert, say, "Now you must come out from all the churches." Oh, they are very "exclusive." I am so sorry for them. I believe I shall have a glorious time with them in heaven; but sometimes I do long to have a bit of real fellowship with them on the way. I do indeed. Every child of God ought to be able to enjoy

FELLOWSHIP WITH EVERY OTHER CHILD OF GOD.

Others again will say when one is converted: "The first thing you must do is to get to class meeting; to pay your penny a week and your shilling a quarter." Yes, I have heard it; but I am thankful to say I have never said it to a convert yet.

Don't you see what Barnabas did? He put Jesus Christ first. The supreme thing for a saved soul all along the way is Jesus, Jesus, Jesus. The secret of happy continuance, and of growth, and of power, and of Godliness, is day by day cleaving to Him with the whole heart. If you do not put Him in his true place, all these other things are dry channels. But if Jesus Christ has his right place they become real channels of blessing to the soul. So Barnabas exhorted them, whatever else they did, or whatever else they neglected, to cleave to Jesus Christ.

So "much people was added to the Lord." God sealed the testimony of his servant by a still greater ingathering of souls immediately after. And the Spirit-filled man sent for Saul to come and preach the Gospel at Antioch, where he himself was being used. There was no jealousy of another Christian brother. Saul could do a work that Barnabas could not do, and Barnabas was glad to bring Saul to do his own work, and was not at all jealous of him in the doing of it.

Look now at Acts xiii. 2, "As they ministered to the Lord and fasted, the Holy Ghost said: 'Separate Me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them.'" When God finds a church or congregation similarly exercised, then God's call comes to the church as well as to the member of it whom He desires to use. But there are many congregations that are not alive; and God would never dream of saying to a dead church, "Separate Me So-and-so and So-and-so to preach the Gospel among the heathen." Though God does not care to go into dead churches He may call a living member out of it for work, but the church knows nothing of it. I know a devoted Christian missionary to-day who was years ago a member of a church. God called him to mission work, but God never mentioned it to the church. I venture to believe that there are not two people in that church who know that the man was ever a member of their church.

When God finds a church all alive, humble, reverent, waiting before God, then He says, "Separate; separate." You will see partly the reason of it. If God were to say to some of these churches, "Separate So-and-so and So-and-so," the churches would reply in a moment, "We cannot spare them." I know one sainted girl toiling for God in Africa to-day. God had used her wonderfully in a blessed sphere of service in Ireland. God spoke to her and said, "Go out and serve Me yonder;" but some of the best Christians I know said she ought not to go, as she was one of the most useful workers they had, and they could not spare her. That is God's order. He does not come to the drones and say, "I want you to go to China or Africa." What use would they be? God singles out loyal and devoted in serving Him at home. Then He gives the church at home a chance of joining in the sacrifice involved in all true missionary work. It becomes not merely the sacrifice of the member who is to go, but a real sacrifice on the part of those who gladly say, "Go in the name of the Lord."

MEN AND WOMEN WHO ARE THE MOST FAITHFUL,

"Separate Me Barnabas and Saul." Notice that God named his men. He is very particular about his men. Nothing is left to haphazard in God's choice or call for work, either at home or abroad. God called them because He knew they would obey, and would obey in the power of the Spirit for the glory of God. That teaches this truth, which I desire to emphasise: God's choice of men is determined not by intellectual, but by spiritual equipment. Scholarship, culture, great intellectual power are being largely set aside by God to-day in the most spiritual conquests that are being won in the world. Why? Not because He is averse to these things. No, no. Not because He cannot use them. God can use the ripest scholarship, the largest natural gifts, the greatest brain power He ever endowed a rational being with. But He cannot use the man who, having these things, has nothing else. So He sets them aside. A man may have the wisdom of Solon and the eloquence of Demosthenes, but if the Spirit is not in him, God cannot use him for spiritual work. If he be a man of no intellectual gifts, and as ignorant as dear old Billy Bray was, if he is full of the Holy Ghost, God can use him to do glorious work for Him.

I am almost tired of hearing people, when we ask them to do a bit of aggressive work, reply, "Well, but, you know, I am only a hewer of wood." That is a poor life-calling, I admit—only a hewer of wood. It seems to me as if the supply is very much larger than the demand. We cannot get enough work to do to fill up the time, and so we go striking at one another. Oh, it is nothing to smile at, friends. Think of saved men and women spending half their time hitting one another. Oh, that we may have a truce of God here to-day! Hewers of wood! Yes, because most of our Christian people are so poorly equipped spiritually that that is the only bit of work God can entrust to them. But it does not follow, because you are a hewer of wood, that that is WHAT GOD DESIRES YOU TO BE.

There are people here we can hardly coax to do more than take the chair at a meeting once a year or so. They do almost nothing, when they ought to be out in China, or Africa, or India. When I listen to the awful moan of 800 millions who never heard of the Saviour who saves me, I feel it is something awful to see hundreds and thousands and tens of thousands of saved men and women content with doing the smallest bit of work at home, while these 800 million heathen are rushing to eternity, having never heard of Jesus Christ. If you have felt the power of the Holy Ghost at this convention, God will call you and qualify you to do work, either at home or abroad, which till now you have never dreamed would be possible to you.

Just one other scene. In Acts xiv. 11-15 we have a record of where the cripple had been healed. We read that the priest of Jupiter brought oxen and garlands into the gates, and would have done sacrifice with the people. A sudden and extraordinary rush of heathen popularity, the greatest man in the city, and great crowds along with him, bringing garlands and sacrifices, ready and eager to treat Paul and Barnabas as gods. How did they meet it? Being filled with the Spirit, these men were able to take at its true value—which was nothing—the sudden popularity which greeted them in that heathen town.

One of the perils which beset our churches today is this: the craving after a series of sensations. We think if we can only draw a bigger crowd by a sensation than somebody else did by another, that that indicates growth, and we are all right. There are many Christian people who, if they get a crowd once in a while, their first thought would be: "We must turn this to practical account; we must take up a collection," or something of that sort. They are drawing on the passing popularity of a Christ-rejecting world. We are in far graver danger when the world calls us gods, than when it pelts us with stones, and calls us fanatics, devils, or fools. The most subtle peril that besets us now is

THE PERIL OF POPULARITY.

I am afraid lest even this Keswick movement which God is using so gloriously should become popular with the people who do not want a full Saviour. Only men and women filled with the Spirit will be absolutely dead to the popularity and praise of men and women who do not believe in our risen glorified Lord.

Perhaps you say, "Oh, all this is in the Bible; these men were different from us." I am so glad that the last reference to Barnabas presents him to us in a light that shows a touch of kinship between him and me. He and Paul, you know, had a sharp contention and they separated. That is the last sight we get of him. The comfort is here. I do not intend to excuse what Barnabas did, but it does show me that Barnabas was fallible. The man who knows what it is to be filled with the Spirit does not become infallible from the filling. I know that I am fallible enough, and this shows me that if Barnabas was really and truly a frail, erring mortal, a sinful man liable to fall, like me, then thank God I may be as full of the Holy Ghost as he was.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending August 11:—Sun., 5, St. John ii. 1-12; Mon., 6, ii. 13-25; Tues., 7, iii. 1-13; Wed., 8, iii. 14-24; Thurs., 9, iii. 25-36; Fri., 10, iv. 1-14; Sat., 11, iv. 15-30.

THE CHRISTIAN HELPFUL UNION has been formed to promote a knowledge of the Word of God. Members learn daily a text from a stated book in the Old or New Testaments. A list of the selected book is sent to members half-yearly. A small donation yearly meets the expenses incurred. Further particulars and a card of membership may be had (two stamps) from Miss Maxwell, 28, Eccleston-square, S.W.

For the Young.

A SUMMER SUGGESTION.

I suppose there is not one of us who revels in the fresh bright green and glorious flowers on the outskirts of our cities, and especially of London, who would not enjoy them all the more could we but share them with some less fortunate, who live and toil amid the grime and suitriness close by, without a thought of them. How many thousands of children have no idea of what a meadow means, have never rolled on the grass, have never plucked a blossom from a hedgerow! It is only when we see their behaviour when they have an opportunity of tasting what we find so sweet that we can in any way realise what this deprivation means to them. Yes, we would all like to give and receive such a treat, but the question is how to manage it.

It is very well if we can subscribe to help somebody else to take a party of children out, but it is infinitely better if we can take them out ourselves. So for the benefit of others I will tell of an experiment which has been tried successfully in Hampstead. The plan is very simple, and gives as much pleasure to hosts as to guests. Some of those who have helped have been domestic servants, others clerks, and some have been still at school.

The first step is to enlist the assistance of a number of volunteers, each of whom undertakes to collect or subscribe the sum of ten special rail or tram fares, to provide tea for ten children, and to take charge of that number on a given afternoon, probably a Saturday. Each volunteer takes charge of his or her guests at the station, entertains them where or how it may be most convenient, and brings them to the appointed rendezvous at a time agreed. Other friends are asked to entertain the adults who bring the children. Volunteers can very well be gathered from the local Christian Endeavour, Time and Talent, Young People's Guild, and other societies, whose members can again secure the help of outside friends.

The second step is to select some conveniently-situated mission or other agency, and to invite it to send the desired number of children by a given train or tram, in charge of sufficient adults to bring them and take them home safely—say, two to every fifty—mentioning that during the afternoon they will be as free to enjoy themselves as the children, and will be entertained by local friends. The mission superintendent will be asked to make out lists of the children by their every-day names, such as "Sally Tomkins" for "Sarah T."; each ten to be on a separate sheet of paper, on which is to be pinned a bit of braid of a colour pinned likewise on each child named thereon. Some of the volunteers will have wished for all girls or all boys, or mixed sets, or specially clean sets, and the superintendent will be asked to arrange accordingly.

This is all that is needed. The children and their respective lists are handed over to their several hosts on arrival, so that no one has to be responsible for more than ten, unless some volunteer is prevented from coming, and the ten so left unprovided for are distributed among the others. Indeed, so simply does the whole thing work that some, after trying it once, prefer to entertain twenty together. Special terms can be made with the rail and tram or omnibus companies to convey the children at a nominal charge in special carriages. One is, of course, needed to take general charge and act as secretary, but after things fall into line the labour involved is reduced to a minimum. The first time this scheme was tried a hundred and fifty children were entertained without a hitch, and no hitch has yet occurred in the entertainment of over five hundred.

It is thus proved to be a suggestion worth following, and I should be glad to hear of any who take it up, or to give them any further details they require. Is not anything done for these little ones done for Christ?

SUNDAY, AUGUST 12.

Temptation of Jesus.—Matt. iv. 1-11.

Golden Text, Heb. iv. 15.

"Then."—Just after the Baptism and the rapturous experience of the Saviour (iii. 16, 17), the time of painful testing occurs. Special favour does not exempt from special trial, but is a preparation for it. "Led," Mark says "driven" (i. 12). Jesus did not go needlessly into temptation. Imitate Him in this. Self-chosen paths are full of danger. God must direct those whom He will save. Temptation was necessary to Him as our Saviour (Golden text). Before the opening of a bridge over which heavily loaded trains must pass, it is put to a severe test, that its strength may be proved. This conflict proves the second Adam able to stand where the first Adam had fallen. "The wilderness" is, according to tradition, the region around Quarantania, a sharp limestone peak, which rises in the midst of the wild mountainous region not far from Jericho. Caves abound in the rocks, and Mark i. 13, tells us that wild beasts were his companions. Did they not recognise in Him their rightful Lord (Psa. viii.)? The region was desolate, wild, uninhabited, fit region for such a conflict as this. Contrast it with the favourable conditions of the first conflict. In Eden, Adam had every advantage; here every advantage is given to Satan, that his defeat may be more ignominious.

The Attack.—Satan made it in person. If he actually appeared to our Lord, as the narrative seems to suggest, it would be under some disguise. Yet Jesus knew him, as afterwards when he spake through Peter, or through Judas. The attack was threefold, for Satan is an unwearied antagonist. He knows how to repeat and to vary his attacks; so that if repulsed in one he may be more successful in another. The first (3) appealed to bodily appetite, and suggested a miracle by which He could at once satisfy his hunger and remove every shadow of doubt as to his Divine sonship. The power of the temptation lay in its subtilty. Where was the harm in working such a miracle to meet his need? No temptations are more dangerous than those in which we have to ask such a question. In yielding to this temptation there would have been a double sin, first, that of allowing a doubt as to the testimony recently borne at his baptism. Can that word require this miracle to confirm it? And, secondly, in taking the care of Himself into his own hands. In both these senses the temptation comes very near to us. We are prone to want signs to confirm God's Word, and to be impatient when called to wait upon Him.

The second attack was made on "a pinnacle of the Temple" (5), probably "either Solomon's porch, on the eastern side of the Temple platform, and commanding the gorge of the Kedron; or the Royal Porch, from which, as Josephus says, the eye looked down into an abyss," Godet. Don't forget that high and holy places are not exempt from temptation. Again the power of this suggestion lay in its subtilty. Does it not appear like an encouragement to further faith in his Father? If He can trust Him for food for his body, why not perform this miracle? It will afford another instance of his Father's care for Him; will win from the Jews more ready acceptance of Him as the Messiah, and is enforced by a Scriptural quotation. "The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose." Misquoted and misapplied texts have often led to sin.

The third attack was upon a mountain (8). Godet suggests that the statement—"he showed Him, etc.," signifies "that he made them to appear before the view of Jesus, in instantaneous succession, by a diabolical phantasmagoria." It was the purpose of God that Jesus should yet have the Kingdoms of this world for his own. They are now offered to Him upon terms that render the agony and death unnecessary. It was a tempting offer. All that Satan asked was a recognition of him as present possessor of this world's kingdoms, by an act of prostration, such as in the East is practised towards every lawful superior. To pay his terms for any favour or advantage is to commit the sin to which he tempts the Saviour. Did not Judas do this? and Demas? And does not everyone who consents to lie, or cheat, or deceive in any form for the sake of gain? Compare these three attacks with what is said to be in the world (1 John ii. 16), and with the description of the tree in Gen. iii. 6. The allurements that proved successful in Eden are tried in the wilderness too.

The Repulse.—Jesus gained a complete victory on lines that we must adopt. (1) He did not parley with Satan as Eve did. The tempter is not to be reasoned with, but to be resisted. (2) He overcame as a man, by means of the sword of the Spirit (see Rev. xii. 2). Yet the Word of God was not only in his memory for quotation, but in his heart for life and obedience. Subjection to the authority of the Word enables us to meet the assaults of the adversary. (3) Yet his victory cost Him something, hence the angelic ministry (11). "He suffered, being tempted,"

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 5.—EZEKIEL XXXVI.

Israel's Restoration (1-15).—This chapter continues the prophecy of the preceding one. The contrast between the fate of Edom and Israel, the former of which was not in covenant relation with Jehovah, whilst the latter was, is very significant. Israel may be chastened, but it will be restored, whilst Edom must be always desolate.

The mountains are in contrast with Mount Seir. (3) Israel's foes spoke as though they had a right to her territory, and they freely discussed its partition; but her God would have to be reckoned with. It was not his will that the land of promise should be shared, as the carcase of prey among wild beasts. (7) Israel's shame was only for a time, that of her foes would be lasting. (9) When God is for us who can be against us? When He determines that cities shall be inhabited and wastes tilled, so it shall be. (11) The best wine is kept till last. We always are seeing better things (Job. xlii. 12). (13) The land of Israel was naturally the battle ground of Egypt and Assyria.

It was Undeserved (16-21).—As a woman, legal uncleanness caused her to be separated from the congregation (Lev. xv. 19): so the sins of Israel caused their expulsion from Canaan. (20) Wherever they went they brought contempt on the whole name of God, as not being able to defend them from their foes. 21. Many of God's actions can only be accounted for by his zeal for truth and righteousness.

The Restoration would be Accompanied by Spiritual Renewal (22-32).—Let us be very careful of the honour of God. (25) Clean water, in reference to Num. xiv. 9-18; type of the cleansing grace of Christ (Heb. ix. 13, 14; x. 22). Yield yourselves to God, that He may cleanse you not only from the dominion, but from the love of sin. (26) He bids us make these things (xviii. 31); but He here gives what He enjoins. God's commands are enablings. God's grace changes the choices and feelings of the soul. (27) It is a great blessing when God causes us to walk in his ways. The obedience He demands is not outward but inward. We walk aright, because we are filled by the Spirit. (29) The cleansed soul is hungry for the bread of God. (31) There is no such sorrow as that of the forgiven and restored.

The Restored Land (33-38).—Cities and land are to be reoccupied. The return under Nehemiah and Ezra cannot have exhausted these words. The land awaits the people, and the people the land. (37) But though all this is certain, yet its realisation must be sought in prayer. This is one of the regulations of our Father's Kingdom. His Word is full of promises, but they must be presented and claimed.

MONDAY, AUGUST 6.—EZEKIEL XXXVII.

The First Vision as of Resurrection (1-14).—There seemed no hope of the people ever resuming their political life, or of becoming spiritual and devoted. The men are dead in trespasses and sins. (2) We must be brought face to face with the impossibility of doing anything by our own might or wisdom. (4) It was a strange command, to mount some rocky eminence and address this medley of silent bones. Thus by the foolishness of preaching God saves those who believe. (7) There may be a stir of interest, and a spirit of hearing, but unless the Spirit of God breathe life, it is of no avail (John iii. 8; 1 Cor. iii. 6). Let us eagerly utter this prayer for the Spirit of God, who is the breath of life, blowing where it listeth. (12) Those that are in the graves of lust and sin shall hear the voice of the Son of God and live. He will cause them to come out and live. Evidently the idea of the Resurrection was not unfamiliar.

The Second Vision as of Reunion (15-28).—When God gives life, it always leads to unity, as in this case. The two sticks, representing respectively Israel and Judah, separated from the days of Jeroboam, would be one. (21) Restoration. (22) Unity under the headship of Christ. (23) Deliverance from detestable things. (24) Assured obedience. (25) The land of promise. (26) The covenant of peace. (27) Fellowship with God. (28) The conversion of the heathen. Such were the promises for their new resurrection life. There is a counterpart of each in that new and blessed life which is opened to us when we participate through faith in the risen life of our Lord Jesus. Unity with God; people, peace, joy, power are then freely ours.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 7.—EZEKIEL XXXVIII.

The Invasion of Israel (1-6).—Into the restored land, as described in the preceding chapter, a tide of invasion is seen to pour. The prophet describes a gigantic conspiracy, led by God, the Prince of Rosh (R.V.), threatening Israel in the latter days, after the miracles wrought by God in behalf of his people, as already narrated. (3) These were all northern nations, living by the Euxine and the Caspian Seas. Their names reappear on modern maps as Russia, Moscow, and Tobolsk. (4) It is probable that a great many details are to be taken generally, as when we are told that the wood of the invaders' weapons would serve Israel for fuel for seven years; and that it would take all Israel seven months to bury the dead. But it is also certain from other Scriptures that the nations of the world will come in battle-array against restored Israel (Dan. xi. 21-45; Zech. xiii. 9; xiv. 2, 3). And at the end of the millennium there is to be one last assault on the beloved city (Rev. xx. 7-9). Some think that the horrors of Antiochus' invasion are referred to. (5, 6) Persia and Armenia would join the army of invasion.

The Attack (7-16).—There is much irony in this address. The enemy is challenged to do his worst, but in spite of all, the Divine Guardian of his chosen people insists that, as they had been brought out from among many peoples, so they should still be suffered to dwell securely. (11) The people of Israel are depicted as dwelling securely in towns without walls, and therefore being more at the mercy of the invader. (13) But the unwalled villages were specially cared for by God (Lev. xxv. 31). The plot is foiled by the attitude of the great maritime peoples of the west. The young lions and merchants of Tarshish have been identified by some with Great Britain. (15) In the same strain, God addressed Pharaoh (Ex. ix. 16).

Jehovah's Interposition (17-23).—In great anger, God averts the blow from his people. (19) Amid vast convulsions of the social and political world. Thus Christ saw it would be at the end of the age (Matt. xxiv. 29-31). (21) Compare 2 Ch. xx. 23. (23) God must vindicate his character. How with an infinite patience He waits, bearing the sneers and taunts of ungodly men; but then He will come out from his hiding-place, and make his power and righteousness known. Do we know Him as Jehovah, the ever-living Redeemer?

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 8.—EZEKIEL XXXIX.

Threats of Destruction (1-8).—This chapter continues and concludes the prophecy of the previous one. It should be added to the explanation given in the preceding notes, which refer this prophecy to the end of the present age, that it is held by some that these predictions are concerned with an invasion of Scythians that swept over the known world, before the siege of Jerusalem, and whilst Nineveh was yet standing, though in her death throes. But this seems very insufficient, as these words have so evidently to do with a restored people, and their final defeat is clearly described as taking place on the mountains of Israel. (8) When God speaks, the thing is as good as done.

The Magnitude of the Carnage (9-21).—Seven is the number for perfection. The land would be completely rid of all trace of the invader. These arms would not be required by the chosen people, because God was their defence and armoury. (11) Probably the Dead Sea is referred to here. The number of the dead would be so great that nothing less than a valley there would avail to receive them. And the stench would stop the way. (14) First, all the people of the land would be engaged in burying; their regular men would be set apart, passing through the land, bringing the stragglers who are left upon the face of the land, to purify it. And passers-by would assist these in their work by setting up any bones they met with as a mark to attract their attention. Thus the land would be cleansed. (17) So great would the multitudes of the slain be that the birds and beasts of all creation are invited to the banquet of human flesh. Compare Rev. xix. 17.

The Effect on Israel (22-29).—The judgment thus inflicted on the Antichristian hosts would lead God's people from that day and onward to know their God. The heathen, too, would see that if Israel had been allowed to go into captivity, it was not due to any want of will or power on God's part, but because of their sins. Our trespasses are always the cause of our captivity. (26) When the people of God review their wanderings and backslidings from the standpoint of his delivering mercy, they are filled with shame. (29) A vast effusion of the Holy Spirit, especially in Israel, like that at Pentecost, will introduce the millennium and times of refreshing for the whole earth.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 9.—EZEKIEL XL.

The Vision of the Temple and Altar (1-4).—Ezekiel's visions began with one of Jehovah, withdrawing from his Temple. And shortly after that Temple was in ruins, and the city burnt with fire. In the latter chapters we have been witnessing the restoration of the chosen people, and here we have a vision of the restored Temple. With the Epistle to the Hebrews in our hand, it seems impossible to expect the literal re-establishment of sacrifices. We cannot understand these wonderful and glowing descriptions, but when the time comes, what now baffles us will be seen to be harmonious with the facts. The prophet in vision returns to the ruined city of his fathers, and amid the ruins sees that ideal state which shall be. (3) The flax would be for longer, the reed for shorter measurements. (4) What we see and learn we must tell.

The Wall and Gates (5-16).—The vision begins with the boundary walls. The breadth and height of the wall were to be identical. The lodges of the gates were the guard-chambers for the door-keepers. Especial attention is devoted to the east gate, through which the exiled glory was to return (xi. 23; xxiii. 1, 2; xliv. 2, 3). (16) The narrow latticed windows, the colonnades of arches, the pilasters resembling palm trees, trunks forming the shafts, the branches the capitals—all attest the definiteness and beauty of the vision.

The Outer Court and its Chambers (17-19).—Probably tessellated pavement (Est. i. 6). The little chambers were for the use of the priests. We are reminded of John xiv. 1, 2.

The Northern and Southern Outer Gates (20-27).—For these two gates there was no such building as we have for the eastern gate. They were probably more specially intended for common use, whilst that was for the use of the priests.

The Inner Court and its Gates (28-37).

The Arrangements for the Sacrifices, Singers, and Priests (38-48).—These details were probably suggested by the Temple as Ezekiel had known it when a youth, only amplified and glorified. Let us not forget to realise each of these: we must be living sacrifices: we must give thanks for all things, and when the sacrifice begins, the song of the Lord must begin: and we must be priests on the earth.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 10.—EZEKIEL XLI.

The Porch, Chambers, Corridors (1-14).—The plan is on a much larger scale, perhaps to foreshadow the magnificence of the Bride, the Lamb's wife; or to denote the glory of the Jews in the coming time, when Jerusalem shall have become the metropolis of the world. (4) "Before" means in front of. These measurements of the most holy place are the same as in Solomon's temple, perhaps to show that, whatever else might alter, fellowship between God and holy souls in all ages is much the same. (5) These chambers were attached to the outside of the temple. But they had an inner wall of their own, so that they did not rest immediately on the wall of the temple. (6) The area of the floor of the house was larger than of the ceiling. (9, 10) See R.V. margin.

The Adornments of the Temple Buildings (15-26).—These galleries were terraces. God loves the beautiful. We should give Him the fine-carved work, and the costly alabaster boxes. (21) The only difference between the most holy place and the rest of the sanctuary was in magnitude—not in ornamentation or beauty. (22) There was no ark, only the table of showbread, of which the priests ate, in type of the spiritual fellowship of Jehovah with his people.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 11.—EZEKIEL XLII.

The External Chambers and Corridors for the Priests (1-12).—We have before heard of the chambers for buyers and the officiating priests, on the north and south gates of the inner court; these are now more particularly described (xl. 44-46). The rooms in the third storey were narrower, because the galleries which ran from one to another were taken out of their space.

Their Use (13, 14).—They were holy chambers; surely this word should be true of all the rooms of our houses. All our life should be priestly service, and we should be known as priests "near unto God." What designation could be more delightful if it were only true? Those that serve the altar must live by the altar. We must eat of the flesh of the Paschal Lamb, if we would minister to the world. These chambers were vestries, where the priests might array themselves for service, and where they should keep their portions of the sacrifices. Does not all this precise preparation go to show the extreme care with which we should enter the presence of God? There must always be the momentary hesitation, the reverently bowed heart, before we enter into the manifested presence of God.

The Wall of Separation (15-20).—This immense square of 500 rods, or 3000 cubits, would amount to one mile and a seventh—a mere indication that we are to interpret it symbolically. Ancient Jerusalem did not cover so much territory. The boundary wall was intended to keep off the Gentiles. But it has for ever been abolished in Christ (Eph. ii. 14).

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY has added a valuable Sailors' Bethel and Rest to its Falmouth branch. The opening services were most encouraging. The Hon. Granville Waldegrave and others went down from London to represent the parent society and cheer those who have successfully laboured for many years. Better provision will now be made for seamen, including coasters, fishermen, pilots, watermen. A cottage on the quay is conditionally offered for the port missionary's quarters as a thank-offering for recovery to health. To complete this harbour mission, which has laboured for some fifty years, a steam launch is much needed. The secretary is Rev. Edward W. Matthews, Sailors' Institute, Mercer-street, Shadwell, London, E.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

AFFLICTIONS, DISTRESSES, TUMULTS.

Jeremiah xxvi.

I see the wrong that round me lies,
I feel the guilt within;
I hear, with groan and travail-cries,
The world confess its sin.
Yet in the maddening maze of things,
And tossed by storm and flood,
To one fixed stake my spirit clings—
I know that God is good.

Jehoiakim was, perhaps, the most despicable of the kings of Judah. Josephus says that he was unjust in disposition; an evil-doer; neither pious towards God, nor just towards men. Something of this may have been due to the influence of his wife Nehushta, whose father, Elnathan, was an accomplice in the royal murder of Urijah. "Jehoiakim was twenty-five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem; and he did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord his God." Such is the inspired epitaph by the chronicler.

Jeremiah appears to have been constantly in conflict with this king; and probably the earliest manifestation of the necessary conflict that must subsist between two such men occurred in connection with the building of Jehoiakim's palace. Though his kingdom was greatly impoverished with the heavy fine of between forty and fifty thousand pounds imposed by Pharaoh-Necho, after the defeat and death of Josiah, and though the times were dark with portents of approaching disaster, yet he began to rear a splendid palace for himself, with spacious chambers and large windows, floors of cedar and decorations of vermilion. Like Elijah to Ahab, so did Jeremiah accost the young king with his terrible woes: "Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by injustice; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not his hire; . . . thine eyes and thine heart are not but for thy dishonest gain, and for oppression, and for violence." He further reminded him that the stability of Josiah's throne depended not on the splendour of his palace, but upon the justice with which he judged the cause of the poor and needy (Jer. xxii. 13, etc.).

Clearly the king was not deficient in the power of hating well the man who dared to raise his voice in denunciation of his crimes; and, like Herod with John the Baptist, he would not scruple when he might quench in blood the light that cast its condemnation upon his oppressive and cruel actions. An example of this had been recently afforded in the death of Urijah, who had uttered solemn words against Jerusalem and its inhabitants in the same way that Jeremiah had done. Such fury had been excited by his words that he had been obliged to flee to Egypt, from whence the king had secured his extradition, that he might avenge his bold denunciation by the sword, and fling his body into the graves of the common people. Small shrift, then, could be expected by Jeremiah, if the king dared to take measures against him. But it would appear that this time at least his safety was secured by the interposition of influential friends amongst the aristocracy, one of whom was Ahikam the son of Shaphan (Jer. xxvi. 20-24).

I.—THE DIVINE COMMISSION.

Beneath the Divine impulse, Jeremiah went up to the court of the Lord's house, and took his place on some great occasion when all the cities of Judah had poured their populations to worship there. Not one word was to be kept back. We also are conscious of these inward impulses; and it often becomes a matter of considerable difficulty to distinguish whether they originate in the energy of our own nature, or are the genuine outcome of the Spirit of Christ. It is only in the latter case that such service can be fruitful. And here for a moment we will turn aside to see how the heart of man may become the medium through which God can pour his thoughts on men, and the way by which men may recognise his inward prompting.

There is no greater enemy of the highest usefulness than the presence of the flesh in our activities. There is no department of life or service into which its subtle, deadly influence does not penetrate. We have to encounter it in our unregenerate life, when its passions reveal themselves, brooking no restraint. We meet it after we have entered upon the new life, striving against the Spirit, and restraining his gracious energy. We are most baffled when we find it prompting us to holy resolutions, and efforts after a consecrated life, which the Apostle Paul calls the unequal marriage of the flesh, or self-life, with the holy law of God, a union which brings forth fruit unto death. And, lastly, it confronts us in Christian work, because there is so much of it that in our quiet moments we are bound to trace to a desire for notoriety, to a passion to excel, and to the restlessness of a nature which evades questions in the deeper life, by flinging itself into every avenue through which it may exert its activities.

There is only one solution to these difficulties. By the way of the cross and the grave we can alone become disentangled and discharged from the insidious domination of this evil principle, which is accursed by God, and hurtful as blight to the tender fruit of holy living. In the cross of Jesus, when He died in the likeness of sinful flesh, God wrote his curse upon every manifestation of selfish and fleshly energy; and now it remains for each of us to appropriate that cross, to accept the Divine sentence, to lie in the grave where the voices of human ambition and adulation cannot follow us, to oppose the silence of death to the workings of our evil self. Not, however, to stay there; but to pass up by the grace of the Holy Ghost into the pure resurrection air and light, where no face is visible but that of the risen Saviour, where no voice is audible save his, full of the sound of many waters, and where in the hush of perfect fellowship the spirit becomes able to discern the wish of its Redeemer.

II.—THE MESSAGE AND ITS RECEPTION.

There was a twofold appeal in the words Jeremiah was commissioned to deliver on this great occasion, when the whole land stood intent to hear. On the one side, by his lips, God entreated his people to repent, and turn from their evil ways; on the other, He bade them know that their obduracy would compel Him to make that great national shrine as complete a desolation as the site of Shiloh, which for five hundred years had been in ruins. It is impossible to realise the intensity of passion which such words evoked. It seemed an insinuation that Jehovah could not defend his own, or that their religion had become so heartless that He would not. Prophets and priests had assured the people that the very presence amongst them of Jehovah's Temple was a guarantee of their safety; and to suggest that a fate might overtake them like that which in the days of Samuel made the ears of every listener to tingle seemed the height of impertinence. "So it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the Lord commanded him to speak unto all the people," that he found himself suddenly in the vortex of a whirlpool of popular excitement. So it befel Paul in after days, when the presumption that he had defiled the holy place produced so intense a paroxysm of popular feeling that all the city was moved; and the people ran together, and they laid hold on him, and dragged him out of the Temple, and he was with difficulty rescued by a regiment of Roman soldiers, who bore him by main force from the violence of the crowd, the multitude following and crying out, "Away with him!" (Acts xxi. 27-36). There is little doubt that Jeremiah would then have met his death, had it not been for the prompt interposition of the princes.

Such must always be the reception by man of the words of God. We may gravely question how far our words are God's, when the people accept them quietly and as a matter of course. The Word of God to those that hug their sin can only be as fire, and hammer, and a sharp two-edged sword. And here again is a certain test whether our message is the product of our own fancy or the burden of the Lord. That which men approve and applaud may lack the King's seal, and be the substitution on the part of the messenger of tidings which he deems more palatable, and therefore more likely to secure for himself a larger welcome.

THE GLORY OF CHRIST.—Some men can think of the world, of their relations, and the manifold occasions of life; but as for the things that are above, and within the vail, they are not concerned in them. With some it is otherwise. They profess their desire to "behold the glory of Christ" by faith, but they find it, as they complain, too high and difficult for them. They are at a loss in their minds, and even overwhelmed, when they begin to view his glory. They are like the disciples who saw him in his transfiguration; they were filled with amazement, and knew not what to say, or said they knew not what.

CHRISTIAN EFFORT IN COLLEGES.

At the Student Volunteer Conference last year in Keswick, a proposal was tabled and approved of for the formation of an Inter-University Christian Union, which should be a medium for the interchange of Christian fellowship among students, and also for the maintenance of aggressive Gospel work in the British Universities. In the students' camp at Keswick a meeting was held last week, for the purpose of publicly inaugurating the Union. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and the proceedings were altogether very encouraging.

Mr. Anderson, of Oxford University, the new secretary of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, described the growing spiritual work in English universities. He urged the importance of more aggressive effort in this direction, and advised the appointment of a secretary to the Christian Union who should give himself wholly to the work. Canon Taylor Smith also dwelt on the importance of the work to be done by the Union and the vast significance of cultured University men becoming missionaries of the Cross. Dr. Maxwell said he was deeply impressed with the possibilities of this effort in connection with the future of the Christian churches, and referred especially to the value of the Union in influencing medical students.

Mr. J. R. Mott told of the remarkable development of similar effort among the students in American colleges and universities, the organisation there being mainly in connection with the Y.M.C.A. There are now 500 colleges in the States and Canada within the scope of the movement. Mr. Donald Fraser presented the practical aspects of the work to be done by the newly-formed Union. Some £500 a year will be needed for the present necessities of the work contemplated. The friends present responded liberally, and £130 was promised for the first year's expenses, with about £100 for each of the succeeding two years. This is a hopeful beginning, but of course further help will be needed. It is confidently anticipated that this will be an epoch-marking event in the religious history of our British Universities, and that the Union will add one more to the blessed influences radiating from the Vale of Keswick. Certainly no nobler scheme could be propounded than that of bringing to Christ those who will soon be our leaders in the State, the Church, and Society.

SUMMER.

Welcome summer, sea of glory,
Flooding land and wave with light,
Clothing earth in emerald raiment,
Fragrant blossoms, fair and bright.

All the air is thrilled with music,
Singing birds and humming bees,
Murmuring streams and balmy zephyrs,
Gently rustling midst the trees.

Gurgling cascades dash and sparkle
Down the mountains wild and steep,
Azure wavelets, softly sighing,
O'er the sand and shingle sweep.

Crystal lakes fair landscapes mirror,
Sapphire arches smile above,
Tenderly sweet nature whispers,
God is beauty, light, and love.

Beauteous summer, breath of Eden,
Type of peace and joy serene,
Smile of God, and ray of Heaven,
Wrapt in folds of golden sheen,

Waft us upward, homeward, sunward,
On thy pinions of delight,
Till we pass the pearly portals,
Entering the Lamb's pure light.

TOWER-STREET, SEVEN DIALS.—This Mission School, started in March, 1875, as a Sunday Evening School, has grown, and now includes the following agencies:—Sunday schools, with an attendance of 12,627, Band of Hope and Boys' Club. The Girls' Club, the latest addition to the work, is doing a good work for the elder girls, the average attendance being twenty-five, most of whom are engaged in factories and workrooms during the day. The secretary is Mr. P. Keed, 191, Oxford-street, W.

THE LATE PASTOR A. MABILLE.

WE recently noticed the departure of this well-known and highly-esteemed South African missionary—for many years connected with the Basutoland work of the Paris Society of Evangelical Missions. His death is thus reported by Rev. R. Henry Dyke, in a letter from Morija, dated June 18:—

"Nothing could have been more edifying than his death-bed. Notwithstanding the pain and oppression caused by the illness, his strong intellect was not in the least obscured. Messages of affection and counsel were sent to personal friends throughout the world, and in rapid succession he reviewed various departments of the work confided to his charge—the Printing Press, the Book Depot, the Bible School; but nearest and dearest to his heart was his church with 2200 members (1600 communicants and 600 inquirers), and its twenty-six out-stations. He mentioned in order the names of the evangelists, schoolmasters, and elders, in all about 150, committing them to the care of the Great Shepherd of the sheep. To the very last it was his privilege to preach the Gospel to lost sinners, for when it became known that his state was critical, chiefs and others pressed to see him. To these he spoke most faithfully, and only an hour before he lost consciousness a European young man begged to be allowed to see him.

"Having shut out by that time all outward considerations, he hesitated before receiving him, and then said, 'Well, let him come in, I have a sweet message from Jesus for him.' With wonderful faithfulness and power he pressed that message home, and ended with words characteristic of the man and prophet-like, when he rose in his bed, and with clenched fist he said, 'Oh! if I could strike a blow with this hand of mine, and send Jesus into your heart, I would do it even now.'

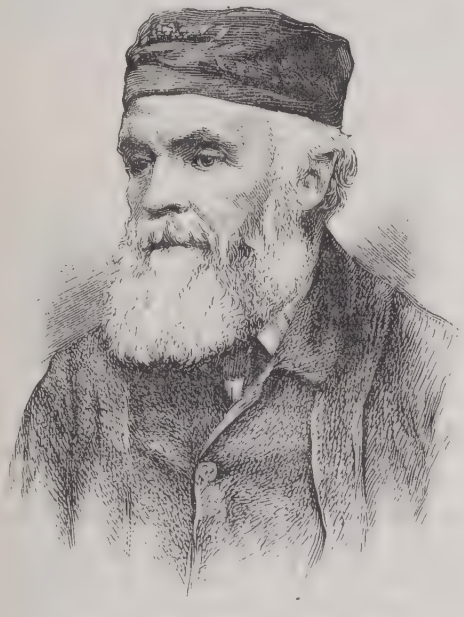
"One of the last words I heard him utter was, 'Jesus died, and that is enough for me.'

"Thus ended the career of one of the greatest missionaries of the present day. Well does the editor of the Lovedale Christian Express estimate his worth, when he says, 'As a spiritual force there was no superior soul to M. Mabille south of the Zambesi.'

"Born of godly parents at Yverdon, Switzerland, in 1836, he received his instruction in the school founded by the great educationalist, Pestalozzi. Having imbibed the spirit of that institution, that of original thought and independence of action, which enabled those great minds to strike out into new methods of teaching and to adapt themselves in a common-sense way to the people they wished to raise and advance, he offered himself for foreign work, willing to go wherever the Lord should send him.

"Mabille showed in a wonderful degree that spirit of determination which made him so successful in his mission work. When once he had decided that a thing was right and useful, and that it would be for the glory of his Master, he went through with it, no matter what adverse criticism was passed on him, or what opposition was offered to his undertaking. Thus it was that we find him starting a printing office at Morija, although he had never learned printing. That Press has grown to considerable dimensions now, with a bookbinding department attached to it, all worked by natives instructed by their self-taught teacher. From it have gone forth many portions of the Word of God, commentaries on portions of the Bible, works of edification and instruction, and thousands of school books used by many missionaries belonging to other societies south of the Zambesi. Besides this, there is a fortnightly Sesuto paper of fair dimensions printed at this Press.

"Then again, it was Mabille who first appointed native evangelists to the charge of out-stations, a system which has now covered the country with a network of 140 centres of light directed by natives. He it was, again, who during the Boer War of 1865-8 commenced the Normal or Training Institution, which has prepared so many worthy teachers for all parts of South Africa. Later on, when this department had passed into other hands, and he felt the need of special training for evangelists, he procured the funds and founded the Bible School, which he has directed during many years, devoting regularly two hours a day to lectures on Scripture subjects.



THE LATE PASTOR A. MABILLE.

"His wonderful musical gifts have made him a blessing to all the Basuto-speaking people of South Africa. In no other African language are there so many hymns, songs, and pieces arranged and set to music, and this entirely owing to the untiring energy of this whole-hearted servant of the Lord.

"In conference his influence was very great. Quiet and determined in his manner, he generally carried any measure he brought forward, and even when the younger members differed in opinion with him, it was beautiful to see how they generally yielded when they saw that he was decided in his purpose. That influence for good has gone from our midst. May his spirit and his teaching remain with those who have to carry on the work amongst the Basutos!

"Next to his great faith and his spirit of prayer and waiting upon the Lord, his success may be attributed to his untiring activity and his common-sense methods. His days were so mapped out that eighteen of the twenty-four hours had their occupations fixed almost to the minute. In the execution of his self-imposed tasks he was so rapid that three qualified men could hardly have got through more work than he did in the day. Well might his medical attendant say that 'he had succumbed to thirty-four years of work at high pressure.'

"A rare quality observed by all who knew him was that, although methodical, he did not let his method appear, nor was he a slave to method. With the greatest ease he could turn from one method to another, proving all and holding fast to that which was best. This peculiarity often made it difficult for his fellow-workers to keep pace with him, but it had its advantages which the Lord used for the furtherance of his cause.

"Whole-hearted in his devotion to missions, all personal or family considerations had to give way in favour of the great work ever before his eyes. And yet his great and loving heart made of him the most affectionate of husbands and fathers. Matthew vi. 33 has been wonderfully fulfilled in his case. For his six sons and daughters are all servants of the Lord working for Him. His elder son is in charge of the church at Leribe, and his younger son for the present succeeds his father in the direction of the Morija church. His wife's brother will take charge of the printing office, book department, and Bible school.

"He has entered into rest, but his works do follow him. We shall miss him, but the Lord will in his own way supply his place. Pray for us, that the Lord may send other Mabilles to work for the salvation of Africa."

Further deeply interesting details of the work in Basutoland are given in Mr. Dyke's admirably written and illustrated booklet, THE SWITZERLAND OF SOUTH AFRICA: AN ACCOUNT OF GOSPEL WORK IN THE LAND OF THE BASUTO. (1s. Morgan & Scott.)

DR. BARNARDO'S VILLAGE HOME.

THE RECENT APPEAL.

DEAR SIR,—As the attention of some of your readers may possibly have been attracted to statements recently made in some organs of the Press, contradicting and condemning the terms of Dr. Barnardo's appeal on this subject made in April last, I am desired to send you a copy of the resolution below, and to request that you will kindly give it insertion in your columns.

Your obedient servant,
JOHN ODLING, Secretary.

18 to 26, Stepney-causeway, London, E.

At a meeting of the trustees and committee of Dr. Barnardo's Institutions, held on July 25, 1894, it was resolved:—"That, after considering the evidence submitted to us, we are satisfied that Dr. Barnardo's statements, as to the attempt of certain Roman Catholics to purchase Mossford Lodge and adjoining lands, were WELL FOUNDED, and that he was justified in the course which he took for acquiring the property."

MY PRINCIPAL METHOD for defeating error and heresy is by establishing the truth.—Newton.

The Keswick Convention.

[From our Special Correspondent.]

By common consent, the Convention of last week, the twentieth held in Keswick, was one of the best within the recollection of those present. There were some fears at first that the attendance would show indications of falling off, but the course of the week's meetings did not support that view. Never, so far as I can call to mind, have the meetings in the tent been more crowded, and at every general meeting there was a large overflow in the Second Tent. The experiment of the two tents has worked admirably, and doubtless it will be continued.

Truly, a feast of fat things was provided from the platform day by day. Where all the addresses, speaking generally, were so good, it would be somewhat invidious to select any for special commendation. So far as our space will permit, we purpose giving in succeeding issues the representative utterances given in the First Tent, with some notes also of the addresses in the Second Tent. One of the charms of the Keswick platform is the wonderful variety of gifts seen among the chief speakers. No two are alike, and while there are some teachers who naturally command wider acceptance than others, by reason of special endowment and experience, there were large numbers who found each speaker a channel of God's messages to their souls. The custom prevails of not announcing beforehand the names of those who are to speak, and the idea is thus encouraged that friends should attend rather to hear the voice of the Master Himself than any particular human voice.

There was a happy absence this year of the introduction of topics likely to cause discussion or divergence of view from the doctrinal standpoint. The Keswick teaching seems to be becoming consolidated, so that its main lines are well understood, and attention is directed away from investigation as to its meaning, to the practical reception and outcome of that which is commonly believed and accepted as the mind of God in his revelation on the subject of holiness of life.

The service of praise is most helpful in furthering the general objects of the Convention. The teachings and exhortations of the week are always of a graduated and progressive kind, from the searching humbling messages of the early days on to the restful, peaceful, and finally the triumphant aspects of the Christ-life at the close. The hymns chosen always closely bear on the current line of address, and the vehicle of song is ever most appropriate to the sentiment. In creating the impressions desired, and in bringing the hearers to the specific and definite point of resolve, whatever it may be, the reverent and intelligent rendering of the hymns is of immense value.

A chairman can generally give a tone to a meeting, and certainly the right tone is strongly fostered at these Keswick assemblies day after day, by the dignified bearing, the earnest simplicity in prayer, and the occasional brief words of pointed comment that come from Mr. Robert Wilson, who, we trust, will be long spared to occupy the post he fills with such acceptance and profit to all.

A brief summary of the meetings held in the two tents throughout the week will enable the distant reader in some degree to follow the course of the Convention proceedings as a whole. As already stated, notes of the leading addresses will appear in following issues as space may allow.

Withholding for the present any reference to the large and most interesting early meetings for prayer, and also the missionary prayer meetings held at 9 a.m., we come to the Bible Readings, which commence at 10.15 and continue till 11.30. In bygone years these were so frequently allocated to Rev. Hubert Brooke that he came to be looked on as a fixture for this part of the Convention. Last year he was not able to undertake the whole of the burden, and this year, unhappily, an accident prevented his being present at all. In his absence Prebendary Webb-Peploe took two of the readings, Messrs. Fox and Inwood taking the intermediate two. Mr. Webb-Peploe's theme on morning was chosen from Eph. i., and was a powerful presentation of the privileges and responsibilities of the real believer, in view of the superabounding grace at his disposal. At the same hour Dr. Elder Cumming conducted the Bible Reading in the Second Tent; he showed that sanctification does not come by human struggle, but by yielding to the Divine operation. At noon, in the First Tent, addresses were given by Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor and Rev. E. W. Moore. The former address is reported on another page. Mr. Moore's subject was, "Doing the Will of God," based on Hebrews xiii. 20, 21. It was a strong and searching utterance. Simultaneously there was held in the Second Tent a ministers' meeting, when brief words of exhortation and testimony came from some eight of the Keswick speakers. At a meeting for first attenders, in the Second Tent, in the afternoon, Rev. J. Sloan, Rev. W. S. Standen, and others explained the more elementary teachings on the subject of holiness. The general meeting in the evening in the large tent was made memorable by a striking and powerful address from Rev. C. Inwood on Ezekiel's second vision as recorded in chapters 8 to 11. From a consideration of the profanation of the Temple, described by the prophet, Mr. Inwood dealt some terrific blows at certain forms of evil seen even among professed Christians. A scathing condemnation of the habit of smoking by ministers and Christians generally was the topic of much subsequent comment, and also produced some patent results in the consecration or testimony meetings. Rev. F. B. Meyer followed with a very graphic and telling address from Isa. lxiii. 1—6. The after-meeting, conducted by Mr. Hopkins, revealed the fact that the utterances of the first full day had been indeed in the power and demonstration of the Holy Ghost, and that many had been brought to the point of conviction in removing out of the way hindrances to the filling of the Spirit. The evening meeting in the Second Tent with addresses by Revs. J. G. Gregson and S. A. Selwyn, was also a solemn time.

WEDNESDAY.

The Bible Reading in the large tent this morning was by Rev. C. A. Fox, from Deut. xi. 21. He drew a picture in his own characteristic style of "the days of heaven in heaven," and showed how the Christian might translate these into "days of heaven upon the earth." Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor gave a Bible reading at the same hour in the other tent. At noon in the First Tent Rev. S. A. Selwyn drew some exceedingly practical lessons from the life of Job, and the way in which he found the multiplied blessings of his last days. Rev. E. H. Hopkins then spoke from Matt. xvi. 24 on the conditions of discipleship; he was most clear and concise in his statement of these conditions. A young men's meeting in the smaller tent, also at noon, was briefly addressed by some half-dozen brethren, and there was also some helpful testimony by the young men themselves. The afternoon was taken up solely by the meeting of the Keswick Mission, which is noticed in some detail in a subsequent column. The evening hour brought together a crowded attendance in the First Tent, where Mr. Walter Sloan spoke forcibly on Hannah's consecration of her only son. Dr. Cumming next delivered the address, which is fully reported on a preceding page. The treatment of his subject, as will be seen, was marked by considerable freshness. Between the two addresses Mrs. Amanda Smith led in prayer, and sang an experimental song in true camp-meeting style. The refrain was:—

> The Cross of Christ I cherish,
> His crucifixion bear,
> And share reproach and sorrow
> If Jesus leads me there.

Rev. E. H. Hopkins again led the after-meeting, and his earnest words of appeal and guidance were seen as many stood to indicate a desire that the heart should be emptied of self and filled with the presence of Jesus Himself. The speakers in the Second Tent were Revs. J. J. Luce and F. B. Meyer. The latter conducted the after-meeting, and there, too, not a few were led into the valley of decision. Mr. Meyer, it may be noted, left Keswick at the close of this meeting, and took the long drive of several hours to Penrith in order to catch the midnight train for London. His departure was hastened by the fact that he had to sail from Southampton on Friday morning for New York, en route for Mr. Moody's Convention at Northfield.

THURSDAY.

The great congregation that crowded the large tent this morning for the Bible Reading had an unexpected treat in store for them in the address of Rev. C. Inwood, which appears in extenso on preceding pages. For vigour of statement and practical application of Christianity to daily life and service, this was perhaps the outstanding utterance of the whole Convention. It caused no small stir when delivered, and will well repay careful perusal. In the Second Tent at the same hour the Bible-reading was given by Rev. E. H. Hopkins. At noon the general meeting was exhorted with much fidelity and impressiveness by Dr. J. H. White and Dr. Elder Cumming. A second meeting for first attenders in the Second Tent in the afternoon was an interesting occasion. The evening speakers in the First Tent were Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor, who discoursed on "Newness of Life," and Rev. E. W. Moore, whose topic, ably handled, was "Fellowship." In the after meeting there were abundant signs that the truths taught during the preceding days had gone home to many a soul. Mr. Hopkins first asked those who had renounced every known hindrance, and were willing to be fully possessed by Jesus Christ, to stand; the response was very general, those who rose embracing all ages, and some clergymen. Those who had not progressed so far in their experience, but were desirous of declaring their willingness to be out and out for Christ, were next asked to manifest it, and the response was again considerable. It was a very solemn hour. In the Second Tent the speakers were Dr. Elder Cumming and Prebendary Webb-Peploe. The address of the latter is spoken of by those who heard it as one of the most heart-moving they ever listened to. It was an exposition of the familiar text, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." The evidence of its pathos and strong simplicity was found in the after-meeting, when the whole congregation nearly was found standing in grateful acknowledgment of God's comforting message to them through his gifted servant.

FRIDAY.

This morning, at the last Bible Reading, the audience were privileged to have from the lips of Prebendary Webb-Peploe a memorable deliverance on the Scriptural doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit's work and his relations to the other persons in the Godhead. It was almost staggering to the mind in the magnificence and sweep of its conception; probably to a good many of those present, not well versed in the study of such transcendent themes, it was too comprehensive in scope for ready assimilation. Based on James iv. 5, the object of the address was to magnify the yearnings of the Holy Spirit for complete satisfaction—a consummation which will not be accomplished until all the ransomed Church of Christ are glorified. Rev. E. W. Moore gave the concurrent Bible reading in the Second Tent. The midday meeting in the First Tent was exhorted impressively by Rev. W. Burroughs, of Kingstown, and Mr. Walter Sloan, while in the neighbouring pavilion a combined meeting for ministers and young men was held. The last meetings of the Convention for teaching purposes were held in the evening. At the assembly in the larger tent the chairman desired that our absent speakers should be borne before God in prayer—Principal Handley Moule, who was detained in Cambridge by his work among young students; Rev. George C. Grubb, who was sojourning on the Continent owing to weak health; and Rev. Hubert Brooke, whom accident detained at home. Mr. Lee Wilson, of Nottingham, was the vehicle of the intercessions of the Convention on behalf of these brethren. Then Rev. Chas. Inwood gave another of his trenchant expository appeals, from Ezekiel iii. 24. He pleaded for a complete and continuous abandonment of every soul to God, and outlined some of the necessary results. After him came Rev. C. A. Fox, who expounded from Acts ix. 15, 16, the threefold outcome of the Convention that all should covet—the hand of the Lord on them for service, for vision, and for victory. As a closing word it was well fitted to impress the hearts and guide the lives of all. The after-meeting was again a season of solemn and sacred confession, dedication, and thanksgiving, in which almost everyone throughout the great company seemed to join.

A very profitable and fruitful time was also experienced in the Second Tent when the set speakers were Revs. W. S. Standen and John Sloan.

Each evening, after the general meetings were ended, the hour from nine to ten was given up to meetings for prayer and for testimony in the Second Tent. The attendances were large, and the time always passed too swiftly away for the sacred engagements of the hour. Many had an opportunity of declaring in few words what God had wrought in them, and how the Lord had indeed met them in the way at Keswick.

The meetings of Saturday morning and forenoon are reported in some detail in succeeding paragraphs. Some account of the ladies' meetings will be given in a subsequent issue.

THE KESWICK MISSION.

A splendid audience gathered in the First Tent for the annual meeting of the Keswick Mission, which is now the standing engagement for the Wednesday afternoon of the Convention week. Mr. R. Wilson presided, and the proceedings began by the singing of Miss S. G. Stock's missionary hymn—

Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking
Out of slumber, far and near;
Knowing that the morn is breaking
When the Bridegroom shall appear.

The Chairman read a portion of the Master's interview with his disciples after his resurrection, when He breathed peace on them and bestowed the gift of the Holy Ghost. After prayer, Mr. Wilson read the Committee's report of the Mission for the past year. The financial statement of receipts and expenditure showed that the latter had exceeded the former during the year by some £400. There is a balance in the treasurer's hand of over £1400, but it was stated that the whole of this would probably be exhausted before another Convention. The mission party for South America have embodied the results in the book called "The Neglected Continent." Many calls have come from India, China, South Africa, Canada, and elsewhere, for visits from Keswick speakers. Rev. J. G. Gregson has accepted an invitation to visit South Africa to attend the South African Keswick at Wellington, and will subsequently visit Ceylon and India for work. Rev. S. A. Selwyn will proceed at once to Canada, and will hold meetings for the deepening of the spiritual life as arrangements may be made. A cordial invitation has also come from China and Japan for a deputation. There are now lady representatives of the Keswick Mission in Japan, China, Nazareth, and South Africa. Several ladies are in training for foreign fields. A lady worker has been in Dublin during the past year. An increased expenditure is anticipated. If China and Japan are visited, there will necessarily be large outgoings. An appeal was therefore made for continued support.

JAPAN

was represented by Rev. Barclay F. Buxton. After a short survey of gratifying missionary progress in different fields, Mr. Buxton said that in Japan they had also seen much to encourage; God is raising up evangelists and teachers there of marked spiritua power. He made special mention of Mr. Ishii, of Yokohama, and his 300 orphans being trained and educated for God; of Mr. Nagasaki, who had lately returned from this country, and is pursuing open-air work among outcasts and others; of Dr. Saiki, of Kyoto, and his maternity hospital; he is giving means and talents to the Lord's work. Referring to his work at Matsea, a field embracing a region as large as several English counties, Mr. Buxton said there was scarcely any other Gospel agency among these thousands except the C.M.S. Mission, to which he belongs. The workers feel the great strain and the tremendous responsibility resting on them. The population is large—1,200,000 or 1,300,000—comprising large numbers of fishermen in the coast, towns, and villages. The spiritual necessities of the people are great. A summer school for Christian young men was held at Kobe last year; a few of those who attended felt that they did not get all they needed at the school, so that they gathered at a little village not far off and waited on God for the power of the Holy Ghost. These dispersed to different parts of the country, having received a great blessing to their souls. Miss Amy Wilson Carmichael's parish, Herosi, is a little town of 5000 inhabitants, some miles distant from Matsea. At first the town was practically shut out from the workers, but it is very different now. The place is one of the brightest spots in their Japanese work. The native Christians are going out to the surrounding villages, and inviting the people to Christ. Mr. Buxton gave a lengthy and interesting account of definite answers to prayer given in the conversion of some of the dwellers of that region. There are about 1200 large villages and towns within the limits of the mission. The people are very accessible to Gospel effort, and one can anywhere secure a little audience for evangelising. Seven little churches have been organised, each with a Japanese evangelist, and each seeking to win their neighbours to Christ. Opposition has only served to deepen and extend the work. Mr. Buxton's statement was a very long and a very detailed one, referring rather to the work of the C.M.S. than distinctively to that of the Keswick Mission.

Rev. C. A. Fox having led in prayer for a great blessing on the work in Japan and elsewhere, a short address followed by Rev. J. G. Gregson, containing some very touching personal references, and detailing what he believed to be God's leadings for his proposed visit to the Cape and India during the coming winter.

PRAISE MEETING.

On Saturday morning, at seven o'clock, with the brilliant sunshine suffusing the landscape, a great company gathered in the tent to give praise to God for the many blessings received during the wonderful week. The opening exercise was Fanny Crosby's well-known jubilate:—

Praise Him, praise Him, Jesus, our blessed Redeemer,
Sing, O earth, his wonderful love proclaim;
Hail Him, hail Him, highest archangels in glory,
Strength and honour give to his holy name.

A short season of silent communion was followed by audible praise and thanksgiving by Rev. J. J. Luce. Another song of praise was sung:—

We praise Thee, O God, for the Son of thy love.

Mr. R. Wilson read Rev. xix. 5-9. We can have a little foretaste here this morning, he said, of the glorious song there recorded. A large number of requests for praise that had been sent in were read by Mr. Richardson. They were mostly for individual or family mercies experienced and accessions of spiritual blessing received during the Convention. One request was for praise for the beautiful weather throughout the week.

Parting texts or brief admonitory words then came from those on the platform. Some of the speakers had already left. These texts were largely in the way of cheering watchwords for future work, suffering or warfare; attention was directed away from human resolves, promises, and acts of consecration, to the abiding faithfulness and keeping power of God. Afterwards there came a perfect chorus of texts from those sitting in the body of the tent. The stream of Scripture would have flowed on for an indefinite period, but time had passed, and the chairman called on all to join in the hymn:—

Let us sing of his love once again,
Of the love that can never decay.

Then Psalm cxvii., containing in two verses a comprehensive ascription of praise, was read by the chairman, and afterwards by the whole audience. The chairman said a telegram had just been received from Foochow, China, dated 8.40 a.m. that morning. Seeing that it was about a quarter past 8 when he spoke, the message was nearly half an hour ahead of time. The message was from a conference at Foochow, and was Nehemiah viii. 10, a passage which had a few minutes before been given by Miss Nugent as her parting text, "Go your way, eat the fat, and drink the sweet, and send portions to those for whom nothing is prepared, for this day is holy unto the Lord; neither be ye sorry, for the joy of the Lord is your strength."

The chairman himself gave his text, and then Mr. Webb Peploe (having mentioned that he and the chairman were the only representatives left on the platform of the first Keswick Convention) led in earnest prayer with confession of shortcoming, and asking for a continued and abiding sense and assurance of the Divine presence and power, according to the need of each soul. All joined in the Lord's Prayer in subdued tones, and the Convention was formally closed with the Benediction. As a parting shot Mr. Peploe said that the Convention would come of age next year. Let them remember that and give it a good welcome. The Doxology was sung by the audience, which thereafter dispersed.

THE MISSIONARY MEETING.

One of the most crowded congregations of the week came together for the closing missionary meeting on Saturday forenoon. Half of the platform and a large space besides was filled with actual or intending missionaries, a good proportion of them being young ladies. The proceedings, which extended over three solid hours, began with the singing of Miss Stock's hymn—

Lord, thy ransomed Church is waking
Out of slumber, far and ne[illegible]

Psalm 96 was read by the platform and the congregation in alternate verses, and Rev. C. A. Fox led in prayer. Mr. Wilson said he had received several articles of jewellery and a cheque for £100 towards the Keswick Mission. A lady had sent £8 towards a mission from Keswick to the Punjaub.

Rev. E. H. Hopkins, having taken charge of the missionary meeting, called on Rev. J. Wilkinson to speak first on behalf of the Jews. His ten minutes were equally divided between the consideration of God's word about the Jews, and God's work among the Jews. Speaking of the Divine order, "to the Jew first and also to the Gentile," Mr. Wilkinson told how Mr. Hudson Taylor had called on him on the last day of 1893, and left a New Year's gift for work among the Jews on that principle. Mr. Wilkinson said he wrote a note in reply to Mr. Taylor's note, enclosing a gift of similar amount for work among the Gentiles. As to the work, he had very gratifying news to give as to copies of the New Testament scattered among the sons of Israel. They were now arranging to cover the whole world of Jews with the New Testament. He said he would give a detailed account of his recent visit to America at a meeting at Friar's Crag on Sabbath afternoon.

Canon Taylor Smith, of the C.M.S. Mission in West Africa, quoted Luke x. 37, "Go and do thou." He made a general appeal for consecration to work wherever God should send. He said he wanted three men to go back with him to Sierra Leone next October. It was called the white man's grave, but it was the black man's resurrection. He had the places and the money, but he wanted the men. He could not describe the joy of work in the foreign field. He had looked in vain for unhappy missionaries; but had found many saints at home with sad faces and unhappy hearts. The Canon held up a human bone picked up by him last January in West Africa, a bit of one of eighty bodies slain there. Will not the cruelties and miseries of heathendom draw some to those dark places of the earth to tell them of the Saviour? He recalled some memories of Bishop Hill, whom he had greeted on the shores of Africa after he had been at the Convention of last year. The references to Africa stirred the spirit of Mrs. Amanda Smith, sitting near by, and she audibly responded to the heartfelt utterances of the speaker.

South Africa was represented by Mr. Spencer Walton, who said the work there was marvellously progressing. Matabeleland is now open, since the death of Lobengula, who, said Mr. Walton, really got his deserts. There is also a great field in Gazaland. Some interesting facts were given as to the progress of the work. The South African General Mission is now working in Zululand, Amatongaland, and is stretching on into the Transvaal. Five years ago that very day the first six outgoing missionaries of the Cape Mission had a farewell in the tent at Keswick; now there are seventy missionaries and workers in the field, and ten others going out.

South America, "the neglected continent," found an earnest advocate in the person of Miss Lucy Guinness. She said the Romish power has now been broken in all the great States of that continent, with its thirty-seven millions of people, but for a long time no one went to carry the Gospel to them. Venezuela, with three millions, has but one missionary; Columbia has three points of light; Ecuador, with two millions, has no missionary, and never has had one; Peru, with three millions, has only two stations; Bolivia is also without a missionary. The total number of missionaries of every sort in South America is 400. Think of this, compared with the thousands on thousands of workers crowded into this little land. Miss Guinness appealed to her sisters to hear the call of Jesus as it came to Mary of old to go and tell others of his death and resurrection.

Rev. W. Cassels, of the China Inland Mission, quoted the saying of an old man in China he had met, "It's all dark in front," as a representation of the state of the many millions of Chinese. He spoke of a district in inland China as large as England, with its millions of souls and one little band of workers. Last year their little company of native Christians, in gracious answer to prayer, was more than doubled. The very first man who came to the opening of a new church building was one who brought a basket of idols that he might burn them publicly. Mr. Cassels believed that the Lord was about to do a new thing in China in still larger measure if his people would but have a new spirit of faith and prayer.

The Chairman said a telegram had come from Rev. Hubert Brooke, of Reading, giving 2 Chron. xii. 38 as a message to the Convention. Telegrams of greeting had also come from Miss Hester Campbell, Gaza, and from a conference at Penang. These messages and other claims of the heathen world were laid before God in earnest prayer by Dr. Harry Guinness. He prayed for Mr. Hudson Taylor, now on a long and arduous journey to North China. It was intended that he should have been at Keswick, but the Lord's business in China prevented, and the eloquence of his absence should speak to all of the needs of vast China.

Rev. F. Burt, speaking of the C.M.S. work in East Africa, said he had preached the Gospel in many parts of East Africa, but what had been done was but a drop in the bucket. He asked a blessing on the work of Mr. Douglas Hooper at Chilori, whose wife, who had left one of the happiest of English homes, is now in the ranks of the church glorified.

North Africa next had its five minutes' turn, as Dr. Churcher told something of what the Lord had done in that seat of Satan, where the false prophet Mohammed has almost absolute rule. Will not many come and help in the task there, which seems impossible to human power but not to God? In Morocco the idea of a Christian is an idolater, an unclean person, and a drunkard. Who is responsible for such a strange notion existing in the minds of the people? The needs of Morocco are very great; will not many more go out to carry the message of salvation to these deluded, dying millions?

A very earnest plea for China's millions came from the lips of Rev. Yung King-Yen. There is among the Chinese much piety and devotion towards an unknown God. Who will carry to them the knowledge of the living and true God if the Christians of England do not do it? The Chinese are as susceptible to Christian truth as those of another nation; examples of this were given.

Japan had five minutes' advocacy from Rev. W. P. Buncombe, who spoke of the great paucity of workers in the land of the rising sun. From there we were carried to Palestine by Miss Gage Brown, who told of prayer offered in the Keswick tent having been answered in the sending out of a Keswick missionary to the Holy Land.

The ancient land of Persia was represented by Bishop Stuart, who besought continual prayer on behalf of Persia. There is now an open door, but there are many adversaries, especially amongst the religious leaders of the people. At present any Mohammedan becoming Christian is liable to a sentence of death; may that obstacle soon be removed. The Bishop depicted a scene in a Mohammedan home in the suburb of Ispahan. A lady missionary was having a Bible reading when a disturbance arose. An angry surging crowd demanded that the "feringhee" should be brought out. She calmly went out to meet the mob, and God protected her in the hour of danger. The Bishop said he had been led to go out to that land where he had formerly laboured, though he had to leave his flock in New Zealand.

Rev. Martin J. Hall, of the Children's Special Service Mission, spoke of the needs of the children of the East, especially of Ceylon. How many, he asked, are going to be carried from this place of privilege to take the messages of salvation to the children of the East? Some very striking examples were given by Mr. Hall of the power of the Gospel over young people in Ceylon, in enabling them to renounce idolatry and witness boldly for Christ.

Two hours had almost gone now, and the strain was somewhat relaxed by singing two verses of

Anywhere with Jesus,
Says the Christian heart,
Let Him take me where He will,
So we do not part.

Rev. J. P. Haythornethwaite said he had found that the best way to enjoy the Keswick blessing was not to go there every year and be repeatedly bathed in its privileges. Let people go out to some part of the mission-field for a few years and labour and testify for the Master, then they will come back to a fuller and more real enjoyment of Keswick. The speaker's chief object in rising was to put in a strong plea for the use of higher education as a means of reaching the superior castes in India. These have the brains of India, and if they are reached the other castes will soon be reached. Young India has a passion to-day for education, and there is a great opportunity while giving this of also communicating to them the truths of the Christian faith. He had charge of 600 students at Agra, 500 of these are Hindoos and Mohammedans, and the Lord is giving great encouragement in the work. Miss Swainson, of the Church of England Zenana Mission, next spoke of blessing received in connection with work among young girls in South India who are being trained as native missionaries to their own sisters. There is also effort among Hindoo and Mohammedan schools, where the girls display a wonderful knowledge of the Scriptures, and many, though nominally heathen, are really Christians.

Mr. Sydney Donne, of the C.M.S., as an evangelistic labourer in the district of Bengal, described the vastness of the field. He and the others of his band had 150,000 people in their allotted district, and they could only cover it once in two years! Where the work "catches on" out stations are planted, and more extended work is carried on. The women are not being touched to any extent, and a hearty invitation was extended to any lady helpers who could go out and help.

Mr. Wellesley Bailey, of the Lepers' Mission, said there are over 119,000 lepers in India according to the official record; and many thousands of them in China and Japan. Outcasts from society, they are in a very grievous condition. The Mission to Lepers has a number of centres of work in the East, and there have been many cases of spiritual blessing result. Last year 150 joined the church on profession of faith. Some of the leper asylums have become wholly Christian.

Mr. R. E. Speer, of the Students' Volunteer Movement in America, spoke of progress made in the work in recent years. He told of the initiation of the movement at the Summer School at Mount Hermon in 1886. Since then some 4000 or 5000 young men and women had joined in a resolve to go to the foreign field if God should open the way, and seven hundred had actually gone. Probably 24-25ths of all the young people who had gone out of late years through the chief missionary societies had come from these college students. Any personal holiness which falls short of real consecration of life is not the personal holiness which Christ exhibited. A most pathetic appeal to heed the despairing cry of the perishing heathen took up the closing moments of the brief but eloquent address of this young American brother.

Rev. W. Hunt, as an ambassador on behalf of the 900 millions of heathen, made another appeal, almost agonising in its earnestness and urgency, for a large exodus of Christians into the dark and needy places of the field. Then the claim and call of Christ for the service of his consecrated children were pressed home well nigh with tears. If this good brother should again attend a Keswick Conference we trust his gifts of moving address will find outlet from the regular platform.

At this point Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe led in prayer for tangible proofs of consecration, and gave some closing words of exhortation from Acts xx. 22—24.

If this Convention has carried any weight, this, he said, would be the measure of our consecration. Paul was ever obedient to the monitions of the Holy Ghost, even though bonds and afflictions should await him. So it may be with those who are to go to the mission-field; but we are to let none of these things move us. Sometimes we are urged not to go into danger. Paul said he did not count his life dear to him. So we must not count even life ours. Christ waits for an answer to the appeals made to us, and the inquiry must go up, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" God will send the answer if we lay ourselves at the feet of the Master. There is no true consecration until there is out-and-out obedience to the Master's command. Life eternal is joyous acquiescence in and obedience to his behests. He who is prepared to consecrate all to God may look forward with confidence and pleasure past the light affliction of the moment to the eternal weight of glory. What will twenty years of added life be from the vista of eternity? Why should we, then, hug our lives instead of pouring them out for our Lord and his redeemed ones? Let us so live as to be able to lay down souls at the Master's feet, and then we shall at last hear his "Well done." How many souls have we ever won for our Lord? Does the sad echo come back, "How many? How many?" Let us now fall into the hands of our Lord, and we shall take up the words of Paul: "None of these things move me." The Prebendary led in prayer and invoked the benediction of the Triune Jehovah; then the Keswick Convention proper of 1894 had passed into the region of history.

EPILEPTICS IN SWEDEN.

Mdme. E. de Ramsay, founder of the first Cripples and Epileptics' Homes in Sweden, writes from Wilhelmsro:—"Twenty-two years after the starting of our Homes the Lord has answered the intercessions of faithful hearts by making it, as far as one can judge, a permanent institution. It has long been a cause of anxiety lest all the sacrifices of willing hearts, hands, and purses should be comparatively of small avail—lest at the founder's death the whole establishment should be broken up.

"I was enabled to go on with the work without appeals to the public till I secured the help of a few valuable friends. God has supported, helped, and encouraged the work in many ways. Several members of our Royal family became interested in the progress of the work, and at length Parliament resolved to give grants for the keeping of epileptic children in suitable Homes, and institutions sprang up as seedlings from the plantation at Wilhelmsro.

"This summer a greater joy has been afforded me. A committee has been formed in Gothenburg of friends who, recognising the necessity of such Homes, and appreciating the excellent arrangements and the self-sacrificing management of the Wilhelmsro Homes, wished to show their respect in this matter by purchasing 'The Hope,' the largest of the Homes, fitted up for thirty children. The committee, moreover, is henceforth answerable for the funds. During the past winter, when lying at the point of death, it was my constant cry, 'Oh Lord, let not these unhappy children be scattered in a world that does not care for them.' The prayer was heard, life was prolonged, and true friends came forward, which greatly hastened the recovery.

"But for that timely relief it would not have been possible to open a very much-needed new home at Wilhelmsro, 'The Refuge,' for the worst cases among epileptic children, those who, in addition to their great affliction of epilepsy, are deaf, dumb, idiotic, paralytic, and sometimes blind! The sufferings of these unhappy beings are greater than can be described, and I have longed for years to provide for them a 'refuge.' It will be a great satisfaction to spend the last years of a long life in providing for those unfortunates, and I hope that in due course the same committee will also be responsible for 'The Refuge.' But the future is left to God; the present object is to work for the neglected beings, and, in the cases of cripples and epileptics, to press upon the public the duty of making humane provision for their needs."

BRITISH SEAMEN IN DUNKERQUE.

The following letter, received from the captain of a large vessel trading with Dunkerque, needs no comment:—"My attention has been drawn to a system which is practically becoming a curse amongst the shipping visiting Dunkerque. I refer to the practice of so-called 'washerwomen' boarding foreign vessels immediately they come alongside any quay wall, rushing uninvited into saloons, private rooms, and officers' berths alike, and naturally inviting the attention of all. It does not end here, for whilst the vessel is in port they board her daily under the plea of business, and present cards giving their addresses and the names of low saloons where they may be found. I find this evil more glaring on each visit."

In the face of this gigantic evil, we are doing what we can for the benefit and safety of our sailors. The reading-rooms are well provided with newspapers and magazines, and Bethel services, a Bible-class, and other meetings are held, which have proved a blessing to many a young man. We are anxious to add a coffee-bar, where refreshments can be supplied to sailors without the temptations of strong drink and its attendant evils, which must be encountered in every café. We have already received several small sums towards this object, but we still need £150 before we can go forward.

REV. O. MICHELSEN AT TONGOA.

The many friends whom Rev. Oscar Michelsen made during his recent stay in Europe will learn with joy that he has resumed his work on the island of Tongoa, New Hebrides. In a letter, dated May 17, Mr. Michelsen thus describes the landing:—

It was on the 9th inst. that I had the unspeakable joy of seeing Tongoa again. It was with a feeling of sincere gratitude that I saw my pretty isle growing larger and larger, and each hill getting more and more distinct, until at last I could see the white iron roof of "Bon Accord Lodge," on my own hill, glittering in the early morning sun among the trees. We soon also saw the mission flag flying outside the printing office; my faithful teacher, Billie, who had charge of the station, had hoisted it to let me see that he was still "holding the fort." About 10 o'clock the anchor was dropped, the boat lowered, and being, as you may suppose, impatient, I was the first to spring into it. My wife and the other missionaries followed.

A few minutes' pull brought us to the shore. As he boat was nearing the beach, a score or so of natives came down from under the trees to meet us. There was a general shaking of hands, but not a word was uttered on either side. The natives, like myself, were too much affected by a strange mixture of joy and sorrow to venture to speak, lest we should betray our want of "manliness." However, after the handshaking, I asked about their state of health, and got some very sad accounts of death and sickness. I had previously heard of the death of Matarisogo, a man of the rare quality of silently living Christ. Now I was told of the death of his wife, a dear Christian woman, who was a person of just the same stamp. I was told that the reason that so few came down to meet us was that all the others were ill. As I had learned, influenza was at work among them. The day was spent getting our luggage, stores for the next three months, mission boxes, and some 4000 feet of building materials ashore. It was very gratifying to see that, weak as they were, the natives worked hard to get our things safe through the heavy surf. During the afternoon Mrs. Michelsen and myself took a walk up the hill, and were very gratified to find the house and grounds in good order.

The next day we started for a general round of the village, with a basket full of medicine bottles. I visited some seventy patients, who all seemed very miserable. In many cases the trouble had gone to the liver, in others to the lungs, and in yet others to the brain. All seemed to look for nothing but death. On my visit yesterday I was delighted to find a great improvement. Most of my patients seemed bright, and many told me they were already well.

The day after our landing, crowds of natives from all parts of the island came to wish us welcome, and to help us to carry our things up the hill (430 feet high) to our house. Our friend Manambalea* was as hearty as ever. It is premature to report on the state of the mission. Taviroto told me that he was sure of four who had been born again at his village since I left. Others had reports of the same kind. It is quite clear to me that whilst formalists have grown rather careless, there are also indications of the good work having gone on during my absence. Last Sunday I had a service here at the head station in the morning, and in the afternoon I started with a basket of medicines for the other side of the island. As soon as we rang the bell for service, a very good congregation assembled. I noticed that nearly all were leaning forward to catch every word that I said. Evidently they had kept up a habit of attentive hearing during my absence. After the service I had to attend to the sick, of whom there were not a few, some suffering from dysentery and very many from influenza. There is much sickness throughout my district, but most at the two principal villages.

A greater trouble than the sickness, however, has come upon us. Shortly before I went home the chiefs of my island begged of the "Chief" of Queensland to forbid "recruiting" on the island. I suppose the "powers that be" in Queensland just had enough of English blood in them to respect such a request, as a mere matter of fair-play. Before reaching Tongoa I heard that the little remaining drop of English blood had all leaked out, and on looking over some letters that were waiting for me on my study table, I found one from the Colonial Secretary's Office, Brisbane, informing me that the recruiting of labourers at Tongoa, by duly authorised Queensland labour vessels, would be resumed! Accordingly, there is a vessel anchored here at this moment with twenty of the most hopeful young men of the island already on board. How many more will go, it is hard to say. It is a practice with our natives not to allow a relative to go alone; so one or another would go with those already on board. Many of these men leave their wives behind them. Perhaps five or six may see their own island again; the others will leave their bones in Queensland. That this traffic, in the course of the next twenty years, will reduce the Kanaka population by perhaps 50,000, is doubtless as much the opinion of the keenest "blackbird" hunter as it is mine. In other words, 50,000 of these poor natives are to be sacrificed for the benefit of a few sugar-planters in Queensland. Can you not help us to get the friends of China, who pray and work for the suppression of the opium trade, also to pray and work for the downtrodden natives of these islands, whose protest is as much disregarded as is that of China?

Our own health is good, and our confidence in our faithful Lord and Master is not weakened.

* The story of this worthy chief, and particulars of other characters mentioned in this letter, are given in Mr. Michelsen's book, Cannibals Won for Christ. (Morgan & Scott.)

FROM THE UPPER CONGO.

Mr. A. J. Bowen, of the Congo-Balolo Mission, writes from Lulanga Station, Upper Congo River: "We are situate about 800 miles from the West Coast, and at the confluence of the Lulanga and Congo rivers, and in the centre of some very extensive and populous villages. The people speak the 'Eleku' language, which has yet to be reduced to writing, though, thank God, we are able to preach the Gospel already. Brother Gilchrist, who is in charge of this station, has been spared to labour here for eighteen months, he having taken up the work when left by our late brother Todd, and I have had the joy of working with him for nearly twelve months.

"Our experience has been more of rooting out false professors than of seeing souls accepting the Gospel. People in the homeland have little idea of the deceitfulness of the natives here in Central Africa. Faithful missionaries are sometimes deceived into baptizing and receiving into church-membership those who have never been converted by the Holy Ghost. What sorrow of heart some of us have experienced over those who were professing Christians, but when the restraint of life upon a mission station was removed, have gone back to their vile heathen life! It is very difficult to deal with a people so easily affected by their feelings. Here at Lulanga, where there were twelve professed converts, we now have but four remaining. In our anxiety for souls we feel the temptation to pass over faults, but pray that even our longing to have converts may not make us in any way careless as to the reality of the conversion. We are now waiting upon God for the showers of blessing, and trust they are not far distant."

MR. VARLEY AT SALISBURY.

The meetings held by Mr. Henry Varley in this city have been greatly appreciated. Identified specially with the opening of the City Hall for the preaching of the Gospel, the interest spread rapidly amongst the Christians, and took hold of large numbers of the people. It is difficult to deal with the ecclesiasticism which is so pronounced in this cathedral city; but the exaltation of Christ, and the teaching of the Word of God at the Bible readings, added to the stirring addresses given, brought together upon the ground of the unity of the Church of God large numbers of God's people.

The meetings on the Lord's Day will not be readily forgotten. The evening saw the fine building crowded, despite the heavy rain. Mr. Varley gave an address upon the Lord's Second Coming, which was listened to with deep interest.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH, STAINES, which was opened on Saturday, has been erected at the sole expense of Sir Edward Clarke. It is capable of accommodating 700 worshippers. The cost of the church exceed £10,000, and the endowment was £6000.

COUNT CAMPELLO'S WORK.

The work associated with the name of Count Campello is steadily growing. Recent news from Papigno, a village of 2000 inhabitants, half-way between Terni and Arrone, encourages great expectations from the Province of Umbria. The population is of an artisan character, and it has risen en masse against Ultramontanism, and given adhesion to the Reformed Church. The reason assigned by the people is that, having watched the work, they have realised that to become good Christians the one thing needful is to trust in Christ and his Gospel, and not in the Pope and his satellites.

A new chapel was recently opened at Papigno. In describing the proceedings, Signor Luzzi, curate of Arrone, says:—"Some little way from Papigno we were met by the village band which was awaiting us, and which struck up the national hymn when we came in sight. A large crowd had assembled to welcome us, which increased as we approached the little town—clapping their hands and shouting enthusiastically, 'Viva la Riforma! Viva l'Italia! Viva il nostro Rè!' Our entry was truly triumphal. The whole country had turned out into the Piazza, and from the windows flags and banners were flying—and crowds of children had climbed up into the trees, and their voices joined in the welcome.

"The chapel was much too small to accommodate all who wished to enter it, but, in spite of the crowd, no disturbance occurred, for the Sub-Prefect of Terni had sent six royal 'Carabinieri' in full uniform to maintain order. In the afternoon Count Campello explained the true nature of the Reform, his eloquent words being listened to with the deepest attention. When he descended the pulpit, the people crowded around to offer their congratulations.

"It is noteworthy that the Roman Catholic Bishop of Terni had come to Papigno on the same day to hold a confirmation. He was very coldly received, indeed, no notice was taken of his presence, as the whole population was absorbed in giving a welcome to Count Campello."

Communications regarding the work may be addressed to Miss Mayor, Rockhills, St. Stephen's-road, Bournemouth.

A MISSIONARY PLEA.

"You have never stood in the darkness."—Words used by a Red Indian chief as he pleaded that to him and his people might be sent the "white man's Book."

"You have never stood in the darkness,
And reached out a trembling hand,
If, haply, someone might find it
In the awe of a lonely land,
Where the shadows shift so strangely,
And the quick heart-beat is stirred,
If only the leaf be rustled
By the wing of a passing bird.

"You have never stood in the darkness,
And said good-bye to the wife,
The little child, or the mother,
Who have sat in your house of life,
And knew not where they were going,
As birds who cross our sight,
Flitting within from the darkness,
Flitting without to the night.

"You have never stood in the darkness,
When soul after soul went by
In the mighty rush of a battle,
Where kinsman and comrade die;
And something says they are living,
Although we behold them prone,
With eyes that stare out blindly,
As yet shall do our own.

"You have never stood in the darkness;
You do not know its awe;
On your land a great light shineth,
Which long ago you saw.
For the light of the world we ask you,
We plead for the Book which shows
The way to win to his footstool,
Which only the white man knows."

Oh, voice from out of the darkness!
Oh, cry of a soul in pain!
May it ring as the blast of clarion,
Nor call God's hosts in vain!
By the pierced Hand which saved us
Let ours do their work to-day,
Till from those who tremble in darkness
The shadows are swept away.

Mary Gorges.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

(By our Special Correspondent.)

Much public interest has been aroused in the proposals to separate chairmen of districts from circuit work, and the debate on the subject will be long remembered as one of the ablest of recent years. The whole scheme has been denounced as the establishment of a new order of the ministry in the Methodist Church, and the introduction of Episcopacy into Methodism. It is fair to say that the supporters of the proposals altogether deny that there are any subtle ecclesiastical designs beneath the surface, and declare that the whole question is simply one of administrative efficiency.

Rev. H. J. Pope, the ex-president, introduced the report of the committee recommending the separation of chairmen from circuit work, so that they might give the whole of their time to the oversight and organisation of the work of God within their districts. He denied that ecclesiastical tendencies were their motives. "You may rely upon it, brethren," urged the ex-president, "we are not going to erect a formidable barrier against Anglican tendencies by neglecting our own institutions. Imperfect church institutions amongst us will not help us in the great conflict that is impending. The great battle that is to be fought will not be successfully waged by desultory and unassociated societies. It will need a great Evangelical church with the organisations and appliances that belong to a church." He urged that they were following New Testament lines in separating men for work of a pastoral and spiritual order. The Primitive Church had done so in obedience to the Holy Spirit's behest. "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." They were already evangelists, but they were now separated for special spiritual work. A lengthened debate followed.

Mr. R. W. Perks, M.P., led the opposition to the proposals. He urged that the men who were pushing forward this scheme were urging the development of Methodism on Anglican lines. He quoted with approval Dr. Rigg's description of the ecclesiastical position of Methodism. It was neither Episcopal, Congregational, nor Presbyterian, but blended some of the characteristics of all three. Its superintendents, chairmen of districts, and presidents gave it some of the spirit and the characteristics of primitive Episcopacy. The Episcopacy of the Anglican Establishment, like that of Popery, ignored the people in the conduct of the Church affairs. Independency ignored the minister, as such. In Wesleyan Methodism the Scriptural prerogatives of the ministry and the legitimate influence of the people were made beautifully to limit and direct each other. It was because Mr. Perks desired to retain this balance of power that he resisted the present proposals.

Dr. Rigg, Dr. Stephenson, and Rev. H. Price Hughes followed on the side of the committee's report, and Dr. Jenkins, and Revs. Charles Garrett, Albert Clayton, and Mr. T. G. Osborne, M.A., supported the views of Mr. Perks. It was evident that the strong feeling of the Conference was for "No Bishops," and Mr. Perks's amendment in favour of the status quo was accepted by a large majority.

NONCONFORMIST DEPUTATION.

It has become the established custom for a deputation from the Nonconformist ministers of any town in which the Conference meets to attend and bring greetings of brotherliness. Birmingham Nonconformity was largely represented on Tuesday afternoon. One distinguished form was missing—that of Dr. Dale, who sent a deeply sympathetic letter. He congratulated the conference on the progress Methodism had made in Birmingham in the last twenty-five years. But the increase in the number of chapels in the city did not seem to him so important as the increase of spirit and vigour with which the work was carried on. He expressed his love and admiration for the great Methodist society, of which the Wesleyans were the parent stock. One address was read by Rev. F. Stephens (Congregational), and another was presented by Mr. Geo. Cadbury, from the Free Church Congress of Birmingham. The Temperance Federation and the Anti-Slavery Society were also represented. On behalf of the latter Mr. Arthur Pease addressed the conference. He said that they felt that there was a doubt whether the Christian public realised the present position of

THE QUESTION OF SLAVERY.

As far as Africa was concerned, a great deal remained to be done. It was difficult to obtain statistics, but on high authority it was stated that 500,000 lives were sacrificed yearly in the slave trade in Africa, and at least two millions were reduced to slavery. During the last ten years an area had been depopulated equal to four or five times the area of Great Britain. They did not want military interference, but they believed that if the watchful eye of the Christian public of England were not directed to the question, the state of things would be grievously worse. They wished to stimulate Christian interest, and suggested that the members of the conference in their respective districts should direct attention to the question, and bring moral pressure upon the Government.

METHODISM BEYOND THE SEAS.

A remarkable address was given at the open session for the reception of representatives from other Conferences by Bishop Andrews, of the Methodist Episcopal Church of America. He referred to the circumstances attending the founding of the Methodist Church in America. One hundred and twenty-five years ago, when England was just waking from a hideous century of irreligion and vice, and the mutterings of the revolutionary storm filled the air, Richard Boardman and Joseph Pilmoor went forth to help their struggling brethren in the American colonies. To-day the membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church numbered two-and-a-half millions, with 16,000 ministers and 14,000 local preachers. In eloquent terms he described the conditions and progress of their work.

Rev. Lorimer Fison, M.A., brought greetings from the churches of Australasia. Irish representatives followed. Rev. Dr. Cornforth, of the French Conference, made a strong appeal to Protestant parents in regard to the education of their daughters in France. He described the insidious nature of the attempt made in Roman Catholic schools on the Continent to induce scholars from England to become perverts to Romanism. "Of course," said he, "the principal of the school gives every assurance that the religion of the pupil will not be meddled with; but after a while some priest of fascinating manners invites the girls to attend some musical service at the church. Their hearts are moved by the wailings of the Miserere in some dimly-lighted church, and in some cases it becomes an easy task to lead them to the confessional, and they seek admission into the Romish Church." They ought to send their children to their own schools in France."

FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Missionary affairs have received a large share of attention. Additional interest was given to the Missionary session by the address of a native prince, by name Ademuyiwa Haastrup, from Lagos, in West Africa. This swarthy potentate, the elected successor of the king of one of the native states, is a Methodist local preacher and class-leader. He gave an account of his Christian work, and in stirring language denounced lynching in America, and the drink traffic among native races. It was a pathetic thing to see this noble specimen of a native race pleading with Christian Englishmen in such a cause. He urged the need of a training institution in Western Africa, and paid a high tribute to the work of Methodist missionaries on the West Coast.

An important decision was arrived at in the representative session, on the motion of Rev. F. W. Macdonald, one of the missionary secretaries. It was that should be set apart for Foreign Missions throughout the Wesleyan Methodist Church. Mr. Macdonald urged that they needed to go to the great springs of moral and spiritual inspiration. A day set apart for intercessory prayer might well be combined with a large and beneficent outflow of liberality. Mr. Solomon Jevons had offered to give £1000 if a combined effort was made during the year to wipe out the debt of £28,000. It was suggested that on the day of intercession freewill offerings might be given for the work of God, and a new era of missionary finance introduced.

OPENING FOR SERVICE.—An opportunity occurs for an earnest worker to reside in a beautiful locality, where one with some means and spiritual gifts and a genuine longing for souls, would find an open door. Inquiries should be addressed J. G., c.o. the Editor of The Christian, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

ROME IN CENTRAL AMERICA.

Some idea of Romish domination and corruption in Costa Rica may be formed by a perusal of the following translation of an article entitled "Usurious Traffic," in El Pabellon Liberal ("The Liberal Standard"), which has been sent to us by a correspondent at San José.

The Lord Bishop of Costa Rica, Don Augustus Thiel (who, of course, is all meekness and Christian charity), has sent in a bill for 1350 francs to the French residents of this locality for performing the funeral ceremonies in memory of the late President Carnot, an incident which, to us, is full of suggestion, and leads us to inquire, is it a Church of Christ or a usurer's counter which we have in our midst? The scandals connected with it have reached their highest. The black gown is made to justify, to cover all—even the putrid sore of moral leprosy. A man may become a priest, and he has obtained a licence for anything he wants.

Christ preached humility, virtue, charity, self-sacrifice. He was born in a manger and was fed with the bread of charity. His ministers, alas! his ministers set themselves to imitate Him by doing the opposite of what He commanded!

The Church is being converted into a disreputable market-place. Do you want to be christened? You must pay so much. Do you wish for sacramental marriage? Out with your cash. Do you desire to eat meat on those days when the Church forbids it? Ditto. Do you propose to wed your cousin? Ditto. Do you ask to be divorced? Ditto. Do you wish to spare yourself a scandalous admonition from the pulpit? Ditto. Do you require a certificate of your being christened? Ditto. Do you expect to be buried with Catholic rites? Ditto. And thus the list would be interminable.

This, however, is the only trade which has not a tax imposed upon it, or any duty of any kind. Yea, the black gown has come to be a coin of forced currency. Ah, religion of Christ! The leaves of thy grand Book are turned into bills of a roaring trade, and thy ministers into heartless usurers. The cross has been supplemented by the golden sovereign, and the inscription which appeared on that of Golgotha has given place to a disgraceful placard that says No Credit.

Even the most fervent Catholics are realising this, and blushing. Yet Christendom cannot but yield to this scandalous auctioneer's hammering, this disreputable clergy! Christ had no other treasure than his exemplary virtues; He lived on alms and preached peace and concord among Christian princes. Bishop Thiel, on the contrary, lives in a palatial residence, and drinks wines brought from the Rhine; while Father Mayorga, his satellite, puts the dagger of the revolution in the hands of his devotees.

And these men handle every day the consecrated elements! And they are supposed to receive in their ears the secret confessions of the maiden coming to kneel before them at the confessional! And are known to have felt the appetites of the flesh which hides under that black gown, just as they have more than once given cause for the judge having to deal with the virtue of a female or the honour of the family.

Bishop Thiel came to Costa Rica poor enough, very poor in fact. To-day, he is one of the principal shareholders of the Costa Rica Bank, can make frequent trips to Europe, and lives in princely style.

President Carnot was an honest and energetic man, generous towards the poor, an exemplary father, and a sincere Catholic. The whole world acknowledges this by bowing before his grave, and yet if he desires to enter heaven he must needs pay 1350 francs, so at least we are told by Monsignor Thiel, who, of course, is all meekness and good nature!

But, no, no, and a thousand times no! This cannot be the religion of Christ: The Church (as we have it) should be taxed as a first-class usurer's office.

PROPHETIC CONFERENCE AT FOREST GATE.—In connection with the evangelistic services conducted by Mr. J. J. Sims, of Canada, in the marquee in Forest Gate, a prophetic conference was held on Thursday, July 26. There was a large attendance. Stirring and profitable addresses were given by Rev. David Baron, Mr. Charles Inglis, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, Mr. George Hucklesby, and Mr. Sims. The chair was occupied by Mr. Abraham Wallis in the afternoon, and by Mr. Clement Boardman in the evening. At the close of the day a number of persons confessed Christ.

MEMORIES OF AN OLD WORKER.

The notes sounded in a recent number, recording the names of some dear early workers, have awakened echoes that had almost died away. I was glad to see that Reginald Radcliffe is still to the front; also Richard Weaver, and others.

If we glance backward, we see some remarkable Bible readings going on in a southern county of England. Men of all denominations met frequently to study the Word of God, and the love of God's Word burned in many, and these readings wonderfully roused the hearts of saints; but Satan eventually marred the work, perhaps because external effort was not carried on at the same time, and Grace fell under the feet of mere knowledge.

Another powerful instrument appeared in 1852. The work of our aged brother, George Müller, was invigorating the faith of other saints: God as a living personal God moving in our houses and our homes, and not merely in churches and assemblies, was appealing to the hearts of believers. His work was thought at first to be almost miraculous: that work stimulated faith, living faith.

The Bible readings held in many hearts of England, pressed home but it certainly was of God to raise up at the same time a practical evidence of apostolic faith working amongst us in England. George Müller's work extended far beyond his own sphere; it made the Christian life appear real, apostolic, practical, and powerful. If George Müller's two knees were collectors sufficient when much money was required for God's work—may not two knees be sufficiently powerful to win souls for Christ without even the use of any church machinery? So, at least, thought the writer, and many others.

Rev. Capel Molyneux was just at that time rousing the educated classes in the West End. He was an English Church clergyman, but he did not cut his wings to suit a denominational cage. He held the Bible high up over the heads of all denominations and all sections of God's Church. Close Bible exposition, not mere sermonising, was the call given to him, and he was very true to the Word of God. Ere he died he was preaching with power outside of his own cage. Christians of all denominations called him a "Bible Teacher," and in even the "free seats" of the Lock Chapel men of rank were frequently seen in the crowd. The chapel is a very large one, but even the aisles were filled with educated persons, standing during the whole service. Sometimes one old dowager lady would give out of her pew a hassock to sit upon ere the service closed. He preached for an hour, or an hour and a-half sometimes; and conversions took place, we believe, every Sunday. His great object was, evidently, to exalt God's Word. The Glory of God and Christ, and the marvellous power of God the Spirit, were the themes that he burned into the souls of his hearers. Men, as they walked away, solemnly talked about the Bible and Bible wonders rather than about the preacher. The writer of this paper, like many others in London, changed his residence in order to gain Bible teaching there, and he had to wait for some years before he could, for either love or money, obtain sittings. At last he obtained two, but one was in the body of the building, the other in the gallery.

BIBLE-READINGS SPRANG UP RAPIDLY.

His preaching produced it, and it was a proof that the preaching was Scriptural and in subjection to the Word. Many large mansions were opened for Bible-readings, and leading men of all the denominations were found there. Of course, his congregation was not local; many families from Belgravia drove to the Lock Hospital regularly, and a dear Godly saint, who has gone home long ago, Mrs. General Campbell, of Halkin-street, Belgravia, opened her large drawing-room for Bible-readings. There you met Molyneux and one or two brave Presbyterian ministers, also the Hon. Baptist Noel, who soon saw baptism, and did good work as a Baptist minister, or good work in country districts (he loved to visit agricultural districts); present also two or three English clergymen, and the brave Moravian preacher Dickinson, also Lord Congleton, and not a few "Brethren." The rooms were crowded with ladies also, and although conversation over the Word of God, all having their Bibles, was keenly carried on, I never heard even one denominational controversy.

Sometimes verses were quoted that cut perhaps deep into some of our prejudices, but the love of God's Word and subjection to God's Word crushed meaner thoughts down. We appeared to be drawn by the Spirit of God to learn and receive, not to dispute and cling to denominations. He who loved Bible readings could at that time find a "Bible reading" in some large house in either the west or south-west of London every night of the week, but the East-end had few. The Howards of Tottenham held some, but I remember members of that family coming in the evening all the way from Tottenham to the West-end to be present at "Bible readings," and return again late. No underground railways in those days. At that time God sent to Exeter Hall, and the centre of London and the East-end fought about admission. The doors of Exeter Hall were every Sunday night crowded long before the time of opening, and so it was in Molyneux's place of preaching. Spurgeon met the need of all classes: he was no Bible scholar at that time, but he wielded the Word of God with power; he spoke with apostolic zeal and energy, and feared not the face of man. He rose high above all newspaper criticism. Editors sharpened their pens, and dipped them in scorn, contempt, and mockery; it availed nothing, the "boy preacher" flew above it all. His theme was like Molyneux's—the Bible only, and the "Bible hammer" broke up all the editors' pens. On he went, week after week, and gradually the higher classes, who scorned him at first, dropped in, and ere he left Exeter Hall the editorial current had changed, and new weapons—flattery and laudation—assailed the young bold witness. Thank God, he did not fall under the waves of popular applause, although the writer expected he would at that time. Earls and dukes, even, were seen upon his platform; and when Lord John Russell ceased to be a Cabinet Minister he was on the following Sabbath sitting close beside the boy preacher.

THE BISHOP OF LONDON,

when Spurgeon vacated Exeter Hall, took, I may say, Spurgeon's place. He sent every Sunday some Evangelical Churchman to preach boldly to the people as Spurgeon had done, although the clergyman of the parish protested against the Bishop doing so. The English Church took legal opinion upon the matter, and the Bishop was informed that if the English Prayer-book was not used any English clergyman could conduct preaching services, although he could not conduct a regular Church service. Dr. Spencer stated these facts publicly at the time, and I have copies of some of the letters.

The English Church got a great blessing in this ministry, and Evangelical men were quite in the ascendant; but some clergymen who had very different views, including Mackonochie, of St. Alban's, whom I was personally acquainted with, sought refuge in Sacramentarian forms, and many other causes pointed in the same direction. I will not enter upon these, as they would draw us from the causes of Revival, which is the subject before us.

I hoped to sketch the early days in Scotland—not in 1859, when the tide was running strong all over the centre of Scotland, but in 1855, 1857, and 1858, when the waves of blessing first broke there. I may do so at some future time. It is very profitable to observe how spiritual work commences; the Spirit guides all. GORDON FORLONG.

HOLDING ON IN MOAB.

Mr. FORDER writes from Kerak: "It may be of interest to many to know that the work here is not altogether given up, and, as is generally supposed, the workers turned out by the Turkish Government. The C.M.S. have taken over the work, and hope shortly to put a qualified medical man here, and also to re-open the schools; so that we hope soon to see the work firmly established once again.

"Meanwhile, the new buildings are slowly going up; two houses are finished, and we are in them, enjoying the many improvements which have been made. Before the rainy season comes again, I hope all will be finished. Some of your readers used to send us a paper occasionally, but for several months we have had none. No doubt they thought we had left Kerak. On seeing this, they may be led to send to us again."

AN AMERICAN PAPER says that the labour question will remain open as long as the drinking saloons do.

ILLNESS OF PASTOR REINMUTH.

In reply to some inquiries, I am grieved to have to reply that at the present moment my beloved husband is very ill in the Tyrol, whither we have come in the hope of his deriving some benefit from saline baths. His health has been failing for more than a year, which will explain to our friends why our usual little report did not appear in the spring, my husband's strength being often insufficient to the daily exigencies of the increasing work devolving upon him. In March he quite broke down, and the medical adviser forbade his writing, reading, or in any way exerting himself.

The strain of nearly eight years' labour in so difficult a field, with much opposition from various quarters, and little help from local sources, has told upon his not over-robust organisation, and although we have tried change and entire rest, his condition has in no way improved, but during the last six weeks has rapidly become more serious. Severe hæmorrhage from internal ulcers has reduced him to a state of great exhaustion and weakness. He earnestly desires the prayers of the Lord's children who know him, and feel an interest in his work, that if it be the will of the Master, he may yet be raised up again to labour in the great harvest-fields. Should it be, however, not in accordance with the council of the Lord to restore him again to his family, and his work on earth, pray that he may be kept trusting in the Saviour he loves, and that in the midst of great suffering and weakness he may be kept in peace and his mind free from care, as regards the various agencies for the spreading of the Gospel which the Lord has enabled him to commence and which have hitherto been so signally blessed and prospered.

The work in Gratz is being superintended in our absence by our evangelist; the nursing and convalescent home is under the care of our faithful and earnest Bible-nurse. Of the patients at present there, one is rapidly passing away to her heavenly home, after being nursed there for over two years. Homeless and almost friendless, she is deeply grateful for a peaceful home and Christian, loving care in her great weakness and need. Others are waiting for admission, Protestants, whose lot in the public hospitals would be very hard, but who in our little home thankfully appreciate the Gospel privileges they enjoy. Servants' home, Gospel literature distribution (especially in the provinces), itinerating work, the Gospel services in the hall, work among young men and young women—all these branches we commend earnestly to the prayers and sympathy of God's children everywhere. Ask especially for much spiritual blessing, and that God's converting power may be specially manifested in the saving of souls. We are thankful for a spirit of believing prayer manifested in the converts at this trying season.—Yours in much affliction,

MARY A. REINMUTH.

P.S.—Letters addressed to 28, Leechgasse, Gratz, Styria, Austria, will be forwarded to us.

EARTHQUAKE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.

The sad news of a ruinous earthquake in Constantinople will have reached you. There was an awful shock lasting about twelve seconds, on Tuesday, July 10, at noon, when the people were busy in their offices and working places. The perplexity and the hopeless screamings of thousands who barely escaped with their lives, the rush from every side, every house, and office to open places, was dreadful indeed. In some districts every house, old or new, is injured, many being now uninhabitable. Some poor houses are reduced to ruins. Thousands of the people are thronged in the open gardens or grounds, keeping to the open air, the best shelter. The loss of life is estimated by some to be about 1500, but the real number is not known yet. Our house has been injured too, so that we don't think it safe to live in; we are living in a tent, and fear to go home for the things we need, because now and then more or less heavy movements are felt. The Lord is speaking to our countrymen, who are mostly careless and indifferent. He had spoken by many other means, but the people did not mind. This time He speaks in his anger, which we hope will move many hearts to Him. This heavy blow may be used for his Kingdom and glory.

This time of disaster and disappointment will naturally put a greater burden upon our mission, as the faint, the weak, and the helpless run straight to us for help. N. ALEXANDRIAN.

INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY UNION.

The recent meeting of returned missionaries at Clifton Springs, New York, was perhaps one of the largest and most memorable gatherings of the kind ever held. About 150 missionaries from nearly all of the great mission fields of the world, and representing a large number of the Evangelical Missionary Churches, were there assembled in loving fellowship, magnifying the grace of God, as seen in triumphs achieved and deliverances wrought out in many a trying hour.

This great gathering of missionaries is now to meet annually at the beautiful Sanitarium of Clifton Springs. This is the outcome of the generosity and kindly spirit of Dr. Henry Foster and his noble wife, who cordially welcome and gratuitously entertain as their guests all returned missionaries during the sessions of the Convention. Not only are the workers thus entertained at the annual gathering, but returned missionaries, irrespective of creed or name, when broken down in health or spirits, find at this Sanitarium, at the lowest rates, and some at no charge at all, the most cordial welcome and the highest medical skill. Hundreds of missionaries now again in the field look back with gratitude to the restfulness and recuperation received in this eminently Christian Sanitarium.

The union was memorable in many ways—first as to the fields represented. Here are some of them, with the numbers of missionaries from them present at the beginning (others arrived later on). From Africa, 5; Assam, 3; Bulgaria, 5; Burma, 5; China, 23; Guatemala, Hawaii, 2; India, 33; Italy, 1; Japan, 20; Corea, 2; Mexico, 4; Micronesia, 6; North American Indians, 3; Palestine, 4; Persia, 2; Siam, 6; South America, 3; Spain, 2; Syria, 3; Straits Settlements, 1; Turkey, 13. From the Isles of the Sea; from Jerusalem; and even from attempting to enter Tibet, they come, and all were welcomed, and all had something good to tell of the power of the glorious Gospel of the Son of God.

Second, as to the churches represented. There were about forty Congregationalists, and about as many Methodists, with the Presbyterians and Baptists not far behind. Then there were Moravians and Dutch Reformed, and Protestant Episcopal, and Reformed Episcopal, and numbers of the China Inland Missionaries, and of kindred independent societies. After the first session, so blended were these devoted men and women in the Spirit of Christ, that there was nothing manifested but the spirit of the most delightful unity. As children of one loving Father, they dwelt in loving harmony.

Each day three sessions were held. The first hour of the morning session was devoted to earnest prayer. The beloved Dr. A. T. Pierson led the opening devotional service, and it was one most blessed and memorable. During the devotional hours many requests for prayer came in from distant mission fields, in addition to the multitudinous home ones. To give anything like a full report of all the topics discussed, or thrilling incidents narrated of Gospel triumphs, is simply impossible. Each missionary seemed to think, and rightly, too, that his own field was the most important, that there the needs were the greatest, and that there the work was most blessed. Great, stirring, world-wide questions were ably discussed, such as the liquor and opium traffic, and their baneful effects on the natives, by men and women who, coming from those lands affected, knew whereof they spoke. The persecutions endured in Turkey, Corea, and other places, were described by missionaries who, in their own persons and property, had been "in perils oft." Able papers, and discussions not a few, on such live questions as native agency, the native press, medical work in missions, evangelistic and the educational work, and many other topics, from acute and successful workers, presented a fund of information that was exceedingly valuable.

One of the most interesting discussions, held towards the close of the Convention, was on the subject of how to awaken or increase the interest of the home churches in the great work of the world's evangelisation. On this subject the principal address, by request, was given by Rev. Dr. Pierson, who is so well known and beloved on both sides of the Atlantic. Another very eloquent and fascinating speaker at the Convention was Bishop C. C. Penick, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, whose diocese extends along the west coast of Africa. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, eighty-eight years of age, the founder of Robert College at Constantinople, was present, still active and interested, the beloved of all.

The evening session of the last day was a farewell service to outgoing missionaries. Many of them, after a year or more of rest, were returning, with renewed health, to the fields they loved so well. Others, for the first time, were starting out to the high places, to begin the glorious work. They occupied the platform of the beautiful auditorium, and thrilling and hopeful were their farewell words.

The following is the list of those who left us, and their destinations. Would that we all could have gone. Rev. and Mrs. Ohlinger, Corea; Miss Preston, Japan; Rev. G. Reynolds, M.D., Turkey; Rev. Gilbert Reed, China; Miss Rood, Assam; Rev. and Mrs. Thackwell, India; Miss Van Dusee, Persia; Rev. and Mrs. Velte, India; Miss Wilson, Japan; Rev. and Mrs. Pettibone, Turkey; Miss Darmstadt, India; Rev. G. A. Ford, Syria; Rev. A. T. Graybill, Mexico; Rev. J. H. House, Bulgaria; Rev. W. J. Leverett, China; Mrs. S. E. Newton, India; Miss C. H. Brown, Sidon; Mr. and Mrs. H. O. Cady, China; Rev. and Mrs. W. M. Haynes, China; Rev. A. and Mrs. Ben-Oliel, Jerusalem; Mrs. Gertrude Biglow, Japan; Miss Elizabeth Babbitt, India; Mr. and Mrs. Dodd, Siam; Dr. J. B. Thompson, Siam; Dr. McGilvary, Laos. What an illustrious company, and how worldwide their destinations!

Why cannot such an annual gathering be held in Great Britain? When we think of the number of returned missionaries of the various Evangelical Churches at home, with all their rich gifts and varied experiences, how important in tangible results should be their gatherings?

Who will take up the matter? Would not Mildmay Park be honoured in beginning this movement? I hope that your powerful advocacy will be given in this direction. Egerton R. Young.

Letters to the Editor.

THE HEALTH OF MISSIONARIES.

My Dear Sir,—I have been acting more or less as a doctor for the last twenty-six years. Some years ago I discovered that currents of magneto electricity will cut short in a few minutes ordinary fever; and to avoid any sort of fever one has only to use the machine every morning and evening for, say, ten minutes. The machines are very cheap; you can get a good one for 30s. Use it the first thing in the morning, and the last thing before going to bed; it is a thing that can harm no one, and will do good to the weakest. Just take hold of the handles (first wet the hands), and get some one to turn the handle of the machine. The faster you turn the handle the stronger the current, so that one can suit himself.

This is how people who live in places where there is fever should live: Use the machine morning and evening, and exercise the lungs thus—directly after using the machine: Draw in the breath, hold it as long as possible (of course no straining), expel the air and repeat this for five minutes the first week. Increase the time to seven minutes during the second week and keep it up as long as you live. This is a simple thing, and I want every one to know it. Many lives would be saved if people would only do what I say; every mission and every missionary should have a machine.—Your servant in Christ,

E. Glover.

RITUALISM IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Sir,—Perusing your criticism of Mr. Forbes's article in Word and Work, I feel I must, from a most intimate knowledge of twenty years' life in the Church of England of one who formerly worshipped with the Brethren, point out that his doleful forecast is entirely a mistake.

It is true that there is an increase of "externalism" within the last decade. I thank God, however, that there is a great increase of "internalism." Twelve years ago, when I commenced the Church Army, there were scarcely any parishes in England in the Church which would allow me to preach instantaneous conversion, and a baptism of the Holy Spirit. Now all is changed. Two hundred and twenty evangelists, supported by nearly 12,000 humble speakers in the cause of Christ, and nearly a hundred mission-nurses, find unlimited scope within the ranks of the Church of England. Some are parishes that are called "High" and "Broad," yet they heartily welcome the simple evangelistic preaching of these humble working men and women.

There are many clergy who simply adopt "externalism," because they think they best draw a crowd, and who have never changed their simple love of Gospel truth. The real secret of their success is not in "externalism," but that they have adopted the message of such men as Spurgeon and Moody, whose books continually lie upon their study desks.

Having been trained with the Brethren, and with the Evangelisation Society; having always keenly held to evangelistic preaching, and having in the two churches to which I have been appointed in both places given up the High Church eastward position, I cannot be accused of being disloyal to Evangelical truth. I am thoroughly convinced that with all the increase of "externalism" the large mass of English Churchmen have a greater and more intelligent horror of the superstitions of Rome to-day than they had twenty years ago.—Yours faithfully,

W. Carlile, Founder and Hon. Chief Sec. of the Church Army.

POLICE TERRORISM IN CALCUTTA.

Sir,—The Calcutta Missionary Conference, which, under careful and prayerful guidance, has in past years rendered valuable services to the cause of Social Purity, has been tempted of late to turn right-about-face from its past efforts to protect helpless women, and to ask Government to legislate for the punishment of "solicitation." Everyone familiar with the rudiments of the subject understands why any mere legislation would involve fatal blunders. Some male scoundrel first tempts a girl to her own undoing. His "solicitation" is not punished, but his victim is outlawed by society. In the second place, gangs of scoundrels, male and female, get hold of the ruined woman, and by terrorism and fraud compel her to a wicked way of life.

The police are slow enough to interfere with the real evildoers. But a body of missionaries, forsooth, under the misleading of mere politicians, and with the co-operation of heathens, ask a Christian Government to punish solicitation. Do these dabblers in Social Purity not know that for one woman who may be punished for solicitation twenty will have to bribe the police to be let off? Any mere law such as they demand will be used to maintain a system of terrorism and blackmail. Not to know this, is to ignore the whole history of the police regulation of vice in India, no less than on the Continent of Europe and in Great Britain in past years.

The Calcutta police seem to have jumped at the offer of the Missionary Conference, in order to establish a police control of fallen women. Will "Christian" England permit this gross abuse? The Calcutta Presbytery of the Free Church of Scotland, which has separately memoralised the Government, has made it quite clear that they are not warring against helpless women, but against the abandoned men who trade on their wrongs.

Calcutta. M. Mody.

WEST LONDON MISSION.—Dear Sir,—We want to send as many as possible of our poor people this year into the country for a day or longer, as best suits the hard conditions of their lives. The following story is not sensational, but quite common-place, and typical of thousands. A young girl of 17 has dependent on her love and care an old grandmother and a little sister aged seven. She left a good situation that she might spend her evenings with them, and because she is learning a trade she will only earn 2s. a week for some months. For a year or so every penny she earns must go into the common housekeeping fund. And so through the long hot days of this summer she must work, with no change and no recreation. We ask your readers to help us with our holiday fund, which will be used for men and women, girls and boys, to give them the rest and change they need.—Yours truly, Katherine Price Hughes.

Cleveland Hall, Cleveland-street, W.

EVIAN-LES-BAINS, HAUTE-SAVOIE.—In this gay and fashionable "Ville-des-Bains," on the Lake of Geneva, there has been carried on for some years, by ladies, a quiet work of evangelisation and temperance among the Roman Catholic population. The workers do not belong to any society; they are entirely self-supporting, but they wait on God that He will send all the funds necessary for the general expenses of the mission. During the past winter there was an open door for a great extension to meet a long-felt need. Two small halls were secured; one was opened for Gospel and temperance meetings, the other as a "Café de Tempérance" and reading room for working men. This new departure necessitated the aid of a paid evangelist. God sent, in a most special and direct manner, a very suitable man, whose life and teachings have been blessed to many. Communications may be addressed to Misses Wellington, Evian-les-Bains, Haute-Savoie, France.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Mr. Henderson Smith, travelling secretary, has been visiting the Glasgow district, and reports good work being accomplished in various parts.

The Adelaide Association has issued an encouraging report showing very decided progress, notwithstanding the severe depression of the past year.

Mr. W. Hind Smith, who has held office as general secretary pro tem. at Exeter Hall, will shortly be set free, to resume his work as visiting secretary for the National Council.

The National Council are about to reorganise the work of the Brixton Y.M.C.A., for the purpose of extending its usefulness among the large numbers of young men residing in that portion of the Metropolis.

Mr. Henderson, assistant travelling secretary, has resumed work after his illness, and has recently been visiting the Dumfries district. In several places he had most successful meetings and much encouragement, but in others disappointment.

A work of grace at the Hamilton collieries, under the Lancashire Christian Union, has led to the formation of a Y.W.C.A. and a Y.M.C.A. It is a notable fact that a revival in a place almost invariably leads either to the formation of an Association or to an increase of the membership, if one previously existed.

The Cape Town Association directs the attention of the British Associations to the overstocked condition of the "unskilled labour" market in Cape Colony, and urges upon committees and secretaries the duty of dissuading young men from going there except under circumstances ensuring the finding of employment on arrival.

At Thornhill the Association has been restarted under auspicious circumstances. One of the ministers present at the meeting said: "The Y.M.C.A. has been to me a sort of training home for the ministry. It was there I first learned to speak in public, and it was there that the aspiration to enter the work altogether first arose in my heart."

At Brighton the spiritual meetings have continued throughout the past month with much freshness and spirit in spite of the high temperature. The tract work, Bible class, Sunday evening meeting, the "Young Men's Own" on Tuesday, and the Friday evening Bible studies are all reported to have been well maintained, both in numbers and interest.

A fourteen days' holiday in the Lake District, August 18 to September 1, has been arranged in connection with the Hackney Association. A week will be spent at each of the two centres, Ambleside and Keswick, from which many places of interest may be visited conveniently. Apply to Frederic L. Porter, Secretary, 275, Mare-street, London, N.E.

The Associations at Exeter Hall and Aldersgate-street having been amalgamated under one committee, Mr. J. H. Putterill, who was formerly financial secretary at the last-named centre, and who, as secretary of the Jubilee Council, proved himself an efficient and capable organiser in connection with the recent Jubilee celebrations, has been appointed general secretary of the United Association.

Mr. A. H. Wheeler sends an account of a Sunday with the Guernsey Y.M.C.A. After the morning prayer meeting a few workers started to visit vessels in the harbour and hold brief services on board. In the afternoon a delightful meeting was held on Hearn, an isle with some forty Protestant residents and no Gospel service. The evening was spent in outdoor and indoor evangelistic work in Guernsey.

At the Antipodes work among the lads is taken up thoroughly by the Associations. For instance, one report says:—"The work of Our Boys' Institute for the year has been of a solid character. O.B.I. has aimed at helping boys under all circumstances, and every difficulty and temptation common to lads has been carefully studied and dealt with. We have found that parents, as a rule, do not explain to their sons the temptations to which they are sure to be exposed at a certain period of their youth. Medical men and others have assisted us in dealing with the matter of personal purity amongst boys, and we have asked the ministers of the various churches throughout the colony to try and show parents that it is their duty to help their boys at the right time. The presence of juvenile cigarette-smoking, too, has had our earnest consideration, and steps to combat this growing evil are being taken. Very many boys have been assisted in obtaining situations."

"In some quarters," says the Young Men's Era, the organ of Y.M.C.A.'s in America, "there is a lingering tradition that the Young Men's Christian Association ought to be converted into a matrimonial agency, and that decided advantages would result from an amalgamation with the Young Women's Christian Association. The advocates of this proposition claim recognition on the alleged social advantages which would flow to the young man from the recognition of their pet scheme. These persons have not hesitated to present the matrimonial possibilities of such an amalgamation as strong recommendations for its favourable consideration, and they have recently taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the Jubilee conference to give the matter additional publicity. Among the Associations in this country the idea has never been seriously entertained, and its futility is apparent. The majority of the young men who frequent the Associations, and for whose special benefit the work is carried on, prefer to go elsewhere for their lady friendships. In the second place, the idea of a public institution for the express purpose of bringing young men and young women together would be repugnant to any person of refined sensibilities, and would contribute largely to depleting the Associations of their best membership. Lastly, and most important of all, such a plan would be subversive of the real object of the Young Men's Christian Association."

THE Y.W.C.A.

Special services recently held by the Melbourne Y.W.C.A. have been well attended, and have awakened much interest.

The Sydney Y.W.C.A. is pushing very special and useful efforts among the working girls; very much on the lines of the Factory Helpers' Union at home here.

The Y.W.C.A. of Brisbane conduct work among sailors which has proved in every way a success. The sailors are most grateful for the efforts to help them.

Capital united meetings have been held in Lillieshall under the auspices of the Y.W.C.A. and the Temperance Society. Amongst those who took part were the Duchess of Sutherland, Mrs. Kennelly, Miss Brunton, Revs. B. Blaxland, J. A. Panter, T. Rogerson, A. Burn, and Mr. T. Radcliffe.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

The third anniversary of the Westgate Society (Bradford) has been held. Rev. Henry Webb preached, and on Tuesday a score of neighbouring societies were invited to tea.

In Bristol, the New-street Society lately held its first anniversary service. Addresses were delivered by Mr. Joseph Storrs Fry, chairman, and Mr. Thomas Thomas, president of the society.

It has been suggested in The Golden Rule that an excellent method of utilising the Good Literature Committee in connection with C.E. socials is to have an evening entertainment that shall consist of sketches given by those present, describing some book each has read recently.

An Australian Wesleyan C. E. Society has originated a novel and helpful idea. Each of its committees has chosen for itself a motto, and these mottoes are hung up about the room in which the society meets. The motto of the Look-out committee is, "Trim your lamps and be ready"; of the Prayer-meeting committee, "Watch and pray"; of the Visiting committee, "Jesus invites you"; of the Music committee, "Our song shall be for Jesus."

Rev. J. J. Muir, pastor of the St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Waterloo, Liverpool, is an ardent Endeavourer. The Y.P.S.C.E., which he organised in 1890 in his church, is naturally animated with the same missionary fervour which marks its pastor and president. There are now sixty-four active members, twenty-three associates, and thirteen honorary. From the very first, great attention has been paid to the claims of foreign missionary enterprise. In 1891 a missionary fund was started.

Says the editor of The Evangelical: "We have scarcely tapped, much less drained, the possibilities of the C.E. movement in our church." He is moved to this expression by the experience of a pastor who called upon his Endeavour society for workers in a series of revival meetings. He expected about a dozen volunteers, but at his first call a troop of nearly 200 Endeavourers came forward, and these proved faithful during the services, and did such valuable work that at the very first meeting thirty or more came over to the side of Christ.

The Endeavour Herald gives an instance which could be multiplied many times over, could the secret history of the Flower Committee be written. One of the societies in Toronto for a long time had been faithfully distributing flowers to the sick. Among those who received them was a young man stricken with consumption. He was not a Christian, and no member of the society had seen him personally, but a clergyman talking with him before he died learned that he had been brought to Christ through reading the texts that came with the Endeavour flowers.

CHRIST is the meat, the bread, the food of our souls. Nothing is in Him of a higher spiritual nourishment than his love.—John Owen.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

In Lanark there is one public-house for every twenty-five families in the town.

The U.P. Presbytery of Greenock met in Trinity Church, Greenock, last week, when there were ordained Mr. Andrew R. Low, as missionary to India, and Dr. George D. Robertson, as medical missionary to Manchuria.

Mrs. Baeyertz continued last week her mission in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow, with increasing audiences and power. She has undoubtedly gained the ear of Glasgow, and her influence is felt through all circles of society. Many have been awakened, and have professed decision for Christ.

IRISH NOTES.

An interesting and largely attended meeting was held on Monday evening week, in the Y.M.C.A. Hall, Belfast, to hear addresses from Mrs. Bill and Mr. John Kirk, who are going out as missionaries in connection with the Qua Iboe Mission.

Open-air preaching is now carried on largely in Dublin without much opposition. In the Phœnix Park scarcely an evening passes without an open-air service being held, and usually an attentive hearing is given. Every Saturday evening a temperance meeting is held in the Park, at the base of the Wellington Monument; and in the graveyard of St. Mark's Church the rector has erected a pulpit, from which on Sunday evenings, and occasionally on week evenings, the Gospel is preached in the open-air.

A YOUNG MEN'S SETTLEMENT.

We propose to establish at once a Young Men's Settlement in the West of London, where about a dozen young men, fully surrendered to God and willing to spend their leisure in definite Christian work, shall live together. It is not our intention to call these brethren from their businesses, but in every way possible to strengthen their Christian life, while they develop each other's usefulness in bringing men to Christ. The Settlement will be in every sense a Home, but at the same time it will be conducted so that our helpers shall not pay more than the usual price for their rooms.

The proposed Settlement is not an experiment; such a plan has been tried and graciously used of God. The arrangements of the Home will be simple and healthful, and of such a nature that the residents will be able to make it a centre of social intercourse and spiritual advancement, as well as a basis for determined constant effort. All kinds of service will be entertained and carried forward, so that an opportunity will be open for the use of all gifts and graces.

The headquarters will be situated in the neighbourhood of Hinde-street Church, and within walking distance of the City. Young men who are desirous of joining the Settlement can obtain all needed information from Mr. Pooley, 83, Newman-street, Oxford-street, London, W.—Yours truly,

W. Darlow Sargeant.

88, Oseney Crescent, Camden-road, N.W.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY FUND.—A meeting of the council of this fund was held on Monday at the Mansion House, when the report of the Committee of Distribution was received. Sir Sydney H. Waterlow, Bart., said that 182 institutions were to receive sums of money, being one more than last year. The total amount available for distribution was £41,800, of which total £39,908 was recommended to 128 hospitals and fifty-five dispensaries. One hospital had been marked "nil," consequent on the very unsatisfactory condition of its wards, and the public complaints made against the professional staff and general management.

THE BASEL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The student of missions should by no means overlook the publications of the Basel Society of Evangelical Missions. Der Evangelische Heidenbote gives copious reports of work in connection with the Society. A more elaborate monthly is Evangelisches Missions-Magazin, the August issue of which contains, among other useful matter, articles on the earliest Christian missions in China, and the planting of Christianity in Uganda. The companion monthly for French readers, Revue des Missions Contemporaines, is equally bright and instructive. It is conducted independently, but the last issue has contents covering ground very similar to that of its German contemporary. The opening article is on the early Nestorian Mission in China, and there is an illustration of the famous tablet discovered in the seventeenth century. Christianity and Islamism in Africa is the subject of another article of sterling value. With such monthlies as these, the intelligent interest and ardour of friends of the Basel Mission are easy of explanation.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. W. Grove is returning from Dundee, where he has had a season of refreshing and blessing, and many precious souls saved.

Tunbridge Wells.—Rev. Walter Bradbury holds children's services in the open air on the Common on Sunday afternoon, also giving voluntary help in Christ Church parish.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Powers are holding evangelistic services on the shore at New Brighton. In connection with their meetings children's services are being held, and great numbers of young folk attend.

Ireland.—For the last two or three weeks tent services have been held at Springfield, co. Fermanagh, by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference evangelist, assisted by Messrs. Coulter and Youell. Several have professed to have decided for Christ.

Whyteleafe, Surrey.—Mr. Ned Wright recently paid a third visit to the mission hall here. The weather was unfavourable, but the people came in good numbers. The Gospel was faithfully preached and effectively illustrated with incidents from the preacher's life-story.

Mr. G. Bennett, of York, commenced, on July 18, his season's sand services at St. Anne's-on-the-Sea, He has had fair attendances of young and older people. Though very early in the season, many have professed to rest on the Lord Jesus Christ as their Saviour. He will be glad of prayer for blessing on the remaining few weeks' work.

Mr. W. R. Bradlaugh has completed a successful twenty-two days' mission in the Albert Hall, Nelson, Lancashire. The services have been much owned and blessed among the young men of the place. Sunday-school teachers have sought help in solving difficulties presented by lads in their classes who have been corrupted by infidels.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver are holding this week a mission in the iron room, Henry-road, New Barnet. Prayer is desired for much blessing. Next Sunday these brethren begin with Dr. Barnardo a month's service at Edinbrò' Castle. Afterwards they go to Edinburgh for a three months' mission in connection with Moray Gate Free Church.

Mr. Carr, of Carlisle, is generously supporting an evangelist who is going with his tent and harmonium into remote country villages in Northumberland to hold evangelistic services. While working on undenominational lines the evangelist always seeks to avoid clashing with regular services. From some of the clergy he has had great sympathy.—The Record.

Abertillery.—Probably few of your readers have heard of the noble work being carried on in this important and growing little town by Mr. Barker. Some of the worst characters have been truly converted since he commenced to visit and preach there nine months ago. Our brother's one aim is the salvation of sinners. God has used him in bringing hundreds to Christ in different places. A. M. W.

Appledore, Devon.—The recent visit of the mission yacht Good News has been greatly blessed to many souls in this place. At the last service on board last Sunday evening several decided for Christ. Since then, Miss Gooch, one of the lady workers, who was prevailed upon to remain behind, has been nightly blessed and cheered at her services in the Sailors' Rest, in the salvation of souls. We ask prayer for continued blessing. W. J. Cairns.

Torquay.—Mr. Couch, of the Irish Church Mission, who is labouring in Dublin, has been on a visit to Torquay, and conducting Gospel services in the Chelston Mission Hall; there were large attendances, and the Word was much blessed. The Sharon Home of Rest, which was established by the Dowager Countess of Castlestuart, is attached to the Mission, and both are in a prosperous condition. Mr. Levi Powell, the missioner, and his wife, are in charge of the Home, and conduct it on Protestant lines and on Christian principles.

Tenbury, Worcestershire.—A time of much spiritual blessing and ingathering of souls has been experienced during the mission held by Mr. Henry Thorne in the Baptist Chapel, Tenbury. Many anxious came out at the Gospel meetings, and the daily Bible-readings were most profitable to believers. The services concluded with a thanksgiving meeting, at which Mr. Hanson presided, and addresses were delivered by Rev. J. Lampard and Mr. Butt, concluding with an appeal to the converts by the missioner. Much prayer was offered on behalf of the pastor, James Evans, who is laid aside with severe indisposition.

HOP-PICKERS' MISSION, ALTON.—Thousands of people will be in this district shortly. We anticipate a very rough class this season. Six large tents were erected last year, but we fear, from the loss of many old subscribers, we shall be unable to erect so many. All were well attended, with evident proofs of blessing. Will our friends pray for us that our faith and practise fail not? S. Chinn.

Alton, Hants.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Dr. Lorimer, of Boston, U.S.A., will conduct a service at Clarendon Chapel, Camberwell New-road, next Wednesday, August 8, at 8 p.m.

Dr. T. L. Cuyler, of Brooklyn, is on the eve of returning to his native land after a somewhat lengthened sojourn on this side of the Atlantic. Many friends in and around Liverpool will be glad to learn that the Doctor will give a farewell address at the Y.M.C.A. of that city to-morrow (Friday) evening, when a number of Christian friends have been invited to meet him. He hopes to sail for America on the following day.

Mrs. Helen Mason, of Brighton, formerly of Copt Hewick Hall, near Ripon, has left the following legacies to charities:—St. George's Hospital, £1000; Sussex County Hospital, £100; British Home for Incurables, £500; North London Consumption Hospital, £500; National Sanatorium for Consumption, £500; London Fever Hospital, £500; Miss Mary Wardell's Convalescent Home, £500; Brighton and Hove Dispensary, £500; Miss Freeman's Children's Home, Brighton, £500; St. John's Foundation School for the Sons of Clergy, Leatherhead, £500; North Riding of Yorkshire Clergy Benevolent Society, £500; West Riding Charitable Society, £500; Brighton Society for the Relief of Distressed Widows, £300; London Society for Distressed Widows, £200; Brighton Orphan Boys' Home, £200; Brighton Invalid Home, £200; Brighton Blind Asylum, £100; Brighton Deaf and Dumb Asylum, £100; Brighton Female Orphanage, £100.

"REJOICE IN THE LORD ALWAYS."

We cannot rejoice with perfect satisfaction in ourselves, or in creatures; but the Lord is perfect, and we can always rejoice in Him. I have just been led to add a joyous word to six of the names of the Lord that we continually employ; each word beginning with the same letter that the name begins with; and I pass on these words with the desire to help others to obey the command quoted above from Phil. iv. 4, that whenever either of the names may be mentioned or thought of there may be delight produced thereby.

Jesus: This name should cause Joy, because He saves us from our sins.

Christ, Cheerfulness, for we have all good given to us in Him.

Father, Felicity, for He has made all believers in Christ one with Himself.

Holy Spirit, Happy Song, for He makes real to us all that gives perfect satisfaction.

God, Gladness, for He is the True One in whom we have every blessing for ever.

Lord, Laughter, for He does what is best for us, and in us, and by us, which we enjoy in believing, and want no more.

Let each letter of this last name help to show what the Lord is to his believing people:—

L—Life, Light, Love, and their Liberty.

O—Omnipotent, Omniscient, Omnipresent, and the Opener of their way.

R—Righteousness, Reigning One, their Redeemer.

D—Delight of Delights.

To have this perfect delight, there must always be perfect submission; yes, "perfect submission, perfect delight." G. K.

WORKERS WANTED.—The secretary of the Strangers' Rest for Sailors, 163, St. George's-street, Ratcliff Highway, London, writes urging the present need for additional workers (either ladies or gentlemen) to go out at once to the Zanzibar Strangers' Rest. He will be glad to hear from any who may feel led to offer themselves for this foreign service.—J. Theo. Isaac.

CHRISTIAN CO-OPERATION.—Two members of the council of the Evangelical Alliance, one a vicar, the other a Presbyterian minister, being neighbours, and both interested in a local school of an industrial character, have together compiled a short catechism in which it is sought to set forth the fundamental truths of Christianity in an undenominational manner. It was the want of definite religious instruction in such schools that suggested to them the need of such a compilation in which, as might be expected, many of the thoughts and even of the words of both the Church of England catechism and of that of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland are reproduced, harmoniously, side by side. As some of our readers might like to see these "Lessons on Bible Truths for Young People," we give the title of the book, and the name of the publisher (A. Bachhoffner, High-street, Clapham). It will increase the interest in it to know that its compilers are Rev. David MacEwan, D.D., and Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston, M.A.—Evangelical Christendom.

OBITUARY.

MRS. W. RUSSELL, NING-HAI.

The friends at Pyrland-road China Inland Mission have just heard with deep sorrow of the death at Shanghai, on May 28, of Mrs. William Russell, of Ning-hai, caused by her accidentally taking an overdose of sulphonal. Mrs. Russell went out to China, as Miss Seed, in 1883. For her relatives and many friends in their bereavement we would ask our readers' sympathies and earnest prayers.

REV. DR. W. M. WHITTEMORE.

We regret to hear of the death, on July 27, at the age of seventy-four, of Rev. William Meynell Whittemore, D.D., who from 1851 to 1873 was rector of St. James's, Aldgate, and since the latter date has been rector of the united parish of St. Katharine Cree with St. James's, Aldgate. Dr. Whittemore was for many years the editor of Sunshine, a religious magazine for children; and the annual "Flower Sermon" and "Lion Sermon" were notable features of his ministry at St. Katharine Cree Church.

REV. H. F. WRIGHT, PUNJAB.

Friends of the C.M.S. will feel that the Society has lost an able and promising young missionary in Rev. Henry F. Wright, second son of the late Rev. H. Wright, hon. sec. of the C.M.S. This young servant of Christ passed away on July 14, at Gurdaspur, Punjab, having been taken ill with fever only a few days previously. Mr. Wright joined the Society's staff in 1890, and had already made his mark in the Punjab. He possessed many of the remarkable gifts of his father, and, alike by the beauty of his character and the thoroughness of his work, had impressed all observers. The Bishop of Lahore has sent to the C.M.S. authorities a letter expressing his deep sympathy with the Society and with Mr. Wright's family.

REV. FRANCIS HANNEN.

Much regret is felt in Armagh and North the of Ireland at the death of Rev. Francis Hannen, rector of Tullyallen, co. Louth, who has just passed away, aged eighty-one years. He was strictly Evangelical in his views, and was stoutly opposed to the symbolism which has of late become so popular in the Anglican Church. He firmly stood by the old Scriptural paths. On this account he had to endure some obloquy and persecution, and latterly finding his strength unequal to a controversy with some who were in favour of Ritualistic innovations he resigned his parish and went to reside in Armagh, but only survived the change three weeks, when he was called to his reward. His end was peace.

REV. H. JOY BROWNE.

With deep regret we record the death, on the 26th ult., of Rev. H. Joy Browne, vicar of Christ Church, Barnet. The deceased gentleman had been in delicate health for some time, and passed away at his brother's rectory at Fawley, near Southampton. Mr. Browne was one of the best known and highly-esteemed Evangelical clergymen in the northern suburbs. He had been seventeen years vicar of Christ Church, Barnet, a parish the very centre of Evangelical work in the district, and known far and wide as the place where Mildmay Conference had its birth.

He had rare powers as a preacher, and attracted large congregations by his faithful Gospel ministry. He was also specially gifted as an organiser, and his Bible readings will long be remembered. His schools are the largest in the neighbourhood, and bear the very highest character for efficiency.

The Church of Christ on earth is the poorer for Mr. Browne's death, but the memory he leaves behind of devoted love to his Saviour, simplicity and consistency of life, and earnestness in the great work of winning souls will long bo felt by all who knew him. Alfred Freeman.

CLIFF COLLEGE SUMMER SCHOOL.

As one who saw the announcement in your paper, and who attended the summer school at Cliff College, I can speak of it most highly from every standpoint, physical, mental, and spiritual. Several ministers who were present were delighted, and are looking forward to a similar gathering next year, feeling sure that much good will result from the continuation, and, if the Lord will, the extension of the movement. A holy missionary enthusiasm seems in the very air at Cliff; the study of Scripture is easy and delightful; the mutual quickening full of hope.

The lectures of Dr. Guinness were much appreciated. They were full of Scriptural exposition and spiritual force. Surrounded by the students in the College chapel, he was naturally at his best, and we all rejoiced. H. J. Preece.

Maidenhead.

LICHFIELD SOLDIERS' HOME.

The fourth report of this Home shows an encouraging year. There have been times of anxiety, but God has provided every need. "While providing healthy recreations for young soldiers, the trustees have always been guided by the earnest desire to meet the spiritual wants of those with whom they come in contact. The work has its special difficulties, owing to the constant changes taking place, as most of the men are only attached to the depôt for a short time; but God has abundantly fulfilled his own promise, 'My Word shall not return unto Me void.' Extracts from letters which have been received during 1893 show that the work has not been in vain. One who has left for civilian life during the past year writes:—

"'I would also tell you that I have good reason to thank God that He put it into your mind to open the Grand Stand as a Soldiers' Home, for the blessed truths that I have heard there night after night I shall never forget.'

"Another says: 'I pray that God will still continue to bless the Home, also those who labour there. I know from my own experience there is every home comfort; the greatest treasure I found was love, the first love was the love of Christ to me, the second was that of his servants who are now doing God's service.' Again: 'I must now conclude, hoping that God will bless our Lichfield Soldiers' Home abundantly with his richest blessing, and that others may be blest too, as that spot is very dear to me, my birthplace, where I found Christ, and He took me in, and I can truly say, 'I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste.'"

Communications should be made to Miss Churchill, Heath Cottage, Lichfield.

CURRAGH SOLDIERS' HOME.

The tenth annual report gives the following from the pen of a friend: "It has been my privilege to spend the last few months in Mrs. Perry's Soldiers' Home, and to see something of its work, with its truly happy home influence, and the spirit of love pervading everything, with the one desire to let Christ be head in all things. Many speak of how 'homely' and 'homelike' it all is, and though, thank God, the evangelistic work steadily progresses, and many have to praise the Lord that within these walls they have been turned from darkness to light, and have met for the first time their Saviour and Everlasting friend, yet, perhaps, it is very especially a Home for the building up of God's own children. Perhaps some friends may not be aware that it is English soldiers chiefly who are thus receiving blessing in an Irish Home, so that if more of the Lord's stewards on the other side of the water had it laid on their hearts to help on the work it would be gladly welcomed. Of late a special effort has been made to reach many of the soldiers' wives in Newbridge, as well as in the Camp, by visiting them in their homes, and inviting them to a little social gathering and short meeting on Friday afternoons."

We observe that a friend has come forward to pay £200 off the debt, providing the remaining £113 14s. 6d. be cleared off this year. We trust Mrs. Perry will be sympathetically supported in her effort to raise this amount. Her address is, The Curragh, co. Kildare.

BILLINGSHURST, SUSSEX.—Mr. James Sprunt has been giving a series of addresses on "The Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ." There has been a great spirit of inquiry into this blessed hope by the Lord's people, and many souls have been aroused and converted to God. The interest increased from the first, and last Sunday witnessed a crowded hall and anxious souls asking, "What must I do to be saved?" H. C.

HAITI.—The committee of the Jamaica Baptist Mission, in their new report, appeal earnestly for Haiti. They say:—"The darkness is dense, but there are streaks of light here and there. What is wanted at the present time is an increase of missionaries—men whose hearts are on fire for the salvation of the people, for the missionary is allowed everywhere." Rev. L. Ton Evans, who has for some time been labouring in Haiti, writes:—"The prison at Jacmel, I do not hesitate to say, is the dirtiest place that I have ever put foot in. After our first visit, to preach to the inmates, nothing could have induced me to go again, but the fact that midst all the filth some 80 or 100 souls were found in a most miserable condition, without God and without hope. We are courteously received by the officers in charge, also by the prisoners. At first there is a tendency on the part of a few to be noisy, but after a little palaver we soon secure a hearing to the message which we take them, and tracts are given away to those who can read."

The Book World.

Life and Service is a booklet containing five timely and wholesome addresses by T. Lewes Sayer. The pages appeal specially to young people. (Partridge.)

The Practical Value of Religious Belief, an argument addressed to an Agnostic, by Henry Smith. (Elliot Stock.) A forcible booklet, which will, we trust, be put in the way of such as it is intended to influence.

The Morning Star continues its testimony as "A Herald of the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ." The July issue contains several instructive addresses on prophetic subjects, and useful gleanings on significant events. (1d. monthly. Holness.)

Talks with my Bible Class, by G. E. F. M. (1s. Nisbet.) This booklet aims at proving that the Bible is an interesting study. The facts brought forward are as eloquent as the arguments founded upon them, and the pages, which are printed in beautiful large type, deserve many readers.

Things to Come.—The second issue of this excellent monthly has several articles which Bible students will welcome. Dr. Bullinger's address on "The Purpose of the Ages," and Rev. James C. Smith's on "Three Prophetic Parallelisms concerning Israel," are of special interest and value. (1d. J. E. Hawkins & Co.)

Bible Talks and Bible Readings, by Alfred Lambert, Gen. Sec. of the Ipswich Y.M.C.A., is a pamphlet deserving to be described as "voluminous." Its large pages are full of valuable teaching, which is set forth in a manner that will help workers as well as instruct all who read. (6d. From the Author, Y.M.C.A., Tavern-street, Ipswich.)

Our Bubble, Dr. Barnardo's Magazine for Boys and Girls, is bright and useful. The first monthly part (6d.) has sixteen illustrations printed in chromo-lithography, and has a literary supplement containing, with much besides of an instructive and interesting nature, the opening chapters of a story by the Editor, based upon his personal experience among orphan and waif children. The new weekly part (1d.) is fully up to the mark. (Office: 279, Strand, W.C.)

In the Apostolic Age; The Churches and the Doctrine. By R. A. Watson, M.A., D.D. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) This is a new volume of the series of "Books for Bible Students," edited by Rev. A. E. Gregory. As an introduction to a great subject, the book will prove of real service. The treatment is thoughtful, and the style easy and flowing. Many keenly debated questions are referred to, but the general usefulness of the book has not been sacrificed to partisan advocacy on controverted subjects.

Discipleship: the Scheme of Christianity. By the Author of "The King and the Kingdom." (Williams & Norgate.) In maintaining that discipleship—in which a man is prepared to go to the extreme of self-sacrifice and self-renunciation—is a call to a selection only of the followers of Christ, the author of this work examines many doctrines of Scripture in a thoughtful and practical manner, although we cannot for a moment admit that he establishes the main proposition of his thesis.

The History of the English Bible. By T. Harwood Pattison, D.D. (4s. 6d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.) The charms of the subject are admirably reflected in the treatment. Dr. Pattison's outline condenses the literature of Bible translation and circulation into a handy volume that reads like a romance. Alongside the history of the Book we read of its marvellous influence upon English literature, the nation, and spiritual life. A number of artistic illustrations add to the interest of the volume, the pages of which are enlivened with many quaint and curious quotations from the earlier versions of Holy Scripture into the English language.

Popery: A Gigantic Swindle of the Devil, is a vigorous little work by Robert Brown. It is designed rather to arm Protestants than to persuade Romanists; for the author's style is uniformly fortiter as distinguished from suaviter. The same sledge-hammer method appears in a companion work, entitled A Reply to Dr. Bullinger's so-called "Witness of the Stars." The language is stronger than the arguments. The theory criticised is "utterly false and misleading," "unsound and baseless," "profane and God-dishonouring," "from the abyss"! We hold that reproof should be in love, and that even where wrong is obvious and manifest, which it certainly is not in this case, the ministry of correction should be performed with courtesy, and in a spirit of meekness. (1s. each. William Wileman.)

Boys of the Bible, by Lady Magnus, is a work of art, containing beautifully-coloured plates and many minor illustrations. The "boys" are Isaac, Jacob and Esau, Joseph, Moses, Samuel, David and Jonathan, Joash, Daniel, Samson. The author's aim, in her own words, has been to "set forth the boyhood of some of the child-heroes of the Bible, hoping that the simple stories here retold may lead the children of to-day to look into the Bible for themselves, and to find in that best and most beautiful of books the manhood to which these boys grew." By the Christian these characters are all held to foreshadow some phase of the work and life of Christ; but of this there is no mention in these pages, the author of which is a Jewess of literary ability as well as social distinction. (6s. Raphael Tuck & Son.)

Pioneering in Morocco: A Record of Seven Years' Medical Mission Work in the Palace and the Hut. By Dr. Robert Kerr, as Agent of the Presbyterian Church of England. (3s. 6d. H. R. Allenson.) These diary notes, accompanied by a number of excellent illustrations, give a good idea of Morocco and the conditions of Christian work among its people. Dr. Kerr is hoping to return to the country, to continue work in Rabat, Salee, and Mequinez, among Jews and Moslems, in connection with a new organisation, the "Central Morocco Mission." No direct mission work has been done in Mequinez, where Dr. Kerr hopes to open a medical mission. In an appendix he explains his scheme, which will in no way interfere with existing missions in Morocco; and he appeals for consecrated young men and women to enter the field, and for Christian interest in the new enterprise.

Mr. Elliot Stock has published as a booklet Unconscious Influence, by Dr. Horace Bushnell.

The Blasphemy against the Holy Ghost: What is it? By Rev. Robert Sewell. A thoughtful treatise, expository and practical. (1d. H. R. Allenson, 30, Paternoster-row.)

Is the Old Testament the Word of God? by Rev. G. Hauson, M.A., is a booklet that is likely to prove of great service at the present time. (1s. per dozen. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.)

Two choice booklets, by Annie E. Dawson, are: A Brother's Faith, and other narratives; and The Good-News Text Book, with a portion of Scripture and a stanza of a hymn for every day of the month. (From the Author, 8, Grove-place, Weston-super-Mare.)

The Authority of Christ over the Individual, the Church, and the Nation, is a lecture of sterling worth by Professor Dick, of the Theological Hall of the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Belfast. (2d. William Strain & Sons, Great Victoria-street, Belfast.)

Pithy Points on Missionary Subjects, being condensed notes of addresses at missionary meetings and other striking facts and figures, is a very useful booklet compiled by Charles Brewer. We trust it will have a large circulation, and stimulate many to take an interest in mission work at home and abroad. (1d. Partridge.)

Anti-Ritualism, by Rev. Dr. Preston, of Runcorn, is a useful catechism on the Church of England Communion Office, with a preface by the late Dr. Blakeney, of Bridlington. It is very instructive, and deserves a large circulation. It is already in its twelfth thousand. (2d. Protestant Reformation Society, 20, Berners-street, W.)

The First and Second Coming of Christ, by Veritas, is a post-millennial tract, one main contention of which is that "all the passages in Scripture that refer to the reign of Christ upon the earth, apply to his first coming, which is past, and to his reign in the hearts of men, which is now begun." (Andrew Elliot, 17, Princes-street, Edinburgh.)

The Baptist Tract & Book Society, 22a, Furnival-street, Holborn, publishes some very effective tracts and booklets. The Weapons of Warfare series (6d. packets) against Romanism, Ritualism, and indifferentism deserve a wide circulation. The Illustrated Leaflets (8d. per packet) are remarkably pointed and direct in teaching and appeal.

Faust; or, The Devil Dramatised, a booklet by Henry Varley, is in its thirty-fifth thousand. A subsidiary title is "A Fatal Representation;" as the pages were written after a tragic occurrence in Melbourne in 1888, when an actor who impersonated Mephistopheles fell down dead in the stage pit, to which, in the course of the play, he had hurried with Faust in his diabolical grip! The incident is made the "text" of a solemn appeal to those who are in the power of the devil. The booklet should be extensively circulated. (6d. per dozen. A. Holness.)

"We Have an Altar," a Bible study of Hebrews xiii. 9-17, by Rev. F. Dobbin, M.A., rector of Carrigrohane and Chancellor of the Cathedral, Cork, is a very thoughtful essay. The words which constitute the title of the pamphlet are interpreted as typical, not anti-typical, as referring to the golden altar of incense in the Jewish ritual, not to Christ's fulfilment of what that ritual implied. The reasoning is close and clear, and a view which several good expositors have of late put forward is admirably maintained. (6d. Cork: Guy & Co., 70, Patrick-street.)

JERUSALEM.—The new hospital founded by the German Evangelical Church, and carried on by deaconesses from Kaiserswerth, was recently opened. The old hospital, which was inaugurated by Dr. Theo. Fliedner, in 1851, is no longer adequate; the new establishment, constructed according to the fullest requirements of modern hygiene, provides accommodation for sixty inmates. The Pasha of Jerusalem was among the distinguished personages who attended the opening of the new institution.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For services by Mr. Opie Rodway, at Congregational Church, Frampton-on-Severn, on August 4, 5, and 6.—For special services by Mr. Matthew Burnett, at Walthamstow, on August 5 and 6.—For blessing upon work for the Lord in a Bible carriage, amongst the towns and villages of Wilts and Berks.—For tent mission to be held in connection with the Wembley Forward Movement, conducted by the Rev. James Oatey, of Norwood, commencing Sunday next.—For services to be held by Mr. Burnett on Bank Holiday, at Blackhorse-lane Chapel, Walthamstow. PRAISE.—For blessing on services on Larkins' Estate, Lee, S.E.

NAPLES SAILORS' REST.

In his report of last year on the trade of Naples and District, Consul Hartwell refers to the Sailors' Rest, of which, among other things, he says:—"Its object is to provide for the wants of seamen of all nationalities, and otherwise for strangers, who, not being in a position to afford ordinary hotel or boarding house accommodation, can be provided with a comfortable home, conducted on Christian and temperance principles. Good sleeping accommodation and meals are provided for seamen at three lire per diem, whilst for other visitors (being British subjects) a lesser charge is made if the relief fund is not able to pay the whole amount. The comforts of the Rest are further promoted by a well-supplied reading and writing room, which contains a piano. The institution is under the charge of Mr. and Mrs. Burrowes, the former an old man-of-war's man, who thoroughly understands sailors, and who watches over the general condition of the port and surroundings in the interests of the morality and welfare of the sailors, whilst Mrs. Burrowes is singularly adapted to the work appointed her; a refinement of character and manner, together with her unfailing kindness and Christian love for all those coming under her matronly care, not failing to produce such results as are now fully apparent, and deemed by me worthy of report.

"From the Naples Rest ships are visited in the interests, moral and social, of the officers and seamen, for the distribution of Bibles and tracts, and in order to invite those who may desire to do so, to attend the religious services of the Rest. The different ports in the neighbourhood, such as Pozzuoli, Castellamare, Torre del Greco, Torre Annunziata, and Salerno, are visited by the superintendent and his helpers by means of the mission boat, 'Hope,' and the general work of the Rest is promoted according to the exigencies of each port, and the means at the disposal of the Mission.

"It is especially noticeable that the general behaviour of British seamen, both on board their ships and on shore, has greatly improved of late years, this being strikingly evidenced at this port, and this I attribute, in a great measure, to the good influences of this and other 'Sailors' Rests.' In this consular district, visited by so considerable a number of ships yearly, cases of misconduct of seamen have very rarely been brought to my notice, especially of late years, and consequently there have been but few fines, and very rare instances of imprisonment. The Sailors' Rest at Naples is of immense advantage to the working of this consulate, and I would especially point out, for the information of the Board of Trade, the great benefits which sailors derive from being sent to this institution, to be lodged and cared for, socially and morally, during their detention at this port."

PERSECUTION IN IRELAND.

Intelligence has reached the office of the Irish Church Missions of another act of Romish persecution in the little isolated Mission Station of Moyrus, co. Galway. Shortly before dawn on July 23 the house and shop of one of the Protestants was maliciously burned to the ground, the family narrowly escaping with their lives. Some paraffin oil and matches were discovered near the ruins by the police.

The outrage was perpetrated only a few days after the failure of the society's claim for compensation for the sinking of the mission boat at Moyrus last October, the boatmen having been prevented by intimidation from attending the Assizes at Galway. Prayer is requested on behalf of the Protestants at Moyrus, that the efforts to drive them out of the district may not be successful.

OPEN-AIR PREACHERS.—I was invited to go and give an address on Sunday last at an open-air service. I found a good band of workers with a harmonium. All the workers were behind the leader or at his side, while there was not one in front of him, so that not one outsider came near the speaker. I asked a number of the workers to go in front and form a nucleus of a congregation. I have often seen the same mistake elsewhere. Outsiders as a rule will not come near unless there is some appearance of a congregation. William Forbes.

THE WEST LONDON MISSION maintain a Home of Rest for Tired Workers and Worn-out Missionaries in the charming village of Bisley, in Gloucestershire. The air is laden with sweetness, and is most bracing. The walks and drives are delightful. Two "Sisters of the People" live in the Home, and do all in their power to make visitors happy and comfortable. The terms are most moderate, from 8s. 6d. to 10s. per week. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is the superintendent of Home. Particulars to be had from the Sister-in-Charge, Wesley House, Bisley, Stroud, Glos.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The Bishop of Liverpool has gone to Lowestoft for two months' holiday.

Canon Wilberforce has entered on his duties as rector of St. John's, Westminster.

A new mission-hall is being built in connection with St. Catherine's, Edgehill, Liverpool.

The C.M.S. has resolved to ask the Bible Society for 10,000 New Testaments and 2000 New Testament portions for Uganda.

A special meeting in connection with the jubilee of the South American Missionary Society was held last week in the Memorial Hall, Islington.

The C.M.S. has accepted the following ladies as missionaries:—Misses Edith Mary Bernau, Eliza Louisa Pilgrim, Sarah Hickmot, and Bessie Isabel Clara Clarke.

Rev. W. W. Elwes, of Madras, who has been nominated to the vacant Tinnevelly bishopric, has been in India since 1870, and has warmly interested himself in C.M.S. work.

An offer of service has been accepted by the C.M.S. from Rev. William Francis Cobb (B.A. Emmanuel College and Ridley Hall, Cambridge), curate of St. George's, Sheffield. He will be located in the Punjab.

A vigorous Protestant campaign is being carried on just now in some parts of Durham, a county which has a large Irish Roman Catholic population and a full staff of priests. This campaign is evangelistic as well as anti-Romish, a thing sorely needed in the county.

The annual tent missionary meeting in connection with St. John's, Reading, has been held. Rev. F. T. Colson took the chair, and Bishop Moule gave an interesting address on the need of the Gospel in China. He also showed how real the work was from examples in his own diocese.

Special Sunday evening sermons on the Foundation Truths of Protestantism, in opposition to some prevailing fashions in religion, are being preached in Icomb Church, by Rev. H. J. R. Marston, Hon. Sec. to the National Protestant Church Union for Gloucester and Bristol.

The last C.M.S. Conference in Bombay resolved to ask the Society to send out a clergyman of high spiritual power to undertake mission work amongst the native churches. The C.M.S. Committee has accordingly authorised the secretaries to find a missioner who would go out in the autumn.

The first annual meeting of the Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals was held on Tuesday week in the Chapter House, St. Paul's, Archdeacon Sinclair presiding. The annual report showed that during the year sermons had been preached in London and elsewhere inculcating kindness to animals, and that the 4th Sunday after Trinity had been suggested for the simultaneous notice of the society's work.

Rev. R. B. Boyer, M.A., of the Missions to Seamen, has accepted the Chapel-of-Ease at Wisbech, after thirty-two years' service for the society, including eighteen years in mission vessels as Chaplain of the Missions to Seamen for the shipping in the outer anchorage of the Bristol Channel. He carried on an active warfare against crimps and crimping, was an enthusiastic promoter of sobriety amongst sailors, and took a prominent part in the founding of seamen's institutes all round our shores.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. G. Parry Brown has been welcomed to the pastorate of Birstall Church.

Rev. Dr. Brown, of Bedford, preached at Buntingford on Sunday, in connection with the East Herts anniversaries.

Rev. Robert M'Intosh, B.D., having accepted the Chair of Apologetics in Manchester College, has resigned his pastorate at Dumfries.

Rev. E. C. Chevis, formerly engaged in the American mission-field, has been recognised as evangelist pastor at Hurstbourne Tarrant.

The Manchester and Salford auxiliary of the L.M.S. has furnished a house in Raby-street, Moss-side, as a home for missionaries on furlough.

The three hundred and twenty-ninth anniversary of Horningsham Church has been celebrated, Rev. John Aldis, ex-president of the Baptist Union, who is eighty-six years of age, preaching.

It has been decided to remove to Ashley Down, Castle Green Church, the mother of Congregationalism in Bristol, dating back to 1633. It is believed a greater work may be done in this growing suburb than in the centre of the city.

At the annual meeting and prize distribution of the L.M.S. College at Antananarivo, Rev. James Sibree presided, and a large number of Europeans attended. A "new hymn" was sung—a translation of "Who is on the Lord's side?" The prize essay was read by Razafitrimo, a senior student, on "The Indirect Results of Christianity," who said that the Gospel is gradually raising and purifying native society. The total number of students was forty-five, of whom ten are leaving; two of these have been accepted as native missionaries, and three others have already been appointed to the central and eastern provinces.

Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead, has been the scene of a very interesting meeting, when Dr. Elliot Curwen was dedicated for medical missionary work in Pekin, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society. Dr. Horton said Dr. Curwen was the first missionary their church had sent out whom it had also trained. Others had gone who had been members there, but their residence had been an accident in connection with their preparation for their work; Dr. Curwen they had known from his boyhood. His father had been the founder, in the human sense, of the Congregational Church at Hampstead. Let him not forget Him by whom all cures were rendered possible. The secret of all success is personal communion with God; there is no failure while that is maintained, and there is no success when it is broken.

Calls.—Rev. J. C. Johnston, of Queen's-street, Leeds, to Belgrave, Torquay; Rev. R. R. Collet, of Brunswick Slad, to Berkeley; Rev. J. P. Murphy, of East Budleigh, to Ivybridge.

Resignations.—Rev. Noah Bevan, of Bishop's Castle, Shrops.; Rev. H. B. Jones, of Barbican Chapel, New North-road.

BAPTIST.

A new church has been opened at Codrington.

Rev. J. S. Haggett has been recognised at Victoria-street, Gosport.

Rev. James Hodgson has been recognised as pastor of Millom Church.

Mr. Chapman has been conducting special services at Edwin-street Chapel, Nottingham.

Hall-street Mission-room, connected with Moss-side Church, Manchester, has been reopened after renovation.

The Baptist Missionary Society has voted £1000 from the Centenary Thanksgiving Fund to be expended in the outfit, passage, and expenses of new Zenana missionaries.

In consequence of Mrs. Long's health, which is in a very serious condition, she and her husband, Rev. Arthur Long, are compelled to return to England. They were stationed at Russell Khonda in Orissa.

At Zion Chapel, St. Mary Cray, the Sunday-school anniversary was held last week. On Sunday Rev. H. Sturge was the preacher. At the public meeting, on Monday, Mr. W. Jones presided, and after a short statement by Mr. M. Mervin, Revs. J. Ballard, Hugh Rodger, and Mr. W. J. Winter delivered addresses.

Rev. James Hughes, of Kimberley, is visiting England to obtain funds to equip two mission stations in Matabeleland. Mr. Hughes went to Kimberley four and a-half years ago to start a cause, and in the meantime he has built a church costing £3000, of which over £2000 has been raised. The church has a membership of 200. Mr. Hughes is chairman of the South African Union.

Rev. W. Holman Bentley reports a number of baptisms at Wathen Station, on the Congo river. "I have never before seen," he says, "such deep feeling, such sense of sin and sinfulness and anxiety. I came out in a very hopeful state of mind, but I must say that my hopes are more than realised." It is interesting to note that two of those who have been baptized were from Tungwa, near Makuta, the place where Mr. Comber was shot during his explorations in the early history of the Congo Mission.

Calls.—Mr. S. J. Thorpe, of the Pastors' College, to Teignmouth; Rev. J. L. Cooper, of Evesham, to Long Crendon.

Resignation.—Rev. J. F. Archer, of Church-street, Edgware-road.

METHODIST.

A new chapel and schools are to be erected at Newton, near Wakefield.

Apse Heath Chapel, Ventnor, which was seriously damaged by the storms of last winter, has been repaired.

A mission hall capable of seating 300 persons has been erected on the East Moors, Cardiff. The opening services were conducted by Revs. Dr. Keene, R. Squires, and J. Honey.

The new cause at Fawcett-road, Portsmouth, has, during the four years since it was commenced, made very satisfactory progress. The chapel, which seats 600 people, is well filled every Sabbath evening.

Rev. Richard Roberts, who has been longer in the ministry than any of the ex-Presidents, and is as active and vigorous as the youngest, preached twice on Sunday week at Leicester, it being his thirty-fourth annual visit.

A recent balancing of The Joyful News Mission accounts showed a debt to the bank of £23 14s. 6d. The deficit has been covered for the time being, but, says Mr. Champness, "If we are not helped quickly we shall have to face a gloomy prospect."

Mr. J. R. Mackenzie preached in two Wesleyan chapels in Newark-on-Trent to large congregations. Both services were highly appreciated, and souls decided for Christ. Mr. Mackenzie gave an interesting account of the work of the Monthly Tract Society.

The Missionary Committee (Primitive) are greatly pleased to find that the Zambesi Mission party has at last made a beginning of their preaching to the heathen, for whose sake they have travelled so far and suffered so much. The first service was held two days before last Christmas Day.

The Training Institution (New Connexion) for native preachers at Tientsin, China, now in the charge of the veteran Rev. John Innocent as its principal, continues to do good work. Three of the four new preachers received this year are from this institution. All the students presented themselves for examination, with the exception of one who had been transferred to the Lao Ling Hospital for special medical training.

PRESBYTERIAN.

The foundation-stone of a new church has been laid at Carlisle for the Fisher-street congregation. The church will be made to seat 760 people.

Intelligence has just reached this country of the death of Mr. W. J. McGaw, of New South Wales, a benefactor to the Presbyterian Church in that colony.

Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, has been in London for a few days while on his way to Buxton. On Sunday week he occupied Dr. Pentecost's pulpit at Marylebone.

The Jewish Mission Committee have agreed to remit the whole question of the future of the mission both in East London and Morocco to the Executive Committee.

The College Committee are endeavouring to raise £600 to complete the endowment fund of the College library, and to do this by what is termed an "Old Student's Purse."

The new "Book of Order," printed by order of the last Synod, has been issued. It extends to 173 pages. The work was compiled by a committee of which Rev. W. Ballantyne was convener. It has been before the Church for seven years, and was first issued in a reduced form in 1882.

The Liverpool Daily Post, commenting upon Rev. Robert Duff's early removal from that city to London, says, "Mr. Duff's advent is eagerly awaited by the congregation in the quaint little building in West Halkin-street. The importance of the church is not to be estimated by its size. Several men of 'light and leading' are included among the seat-holders, and Mr. Duff will find himself in the very centre of cultivated people."

Calls.—Rev. A. Farquhar, of Holy Island, to High-street, Whitehaven; Mr. G. K. Green, to Kendal; Rev. T. Tullay, of Hamilton, to Rattray; Rev. T. J. Whyte, of Lochgelly, to Shiels.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. Herbert Booth has opened a men's shelter at Halifax, N.S., at a cost of 2000 dols.

A lady and gentleman interested in the Army have recently offered premises for a rescue home in Toulon.

Through the meetings held by Mrs. Booth Tucker in Bristol £140 has been raised for the work in foreign lands.

£1500 has been granted by the New Zealand Government for rescue work in that colony, £450 of which sum has been devoted to the six rescue homes.

FALLEN ASLEEP.

Recently, of malarial fever, Rev. C. Wilbur, of the Central American Mission, Costa Rica, a talented and devoted young missionary.—At Northampton, aged 63, Mr. Thomas Pressland, a devoted worker and Sunday-school superintendent.—At Beauly, on 20th ult., Rev. M. Corbett, Free Church Minister, Tummel Bridge, N.B.—At Bort, Rev. E. W. James, well known as a minister of the Welsh Calvinists.—At Chester, Mrs. Williams, wife of Rev. John Williams, City-road Church, Chester, and mother of Rev. Oswald Williams, who is about starting for the mission-field on Khassia Hills.—At Bowes Park, N., on 21st ult., Mr. J. J. Churcher, aged seventy-nine, late of Shoreditch.—At Bournemouth, on 22nd ult., Rev. John Mould, aged seventy-eight, Vicar of Oakham.—At Eton, on 25th ult., Rev. E. Hale, aged sixty-six, an esteemed assistant master.—At Great Salkeld, on 23rd ult., Canon Butler, aged seventy-four.—At Bonchurch (I.W.), on 24th ult., Mrs. H. Geldart, wife of the rector of the parish.—At Armagh, Mr. Joseph Gibb, an earnest Presbyterian elder, aged eighty-nine years.—At Bellfield, co. Dublin, Sophia Mary, wife of Rev. Thomas Wallace.—At Armagh, Mr. John Gray, for many years a consistent and earnest Christian.

Notes and Comments.

The lamentable boating accident which took place on the evening of Wednesday week in the Mawddach estuary, near Barmouth, has called forth widespread sympathy. The party was associated with the National Home Reading Union, and the ten who lost their lives were most of them engaged in Christian work, and had given promise of future usefulness. Mr. Paton we notice in our "Obituary" column, but all will be sorely missed in some centre of service — Christian Endeavour Society, Sunday-school, or Band of Hope.

---

The yearly letter of the Society of Friends this year is a calm but decided pronouncement on behalf of the foundation truths of the Gospel. It emphasises the atoning death and the interceding life of the Lord Jesus, and the empowering life of his Holy Spirit outpoured at Pentecost and never withdrawn! "If the Lord's children have not had power for service it is because they have not appropriated the gift." It recognises the solemn duty to win souls and to build them up in the faith of Christ. It warns lest in our busy lives the devotional reading and study of the Holy Scriptures should be crowded out to our spiritual loss. It renews its testimony against war, and speaks cheerfully and thankfully of "the earnest endeavour among Friends in different parts of the country to carry out in practice the Christian life."

---

We regret that the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, while able to report a growth in the membership at home, had to announce once again a serious decline in the gifts to foreign missions. There was much conversation as to ways and methods of altering this, but Rev. G. W. Olver came to the point when he said: "If they would cease from criticisms, and take to prayer, they would lift the funds without an organising secretary." Rev. F. W. Macdonald followed in the same strain, believing that if "they only agreed together to pray for the suffering, sinning, mourning nations of the world, there would be from many and many a quarter generously prompted gifts for the Lord's treasury, which would bring them within sight of a new era of missionary finance." True, the inflow of money depends on higher things, the fountain of liberality is in the heart of love. No amount of water piping can supply a city with water until the connection is made with the fountains in the hills.

The outbreak of war between China and Japan can only cause pain to all who wish well to both countries, and especially to those who desire the extension of the Saviour's kingdom within their borders. Whether hostilities will be carried on with any regard to mercy remains to be seen, but we fear that there will be, over and above the suffering that comes from war, the suffering also that comes from needless cruelty; it is two countries in conflict which have small regard for life, and, we fancy, know nothing of our ambulance service. The presence of Englishmen on either side will not materially alter the situation. That fanaticism will be stirred and let loose is already evident, for a letter from Hankow to Shanghai states that it is now reviving in Hunan, a place of evil reputation. "Foreigners have been openly insulted in Tchang. The friends and emissaries of Chow Han, the anti-missionary leader, are fanning a report that Japan is acting at the instigation of Europeans." These things, which appear to be against the Gospel, will, no doubt, ultimately fall out to its furtherance.

It is a joy to see the harvest fields this year, and a joy to read what experts think of them. Everything, from the drought of last summer, has been leading up to an abundant crop. Farmers even write of some kinds of produce being four or five times as much as they were last year. All that is wanted is a favourable harvest season for us to gather what has been given, and for this we can pray —a very old-fashioned thing to do, but a thing in which we believe. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof"—so are the means by which the fulness is given. Another thing that we ought always to be doing is, to keep God's ways and to walk in his statutes; obedience leads to plenty. "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land." Unpopular as these views may be, they are the very alphabet of a theistic faith, and to believe in God is to believe in One who can bless or curse.

Voluntary Christian work has done great things for our sailors within the last quarter of a century in the spread of temperance; but the Germans and Scandinavians are more sober and orderly than English sailors. English masters, therefore, ship them at German ports in preference to their own countrymen. Mr. Consul Dundas, of Hamburg, says that while English masters do not deny the superiority of their fellow-countrymen, or the fact that when in difficulty or danger they would prefer to have a British crew at their backs, they declare that under ordinary circumstances they find the foreigners less troublesome. And, of course, ordinary circumstances are ordinary, and therefore the English sailors are generally dispensed with. What an evidence we have in this fact of the power of our race and of the injury which our drinking habits inflict. Freed from this curse, what might not Englishmen do for the world's salvation?

---

Sir George White, Commander-in-Chief in India, has added to the testimony of Lord Roberts, his predecessor, an important statement of the value of temperance work in the army. Over 22,000 men, or one third of the entire number of troops in India, belong to the Army Temperance Society, an increase of nearly 9000 in four years. The temperance men contrast most favourably with the non-abstainers in conduct. Out of 1100 regimental courts-martial, only thirty-nine sat to try members of the Temperance Association, and at the 2680 courts-martial of all classes held during the year, only seventy-three members of the same association were charged with offences of a more or less serious character. To the 2680 trials, the temperance men thus contributed nearly 800 less prisoners than would have been their share had they contributed according to the ratio of the rest of the army.

---

Sir George White says experience has taught him that "nearly all the crime in the British Army is directly or indirectly traceable to drinking to excess." Lord Roberts said the same thing years ago. Why, then, are canteens allowed in every barracks, and temptations put in the way of soldiers? Would it not be better to discontinue the sale of drink in the barracks, and also have some stringent regulations as to obtaining it outside? We should like to see some impartial statements as to the effects of the canteen system on the morals and discipline of the army, for although it was originated ostensibly for the purpose of checking intemperance by keeping the men away from low public houses, we have an idea that it is promotive of it.

---

The Bible Christians, who, in the early days of their history, had women ministers, have again resorted to women's aid. For many years they have scarcely had one woman minister amongst them, but during their present conference three young women presented themselves as candidates, and it is believed that in a few years they will have several in the regular ministry. A movement is beginning among Independents for appointing women, as well as men, as deacons, and some churches have already taken the step. We have women missionaries, women directors of missionary societies, women in schools, women in zenanas, women workers among our most degraded populations, women who do the bulk of the general work of the churches, and women who have led some of the greatest and most difficult moral reforms of our day—at what point this is to stop, or if at any point, it is not easy to say. Our own experience of co-operation with women in Christian service is that they are beyond value.

---

In the Church at Corinth, "when they came together, each one had a psalm, had a teaching, had a revelation, had a tongue, had an interpretation." Expositors may vary in opinion as to what each particular gift was, but the fact that each one brought something to the common spiritual treasury should have a meaning for the brethren of to-day. We ought to be able to have meetings—some no doubt have—to which each should be encouraged and expected to bring something for the edification of all. He would thus be stimulated to think and pray and live and work for all. Each according to his peculiar gift and grace would bring his contribution. The joyful soul would have his psalm; the enlightened soul would have his vision; the interpreter would have his interpretation; the burdened soul would have his difficulty, his question, his doubt; the consecrated soul would have his story of spiritual endeavour and success. And there would be no jealousy and no envy and no rivalry; each would rejoice in the gift of the other, and give God thanks for all.

The Guardian contains an extremely interesting notice of "A Norwegian Wesley," founded on Dr. Bang's "Kirkehistorie and Life of H. N. Hauge: also Skipper Worse, by A. W. Kielland, translated by Lord Ducie." The article draws a parallel between the Norwegian and the English evangelists and their work :—

His watchword was "Awakening." Alone, at first, he tramped from village to village and from farm to farm, assembling all who would come for reading of the Scriptures and exposition and preaching. These he gathered, on Wesley's method (though he knew nothing of him), into classes, with their leaders and elders. He established communication between these scattered congregations, and from their most earnest and capable members chose lay-preachers, whom he sent on wider circuits. He himself travelled five times to Kristiania, and once even to Copenhagen, often to Bergen in the west, and far beyond Throndhjem to Tromsö in the north. In seven years the movement covered the land, and Hauge himself was almost an object of worship to the poorer people. The clergy resented and opposed it bitterly, and the comfortable classes, especially the merchants in the towns, stood by them. Hauge had already been twice arrested when his ten years' imprisonment began in 1804. It was the result of an indictment sent to Copenhagen by Bishop Hansen, of Christiansand, an unworthy antagonist. It charged him and his "brethren" with invasion of the rights of pastors, with disloyal preaching against the State Church, and with general contempt for law and authority. Hauge came out of his long confinement in such broken health that he could never resume his journeys and visitations. But until his death in 1824 his house at Bretveldt was the centre of all the work of his societies.

Hauge never left the State Church, but remained and influenced it. As to his teaching, we read :—

It was certainly not sacramental—itwas profoundly individual and "subjective." It made much of conversion and of "experiences," but it insisted strongly on practical righteousness, that faith must show itself by its works, and that the Christian life was a struggle and not a rest in any easy assurance. It built all on the atonement, yet allowed no justification that was not a progressive sanctification. It preached duty sternly, and that every Christian must prove his religion by the diligence and honesty with which he followed his worldly calling. It aimed at simplicity of life, and was very hard on luxury and love of money. It had a sort of ideal of Communism, and started farms, after the Moravian model, which the "faithful" only were to work on co-operative principles with a daily practice of common religion. It was altogether a robust and very moral kind of Puritanism.

---

The Guardian remarks that although there have not yet been any Norsk Tracts for the Times, there is "a High Church party among the clergy," who are dissatisfied with Lutheranism and Erastianism as they find them. One of their achievements has been that after 200 years they have brought back into the Apostles' Creed "the Holy Catholic Church"; in Norway the phrase ran "A Holy Christian Church, which is a communion of holy men." The Guardian hopes that the Tractarian may follow the Evangelical movement in Norway. We hope not. It is the spurious following the true.

---

In two thoughtful pages Rev. Dr. Plummer gives us, in The Expository Times, a refreshing little homily on "The Inspiration of Waiting." His text is Luke xxiv. 49, Acts i. 4; and his application is to ourselves. "Wait" was the word of the Master—"wait" for an indefinite period! Wait, when there was not a day to be spared! Think of the work which had been committed to them, and which they had cheerfully undertaken—the evangelisation of the world. Their parish was the world. Think also of their strong conviction that Jesus Christ would soon return; so that the time allowed for this enormous task was very short. Think of the amazing events which had just happened, and to what intensity their enthusiasm had been kindled. Yet they were to wait until they were endued with power from on high.

---

After our Lord had shown, in the Sermon on the Mount, what kind of man could be in the Kingdom of Heaven, He next pointed out how they who were of the Kingdom were to behave to each other, and to all men. From an inward aspect, an aspect treating of our dispositions and tempers, He turns to a manward aspect, an aspect which treats of human relationships. He gives all law a spiritual meaning and application. The blow that kills comes from the wrath that burns against a brother man, from the contempt that despises him. Adultery is the impure wish. And, inasmuch as the imperfections and wrong conduct of our brother man might be made a ground of self-justification when we returned him conduct like his own, an eye for an eye, our Lord enjoined the forgiveness of injuries, and the duty of doing good to him who has done evil to us. Not the evildoer have we to set before our mind, but our Father in Heaven, and then act as He would do. All the way through those parts of the Sermon which treat of our duty to men, He seems to be grappling with the difficulties which we find in each other's conduct, "Forgive," He says, "Be perfect as your Father."

---

In an interesting and thoughtful paper on "Some Controverted Articles of the Apostles' Creed," Rev. Professor Swete expresses the opinion that the Ascension was certainly not uppermost in the thought of primitive Christianity. "That position was occupied by the death of the Lord, or rather by his resurrection from the dead. The resurrection had a double claim upon the enthusiastic acceptance of the first few generations of the Church, it vindicated the claim of Jesus Christ to be the Son of God, and it opened a new hope to mankind. The glory of the Ascension was obscured by the more obvious splendours of the Resurrection-victory on the one hand, and by the brighter hope of the Return on the other. . . . But the Ascension is there in the background of the thought, if not always mentioned by name. And whenever it comes into view it is seen to be a distinct act." The Church at the beginning, as now, believed that the Lord ascended as truly as He rose.

---

Professor Swete insists that while critics point out the silence of the Synoptic Gospels, and of 1 Cor. xv., as to the Ascension of our Lord, they ought to call attention to the testimony borne by the opening verses of the Acts, 1 Peter, Ephesians, 1 Timothy, and especially Hebrews, "of which Epistle it is not too much to say that its argument largely turns upon the assumed passage through the heavens into the Divine Presence of the High Priest of mankind." He might also have quoted the words of Romans viii. 34, where the argument gathers force by passing from the death of our Lord to the resurrection, from the resurrection to the appearing in heaven, from the appearing in heaven to the act of interceding for us. And instead of saying that in the early writings the Ascension is always in the background of thought, if not openly expressed, would it not have been more correct to have said that it is everywhere present as a luminous atmosphere? If Christ be not ascended, the whole of the writing becomes dark and unintelligible.

---

It may be noted here—and it is by no means unimportant—that the Lord Jesus is the High Priest of his people, not of all mankind. We have no part in Jesus the Son of God, as a High Priest, until we have been reconciled to God by Him as the one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses at Hampstead, Southwark, Hoxton, Highbury, and Margate.

Tableaux Vivants, Etc.

Lady Henry Somerset, having heard that the much-talked-of tableaux vivants verged on indecency, visited a theatre in which these living pictures were exhibited, and found "many of them harmless and in a manner picturesque," but a few were "simply outrageous."

In them young girls are posed with no other clothes at all on them but tights from neck to foot. In some there is a wisp of drapery, and the little there is only serves to emphasise the absence of more...For the first time in a Christian country our brothers, husbands, sisters, sons, and wives are bidden to assist at an exhibition of unclothed women.

Lady Henry writes in pained and eloquent indignation of these shameless yet shameful exhibitions. She says, with a very natural sarcasm :—

At one time the Lord Chamberlain used to interfere when petticoats threatened to be immodestly short. Now that no clothes at all are worn, I suppose he feels there is nothing to interfere about. But we have to ask ourselves what is the County Council doing? A year or two ago they refused a licence to the Aquarium unless the very offensive posters of Zæo were withdrawn. That was a picture gross beyond words, it is true, but modesty itself beside these tableaux.

Her ladyship thus closes her eloquent "appeal to the English public as accomplices in the ruin and degradation of these girls":—

By the English law every spectator of a prize fight is an accomplice in the offence, and liable to punishment equally with the principals. Just so are we all accomplices in this. No prize fight could be one half so brutalising, so de-civilising, so degrading to the most sacred instincts of humanity, as this public pageantry of shame. I cannot believe that those responsible for the conduct of our great London journals personally know the nature of the exhibitions they have allowed their reporters to praise in their columns. I am sure that the clergy, Established, Nonconformist, and Catholic, must be ignorant of what is going on in their midst, that public leaders and speakers in and out of Parliament have not seen for themselves what really are these living pictures of which I write.

But the time for speaking out has come; such ignorance cannot long be excusable if it means acquiescence in a crime, and I earnestly call on everyone who has a voice that he or she can make articulate to join in a protest against this unholy thing.

So far we are in perfect accord with Lady Henry Somerset, and we trust her womanly appeal on behalf of the maiden modesty of her young sisters will echo and re-echo through all decent, not to say Christian circles, until all licence for this licentiousness is stayed.

But there is one aspect of the case which Lady Henry does not touch. So far from the advocacy and visitation of the theatre by Christians having a tendency to purify the stage, we believe it will have the contrary effect. If people who profess to fear God can take delight in theatrical performances of a milder type, those who have no fear of God before their eyes will demand stronger meat. And as the rampant theatre-going world will always outnumber the theatre-going professing Christians, who must study appearances, the key-note will be given not by the compromising Christian but by the uncompromising world.

We were surprised and pained a few months ago by reading in The Christian World the report of an interview in which Miss Willard, in the name of Puritanism, was represented as defending the theatre, of course within due limits. But if "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, which are not of the Father, but are of the world," have been pandered to anywhere, in all ages, ancient and modern, it has been, and is now, on the stage.

There is one allusion in Lady Henry

Somerset's paper which we cannot pass without regretful mention.

It will be said that the artistic merits of these presentations are their raison d'etre. I absolutely deny that they are artistic. They have nothing in common with the treatment of the nude in art. Go to the South Kensington Museum and look at Mr. Watts' Psyche, and then go to the "Palace" and wait for the "Moorish Bath." The one is a glorification of womanly form; genius and reverence are confessed in every touch. The mind would have to be diseased indeed to which that picture could suggest unruly thoughts. But the other——!

These "tableaux" violate every artistic canon. It is sham nudity, not spiritualised and made ideal by the hallowed creating hand of genius, but palpably gross and disgusting in its suggestive tights....

I do not say that everyone who looks on these pictures does so with a bad object, that as far as his or her purity is concerned it must suffer by the spectacle; although it is past all probability that any large majority will look on them with the reverence and seriousness of purpose that justifies the artist's study of the nude form.

Scripture tells us that the shamed sense of nakedness was the consequence of sin, "and the Lord God made for Adam and for his wife coats of skins and clothed them." Notwithstanding the cheap newspaper cant about the British matron, we believe that the painting and sculpture of the nude is offensive to God and to natural modesty and purity. It necessitates the living model, and it would be difficult to imagine that, under the gaze of artist or art-student, her nudity is to her "spiritualised and made ideal by the hallowed creating hand of genius," or could suggest to her "a glorification of the womanly form," or a consciousness of "reverence" for herself, though she might recognise "genius" in the artist.

Would any Christian woman desire for herself or for her daughter the rôle of an artist's model for the nude? No; it is as opposed to God as that of her sister who poses for the tableau vivant.

Lady Henry expresses on this subject the general sentiment of cultured people, Christian as well as others, but we believe that a deeper examination will lead to a view more consonant with "the simplicity that is in Christ."

BANK HOLIDAY WORK.

Many hearts on Monday morning were sad at the sight of the rain; but as the day wore on the rain ceased, and soon after mid-day the sun burst through, to the joy of thousands. The parks, commons, and other public places were crowded. The London City Mission have long been trying to carry the Gospel to these throngs. This year there were three divisions—Parliament Hill (Hampstead), Chelsea, and Hampton Court Green in the afternoon, and the Square at Hampton in the evening.

Soon after two the workers, some twenty strong, took their station by the side of Hampton Court Green with its throngs of pleasure seekers. For nearly three hours there sounded out the voice of song and testimony, of warning, of pleading love, and of urgent entreaty. Crowds gathered round, and for the most part gave respectful attention. Of course, we were not without a little interruption; but, thank God, while some scoffed and others interrupted, many heard the Word gladly. At five we went to the mission hall for tea, and after prayer went to the square at Hampton, where, till nine o'clock, a quiet listening crowd stood around. The beautiful quiet calm of the evening and the listening of the people gave us an exceptional opportunity of proclaiming the Gospel—and right well did the brethren use it. With prayer and the Doxology we closed, wending our way to the station to return home; wearied, it is true, but glad and thankful for such glorious opportunity of service.

DR. WALKER, a medical man at St. Leonards, addressing a meeting, said a doctor stood in a most ridiculous position in supporting a temperance movement. Intoxicating drink was so extensive a cause of disease, that a large part of a doctor's practice was due to indulgence in it.

A Call for Intercessors.—II.

We should wish for heaven simply because Jesus is there; but God forbid that we should arrive there empty-handed! Let us bring in our sheaves with joy. When the Spirit ascends to the throne, his petitions are always granted. St. Paul declared that his salvation and his supply of the Holy Spirit depended upon the prayers of others (Phil. i. 19). He expected that a door would be opened for his missionary work, and that utterance would be given him, and his preaching be bold, as well as his personal safety secured, through their intercessions (Col. iv.; 2 Cor. i.; 2 Thess. iii.; Rom. xv.).

Let us pray for all ministers and missionaries, especially when they are preaching, that the Holy Spirit may direct their words, and that their bright faces may assure the people that there is indeed "sprung up a light for the righteous, and joyful gladness for such as are true hearted." That is a language that all can understand. I have read of a minister who gave up his church because he found that the congregation did not pray for him.

"Attempt great things for God; expect great things from God," preached William Carey, and the marvellous missionary century has been the result of the great expectations of many intercessors.

"What think ye of Christ?" How much is He worth to you? Is it worth while to wish for his Second Advent, and that many of you, even old people, may never go through death? Then let us pray the Lord of the Harvest to send more labourers into his vineyard. "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Not when the world is converted, but when it is sceptical, "as in the days of Noah." The Gospel has now been preached for a witness to all nations. That is the sign that we are very near the end of this dispensation. Those who love the Lord's appearing shall wear the crown of righteousness. Let the wish to see Jesus mingle with our prayers.

The special season for intercession is drawing to a close. "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain. . . . So the Lord shall give them showers of rain." At the beginning of this century Christ could not have come in accordance with prophecy. Asia, Africa, Australia, New Zealand, North-West America were closed against the missionary. Now he has entered and claimed all lands for the Lord. The doors of all nations are standing open in answer to prayer. Let us both pray for and help materially those who enter, yet without forgetting our own neighbourhood, and the heathen cities in our own land. We shall have to be prompt in our intercessions, for there is little time to lose. The warning of the Lord's return is already resounding through the world.

"Pray for the peace of Jerusalem." Her true prosperity will only begin with Christ's millennial reign over the earth. War, sieges, down-treading, have been her history, and will be "until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Let us pray that many Jews may be saved from worshipping the false Messiah.

From what is it that our town or village or county suffers the most? Is it from drinking, gambling, extravagance, gossip, or any other sin? Let us pray that it may be saved and led into the way of peace. May they that fear the Lord speak often one to another in many places in Great Britain, India, and the Colonies, and many more evangelists be raised up and have success in America and elsewhere. God's true people are being united in the unity of the Spirit, though belonging to different lands and denominations.

It is a good plan to look through an atlas, or a missionary map, and pray for each particular spot, that spiritually gifted workers may be sent there, taking one country, or part of it each day. This would be a capital way to impress geography upon the young, at the same time giving them an interest in missions. They should read the stories in magazines and papers, and find out the places on the map, praying for more teachers and more Christian literature to be sent there. Let us intercede for native Christians, finding out from missionaries and papers what they are praying for, and join them in spiritual worship, though separated by land and sea, while we send them encouraging messages. Some of them are suffering from bitter persecution.

May we do all things from the pure and holy motive of love and gratitude to the crucified Redeemer, and the wish to glorify his name. When you see Jesus, and his smile of recognition is thrilling through you, may you have the delight of learning from Him that many of the radiant faces around you owe their everlasting happiness to your intercession.

It is possible to have much closer intercourse with God than most people imagine.

When young children were brought to Jesus He took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them. When we meet his little ones in the streets or homes, though they be strangers to us, let us silently ask Him to lift them up in spirit and bless them. Thus God will raise up many spiritual children. Pray that "all may be one."

Think of Jesus, who had nowhere to lay his head, and whose dying pillow was a crown of Syrian thorns, longer than nails, beaten into his sacred head, while the nails pierced the hands that had soothed the sick and sorrowful. "Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." He interceded for his torturers. And he said in agony "I thirst." Let us lead to Him in conversation and prayer many souls for which He is still thirsting with "the deep, longing thirst Divine."

May I ask all of you, my fellow readers, to offer up an "effectual fervent prayer," with thanksgiving for its sure answer, that many of God's chosen ones may come silently in church or room, field, mountain, or city, to be consecrated intercessors for ever more. So a world-wide supplication will rise to heaven from the pages of The Christian. May there be much "joy in the presence of the angels." None will rejoice so much as God, the Father, Saviour, and Holy Spirit, to whom be all thanksgiving, glory, and dominion for ever more. Amen.

PERSIA.—Rev. H. Carless, accompanied by a medical student, left Julfa at the beginning of May on an itinerating tour. They visited Kashan, Sultanabad, Burujird, and Nejifâdâd. At the last-named place fifty-two Mohammedans and Babis attended the Sunday-morning service during Mr. Carless's visit. Altogether the tour lasted forty-two days, and they returned to Julfa on June 11. A telegram has been received announcing Dr. and Mrs. Donald Carr's safe arrival at Julfa.

ROME AND THE BIBLE.—We lately noticed the course pursued by Mgr. Hirth in connection with the distribution of the Holy Scripture in Uganda. This has now been followed by an urgent appeal from Mgr. Le Roy for the same method of procedure in the French Congo. The influence of the "Book," as a marvellous instrument of propaganda, is increasingly admitted by Romish workers. Mgr. Le Roy, in fact, advocates the immediate creation of a society, standing in the same relation to the Church of Rome as that assumed by the Bible and Religious Tract Societies towards the Protestant Communion.

Keswick Addresses.

EXCEEDING RICHES.

BIBLE READING,

By Prebendary WEBB-PEPLOE.

Having read Eph. i. 19 to the end, the speaker said: The point I wish to call your special attention to is in verse 19, "What is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe." You observe that we have in this chapter the prayer of the Apostle on behalf of the Ephesian converts whom he loved, and unquestionably it is a prayer that any minister or speaker would put forth before God on such an occasion as this, when he stands in the presence of so many children of God. We are gathered here, not to hear addresses on the first principles of the Gospel of Christ (though we may have to allude to them in order to do justice to other truths), or as those in darkness inquiring the way towards God's light. We are children of the light, and our one desire is to learn how to walk as such. We are met, therefore, not to consider those grand fundamental truths that concern our salvation from sin, but to consider the great truths that concern the progress of the believer, and how God would have him walk in the midst of the naughty world round about us. In order to bring home this truth to our souls, we may say that one special need of a congregation like this is

INTENSIFICATION.

I mean by that that we should take God at his word, and apply that word to our own souls and to the world around, so that when the world looks at us it should by necessity have to acknowledge that we are walking according to the revelation of God. There is not one person here who would deny that this Book contains the revelation of God; that it is the only Word we have whereby the world may live so that Christ may be glorified on the earth. If this be so, the question comes: Why do men who call themselves Christians live so little according to the Bible? By the word intensification, I mean the personal application of God's holy Word to our own life and our conduct to the people around us, till the world shall have to say, "These men live as if they believed God's truth."

The Apostle's prayer to God on behalf of the converts was that they might know what is "the exceeding riches and greatness of God's power to us-ward who believe." The question then is whether we believe God's Word. There is no need to-day of fresh miracles, according to our ordinary meaning of the word; no need that Christ should rise again from the dead, or should appear amongst us in bodily form and perform his great miracles of healing, the casting out of devils, and other such like works. The world would not believe in Him even if He did in tender compassion visit us once more, any more than they did when He was upon the earth. What they will believe, and what they wait to see, is the miracle of people being brought out of nature's darkness into God's marvellous light, and being conformed to the image of God's dear Son; so that as the world watches the believer it shall be compelled to say: "Why, the God whom these men profess to believe in has all power. He can change them and enable them, and use them for his own glory." There is no other miracle required, if it is a miracle. And indeed it is that God should take Satan's child and make him his own child; that He should translate us from the kingdom of darkness into the kingdom of his dear Son; that He should take a worm of the earth, corrupt in all the departments of his nature, and cause him to be transformed into the image of his Son. It is a mighty miracle, and we may dare to affirm that though the world would not believe if one should rise from the dead, yet they will believe when they see what Christ can do for his Church. In his last prayer to the Father, recorded in John xvii., Christ prayed that the power of the Holy Ghost might so work in his Church that the world might believe.

And now the world waits to believe. It is longing to believe, but it cannot until it sees Christians living up to their privileges. We live in a remarkably utilitarian age. The inquiry is going forth towards Christians, who are making a great stir, thank God: "What have you better for us than that which we have in the world?" We are asked for something practical and immediate and almost tangible. They turn to us and say: "It is all very well for you to talk about your hazy hopes of the future. These things do not touch us. We are practical men, and we want something that is immediate, something that will gratify our tastes and appetites, something that will affect our senses. What can you show us?" Can we answer them and say we have something immediate, something practical, something tangible? To the first two we Christians who believe can give an instantaneous "Yes," without one shadow of hesitation. As to the last, but not without qualification, we will claim to possess something that is tangible and touches the senses. We qualify the assertion by saying that it must be through the Spirit that our tastes and our senses are affected. I am not here to deal with that which merely gratifies the tastes and appetites and senses of the natural man; but I will say this, that God has endowed his Church, if we accept his word spiritually at the outset, so that by faith we can entirely apprehend in our spiritual department what He has done for us in Christ. Then our tastes and appetites and senses shall all be gratified, but it shall be than that of the world. I ask whether we are prepared to take such a position and say to the world that we have in Christ something that literally satisfies every true instinct, desire, taste, and sense, and that at the present moment, irrespective of the future. It is all very well to appear before the world and preach a final glory. They will not believe us unless we can show a present satisfaction. So I am proposing to deal this morning with that which the great God has given to us now, not hereafter, in Christ Jesus our Lord.

And you will notice in studying the Epistle to the Ephesians, that it is essentially the Gospel for to-day if it is rightly apprehended. It deals with what God can show to Christ in the Church to satisfy Him, as the Son who loved Him and died for his purposes. It is to show to the principalities and powers of the world what God can make of the worms of the earth, so that they see the workings of his marvellous power. The Epistle to the Colossians, written about the same time, is to show what the Church has in Christ; but the Ephesians is to show what Christ has in his body, the Church.

As this is a Bible reading, you will permit me to dwell much upon actual texts, and bring you face to face with God's Word. And notice, first, that there are three "exceedings" in this epistle, each of which shows something of our present position. The one in my text (Eph. i. 19) is "the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe"—what there is for us in Christ. In chap. ii. 7 you have "the exceeding riches of his grace, in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus." In chap. iii. 19 you have, according to the word in the original, though not in our version, "the exceeding great love of Christ which passeth knowledge." Then in the last verses of chap. iii. we have the striking expression, "unto Him who is able to do exceeding abundantly"—the word used here being one of the strongest that could be compounded. He is able to do far above and beyond all that we ask or even think.

What, then, does the apostle want us to do and to know? There are three passages we may say that deal with the subject of fulness here. We are to know the fulness of God, the fulness of Christ, and the fulness of the Spirit. Chap. iii. 19: "That ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Chap. iv. 13: "Till we all come into the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Chap. v. 18 tells us that we are to experience the fulness of the Spirit. Nothing less will satisfy the cravings of the apostle for his converts. All this we are to receive, and then we are to go forth, so that by the grace of God we actually reflect the very Christ, the very Spirit, and in a sense even the Father Himself. What the world is waiting for, then, is SOMETHING VERY REAL.

When we take them to Scripture teaching, they generally say, "Oh, that is hyperbole and exaggeration; something visionary. It may be very well to talk of it; it is not possible to realise it." But the apostle is speaking to men placed in the midst of an idolatrous nation. Yet he prays to God that their eyes may be enlightened, so that they may know, and apprehend, and enjoy all the exceeding greatness of the power which God had for them in Christ Jesus.

And here let me say that the world fails to see, on the part of Christians generally, a right apprehension of some aspects of God's revelation. For instance, do we solemnly as in God's sight this morning believe every word that God has said concerning the natural state from which we were redeemed? If we did we could not rest night or day, so long as God gives us strength and power, from going forth to preach the Gospel to those around us. Take our natural state as the Bible describes it, and I believe no man, decent minded towards his fellow man, could refrain from earnestly pressing the Gospel upon him, as long as he felt the man was not saved. There is the expression, "You hath He quickened who were dead in trespasses and sins." I confess I am surprised that a large number of commentators, who I humbly think ought to know better, think that this refers to the final issue of sin in the world to come in many cases. Paul is saying that they were now in a condition of spiritual death and separation from God; and that everyone finds himself in that condition by nature. There is actual separation from God so terrible that the soul is represented as being without hope because separated from Christ. I do say, if our souls were filled with the conviction that every man, woman, and child who has never heard of Christ as a Saviour and never accepted Him as their personal Redeemer, is without God and without hope in the world, how could we sit still and take our ease without seeking in every possible way to take the Gospel message to them?

But it is not only the state of natural death that is described here so strongly as attaching to every child of Adam. What of the consequence of that death that is so strongly put forward? Have we thought of these words: "Everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power"? And of these words, "the blackness of darkness" to which men are reserved for ever; and of the smoke of their torment going up in the presence of the Lamb for ever and ever?—the Greek word here is as strong as it can be made even by inspiration. Have we pictured the meaning and the reality of the things which Christ must have thought when He said: "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"?

THESE ARE NO HYPERBOLE, OR EXAGGERATION;

they are the words of inspiration, and you must take God at his word with regard to sin as much as in regard to salvation. If God says that the lost are lost absolutely from his presence for ever, I dare not qualify the words by turning them into eternal prunings or purgatorial purgations.

And if I believe them I should turn most thankfully to the other side, to dwell upon the wondrous love that passeth knowledge; the love that cannot be defined even by the Spirit; for which the Holy Ghost and Christ Himself laboured as if to find language that could give expression to it, so that they were actually compelled to say at all times: "God so loved"; "Behold, what manner of love"; "Herein is Love." They cannot define it, and I defy you to give any real satisfactory definition of love. You are bound to get back at the last to Him from whom all spiritual mercies come, and say, "God is love"; that is love. And when we see that God gives punishment to the wicked, we know that punishment and love must somehow be consistent, though we cannot understand it, and we bow to the word of the Holy God.

But if there is everlasting punishment from the presence of the Lord, then how shall I value as I ought, the exceeding greatness of his power, the exceeding riches of his grace, and the exceeding beauty of his love? How shall I value them for myself and for my fellow-men? I do not wonder now that the Apostle Paul uses language in this Epistle to the Ephesians which any common person in the world, any man of mind, would say is absolutely exaggerated and beyond apprehension. It is beyond the comprehension of the mind, but it is not beyond the apprehension of the soul; and so we boldly take up the words of the apostle and say that there are for the believer infinitely glorious enjoyments to-day, as well as the prospect of still greater enjoyments hereafter; the difference being just this between Christ and us, that Christ has them in person, we have them by proxy. Christ has them in the presence of God; we have them by faith. But they are not the less ours now. And what we sin against God in is, that Christians soften down the beauties of his inheritance just as they think they must soften down the words of God concerning punishment. And I have invariably found that where men soften down God's word about punishment, they lose grip of the spiritual enjoyments of the present and of the glorious prospects of the future. You cannot qualify one side of God's truth without qualifying the other. You cannot lose the reality of what is meant by separation from God without losing also a sense of what is meant by being joined to God. If I do not understand separation I shall never rightly understand conjunction.

See what the Apostle says here concerning Christ as the believer's inheritance at the present moment. You will observe that up to the close of the first chapter he is speaking entirely of what God has wrought in Christ for man. From the beginning of the second chapter he proceeds to show by Christ, and continues to speak of that to the end of the twelfth verse in the third chapter. Then he turns to speak of what God is prepared to work in the believer by the Spirit.

WHAT GOD HAS WROUGHT IN MAN

In the first chapter there is that which transcends description and understanding. God is relating to us what He has done for us in Christ. And what has He done? He has taken Him who became the sinner's Substitute and exalted Him to his own right hand in the heavenly places, far above all principalities and powers and every name that is named. What does this mean? There is a very comfortable doctrine of representation which prevails largely among Evangelical Christians of to-day, as distinguished from those who would be called, perhaps, in some senses very High Church, and who do not like a Gospel of representation so much as a Gospel of comfort and support in the time of need. One school preaches this, "Work your best and Christ will help you." Another preaches, "Accept Christ and it is all right."

But, my brethren, I humbly think that neither one side nor the other is right yet, and that there is a Gospel beyond both of these. It is a grand thing to have Christ as a helper and as a pattern. It is a blessed thing to have Christ as a representative. But that is not enough for me. I want Christ as the One who includes me, the One who goes far beyond the substitute, or representative, or proxy; One who takes me (by faith, of course, on my part) into Himself; so that I am actually in Christ, in the deepest and most exact sense of the word, just as much indeed as my spirit is somewhere in me at this moment; I cannot tell how; I know not where. Man is a tripartite being who has spirit, soul, and body. The body is visible, the soul works, the spirit is within; I know not where. And so, in a deep, spiritual, mysterious, but real sense, the very moment that a man believes in Christ I believe he is taken into Christ, and therefore it is as impossible for Christ to have anything and for the believer not to have it, as it is for a man to walk about the world and not to carry his soul along with him. If, then, I am in Christ, as God declares, when He wrought in Christ and raised Him from the dead, He wrought in me and took me into glory. Everything that Christ has, and is, and enjoys is mine to-day, as much as it ever will be all through the ages of eternity beyond; with this distinction, that I am and Christ is in the spiritual body. The natural body cannot enjoy yet what the spiritual body will enjoy hereafter.

HAMPERED BY A BODY OF CORRUPTION,

In the first chapter it is all doctrinal, all spiritual and judicial. In the second chapter it is all personal, experimental, and enjoyable. And when you come to the third chapter it is all practical, beneficial, and operative. Now, what is this second chapter when we speak of it as being personal, experimental, and enjoyable? It teaches that, as Christ went up to the throne of God, so every believer in God's mysterious power is one with Him up there, and I can start the spiritual battle and struggle and duty that faces me with this thought: I am far above all principalities and powers in the heavenly places, and above every name that is named in this world, or in that which is to come. No foe, no fear, no folly can touch me as long as I am spiritually in Christ Jesus, where I have been placed by God before his very throne. Men talk of hyperbole, and exaggeration, and visionary ideas. But these are realities, and my conviction is that why we lack spiritual enjoyment is because we are not among those who believe "the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe." If we could believe that we are there, that nothing can touch us, and that we shall never be hindered or hampered so long as we abide in Him, we can afford to be used down here. Linked to Christ we can never cease to enjoy the flow of the power which comes through Him. The Father willed to place the Son, and in the Son to place the Church, at his own right hand in the heavenly places. The Son wills that just as He represented God upon earth for a time, so the Church should represent Him for a time; and as the Father filled the Son with the Holy Ghost until He drew Him up through the gate of death and resurrection into the spiritual body, and took Him to his own right hand as a spiritual man, so Christ purposes that you and I should represent Him for a time upon earth while linked to Him as He was to the Father, receiving from Him as He received from the Father. We are to be the habitation of God by the Spirit, representing Christ to the world, but all the time being drawn upward, onward, heavenward, Godward, until every faculty, every power, every thought of our being is absorbed into Christ. And at last, when that is finished, and through the gate of death we have come to resurrection in reality, we, too, with a spiritual body, shall be lifted to the very throne of God, to enjoy the presence of God for ever.

IT IS A GREAT PROSPECT.

But it is also a great privilege that you and I are called to exercise even in this present life. We are meant to know these things, to show these things. The men who "sit," as it is in chapter ii. 6, are meant to be the men who "walk," as it is in chapter ii. 10. The fault is just this: we do not believe our God that we are sitting. The man who sits in the presence of the king is not very likely to offend consciously in his words. The man who sits in the presence of the king will have his eyes fixed on the monarch, to see what the monarch wishes from him; he is likely to be able to put trifles behind him, paying no heed to the little follies in the background. They are no matter of importance to him. Why should he trouble himself about a shilling's-worth of coppers when the king has placed before him goblets of gold? These are the practical outcomes of the grand doctrine of provision, position, and power offered to us in Christ Jesus our Lord.

Do you know how often the wonderful power of God is mentioned? In chapter i. 11 we read, "In whom also we have obtained an inheritance, being predestinated according to the purpose of Him who worketh." The Greek word meaning "to energise" is used here. God energises all things after the counsel of his will. In verse 19 it is written, "What is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe, according to the working (or energising) of his mighty power." And again in the next verse, "Which He energised in Christ, when He raised Him from the dead." In chapter ii. 2 you have a bad energy working—"Wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now energiseth"—he did once energise in you, and you have to remember that he is energising in the world—"in the children of disobedience." Again, in chapter iii. 7, Paul says, "According to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working"—or energy—"of His power." And, in verse 20, "Now unto Him that is able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that energiseth in us." Do you believe that the energy of God is energising in you for whatever He wants? Once more, and lastly, in chapter iv. 16, we read, "From whom the whole body fitly joined together and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working"—or energising—"in the measure of every part."

Now, let no man say, "I am a poor dry tree; there is no power in me; I wish I could have it; what I came to Keswick to seek was power." What do you want the power for, and what do you think is meant by power? If I am to judge by the kindly-meant revelations of feeling which so many are good enough to give to ministers or speakers, I should say that most of those who come here for the first time are buoyed up through their long, weary journey, and through the first day or two of their experiences here, with the hope of feeling a little better. They squeeze their hearts and begin to feel a little better. They say, "I feel something come now. Go on, Mr. Peploe, I feel better now." They go to a meeting to pray, as one man actually told me, for physical manifestations of the Holy Ghost. I do not wish to go against doctrines or teachings of any brother more than I need to, but I say boldly and humbly that the man who teaches you to expect in any meeting what he calls Pentecostal manifestations, which are, as it were, to become physical revelations, is directly of the Gospel of God which is given us in Christ Jesus; for it is a spiritual, and not a physical or emotional Gospel. It is to be taken as a matter of knowledge, and belief, by the power of God the Holy Ghost.

Will you take it so? Because then we come to what I believe to be the possible and practical outcome of all this doctrine. I do not know whether I have yet made it quite clear that you are to take God's Word to-day, and say, "That is all true; I am"—not "I shall be"—"in Christ Jesus. I am possessed of all the power of God. I am what Christ is, and where Christ is, though it is yet only in the Spirit for me. But it ought to affect every department of my life and being."

What wonder the Apostle turns round, after giving three chapters on doctrine about the Father, the Son, and the Spirit, and commences his practical exhortation in the fourth chapter with these words, "I, therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called." What is the vocation, and how does he apply it? It refers first, as you will observe, to the Church. We are to live as members of one body, as those who have one spirit, one aim; one life, one prospect for all eternity. We are one, and it is the unity of the body that is enforced by Paul as the first outcome of the acceptance of the doctrine that we are in the heavenly places. The second outcome is in our relation to the world, and in chapter iv. 17 he says we must never take offence, and that we must never hurt the world, but always be seeking to walk in love towards them and as children of the light, and circumspectly, as he goes on to tell us in the fifth chapter.

Then comes thirdly your relation to the family, v. 22. He puts every relation before you—wives, husbands, parents, children, masters, servants.

At last he comes to our relation to evil, and says in the 10th verse of the sixth chapter that we must take the whole armour of God, that we may be able to stand against the powers that are assaulting us. These adversaries assail us from beneath and not from above. Oh, blessed be God for these HEAVENLY PLACES OF THE GOSPEL!

Five times, as you know, the heavenly places are mentioned in this Epistle and nowhere else. Remember, when you come to deal with evil you should never begin on the low, cringing ground of earth, and try to fight upwards, for you cannot do it. You are in the heavens by God's grace, and He says we are to stand against the powers of evil in the heavenly places, and they fight upward to take our land. We have the land, and it is a grand thing to be in the fortress rather than to have to take the fortress; to be right up above the foe on the citadel top, instead of trying to scale the walls and be shot down one by one.

And now we have got to occupy our relations towards all creation, because we are in Christ Jesus, and have the exceeding greatness of his power. I believe that I have here with me on the platform a Baptist, a Friend, and a Congregationalist. If I have got into the heavenly places in Christ Jesus, I can actually love these men, because they belong to my Lord. I can get hold of any brother, belonging to any denomination whatever, and love him. This is one of the grandest proofs that we belong to God at all—that we love the brethren, because all belong to Christ. That is going a long way, I can assure you, for I should hate you like fun if I did not know that you are in Christ. The fact is, you are part of me and I am part of you, and it is not very pleasant to hurt oneself. I next look at the world and walk in love towards them. I love the world itself because Christ is in me. So I go out to win them.

Then if you are in Christ Jesus, and this effectual power is working as it ought to be, husbands will really love their wives, and the wives will really love their husbands, and be gentle. Ah! it is not so common. If Christ were really working in you there would not be divided households. I do not know how many children there are here, but they would not say as so many do to-day, "I am going to that church, you may go to the other"; "I am going to the party to-night—where are you going?" That is the kind of life lived by very many in London to-day between parents and children. Father goes here, mother there, and child there. The family life will be touched practically when you learn what it is to have Christ in you, and to be in Christ.

And lastly, we need never fear devils or their angels in one sense at all. We are to stand strong in the Lord and in the power of his might, and to be more than conquerors over all our foes. We are to fight this good fight of faith from above, and to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked one. Why? Because we have the shield of faith. To us-ward who believe the exceeding greatness of his power is meant to be shown. I challenge you humbly before God to say how much power you are willing to take, and then go out and let it be lived through you to the glory of God.

WEAKNESS MADE STRENGTH.

By Rev. JOHN SLOAN.

(Eph. iii. 14 to end.)

Christians are sometimes afraid to step out lest they may not be able to "keep it up." My friend, you cannot keep it up one moment. It is folly to try. You have but to remember your weakness. It is possible for you to live the life of faith up to the measure in which you receive the strength of the Holy Ghost.

The prayer here is not for power alone, but for a definite purpose—it is that Christ may dwell in the inner man. Just imagine what it is to walk through a world that not only hated, but crucified the Son of God, and for Him to return to that world in you. In proportion as you have Christ in you, so the world will treat you as it treated Him. But here is power for each of you, to be strengthened with might, according to the riches of his glory.

Your weakness is ordained of God. He made you so; if anyone is to be blamed for it, it is God. Don't make it your excuse. The thing is that you are not weak enough. There is no strength that will avail but that which comes of your trusting God's holy Spirit to strengthen you.

It is not to follow the plans you have marked out for yourself; it is to let God carry out in you the plans which He has found for you.

Christ dwells not by feeling. I remember the day when I waited for the entry of the Holy Ghost, when I waited for the entry of the King, when I did not believe that He stood at the door and knocked. I lost years by this, years that are now forgiven, but which will never be recovered. May God save you from that. You may not hear the knocking, but you know He is there. Say: "Lord, I believe Thou art there. Oh! come in." Without that opening of the door He will not enter. He will not force a way in, but the devil will by any way he can secure.

The Lord does not wait for your heart to be ready. There never yet was a ready heart till He had cleansed it. The heart that is really belonging to the Lord, but is not given to his keeping, is even worse than the unregenerate heart. You cannot do anything but let Jesus in. He will cleanse it, He will keep it. Say to Him, "Lord, Thou hast promised to come in, do so now."

How bad you feel to-day! You know you have had more bad thoughts than ever you had. The devil will fill your mind with evil suggestions, but thoughts of evil are not always evil thoughts; only the devil's suggestions. When they come, just trust to Jesus to turn them away.

Suppose that you have received the Lord Jesus Christ. I trust that some of you have ventured in your weakness to throw yourselves on His almighty strength, now, while those beside you little thought it. What joy if you have! Then remember that though the Lord does not promise to save you from temptation, He promises to be with you in temptation. Every trial will be lighter, every sorrow less bitter, because you have His strength; and all things shall work together for your good.

Then, being grounded in love, your bodies become His temple, and the indwelling Christ will teach you of His love, of which with all saints you may learn the height, the depth, the length, and the breadth. This Convention is a foretaste of that which is to come. There is a great deal in the communion of saints.

We shall never get to the end of that love. It seems to me that we are to come into the very centre of it, for we are to know the height as well as the depth, though still it passeth knowledge.

What a delight flowed into my mind when I realised that the joy of heaven would not be only a growth in knowledge, but that it would be also an increase of love. Much study is a weariness to the flesh. Much love is not.

If anyone is troubled about their peculiar circumstances, their special need, here is the promise of God—all the fulness of the infinite God given to us who receive his Son. Of course, not all of us together could contain all his fulness, but as a tiny cup is dipped in the ocean, and completely filled by the water it cannot contain, so we may be filled with all his fulness. He is able to do exceedingly more abundantly than anything that we can ever hope for.

CHRIST'S THREE COMINGS.

By Rev. C. A. FOX.

Notes of a Sermon in St. John's Church.

First, as a Son Christ came to his Temple, as recorded in Luke ii., when twelve years of age. Note the early decision and recognition of God's claims upon Him: "I must be about my Father's business." From this resulted an inward isolation, and He tarried behind. Outsiders understood not; they never will understand the things of God. We, too, must expect to be misunderstood.

Christ's first recorded utterance is in consequence of a mother's reproach. After this He was subject to those whom God had set over Him. The business of our Heavenly Father does not interfere with daily duties. Joseph and Mary had thought Christ was with them when He was not. Let us make his presence in the company sure.

Secondly, Christ came as a Priest to his Temple (John ii. 13). We, too, are priests, but there is a danger lest the responsibility and glory of the priesthood should dazzle our eyes. Christ must come in as Master, for, though priests, we are God's bond-servants. Christ must be recognised as Master at the beginning of the Christian life, to cleanse and to cast out. The things He cast out of his Temple were good enough, but were in the wrong place. Even the harmless dove had to go with the rest. Everything not consecrated must be cast out when Christ comes as priest. Coming in, casting out and consecration are all equally necessary. Real consecration means being consumed by the Holy Ghost, all dross burnt up, eaten up.

Thirdly, Christ came as King to his Temple (see Luke xix. 33, etc.). As King He claims the humblest and the smallest thing, even the colt of an ass. Christ demands everything: ourselves. Verse 38 of this chapter comes at last as the response to the song of the angels. The prophecy of verse 40 has been and is being fulfilled around us. Israel has been silent, and the stony hearts of the heathen are crying out instead. England was at that time heathen. Uganda is so still, but already that too is lifting up its voice. When Christ's triumph came it was a burst of tears (verse 41). Shall ours be otherwise? We say, "if Christ came," but Christ is here, though hid from the eyes of the multitude, Are we each of us ready to cry with full hearts, "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord"? Be ye ready.

RIPENING.

The heath-bells swinging in the breeze,
The laverock singing clear,
Salute the flower-born fruits of earth,
The children of the year.

Kissed by the warm lips of July,
The berries in their bed,
The apples in their bower of green
Are blushing ripe and red.

Earth's countless eyes delighted gaze
Across the sunny land,
Laden with gifts of earth and sky,
The harvest wealth at hand.

The reapers wait beside the field—
Yet nearer still may be
A harvester with sickle sharp
To gather you or me.

Life's chequered spring, its summer days,
With breath of life divine,
Have ripened many a soul for heaven·
But what of yours and mine?

That sun which makes the living bud
In blossoms soonest spread,
Will soonest turn the broken spray
To ashes of the dead.

What time, O Lord, the reaper comes
To sever earth and me,
May I be found, whate'er the fruit,
A living branch in Thee.

Hark! music, as from far-off seas,
Or heaven's distant dome,
From saints and angels as they bear
The fruits of Jesus home.

VICE AND OPIUM IN THE EAST.

RETURN OF MRS. ANDREW AND DR. KATE BUSHNELL.

These two devoted and heroic Christian women are again in this country, after another trip round the world in the interests of individual, social, and national morality. Since last they were in England they have spent a considerable time in the Orient, having carried on their inquiries in Japan, China, Hong Kong, and the Straits Settlements, and having revisited India.

After such arduous labours it is necessary they should give some time to absolute rest, before recommencing public work. About the middle of October, however, they hope to begin a campaign of enlightenment, by addressing mass meetings in the large centres of population throughout Great Britain. There is much need that the public mind should be informed more fully as to the true state of affairs, socially and morally, in our Indian dependency, in the British Colonies of the far East, and in the great nations of China and Japan, with which we are in many respects closely allied. These two ladies are in the best possible position for throwing light on questions, dark and forbidding enough in themselves, but needing to be unveiled; for they can speak of what they have seen and heard; their evidence cannot be gainsaid.

During their sojourn in the East our sisters have been busy enough. They addressed meetings in the interests of the World Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and visited branches of the Union, seeking to arouse fresh zeal in the cause of purity and temperance, and to strengthen all efforts made for combating the evils of the liquor traffic. As closely allied with these objects they also made personal inquiries into the moral conditions prevailing in the East, with special reference to our Crown Colonies at Hong Kong and the Straits Settlements.

It may be not known to our readers that the authorities in these regions are showing anything but alacrity in carrying out the instructions of the Imperial Government as to the abolition of the C.D. ordinances in force. Anyone who doubts this should peruse the Parliamentary paper "C.D. Ordinances, Colonies," ordered by the House of Commons, on June 5, 1894, to be printed. (Eyre & Spottiswoode. 6d.)

We acknowledge with pleasure the earnestness and determination to do away with the vicious system of regulation exhibited in this official correspondence by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, the Marquis of Ripon, and could only wish that the Colonial authorities were equally in earnest. Lord Ripon in his latest despatches printed here, which are dated in April last, hints that the suppression and not the regulation of evil houses should be aimed at.

The opium question also received much attention from these two ladies during their Eastern tour of visitation, particularly in Singapore and Hong Kong. They likewise visited Canton, various places on the Yangtse river, and Northern China. They took steps to get at the real facts by visiting opium dens of all grades, and having personal communication with the unhappy victims of the vice. As Dr. Bushnell was at one time engaged in medical work in Kiu-Kiang, she was the better able to understand the bearings of the question, and to get into close touch with the people.

The conviction which she and her co-worker bring away from their quest is that the opium habit is an unmitigated curse; and admitted to be so by all sections of the people. Even the keepers of the dens allowed that it is a bad business, and would not say a word in its favour. As to our national responsibility for the state of matters in China, it is instructive to learn from these sisters that the Chinese everywhere regard the drug as an imported article; they describe it as "foreign smoke." In one place the visitors were requested to "go home and tell them to stop sending it." And clearly that is what we as a nation ought to do, if we have any respect whatever for the righteousness which alone can exalt us in the eyes of God or man.

IF THE STATE does not soon control the liquor-traffic, the liquor-traffic will soon control the State.—Lord Rosebery.

THE ORGANISATION DEPARTMENT of the B.W.T.A. reports 300 new branches formed during the past year. Within the last two months twenty-five new branches have been started.

IN A GRINDELWALD FOREST.

(From a Correspondent.)

A footpath up a steep mountain slope above the village leads into an old pine forest. The glades are richly covered with Alpine flowers of varied forms and colours. As I wandered on, I heard distant voices blending in sacred song. Presently I came to a group of people within a natural circle of trees, some seated on benches, the most part reposing on the turf, beneath the pleasant shade of the pines. Dr. Lunn announced another hymn, which all rose to sing, when prayer was offered to the God of mountain and forest, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.

What a lovely and glorious scene! The stupendous mass of the Wetterhorn, the rugged precipices of the Eiger, the great snowfields above, and the glaciers streaming down to the valley, all in their way praising God; and we, a little group of men and women, minute atoms in apparent contrast, but each one greater than they all, lifting heart and voice to Him who made them all.

Rev. Professor Lindsay, of Glasgow, preached from the words, "He shall make the place of his feet glorious." In clear, quiet, thoughtful tones, without notes, he illustrated his theme by various incidents in our Saviour's life. In eastern lands, the place where the feet of rulers rest is considered glorious—the footstool of the throne, the decorated carpet of prayer. The place of Christ's feet at the well was the hot dusty pathway; but how glorious by the sympathy shown with the woman, and the winning of her heart to God. The place of his feet on the cross, within some eighteen inches only from the ground, while he was stared upon with insult, was glorious by the redemption there effected for the world. The earth itself, on which his feet trod, was made glorious thereby; but how glorious it will be made to the eyes of all when He comes again in majesty. The address was marvellously graphic and tender in its presentation of Christ in his human sympathy. We felt that the place of the Creator's feet on those great mountains was not so glorious as that pine-encircled sward by the proclamation of the Saviour, by praise and prayer in his name, and by the real presence of Himself.

The following Sunday afternoon, July 29, a similar service was held in the same "temple not made with hands." After singing, Dr. Glover, of Bristol, offered prayer. Dr. Newman Hall preached from, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of the Lord Jesus Christ." He lamented that this chief theme of the Gospel should be questioned in some Christian pulpits, and be kept in the background in many others. Paul gloried in it because by it we are delivered from the condemnation and penalty of sin, and also from its ruling power. To the Romans he said, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ"; to the Corinthians, "We preach Christ crucified." He gloried in it, because by it we obtain remission of sins, and also victory over sin itself; because it reveals both God's righteousness and his love. The world, tempting Paul to self-glorification by concealing what gave offence, became to the Apostle by the Cross a crucified thing, dead, worthless; and he, Paul, was to the world but as one crucified; there was no affinity between them. Paul was delivered from the world; he cared nothing for its smiles or its frowns. So the world of money-getting, of self-indulgence, of frivolous and perilous pleasure, is the great foe to religion in the present day; but by faith in Christ, to those who are dead with Christ, new creatures, born from above, the world is but as a crucified thing; and so Christians glory in that whereby their chief foe is conquered.

Many who visit Switzerland glory in conquering great mountains. Let them still more glory in climbing the hill of the Lord. What grand views it commands, what spiritual health it gives! No avalanches, crevasses or tempests put in peril those who climb this mount of God. The hand of an unerring, unfailing Guide holds them safely. The Cross of Christ is their beacon from the mountain top—their encouragement all along the way. Let what the preacher saw on a Swiss tomb "Spes unica mea Crux" be theirs. Then all along the road, and at last in heaven, the Cross will be our glory, as it is to saints and angels. "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive honour and power and glory." After these services collections were taken, to be divided equally between the poor of the village and the parish pastor, who kindly allowed them the use of the church every evening, and whose salary is very small.

In the evening, after prayer by Dr. Newman Hall, and the reading of Scripture by the Dean of Armagh, Dr. Lunn delivered an admirable discourse on the union of Christendom. He said that difference of judgment on secondary topics, when held in charity to others, was not schism; difference held to the exclusion of others was. Each portion of the Church had conserved and proclaimed some special truth, and aided to construct the One Temple of God. Our object should be to manifest and utilise the true unity already existing.

CHINA AND OPIUM.

Dear Sir,—My visit to China, after accompanying the Opium Commission round India, there to "watch the case," as the legal phrase goes, on behalf of the Anti-Opium party, was determined on for several reasons, which have been abundantly justified by the result. It was thought desirable that I should be in direct communication with the missionaries, native Christians, and others interested in the question in China, so far as a visit to some of the principal treaty ports and to the capital might enable me to do so.

This object has been accomplished, and I can say, after having met with scores of missionaries and with many hundreds of Chinese Christians, that they are absolutely at one in desiring the stoppage of the opium traffic as one of the greatest curses that afflict China. I have heard of one medical gentleman on the staff of the American Mission—though I understand that he himself rather disclaims the title of medical missionary—who, on the strength of a year's residence in the country, has sent home answers to the questions issued by the Opium Commission, of a character contrary to our views. So far as I know, he is the only man amongst a thousand or more Protestant missionaries in China who defends the opium habit. I have had the warm sympathy, and been assured of the constant prayers, of not a few American and German brethren, who heartily sympathise with the desire of British Christians to wipe out the national stain that rests upon a country which raises a revenue for a subject empire by trading on the degradation and misery of China; though the fact that they have no national share in the responsibility indisposes them to sign public declarations regarding it.

To the Chinese Christians it has come as good news indeed that they have brethren in the far-off land that is chiefly responsible for the spread of their national curse, who are struggling, praying, and believing that ere long the unrighteous traffic will be stopped, and their own rulers left free to stamp out the evil by putting down the poppy growth at home. It has been to these, as I was more than once assured, a fresh revelation of the oneness of Christian believers all the world over, to hear of the personal sacrifices made, the large sums of money raised, and the strenuous efforts put forth in order to rid China of her giant vice. And the spirit of prayer has been called forth in themselves. At a crowded meeting of native Christians held at Tientsin, when I was on my way up to Peking, a missionary asked those who would engage daily to remember my mission in prayer to hold up the hand, and almost every hand was immediately raised. When I returned, the missionary with whom I then stayed told me that the promise had been well kept; in the various prayer-meetings that he had attended the subject had been repeatedly mentioned at the Throne of Grace, and his own cook had not once omitted it at daily family prayers.

My chief object, however, in visiting China was to obtain interviews with the leading statesmen of China in order to ascertain direct from themselves whether there was any truth in the statements, continually made by the defenders of the opium revenue, that the Chinese Government is now quite content to let the traffic go on, since the last treaty arrangement between the two countries, that of 1885, has given to China a very substantial share of the profits derived from the import of Indian opium into China. When questioned on the subject by the Commission at Calcutta, I was unable to quote any recent authoritative declaration showing that the Government of China is still as hostile as formerly to the opium trade. I have for some years felt this to be a weak joint in our armour, and I felt it essential to get at the truth on this matter, even at the risk of finding that there might be some ground for the statements I have referred to. In answer to many prayers for guidance, my way was clearly opened to go, my wife willingly consenting to the needful prolongation of my absence from home and children—the whole journey has involved an absence of over nine months—that I might follow what we believed to be the Lord's call.

Thankfully do I acknowledge that I have afresh proved that He does not call his people to labour in vain, or to spend their strength for nought. You, dear sir, have lately taken the lead in inviting those who have seen the good hand of our God upon his churches since the revival of 1859, to join in rendering to Him the praise that to Him belongs. From far Cathay my heart responded to the appeal when first I read it, for I, too, have precious memories connected with those times.

In the same spirit I desire to testify that God has answered the prayers of those who have upheld me on this errand to the rulers of China. I have been received at Peking by one of the Ministers of the Tsung-li-Yamen, or Foreign Board, of China, the body which, under the constitution of the Chinese Government, has the charge of all foreign relations. Speaking as official representative of the Board, he assured me that the Government of China is just as much opposed to the opium trade as ever it was; that it considers itself bound to admit opium by its treaty engagements with Great Britain; that it dares not close its ports to Indian opium, lest it should bring on another opium war; and that we can best help China in the matter by persuading our Government to stop the export of opium from India to China.

Subsequently I saw at Tientsin the famous Li Hung-Chang, one of the Grand Secretaries of China, and Viceroy of the metropolitan province. This great statesman, the friend of General Gordon, who has not inaptly been termed the Chinese Bismarck, held precisely the same views as the Minister at Peking on the points dealt with by the latter. He further gave me an emphatic assurance that if England would cease sending poison to China from India, the Chinese Government would certainly proceed to prevent its own people from providing the poison for themselves.

Next, probably, to Li Hung-Chang in his hold on the Chinese people, though decidedly inferior to him in influence with the Government at Peking, is Chang Chih-Tung, Viceroy of Hu-peh and Hu-nan, who is generally looked upon as a bitter opponent of foreigners, though, like Li Hung-Chang, he is very ready to avail himself of their superior scientific acquirements. Before going to Peking I obtained an interview with the able mandarin, himself an accomplished linguist, who acts as the Viceroy's intermediary in communications with foreigners, and the result was a written communication stating the Viceroy's entire concurrence in our views, expressing the opinion that to stop the import of opium from India would be the first step towards enabling China to put down the evil, and promising to support our aims if his advice were sought by the Imperial Government.

Thus the authorised representative of the Chinese Government and the two most influential provincial Governors have all formulated the demand that the Indian opium import be stopped, without one word about the revenue they would thus lose being said by any of them. What better proof of sincerity could be asked for? When will British and Indian statesmen learn to treat the question of the legitimacy of the opium trade as a purely moral one, with which revenue considerations ought to have no concern whatever?

I cannot but hope that these declarations of the highest authorities in China, except the Emperor himself, will have a decisive effect on the settlement of this question, which has already remained unsettled far too long for our national reputation. The representatives of both the last and the present Governments—I treat Lord Rosebery's as but a continuation of Mr. Gladstone's—have explicitly declared in Parliament that they do not desire to put any compulsion on China to accept opium from India. Were these declarations sincere? If they were, the leaders of both political parties will concur in granting to China the freedom she now asks for. If they fail to take this course, the Christian people of the United Kingdom will surely make them understand, by an unmistakable and irresistible pronouncement of public opinion, that they will be held to their word.—Yours very truly,

J. G. Alexander,
Hon. Sec. Society for the Suppression

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 12.—EZEKIEL XLIII.

The Return of Jehovah (1-5).—By the east gate the glory of God had departed, and by it, it returned (xi. 22, 23). Let us return to God, and put away that which had grieved Him, and He will come again to us. This comparison for the voice of God is used of Jesus Christ (Rev. i. 15). It is He of whom this vision speaks. When He comes to the soul, his voice fills it, and his glory illumines. (3) The prophet says he did what he predicted would be done. Sometimes our errands are for destruction and death, but on whatever errand we are sent, we may count on seeing the glory of God (2 Cor. ii. 14). (5) The Spirit of Christ must take us up before we can see Him as He is. Our prospect is always towards the past, where the morning star is shining.

The Resolve of Jehovah (6-11).—In these gracious words the Almighty Saviour declares his resolution to dwell amongst his people. His presence is determined by the putting away of uncleanness. The carcases of the kings may refer to the idols who were set up in close proximity of the temple, and ruled men's hearts thence (2 Kings xxi. 4, 5). (9) There is no limit to the dwelling of God with his people, it is for ever. (10) We should bear well in mind God's pattern; his ideal for our lives; his infinite love; his demands for the maintenance of worship; then shall we see and abhor our failures and shortcomings.

The Reconstructed Altar (12-27).—The opening words should be the law of every house. Its whole limit and contents being holy unto the Lord, that He might dwell in it, its protection by day, its glory by night. (13) "Bottom" might better be rendered "hollow," perhaps the place where the fire was inserted. (14) "Settle" should be "ledge." (15) Two words are used here of the altar. The first "harel," high; the second "ariel," lion. Probably it stood aloft, and lions were carved on it, near where the horns issued. (17) The back of the priests would be toward the east, making sun-worship impossible. (18) The ordinances here insisted upon are very minute, more so than in Exodus xxix. We cannot take them in the literal sense, and we must await the further unfolding of their meaning. (27) God does accept us in Jesus Christ, when our hearts are surrendered as sacrifices to Him (Rom. xii. 1; 1 Pet. ii. 5).

MONDAY, AUGUST 13.—EZEKIEL XLIV.

The Gate for the Prince (1-3).—These verses belong to the previous chapter. The gate was closed because the Almighty Inmate had entered, to go out no more. The door of our heart may be closed only when God is within. The reference to the "Prince" must surely be to our Lord. To Him alone belongs the right to enter by the path of Deity. He only of the children of men may enter by his own right into the presence of God.

The Prohibition of Unsuitable Temple Service (4-14).—The new Temple would be characterised by a new service. Not only were all foreigners and strangers to be carefully put away lest they might pollute the house, but those of priestly rank who had acted unworthily of their high office were to be equally prohibited. (9) In this verse we see the distinction, of which the Apostle Paul makes much, between the outward ceremonial and the inward disposition. Uncircumcision of heart is as fatal in these days as of body in those. (11) Though the Levites were degraded from the higher offices because of their unfaithfulness, there was still a sphere which they might occupy. Here is another instance of God's willingness to do the best He can for us; if not the best, through our folly, then the next best.

The Consecration of the Priests (15-31).—The line of Ithamar had forfeited the priesthood, partly because of the sins of Eli's sons, and partly because they sided with Adonijah, who attempted the throne, outside the line of royal descent (1 Sam. ii. 35, 1 Kings i. 7, ii. 26, 27). The line of Zadok was substituted. (16) O that we might realise this fair description! God's ideal for all his saints. (17) Wool was prohibited for the reason given in the following verse. (18) There should be as little of the energy of the flesh in our priestly service, nor should there be anything effeminate or artificial. (21) Neither should we seek stimulus of wine, since the Holy Spirit will kindle the flame in our hearts. (22) Our most intimate relationships should be emblematic of the inward purity. (23) All our life should set forth in its most pleasing forms the beauty of holiness. (28) God is our inheritance and our possession. If we give ourselves to Him, we may reckon on his supplying all our need.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 14.—EZEKIEL XLV.

The Allotment of the Land (1-8.)—The word translated oblation means to heave, because the offerings were heaved before the Lord. A certain portion of land, fifty-six miles square, was to be reserved for the sanctuary of the priests' dwellings. (5) A similar proportion for the Levites. (6) Half as much for the Holy City and its dependencies. (7) The prince's part on either side of the sacred territory would be to preserve and maintain it. And thus there would be no need for oppression or wrongdoing on his part. How much evil may be stayed by making proper provision.

The Regulation as to Gifts to the Prince (9-17).—Further to prevent extortion and oppression, regulations are here made as to the measures to be employed, and the tribute to be given for the maintenance of the prince. The precise reference of these injunctions is bidden from us. We may perhaps learn the lesson of proportionate giving. Nothing should be left to caprice or chance. Our gifts to the service of God should be regulated with as much care as our compulsory payments to the maintenance of our national institutions.

The Prince's Duty in Respect to Sacrifice (18-25).—"Thou" is addressed to him. He was enjoined to maintain the sacrifice for the sins of ignorance on the seventh day of each month, for those that erred and the sinful. It is a precious thought of the ministry of Christ, who perpetually pleads for us in like manner. Those who are first in position have most responsibility, and it was on Jesus our Prince that the provision of the sin-offering lay.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15.—EZEKIEL XLVI.

Regulations as to the Gate (1-3).—Opened only once a week, and then used by the prince, it perhaps suggests the lesson of reserving special times for religious exercises.

The Offering for the Sabbath (4-7).—These offerings of the prince on the Sabbath were to be much larger than under the Mosaic law, and the significant phrase, "as he shall be able to give" is added, which anticipates the words of the Apostle, "Everyone shall give according to his several ability!" God does not ask for more, and will not be content with less.

The Ingress and Egress (8-10).—God's service must be maintained in perfect order and decorum. The stream of worshippers entering by the northern gate was to pass out by the south, and vice versâ. There would be no crowding or collision. It is very delightful to know that when we go out or in, our Prince and Shepherd goes beside us. We need Him when we rest, equally as when we work, and we never go forth to any duty without being able to count upon Him (John x. 9).

Directions as to Offerings (11-15).—We should sometimes prepare voluntary gifts for God, as especial evidence of love. (13) In the early morning worship, we should combine the meat offering and the burnt offering, the one for nourishment the other as an act of consecration.

The Prince's Inheritance (16-18).—At the year of jubilee whatever he had given away returned to him, thus his patrimony was not impoverished. The mention of sons appears contrary to the suggestion of Christ being the prince, but in the fullest sense, each priest and king in the Jewish state was intended to set forth some attribute of our Lord.

The Priests' Food (19-24).—Great care had to be exercised in the preparation of the priests' food. The apartments in the inner court were reserved for the flesh of the sin-offerings, and those in the outer ones for those of the peace-offerings in which the people joined with them. (24) The boiling was a sacred work undertaken by the ministers of the House, by which we are taught to do the meanest things for the glory of God.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 16.—EZEKIEL XLVII.

The Life-giving Stream (1-6).—The influence of the restored Israel in this beautiful parable is compared to a life-giving stream issuing from the dwelling-place of God. In its secondary meaning it may be applied to the work of the Church, or to the life of the individual. When the waters of life rise within the heart they flow out, as our Lord promised, in ever-deepening, widening rivers (John iv. 14; vii. 37, 39). The direction was eastward, because there lay the sea of death. It is necessary that our influence be shed where it is needed most. The ankles, taken spiritually, are steps, the knees are prayers, the loins our affections and passions. There should be a perpetual deepening of our influence, whether as individuals or as communities. In every life there should be the unfathomable depth of fellowship with God, "a river that cannot be passed."

Its Effects (7-12).—Life brings life. Note the contrast of this description. Not one tree of life, but many; no longer waters of death, the Dead Sea, but of life; no longer the monotony of death, but the plentifulness of living creatures; no longer the marsh and the miry place, but preserving and purifying salt; the shores of the Dead Sea no longer deserted, but thronged with fishermen. In this vision is meat for food, medicine for disease, fertility and beauty for the eye, satisfaction for the heart.

The Division of the Land (13-20).—The boundaries here given are precisely those of ancient Canaan. Here, as always, careful provision is made for the stranger, but in this case the provision is even larger than before, for they were to have inheritance among the tribes. In anticipation of the words of St. Paul, the Gentiles are welcomed as fellow-citizens with the saints (Eph. ii. 19).

FRIDAY, AUGUST 17.—EZEKIEL XLVIII.

The Allotment of the Land amongst the Tribes Continued (1-35).—This division is determined by the settlement of the large sacred territory for the service of God, the position of the tribes with respect to it being in proportion to their respective faithfulness, Judah being on the immediate north, Benjamin on the south, and the rest being divided by parallel lines running east and west. (2) Dan on the extreme north, because it had been unfaithful to the temple service, Asher not left out, though it had done little of note. Then in order, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, Judah. How much may not our proximity to the throne hereafter be determined by our faithfulness here?

In this division, the holy oblation, that is, the consecrated land already described (xlv. 1-7), is again referred to (8-22), with a few further particulars; that for instance of the sons of Zadok, which "went not astray," indicating the reason of their selection (11); and that about their holding their land under restrictions because it was not their property but the Lord's; and that of the profane place for the city, that is for common use (15). We are also arrested by the significant provision about serving the city, the labour being divided amongst all the tribes of Israel, and indicating the duty of all doing what they can for the good of the city.

Benjamin to the south, Simeon, Issachar, Gad. Thus Gad's position is reversed from north to south.

The twelve gates of the city (30-35) remind us of the vision of the New Jerusalem, each gate bears the name of a tribe. No soul is omitted in God's enumeration of his people, however weak and unworthy. The name of the city is very suggestive. We have met it before (xxx. 10). God was present in the one case to defend, and in the other to fill with his own glory and beauty. Happy is the heart which is conscious of the presence of this Almighty occupant, equally so is the church in the midst of which He is, whose presence is salvation.

SATURDAY, AUGUST 18.—DANIEL I.

Carried to Babylon (1-7).—The discrepancy between the statement of the first verse and that of Jeremiah xxv. is explained by the probability of Nabopolassar having taken his son into association with him before his death. This was the first captivity of Judah. It was the policy of the kings of Babylon to take the flower of the youth of subjugated nations as hostages, and with a view of training them for high office and service. (3) Daniel and his friends were of high rank, and, according to Josephus, related to Zedekiah. (4) They had already given signs of genius, such as to warrant further training. (7) As in Joseph's case, the names were more or less connected with heathen deities, as Bel, Rak, Shak, the gods of the sun, earth, and fire.

A Noble Protest (8-21).—The food was probably forbidden by the Mosaic law (Lev. iii. 17); or it may have been offered to idols (1 Cor. viii.). In any case, for them to eat it would have been sin. (10) Obviously, their custodian might well fear the charge of peculation if it should appear that he had appropriated for his own use provisions intended for his young charge. (15) This simple diet in itself would increase physical and intellectual vigour, but in the present case these natural results were supplemented by the interposition of God, who first gave the young men favour with Melzar, and then gave them unusual beauty and health. (17) And, in addition, endowed them with supernatural gifts, which were in great requisition at the court of Babylon. The blessing of God on a man's life does for him what no amount of abstinence or industry would accomplish. It makes rich, and adds no sorrow. It gives favour, health, grace. (19) The king probably examined the young men, and the Hebrew youths were selected to attend him personally. In their promotion we see the hand of God, who was thus raising up a tower of strength for his people. It is thus that He still provides helpers for us. (21) Oh, for the grace of continuance! It is not enough to begin life for God; many who have done so have yet failed in the race. Let us seek for grace to be steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. F. B. M.

BUCHAREST.—Rev. J. Mühlenbruch, writing from Bucharest, says:—"I had the privilege of receiving two young Israelites into the Church of Christ by the rite of holy baptism. I have known them for some time as earnest inquirers, one for about two years. They have always given great satisfaction, especially during the last few months, when they almost daily received Christian instruction. The Mission Church was crowded with Jews and Jewesses, who followed the service and listened very attentively."

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, AUGUST 19.

First Disciple of Jesus, Jno. i. 35-49.

Golden Text.—Verse 41.

Bethabara (28), or Bethany, as in R. V., cannot now be discovered. Since the Roman war its very name has been blotted out. It was probably a village on the east of Jordan, opposite Jericho, near to one of the fords. The name Bethany means boat-house; Bethabara, ferry-house or ford-house. See Judges vii. 24. Here Jesus came to John when He left the wilderness of temptation.

Andrew and John (35-39).—Andrew is named in ver. 40. John, according to his usual custom, does not mention his own name. Both were disciples of John the Baptist (35). In this way the prophetic word was fulfilled (23). Preaching was the first thing that led these two to follow Jesus (36). The sermon was very brief, yet it was all about Christ; it presented him as the atoning Lamb, and it turned the attention of the hearers from the preacher to Christ Himself. A similar sermon had been preached the previous day (29) without any such result. Tell the story again, if at first it has not been received. Preaching led to their following Jesus (37). John would count such preaching successful. Two more for Christ meant two less for him, but he gladly consented to self-effacement that Christ might be honoured (Jno. iii. 30). It is this spirit that all servants should manifest, and that God never fails to honour. They followed as enquirers (38). John writes for a Greek public, and therefore interprets the Hebrew word. The very name "Master" carried with it a suggestion of their readiness to learn of Him as disciples. Where He abode at the time we cannot know; but their conversation left no trace of doubt as to the Messiahship of Jesus (41). It was not the mere formation of an intellectual conviction, but the satisfaction of a deep-felt need of the heart. Hence the exuberant joy with which they went from his presence. "The tenth hour," according to Jewish reckoning, would be about four in the afternoon; according to Roman reckoning, about ten in the morning. The former is the more probable here. Do not overlook the deep significance of the two questions. First, that of Jesus, "What seek ye?" The answer to which determines what a man's life is. Second, that of the disciples, "Where dwellest Thou?" The answers to this are found in John xiv. 23; Rev. xxi.

Peter (40-42).—The story reminds us that when one knows Christ he should seek to make Him known to others; that our first duty is toward those of our own family; that the best way of winning them is by bearing personal testimony of what Christ is to us; and that we should follow our testimony by an effort to bring them to Jesus. What great result may follow from the faithful testimony of those who have but slender gift. The great preacher Peter was won by his obscure brother Andrew. Squire Brook, who did so good a work among the Methodists, was won from a life of worldliness by the faithfulness of a Primitive Methodist preacher, who said to him, "Master, you are seeking happiness where you will never find it." Mr. Spurgeon was led into the light he longed for by a local preacher's message. The change of name (42) proved our Lord's perfect knowledge of what Peter was, and what he would become (Matt. xvi. 18).

Philip and Nathanael (43-49).—The journey to Galilee (43) was about to commence when these two were added to the list of disciples. Of Philip nothing is known as to his after history. Tradition mentions that he laboured in Phrygia. We must distinguish between him and Philip the Evangelist in Acts viii. Bethsaida (44) was on the western shore of the Lake of Galilee. Nathanael belonged to Cana (xxi. 2), a neighbouring town, to which Jesus was journeying (ii. 1). He is supposed to be the same as Bartholomew in the list of the apostles. Nathanael was won by Philip (45) through an imperfect testimony. Jesus was not actually of Nazareth, but of Bethlehem, and was only the reputed son of Joseph. The defect in his message gave occasion to the prejudice of Nathanael (46). Be careful to tell the message truly. The objections of some men against Christianity are, in fact, against the mistake of those who profess to teach it. The words of Jesus (47, 48) reveal to us Nathanael's beautiful character. He was guileless—unlike Jacob, but like Israel; devout and prayerful—under the fig-tree was his place of prayer; not bigoted in his prejudices, but ready to receive evidence, and willing to recognise and confess both the Divinity and the Messiahship of Jesus.

Note (1) All these disciples were alike in their contact with Jesus. That is common to all. (2) But all came to Jesus in different ways. Some after hearing Christ begin to seek Him, as Andrew and John; others, like Peter, are brought to Christ by those who have already found Him: some are found by Christ Himself, and called by a peremptory command, like Philip; and others come with doubts, which contact with Him removes. ## CHILDREN AND MISSIONS.

Kathleen Band (Lilies).

We, too, would wear unspotted
The garments of the King—
Would have the royal perfume
About our paths to cling.
And unto all beholders
A lilied beauty bring.—M. E. Sangster.

Miss A. R. Butler has issued once more her chatty little report of the Children's Auxiliary of the Medical Missionary Association, which tells of loving service, and of not a few led (when riper grown) to give themselves to mission work. The various branches, widely scattered over the land, have each a bright little notice in the following style:—

Our branch has flourished. I think the name is most suitable. I am sure I may say for one and all, their love is deeper at the close of the year. In watering my lilies I get watered myself.

Is not this a cheering verdict from the one who looks after the lilies? It is difficult even to summarise all the happy work carried on by these boys and girls. Yes, "boys," for the one "Tiger Lily" soon multiplied into a regular missionary club of "Tigers," aged from thirteen to nineteen. Each member abstains from smoke and drink, regularly attends Church and Bible class, belongs to the Scripture Union, takes in the Medical Mission magazine, collects for our Society, and tries to make at least one article monthly to send up to the Medical Mission House. These lads are regularly voted for and duly elected. The monthly social entertainments with which their effort began soon became a meeting for the study of mission work in different countries, and we look for yet further developments.

As to the girls, we can tell of work meetings, regularly sustained, of half an hour every day for Medical Mission sewing, of interest awakened at the seaside in their loved cause, and of two Bible Readings held or attended by them on Sunday afternoons. They, too, are total abstainers, members of the Scripture Union, holders of collecting cards and boxes, and subscribers to the magazine.

The Children's Secretary had a delightful double meeting with the lilies last winter—with the girls first, and then with the lads. They brought in their gifts, and looked at missionary curiosities. The time was all too short. They have sent up seven or eight parcels in the course of the year, and their generosity has in no wise affected other Mission work in which they were previously interested. Their leader writes:—

"I do ask your prayers that the young hearts may be wholly given to Jesus—He in the midst, exalted above every other—for, if done out of pure love to Jesus, there will be no bounds to their work."

If any of our young readers wish to write Miss Butler about this work her address is Medical Mission House, 49, Highbury-park, London, N.

THE CHILDREN OF THE VILLAGES.

Mr. Newton Jones has during the past three months been working under the auspices of the Village Aid Committee of the Sunday School Union, and has visited thirty-two villages (holding two services each night) each with a population of less than 1000. The idea has been to strengthen existing causes, and stimulate workers, besides uplifting the truth of the Cross as the only means of salvation from sin. The effort has been accompanied with marked results and abundant blessing. The difficulties and discouragements surrounding friends in these isolated spots are many. Berkshire, Essex, and Oxon were the three counties chosen.

Apart from the blessing one can be made through Divine grace, the good one receives by sitting down in the cottage or chimney-corner talking to Hodge on the good old truths, inspires one to stand by the old paths. Some thirty minutes in one spot were spent in the forge with the village blacksmith, who during the past quarter had preached twice every Sunday, travelling 150 miles, only riding to two appointments. He himself is an acceptable preacher, has paid a tutor to teach him Greek and Hebrew, and has now pupils training. This is done besides his daily toil. Often he is up two-thirds of the night preparing on his knees, and when asked why he had thus applied himself to study, replied, "That I may know Him, and the power of his resurrection."

It was good to sit with an aged pilgrim on another occasion in the chimney corner—a shepherd who had followed his vocation for forty odd years, and hear of the Good Shepherd's leading. To see him in the service was an inspiration. Heart and eyes were full, and when parting he said he could only do like the boy, cry, and say "Come again soon." The shepherd's voice to Him at all times is sweet. In each place visited the Gospel is going forth with no uncertain sound. What the friends need is outside sympathy, an occasional lift up by the visit of ministers, workers, friends of neighbouring towns. They are too much left to themselves. New causes are not required, nor new truths, but the strengthening of what now exists. There are many faithful ministers, superintendents, teachers, and others, who plod on through all months, weather and discouragements, who require more than lip sympathy, or even prayers, but practical help. What a delightful spot some of these places would be for a fourteen days' holiday! and yet on the Sunday the cheer to local friends would be great: the expense of apartments would be nominal, and the enjoyment to body and soul would be immense.

THE CHILDREN'S "CROWN HIM."

How good and pleasant are the sounds
When on the ear they fall,
"Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

Thus happy saints their tribute bring,
And thus their Lord extol—
"Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

And shall not children join the song,
The glad triumphal call—
"Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all"?

Yes, loving Him, they, too, can sing,
As ransom'd from the fall—
"Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown Him Lord of all."

Albert Midlane.

CHILDREN'S S.S. MISSION.—SEASIDE SERVICES.

The following are the arrangements for the Children's August Seaside Services:—Bridlington, H. Hutchinson, Aug. 7 to 31; Blackpool, S. J. Hewlett; Brighton (West), H. Hankinson, from August 12; Bognor, Rev. J. Barnes, LL.D.; Carnoustie, N.B., B. L. Livingstone-Learmonth, from Aug. 13; Colwyn Bay, Rev. Martin J. Hall, Aug. 7 to 31; Dunoon, N.B., Josiah Spiers, during July; Eastbourne, A. G. Dodderidge, from Aug. 7; Exmouth, P. Welch (12-26); Felixstowe, C. F. H. Battersby, M.D., from Aug. 8; Herne Bay, Geo. Goodman; Hoylake and West Kirby, F. O. Lasbrey and others; Ilfracombe, W. R. Moore; Littlehampton, J. S. Tyler and E. Hughes; Llandudno, E. J. Kennedy, H. S. Lidstone, T. B. Bishop, Arthur Outram, L. B. Butcher, Evan J. Hopkins, and others; Llanfairfechan, H. C. Jenner, from August 4; Lowestoft, E. Arrowsmith; Mablethorpe, C. J. Small, Aug. 9 to 31; Penmaenmawr, E. E. Nickisson; Pensarn, E. Collier and F. W. Betteney; Rhyl, A. C. Jewell and Sydney S. Weatherley, Aug. 4 to 26; St. Leonards, T. W. Graham; Scarboro', J. Reginald Naylor, from Aug. 7; Southend, J. Waters Coldicott; Southsea, S. M. Warner; Southwold, F. Churchill, M.B.; Swanage, Rev. F. S. Lanrence; Whitby, J. J. Summerhayes; Saltburn, W. H. Wilson; Port Erin (Isle of Man), H. Steward; Ramsey (Isle of Man), H. B. Claxton, Aug 5 to 15; Worthing, H. Falkner; Margate, Rev. W. B. Sealy; G. R. Kirlew, Lytham; Rev. M. C. Brownlow and R. H. Keable, Kemp Town, Brighton, Aug. 5 to 26; Towyn, Mr. G. H. Chaplin; Sandown, J. E. Budgett Meakin.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for week ending August 18:—Sun., 12, St. John iv. 31-42; Mon., 13, iv. 43-54; Tues., 14, v. 1-13; Wed., 15, v. 14-24; Thurs., 16, v. 25-35; Fri., 17, v. 36-47; Sat., 18, vi. 1-14.

SUNDAY CARGO WORK.—At the recent Gibraltar Diocesan Conference the chaplains of the Missions to Seamen in Italy and France strongly condemned the practice of cargo work on Sunday as putting an end to worship and to goodwill on board British ships in those harbours. Rev. Dr. Dixon, chaplain to British seamen at Palermo, stated that the greatest hindrance to spiritual work on board British ships in foreign ports was unquestionably this Sunday cargo labour, and seamen gave it constantly as a reason for staying away from service.

"A UNIQUE WORK."—Such was the description given by Rev. V. J. Charlesworth to the evangelistic labours of Mr. Lewis Wood, of Peckham Park, on the occasion of the laying of foundation-stones of a new mission hall on Thursday last. Mr. Wood commenced open-air and Gospel work some seventeen years since in a thickly-populated part of Peckham. The Spirit has sealed his efforts in the salvation of souls. A good work had also been done by Mrs. Mills amongst the children. The inconvenient room hitherto used is now to give place to a simple building. Mr. T. A. Denny, with Lady Hope, laid a foundation stone, both bearing testimony to the genuineness of the effort. Another stone was laid by the treasurer, Mr. Allen, and brief addresses were given by Mr. Henry Wood, chairman of committee, Mr. Mills, the hon. sec., and others. The buildings will cost £1100, of which nearly £300 has been raised.

Jeremiah, Priest and Prophet.

By Rev. F. B. MEYER, B.A.

AFFLICTIONS, DISTRESSES, TUMULTS.

Jeremiah xxvi.

III.—WELCOME INTERPOSITION.

The princes were seated in the palace, and instantly on receiving tidings of the outbreak, came up to the Temple. Their presence stilled the excitement, and prevented the infuriated people from carrying out their designs upon the life of the defenceless prophet. They hastily constituted themselves into a court of appeal, before which prophet and people were summoned. The priests and prophets acted as the exponents of the people's wish, and demanded sentence of death, turning from the court to the people, asking their concurrence. Then Jeremiah stood on his defence. His plea was that he had had no alternative but to utter the words with which the Lord had sent him. Again he called upon the people to amend their ways. He acknowledged that he was in their hands, but he warned them that innocent blood would bring its own Nemesis upon them all; and at the close of his address he repeated his certain embassage from Jehovah.

This bold and ingenuous defence seems to have turned the scale in his favour. The princes gave their verdict: "This man is not worthy of death, for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God." And the fickle populace, swept hither and thither by the wind, appear to have passed over en masse to the same conclusion; so that princes and people stood confederate against the false prophets and priests. The conclusion thus gained was further confirmed by the voice of certain of the elders of the land, who had come from all the cities of Judah, and who reminded the people that the good King Hezekiah had acted very differently to the prophet Micah in listening to his remonstrances, entreating the favour of the Lord, and securing the reversal of the Divine sentence.

Thus does God hide his faithful servants in the hollow of his hand. No weapon that is formed against them prospers. They are hidden in the secret of his pavilion from the strife of tongues.

IV.—SUBSEQUENT EVENTS.

In our last chapter we saw that Egypt was mistress of all lands from the Nile to the Euphrates. But as soon as the Chaldeans had established their kingdom upon the ruins of Nineveh, they turned their attention to wrest from Pharaoh-Necho some portion of his vast empire. Jeremiah had long before seen that this would be the case, and had even depicted in graphic imagery the scene and issue of the awful battle at Carchemish, by the Euphrates, where the two mighty peoples wrestled for the supreme power of the world.

He heard the call to arms; he beheld the horses heavily armed; the horsemen with flashing spears and coats of mail; the Egyptian hosts, like the Nile at flood, pour themselves against the solid ranks of their foes; her tributaries from Cush and Put, together with the Ludim, famous at handling the bow, strive in vain to turn back the flight of Egypt's mighty men. They flee apace, and look not back; the sword devours and drinks its fill of blood; the cry of the fugitive hosts fill the earth with clamour; and the mighty men stumble never to rise (Jeremiah xlvi. 1-12). Egypt never rallied again, nor dared to do more than strive against the yoke that Nebuchadnezzar, with imperial might, fastened upon her.

Thereafter there was nothing to stay the onset of Nebuchadnezzar, who probably had been associated with his aged father, and the first year of whose reign would therefore coincide with the fourth year of Jehoiakim, as we are told Jer. xxv. 1. Like a leopard, to use the expression of Habakkuk, who at this time was beginning to exercise his ministry, the young king leapt upon the peoples that had been subject to Egypt, and had aided her in her expedition. And, as the tidings of his prowess spread through the world, Jeremiah foretold that he would be the scourge of God, to punish the abounding wickedness of the peoples. "I will send unto Nebuchadnezzar, the King of Babylon, my servant, and will bring him against this land, and against the inhabitants thereof, and against all these nations round about; and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations, and this whole land shall be a desolation and an astonishment; and these nations shall serve the King of Babylon seventy years."

In his first invasion of Judah, the King of Babylon contented himself with binding Jehoiakim in fetters to carry him to Babylon, though he seems afterwards to have changed his intention, and to have restored him to his throne as his vassal, taking his oath of allegiance (Ezek. xvii. 12, 13). He then stripped the Temple of its precious vessels to enrich the house of his god at Babylon, and carried into captivity several of the mighty of the land, amongst them Daniel and his three friends (Dan. i. 1, 2). He then hastened back to Babylon, summoned thither by the tidings of the death of his father, Nabopolassar.

For three years Jehoiakim remained faithful to his oath (2 Kings xxiv. 1); then he was deluded by the hope of independence, furnished by an uprising of neighbouring peoples at the instigation of Egypt. Messengers went to and fro between himself and Pharaoh, negotiating for horses and much people; but all the while Ezekiel and Jeremiah protested that Jehovah would certainly punish him for violating his pledge to the King of Babylon. This was a time of unusual activity for the prophets, who strove their utmost to avert a political mistake, founded upon a moral obliquity, that was sure to incur terrible vengeance (Ezek. xvii. 15-21).

It befel as they feared. Nebuchadnezzar, who was not prepared to brook such infidelity on the part of a subject king, soon put his forces in motion, and prepared to advance across the desert to punish the weak and faithless Jehoiakim. It was during his march on Jerusalem that the incidents narrated in the two following chapters took place, the one the proclamation of a fast, the other the gathering of the Rechabites, with other fugitives, into the shelter of the city.

We have no certain clue to the prophet's history during these three or four years. His heart must have been filled with the patriot's anguish as he saw the coils of invasion drawn closer around the devoted city. To him, indeed, it was the year of drought, and there was no hope save in God; and often upon his lips must have been words like those which the great Florentine addressed to the city which he loved with the passionate affection which the Jews always cherished towards Jerusalem, "Thy sins, oh Florence, are the cause of these stripes. And now repent, offer prayers, become united. I have wearied myself all the days of my life to make known to thee the truths of the faith, and of holy living; and I have had nothing but tribulations, derision, and reproach."

A CHINESE SERMON.

Text: Rom. viii. 28.

Rev. J. Sadler, of Amoy, sends us the following outline translation of a sermon by a Chinese Christian:—

The so-called evils of life were glanced at as seen in Paul's life, and yet he could speak in such a decided strain. Then a series of earnest points, tellingly and clearly put to enforce the truth of the text.

(1) Trial brings us near God, well illustrated by a wandering child brought home, and the experiences of the Israelites, whose sorrows waked them up and turned them Godward.

(2) Trial makes us of service. Illustrated from the captivity, the refiner, the carver in wood. Moses, how drilled to be of service to myriads; and so Joseph.

(3) Trial is good because it makes us humble, so that we may not be "full and increased, etc."

(4) Trial makes us watchful—that we are not carried away by the follies and vanities of life. Illustration from stumbling in a road, and hence being careful.

(5) Trial makes us patient, so that our bad tempers are subdued, and our dispositions so unruly are thus chastened. Illustration of unruly horse tamed.

(6) Trial makes us sympathetic with our fellowmen. Illustration: A man who has had the toothache knows how to feel for others.

One brother added that trial meant enlargement of faith in God. And another said, it also means trusting Him most fully, no matter how He tries us.

SIERRA LEONE.—In March, Mr. T. E. Alvarez (C.M.S.) accompanied the Governor of Sierra Leone (Colonel Cardew), by the latter's invitation, on a tour to Falaba, a town some 200 miles in the interior. Five hundred out of the 600 miles which were covered on this journey were made on foot.

THANKSGIVING IN INDIA.

We have from time to time observed that the Thanksgiving Meetings, held in London in April last, have influenced and stimulated labourers in distant lands. News and Notes, published at Darjeeling, says:—

"'WHOSO OFFERETH PRAISE GLORIFIETH ME.'

"Many of our fellow-believers have been meeting recently, in London, to thank God for what He has done during the past thirty years.

"Now that so many missionaries are in Darjeeling, it has been felt that it will be a good and pleasant thing for us to meet and thank God for what He has done for India during a like period.

"A meeting for thanksgiving to God will accordingly be held, D.V., in the Union Church, on Wednesday, June 6, at five o'clock.

"In response to the above invitation, widely circulated by means of post-cards, a very large number of missionaries and others assembled, quite filling the body of the church. The hour was given up to praise and thanksgiving, many taking part.

"Thanks were given that we were in India; and that during the last thirty years the number of missionaries had been so largely increased; that we had such freedom in this heathen land in preaching Christ and working for Him; that the large number of Mohammedans in India could be more freely reached with the Gospel than those in other lands; for the wide extension of women's work for women; for the increase of medical mission work; for the translation and free distribution of the Scriptures in the different tongues of India; for schools and the good work among the children, and for great blessing in special districts."

THE FIGUERAS MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Kindly allow us, through your columns, to thank very gratefully those who have so warmly sympathised with our brother, Don Alexander, on account of the persecution he has suffered for Christ's sake, and with us during our natural anxiety on his account. We may mention that his house in Valencia (old family property), which was confiscated on his imprisonment over a year ago, has not yet been restored, and we have no idea when it will be. Not a word have we heard from him on the subject, for "most gladly" would he suffer pecuniary loss for the Master's cause.

The majority of friends who have read the able defence made by our distinguished advocate at the trial, have written in terms of highest appreciation of his "noble speech," and we feel that after acknowledging "the good hand of our God upon us," our gratitude for a signal deliverance is due to him. The fact that the sentence should have been revoked when two of Rome's favourite dogmas were involved can only be regarded as a striking answer to the many prayers offered in England, and in this country. The Romanists have never suffered a more serious defeat in Spain; thus good has been brought out of evil, and the cause of the Gospel and religious liberty advanced.

Finding that the intense heat of the town was telling on our health, we came a week ago for much needed change and rest to a little fishing village on the Mediterranean, an hour distant by train from Figueras. We received a most cheerful welcome from the dear converts, of whom there are a goodly number. It was quite touching to see very old men at the meeting, leaning on their walking-sticks, weary after a long day's work from 4 a.m. to 8 p.m., singing the hymns by heart, none being able to read. "Light in the darkness, sailor," with its chorus of "Pull for the shore," is a special favourite. There is something particularly attractive in the character of these simple toiling fishermen. The other day a visitor from Figueras offered to purchase a lobster of one of the poorest who had been unlucky, and had but that one fish for sale. "It is sold, sir," was the reply. "Never mind, I want it, and will give you double price." "Not if you gave me fifty dollars would I break my engagement."

We have brought a number of tracts to distribute, and wish very much that we had large type Gospels to give to the aged. We ask your prayers that we may indeed be "fishers of men," and that many souls may be drawn into the Gospel net during our stay in this lovely spot on the shores of "the Great Sea."—Yours, in the Master's service,

Emily Lopez Rodriguez.

REV. F. B. MEYER'S NEW BOOK.

The books that have come during recent years in quick succession straight from Mr. Meyer's heart through his picturesque pen, have been expository unfoldings of the lessons of Scripture teaching and history. These have found very wide acceptance among earnest Christians, and have proved channels of spiritual refreshment to very many. We are sure that the numberless friends our brother has made all the world over, through his writings, will give a ready welcome to the new work he has prepared,* and which has a special interest both of a personal and a practical kind. Broadly speaking, the book is a record of the work undertaken by Mr. Meyer during his pastorate at Leicester among the lapsed masses of that Midland town. The basis of it was a casual endeavour to help a man coming out of gaol, whose daughter attended the pastor's services. From this tiny seed there developed a truly wonderful work of rescue and restoration among the criminal classes; with cognate branches of effort of various kinds. The story is told in a most fascinating way, and is one more proof that the worst and the most seemingly hopeless can be reached and lifted up by prayer, patience, and kindly help. The closing chapter describes a very remarkable experience on a Leicester racecourse.

The reader will turn with unusual interest to the opening chapter, in which Mr. Meyer gives in brief outline some recollections of his early life. It is altogether such a delightful bit of autobiography that we transfer a portion of it to this page, strongly recommending a perusal of the whole book. The portrait, which we reproduce, forms a frontispiece, and is the most recent likeness of the author:—

"Happy indeed was the setting of my early life; one of the freshest memories of which seems to be long summer days spent on Clapham Common, when the gorse covered it from side to side, and the bracken grew high enough to hide the slight childish figure that delighted to throw itself with wild abandonment into its midst. What would not one give to have days of the same length as those used to be, spent in sailing boats across those mimic seas, or in absorbing games of cricket, as exciting as any that ever drew crowds to "Lord's." The deep shade of those spreading chestnuts through the sultry hours of noon; the long drives through Streatham and Dulwich, when those suburbs were uninvaded by the modern terrace or the intersecting railways; my father's home, with its long garden and paddocks; and, perhaps more to me than anything else, the house at the end of the long walk, where Macaulay wrote his history, and where my maternal grandparents lived.

REV. F. B. MEYER.

(From Photograph by Mr. P. S. Lankester, Great Hall Studio, Tunbridge Wells.)

"It is pleasant, in looking back over the years, to be unable to recall one moment's misunderstanding with those beloved parents, who are now, together with some sweet younger children, in the presence of the King. One long pathway of unclouded sunshine stretches away from the shore of the present over the ocean expanse of the past. It is impossible to be thankful enough to my gentle, lovely mother for the careful drilling in Scripture which was her habit with us all. To this is owing a familiarity with the Bible which has been of inestimable value as the basis of after study. It was her regular practice to gather us around her on each Lord's Day morning for the searching of Bible references, and for reading books bearing directly on Scripture. And how can we who shared in them ever forget the happy hours each Sunday afternoon, when we gathered around the piano, and sang hymn after hymn; our childish voices gathering strength as they were led and supported by that noble bass voice of my father, which was like an organ in the richness of its tones! It was not what they said, for they spoke very little directly to us; but what they were, and what they expected us to be, that seemed insensibly to form and mould our characters.

"My grandfather was a successful City merchant, full of sound common sense; a strong man who had made for himself a position of influence and honour in the business world. But the light of that home was the saintly lady whose daily walk has been described by one who knew her well as one of close intercourse with God in Christ during nearly fourscore years. Her early life was spent among the Friends, a society which is remarkable for the high and noble character of its women. This early training was never lost on her; it gave a quiet dignity and charm to her character, an independence of outward formularies, a certain strength and spirituality of tone which made her unlike most others. And in her closing years it came back to her with renewed power, when, no longer able to attend the outward ordinances of God's house, she would retire into the temple of the inner life, ever open to all devout souls, and there hold fellowship with God beneath the direct teaching and enlightenment of the Holy Spirit . . .

"Then came school-life. First, the daily trudge along the interminable Acre Lane to the school kept by my excellent relative, Mr. Samuel Wilkins. Then a year or two of tuition by Mr. Peto and his son, in the house which, with its observatory, is so prominent an object on entering Brighton station; but pre-eminently the Brighton College.

"We were living at Brighton then, having removed for the benefit of my sister's health; my father making the daily journey to London. It was therefore possible for me to sleep at home, and so combine the holy influences of the home with the public spirit, the esprit de corps, the inspiration and stimulus of a great public school. At first the tenderly nurtured lad shrank from association with so many strong and boisterous spirits. But, ah, how can we over-estimate the influence of our public schools in enlarging the mind, in rubbing off ugly corners, in giving a sense of independence and self-reliance to the youth of England? Even now, as I write, I recall the excitement of the great cricket matches; the frays with roughs and other schoolboys, with whom we had perpetual feud, culminating in the uproarious proceedings of November 5; the paper-chases over the downs; the athletic sports, and the prodigious training that preceded them; the postage-stamp fever; the fossil furore; the expeditions with choice spirits over the rocks and along the cliffs when the tide was down; the opening of the chapel and the daily service. Oh, happy, happy days, whose traces will linger ever, as the ripple marks of ocean wave upon the soft marl, which is now stamped with them for ever!

"But, amid all this boyish life, there was rising up within the heart, like a fountain from unknown depths, the steady resolve, as yet hardly realised, and never breathed, that the life was to be inspired by the one absorbing purpose of the ministry of Jesus Christ. Amongst my mother's papers I found recently some early attempts at sermons, and each Sunday night my proclivities found expression in the little service at which the servants attended. The hands that reach down out of heaven, moulding men, had already commenced to form a vessel which in after days He was going in marvellous condescension to use."

DR. BARNARDO'S BOYS AT SEA.

A correspondent, writing from Montreal on July 16 to a friend in Ireland, says:—

On my journey to Canada I found on board the Sardinian some 230 boys, from Dr. Barnardo's Homes in London, on their way to the great North-West. I had daily, almost hourly, opportunity of seeing them, and a better behaved lot of lads, I believe, could not be found. Although full of fun and up to all kinds of larks, they were not guilty of any misconduct throughout the whole voyage of ten days.

It would do you good to see the big boys hauling in a log-line. They go direct to the farm, whence they are drafted out to any farmer who will enter into an agreement to treat them well, for varying periods according to age, from one to five years; to feed and clothe them; and on the expiration of that time he has to give them 100 dollars with which to start life. Then they can hire themselves out at the highest wage they can obtain. The majority, however, were small boys, from seven upwards; and very dear little chaps they were, some that a fond mother might delight in. They were fine manly little lads, with honest English faces; no hang-dog look as you see in workhouse children in Ireland, but open, frank countenances. These are kept in the Home learning farming till they get older.

During the voyage, in the morning they sing a hymn before breakfast; and don't they sing! not the conventional droning, but a good hearty ringing song, coming from two hundred and thirty young hearts, with lusty lungs; some had very fine voices. Mr. Owen read a portion of Scripture; there was a short prayer, and then the knives and forks begin to rattle, and the youngsters tuck in like young lions. The chief steward told me they ate more than men. A good sign, I say; for no man or horse can work well unless he eats well. Then they salute and march out on deck in single file. The same routine three times a day.

The berths are made up each voyage in midships, and even the contents of the mattresses I saw thrown overboard, so that they should not be used again. The boys were well kept, dressed in blue jerseys and corduroy trousers, and bathed every morning. If I were to become a settler I should be delighted to get such boys.

Dr. Barnardo's work is a benefit to both countries—rescuing from destruction the little ones, teaching them the Gospel, giving them habits of cleanliness, truthfulness, order, and discipline, and starting them in life in a new country, where a man's future depends (under God) upon his own conduct. I hope to see the Farm Settlement when I get to Winnipeg, and will let you know what I think of it.

CHINA'S WOMEN.—Mrs. Van Someren Taylor, who has charge of the women's hospital at Fuh-ning, in the Fuh-kien province, writes:—"Medical missionary work just meets the needs of the women of China—it raises them spiritually, physically, and morally. How many hearts have been reached through caring for the bodies, how many souls have been won through medical missions, no one will ever know; but the Saviour knew how far-reaching, how great would be the ingathering when He said: 'Heal the sick, and say unto them, The Kingdom of God is come nigh unto you.'"

STUDENT VOLUNTEERS AT KESWICK

(BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS.)

This year the week which follows the Convention at Keswick has been a remarkably busy one, and an unusual number of visitors have remained for it. Though the streets of the little town have seemed strangely empty after the melting away of the Bible-carrying throngs of a few days before, the musters at the swiftly succeeding meetings have been well kept up. This is the more noteworthy in view of the glorious weather, which prevailed till Thursday morning, and the consequent attractions of the country round.

Till the great tent was taken down after the Wednesday evening missionary meeting it remained in constant use, as well as the smaller tent, which was kept up to the end for the use of the Students' Conference. It was a happy thought that this should follow the Convention instead of preceding it, as last year, since most of those who attended this conference did so with the renewed inspiration and vigour derived from its predecessor. This was felt by speakers and hearers alike, and the outcome of this special gathering cannot fail to be widely felt. The movement itself is one of very great importance, hardly to be over-estimated, for no kindred work is more full of future promise, apart from its splendid present work.

The objects of the Conference were inter alia to give the members of Students' Christian Associations throughout the British Isles an opportunity of meeting for the interchange of experiences and projects connected with Christian work in colleges and universities, and for the deepening of spiritual life. A primary object, the special care of the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union, was the dissemination of information on mission work, the discussion of missionary problems, and the enrolment of fresh volunteers.

The Conference was inaugurated on Sunday evening by an address in the Lecture Hall from Prebendary Webb-Peploe, on "What we are, we were, and we will be," subjects drawn from the 116th Psalm. From Monday to Thursday inclusive six or seven successive meetings were held daily. 7 a.m. to 7.45, prayer meeting; 9 to 10.15, Students' Volunteer Band meeting; 10.15 to 11.15, Bible study on the character of Christ, by Mr. Speer, of Princeton University; 11.15 to 12.30, Conference on College Christian work; 6-7 p.m., missionary meeting; 7-9, evening session.

MISSIONARY VOLUNTEERS IN COLLEGE.

The subject of the first gathering on Monday morning, dealt with by Mr. Donald Fraser, the travelling secretary, was the duties of student volunteers in college: (1) in relation to themselves, to be intelligent as to mission work, to be full of prayer, and to cultivate a deeper spirituality; (2) in relation to his fellow-students the duty of the missionary volunteer is very great. His influence in college is greater than ever after. (3) To his Band of the Union, whose meetings he must make interesting, and keep frequent and punctual. The officers must be good, for they create the atmosphere of the band. Fields should be studied systematically, and at least a quarter of the meeting should be devoted to prayer. (4) In relation to the Union, which is the first bond between the British colleges, the volunteer owes it loyalty, keeping in touch with the centre (186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.), supporting it financially, and becoming individually part of the brains of the Union.

CHRISTIAN STUDENTS IN GERMANY.

Messrs. Mockert and Simsen and Count Puckler, of Germany, followed, pointing out the serious lack of religious as distinguished from theological teaching there, where men are educated to be critical and pessimistic, and where the doubts of the students often exceed their belief. In spite of this there are thirty-two Bible circles in Berlin, and fifteen to twenty weekly meetings among 10,000 students. There is a German Christian Students' Union, and a conference has been arranged at Frankfort. Many are reached by teas and conversaziones, most of the work being carried on in connection with the Y.M.C.A., and being linked with the White Cross Purity Movement.

THE INTER-UNIVERSITY UNION.

The noon meeting on Monday was for the presentation of reports of the work of the Inter-University Christian Union, that of the executive committee being read by Mr. Anderson. Fourteen local secretaries followed, many giving details of great interest. This is especially the case with Belfast, though the Union there is only four months old. Many of the unions have taken up outside work, such as, in Oxford, the visitation of lodging houses; in Cambridge, the systematic evangelisation of the surrounding villages; in Aberystwyth, a workhouse, tramp, and lodging mission; in St. Andrews, a fisher-lad mission and an inter-denominational missionary union; in Glasgow, a Christian settlement; in Edinburgh, with 294 members, ward services, and book circulation among the 2,300 medicals, among others. The affiliated Medical Prayer Union has branches in nine London hospitals, maintains a missionary meeting at St. Bartholomew's, an inter-hospital meeting, fortnightly social gatherings, and a missionary breakfast.

In conclusion, Mr. Fraser spoke of attempts to found unions in other quarters, and appealed for deputations, urging also the need for some one man to take the lead in each division of Great Britain.

The first evening meeting was missionary in character. The first speaker, Mr. D. McConaughy, of Madras, said that the history recorded in 1 Kings xx. was repeating itself among the students of India to-day. In the crisis which has been brought about by Western education, it is "the young men of the princes of the provinces" who are called upon to lead the conflict with the "principalities and powers"—not only with heathenism, but also with rationalism and theosophy and atheism. As in that earlier, they must be "numbered" (v. 15), although there were only 232, yet every man of them counted; they must go out "first" (v. 17) and "at noon" (v. 16), in the prime of their young manhood, to bear the brunt of the battle; they must so acquit themselves as to win and deserve the tribute, "there be men come out" (v. 17); they must adopt personal work as their method—"they slew every man his man" (v. 20). The Young Men's Christian Association had been raised up for such a time as this. Its most hopeful field in India at present was among the English-educated students. Four years and more of work among this class in Madras had proven conclusively that such an agency was not only urgently needed, but also that the Association had been wondrously adapted, enthusiastically received, and encouragingly fruitful even already among the student class. Of 430 members enrolled in the Madras Association on May 1, no less than 210 were undergraduate students from all the colleges, and of the other members a very considerable percentage—probably not less than fifty per cent.—had passed through the colleges. He believed strongly that educational missions had made possible the work which the Madras Association is doing.

Mrs. Stewart, of Lovedale, South Africa, spoke of the work carried on by her husband, Rev. Dr. James Stewart, in which she herself is a happy participator, and of the very encouraging progress that has been made at that institution during the last twenty years. In the early days of missionary effort in that vicinity the people actually demanded payment for allowing their children to be educated! But in 1870 Dr. Stewart determined to try a new experiment, and found that by this time they had seen the value of education sufficiently to be willing to contribute to it themselves. Accordingly, in the first quarter they raised £200, gradually increasing the amount until they have altogether paid some £28,000, of which £2180 was the income of last year alone, paid by the natives for the training of their children.

From Lovedale have gone out missionaries to many parts, while the Livingstonia Mission and other agencies are themselves the children of this parent institution. In the few minutes at her disposal, Mrs. Stewart sketched what was being done there in the training of young men, and showed how they were instrumental in passing on to others what they had learned to value so much themselves.

The Institute has now no fewer than twenty-seven separate buildings connected with it. When it began, there were in the school eleven natives and nine sons of European missionaries; and when Dr. Stewart arrived, there were forty or fifty residents in the place, and about as many day-scholars. At present there are 530 boarders and 270 day-scholars: in all 800. The chief aim is not to educate or to civilise, but to Christianise. The conversion of individual souls to Christ is the success which is most desired. On the roll of the church are 151 communicants, besides which there are 129 catechumens. One of the agencies is the Native Missionary Association, the members of which go out on Sundays to the villages lying from two to ten miles around Lovedale, making known the tidings of grace and salvation.

No sooner was this session concluded than it was quickly succeeded by another gathering, whose object was to illustrate forms of practical Christian work to aid the choice of those who were seeking a home sphere, preparatory, possibly, to subsequent labour in a wider field. First came Canon Taylor Smith in a racy and most interesting sketch of work among boys of the public schools. The heart of a schoolboy he has found to be the most promising soil in the field of the world, free as it is from the prejudices, doubts, and difficulties which beset more mature minds. Certain it is that the work of sowing will be done by the devil if not by the Christian worker. He bore grateful testimony to the valuable work of the Children's Special Service Mission, to which the Church of Christ owes a great debt for its preparing of workers for the home ministry and the foreign field. Some of the brightest helpers he had met with in West Africa were members of the Mission, and the same might be said of East Africa, India, and China. In fact, most of the workers had had some touch, and many a firm grip, of the hand of the C.S.S.M.

Directing attention then to the Universities' Camps for Public School Boys, founded two years ago, he described it as a small beginning of a mighty future work, the object being to teach the lads what true Christianity is—not the giving up of all that is pleasant, but the receiving of a joyful religion which covers the trinity of a boy's being—the spiritual, the intellectual, and the physical. These must be treated always in their right order, the spiritual ever being to the fore. "Christ for the living rather than for the dying" might be taken as their motto, to show how much was lost by deferring the choice of Jesus as Master and Lord.

The first camp was held in 1892 at Littlehampton, the boys numbering seventy. Canon Taylor had converse on spiritual things with each one, yet in no case was he the first to introduce the subject. He strongly deprecated the selection of favourites, and urged that even the most unattractive lad should be "seen with the eyes of Christ, and loved with the heart of Christ." Other practical suggestions were, "Do not 'go for' a boy in a roundabout way; do not preach at him; say we, not you, and come, not go. Wisdom is needed when not to speak, as well as when to speak. Take texts from the book of nature as well as from the Bible, for God's love is shown in picture as well as in print." The Canon drew from his experience some very interesting incidents, which illustrated his talk as he went along, and earnestly commended work among boys as a most fruitful and important sphere.

Rev. F. S. Webster, of Birmingham, pleaded for the Home Ministry—Church of England and otherwise—as a fitting preparation for after-work in the foreign field. Probably many of his hearers were not quite at one with him as he contended that preaching was necessarily best done by ordained ministers rather than by laymen. But there was force in his argument that only when in a fixed pastorate could a man know the joy of watching the growth in years and spirituality of his people, and see the fruit of his labours in the volunteers who went forth with the Gospel message to other spheres. There is, he urged, a great need of godly consecrated men to fight in the ministry the battle against sacerdotalism in the Church of England, Socinianism in Nonconformist Churches, and worldliness in each. Let the colleges crowd the ministry with men who know God, study their Bible, and understand the needs of the soul; for the churches throughout the land sadly need an inflow of such consecrated men. "Learn to know your Bible, learn to know your own heart, learn to know God. Preach the Word, preach to yourself, preach in the power of the Spirit. No matter how clever your sermon may be, it is a failure if it is not blessed to someone. Be men of the One Book; and in matters of difficulty, an hour's prayer will often bring a better solution than three hours' study of the works of men."

Then came a telling address from Rev. G. H. Macgregor upon work among young men. Founding his remarks on Rom. i. 7, "Called to be saints," he feared that the word "saint" had become a term of reproach, whereas it should bear the highest significance. It indicates one who has made up his mind, come to a decision, to be set apart as the Lord's. Therefore, in dealing with young men, it is needful to show the true manliness of deciding for Christ and stepping out boldly for Him. Again, the word "saint" implies one who is "holy," another word that young men do not like! But this indicates wholeness, health—health of the soul, which should be as much an object of care as a healthy physical frame. Young men are generally more concerned about deliverance than about pardon, but both are to be found in Christ. We must commend the Gospel by living it; the condition of the worker will affect his work. If you would commend Christianity you must be it. Let there be a recognised position for literature, for athletics, for State affairs, but all subservient to Christ and loyalty to his name. Thus the speaker summarised his text as a call to decision, to deliverance, and to duty.

THE S.V.M.U.

On Tuesday morning Mr. Donald Fraser read the report of the executive committee of the Student Volunteer Missionary Union, which has so far touched eighty colleges and universities, and has enrolled over 700 members.

Miss Fraser, one of the lady travelling secretaries, reported on seventy meetings held in thirty-one colleges, and dwelt upon the need of closer union among Christians in college, and the extension of the work so as to include schools.

Mr. D. A. Hunter spoke of his tour in South Africa; he described the Lovedale Institution as Oxford and Cambridge combined. Among the black students he had enrolled five volunteers for mission work, but among the whites the anti-missionary prejudice is very strong. This made it all the more important to make every effort to reach the young colonials, who deserve a special campaign, and, being on the spot, and accustomed to the people, would make ideal missionaries for Africa.

M. Vernier, of Paris, told how the Union had been established there eight years ago, since which time twelve volunteers had gone into the foreign field, one of whom has just died.

At the session which followed, Mr. J. R. Mott, Secretary of the Inter-Collegiate Y.M.C.A. of the United States, gave encouraging testimony as to the work proceeding across the Atlantic, where this Union is already a considerable force. Its three-fold object is to unite, to win and to guard, to promote deeper spiritual life, and to set to work in every possible way. The necessity of general secretaries who could give their whole time to the work, where elected for from one to three years, was dwelt upon. The importance of securing quality, not quantity, at the religious meetings was ably urged, and as for finance, the gatherers were once reminded that there was One to supply every need. Members were recommended to get and give all they could, and to work by correspondence, by visitation, and by conference. The permanence given to the work by securing special halls, apart from their convenience, makes them a great desideratum, adding also dignity and popularity to the effort, broadening its scope, and securing a rendezvous for men not in residence. The cardinal principle of the Union is primarily to cultivate the college field, for the students' first responsibility is to students. The leaders need special training for this special work, and the work requires peculiar agencies and methods for peculiar fields. Each administration should have a definite and progressive policy, and adhere to it if it means results, but the prevailing purpose must be the winning of students for Christ. Bible-study should constitute its pivotal department; its motive power should be the Spirit of God; its range of sympathies should include the needs of the world. Among its perils are isolation, pride, dependence on machinery, failure to recognise and sieze points of strategic importance; divisions, factions, and jealousies; inconsistency in the lives of its leaders, and compromising any vital principle of Christianity. Its spirit must be loyalty to Jesus as Lord, and it must be natural, not forced, from within, not outward cant. Its spirit must be united, aggressive, missionary, humble, and intense, culminating in a passion for Christ.

In the afternoon an informal gathering of Cambridge men was held on an island in the lake, presided over by Dr. H. Battersby, who discussed the policy, basis, and scope of the Christian Union of their university, and arranged for sub-committees.

Sectional missionary meetings were held on Tuesday evening. Dr. Bruce brought forward the claims of India, dwelling on the terrible cruelties inflicted under the reign of darkness, and then turned to Persia, his special field, where famine relief had opened a door for them, and where workers were available in the Eastern Churches so soon as won for Christ. Weak workers can do great works. The evil effects of polygamy on the men and their race were pointed out, and the grand opportunities for women's work were brought to mind.

Rev. C. Bateman described the work in the Punjaub, preaching, educational, medicinal, and translation. The spread of the Gospel unites them all, though the application may be different. The Christian community needs defining before you can rejoice in numbers, but a great work is being done. The difficulties and opportunities of caste were then referred to, but the greatest difficulty is the absence of a true idea of sin.

At the missionary meeting on Tuesday evening Mr. Montague Beauchamp, China, gave a description of the work of the "Cambridge Seven," and was followed by Dr. Maxwell, who dealt with the needs of that vast empire. The African meeting was less formal; addresses were given and miscellaneous questions answered by Canon Taylor Smith, who ably presided, Mrs. Stewart, of Lovedale, Mr. Spencer Walton, Dr. Battersby, and Mr. D. A. Hunter. The gathering was found so interesting that it was prolonged for some time after the hour fixed for closing.

When at last the gathering was dismissed, the audience immediately rallied to hear an address from Mr. J. R. Mott upon "Personal Dealing among College Men." The purpose of a Christian Association is to lead others to become followers of Christ, and the crowning work is to lead them one by one. This is at once a high privilege and a deep joy, and imposes a special responsibility upon students to lead their classmates to Christ. Mr. Mott propounded and amplified the following propositions:—1. College men are especially susceptible to religious impressions, so statistics show. Whereas among young men generally, from one in twelve to one in twenty, profess Christianity, in American colleges one in two among the students, and seven in eight among the professors, do so. The purpose of a student's life is to train the mind, and to use it in weighing evidence at the critical point of his life. Hence (2) the man with a trained mind will do more for or against Christ in this world than other men. Therefore, it is highly important to win him for Christ while at the college, the centre of his influence, even as Elisha cast the salt into the spring to purify the stream.

3. If students are not reached during their college days, very few ever receive Christ in later life. The facts and figures adduced to enforce this were really startling, and placed the importance of the aggressive college work beyond all question.

4. The conditions of college life are such as to make men more get-at-able than in later life. A proportionate responsibility, therefore, rests upon the Christian student to bring the Gospel to bear on them.

From the New Testament the speaker drew further arguments for this aggressive personal work:—

(a) From our Lord's implied teachings and his direct commands. (b) The life He lived, the interviews He had with men of all sorts and shades of belief; his work on lake or road, in field or mart, honouring his Father by improving every opportunity. (c) The example of those who lived nearest to Him, e.g., Andrew brought Peter, Philip led Nathanael, Peter and John at the Beautiful Gate, Philip and the eunuch, Peter and Cornelius, Ananias and Saul, Paul and Silas and the jailer, Aquila and Priscilla and Apollos, Paul at Ephesus, where for "three years" he "ceased not to warn" those who came within sound of his voice. We, like them, must come to regard

ONE MAN A BIG AUDIENCE.

Next were considered common hindrances in the way of this work:—(a) Consciousness of inconsistency in life and walk—a fatal barrier. (b) The idea that a good example will suffice as a substitute for personal work. Life and speech are both needed. It is not sufficient for a man to see the good life of his fellows. He needs to know what made them what they are. "Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the word of God." (c) False courtesy—often more truly named Fear. No hesitation is felt in speaking to one about the ailments of his body, or his opinions on any other subject; then why when a man's eternal welfare is at stake? (d) Unbelief, in the face of an opportunity, that the Holy Spirit will give the needed grace to use it. Thus is many a precious moment lost; and the cry goes up from many a waiting heart—"I have no one when the water is troubled to put me into the pool." (e) Ignorance of the Bible. From study of the Bible alone can the desire, the skill, and the power for this work come. (f) Natural diffidence, or nervousness. Dr. Clay Trumbull, of America, was quoted as having had no less than ten thousand interviews with men and women on spiritual things, with the following experience:—(1) In each case he heard a voice within him dissuading him. (2) In each case he conquered it, and was never once rebuffed. (3) In the last case the struggle was as hard as in the first.

Mr. Mott thus concluded a powerful address: "The greatest incentive must be the constraining love of Christ and a desire for the glory of God. 'Herein is my Father glorified that ye bear much fruit.' Do not wait till next term. The man who will accomplish most next term will be the one who works the most during this vacation. Begin now, work well, and thus multiply your life in others."

On Wednesday forenoon Mr. Frank Anderson, Oxford, the travelling secretary for the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union for next year, dwelt on the fitness of students by education and training for special spheres in life as leaders of men. He announced the determination of the S.V.M. to extend its operations to all colleges, of which there are 150 unreached, medical, veterinary, military, technical, as well as educational. A very important element in this extension would be the reaching of hundreds of men who will be going out in various capacities to our colonies and other foreign lands and wielding an influence for good or ill that can hardly be computed. To accomplish this will be required a further development of college organisation, delegations, correspondence, central offices, publication department, and a travelling secretary—a man of faith, power, and ability—to visit among the colleges indicated. Rev. L. Byrde summarised the present extent of the Union. Two years and a few months old, it has 690 members in various colleges, and eighty-five in missionary institutes, seventy-five already in the field, and seventy-five per cent. of its in-college members are preparing to follow suit. Its travelling secretary has visited eighty colleges, held 143 meetings for students, of whom he has been brought into touch with 17,800, his journeys totalling to 14,700 miles. Miss Hodges, the travelling secretary to the ladies' colleges, had also done good work, visiting thirty-one colleges, twenty schools, holding twenty meetings, and reaching 2000 students.

Mr. Mott then sketched the rapid progress of the Christian Association work in American colleges since 1877—truly a wonderful study! The inter-collegiate movement has advanced by leaps and bounds until there are now 30,000 men bound together in one fellowship, pledged to use their influence among their classmates. Statistics are actually to hand showing that 20,000 men have given definite proof of change of heart during this period, while literally many hundreds have reached the foreign field, with as many more hoping to follow them.

Dr. Maxwell then made a definite and earnest appeal for funds for the maintenance and development of the work, viz,—£500 for the Students' Christian Union, and £600 for the Students' Volunteer Missionary Union. Promises and gifts were sent up at the close of the meeting.

On Wednesday evening reasons were given by several why they had become missionary volunteers —a truly thrilling time, after which came a capital missionary meeting, first addressed by Bishop Stuart, of Waiapu, now on his way as a missionary to Persia. Missions, he contended, were as branches, which, so far from sapping the parent stem, nourish it. There is a spiritual force behind this crusade, not a crusade to recover an empty sepulchre, but to bring a living Saviour to empty hearts. After some encouraging statements about work among young men in Auckland, Rev. R. Bateman delivered a telling speech, in which he urged his hearers to speak when the Spirit leads. "What is an examination compared with a soul?" The story was told of a man who had a Bible given to him containing a slip with the addresses of missionaries in his locality—an excellent idea. Work among the boys was specially recommended, and that meeting was described as very poor which included no young people. Mr. Bateman's humour afforded great relief in an overstrained gathering, after which the hearers settled down refreshed for a most moving and powerful address from Mr. Speer.

OUR MISSIONARY OBLIGATIONS.

These, Mr. Speer pointed out, begin at home, where our position as members of families imposes special obligations on us. Then comes our obligation to our neighbours, our country. Our obligations are manifold and various, and change from time to time, but the supreme and lasting obligation of the Church is to evangelise. We know only our own generation, so it is our duty to evangelise the world in it, and this is possible. Evangelised does not necessarily mean converted, but we must have faith that conversions will follow evangelisation. Evangelisation does not mean civilisation, though it cannot fail to civilise. We work on no absurd plan, but intelligibly and intelligently, carrying our message to all the world. Though there is great need at home, the larger claim upon us is from abroad. If we don't see the possibility of success, we cannot fail to hear the billion-voiced wail of the heathen, calling on us at least to do our duty. But it is impossible for some to do their duty because they slight it.

The whole world lies open before us now, and its needs are known to us all. This earth is now like a bundle of nerves, from end to end of which each great calamity is felt. We are in touch with the remotest parts. The doors of Christendom are open to let the Gospel out, and those of heathendom are open to let it in. The heathen faiths have confessed that they cannot cope with the Life of Christ. At the Parliament of religions all the representatives of heathendom falsified their position and stole from Christianity. Nothing could stop us in this campaign if we did but trust God.

There are to-day 300 missionary societies, and many methods. There are thirty Gospel vessels. Of the 130,000 ordained men the right proportion to send abroad would be one-half. Jesus gave all. Three hundred and thirty-three times more men and 900 times more money are spent on the armies of to-day than on missions for Christ. If this were a human undertaking the question of its possibility would not be raised. The Christians alone hold so much wealth in their hands that not a tithe of a tithe of it would be needed to evangelise the world.

"Students of England, we appeal to you from the students of another land. If you'll lead we'll follow, or if you choose, we'll go side by side. But let us go!"

SENSIBLE SUGGESTIONS.

Next morning the practical ways in which missionary volunteers might push forward the cause were again gone into in detail. Efforts must be individual, but individuals united in missionary bands can do great things in the churches, beginning with the young, and as it were breeding missionaries. Indifference is largely the outcome of ignorance. Spread light and information. Get the churches to combine in missionary effort. In speaking on the subject let the burden of the heathen be your strain. Do not attempt to be funny when the world is crying, but be interesting in a manly strain, not omitting the romance of missions. Let it not be thought a sacrifice to go forth; the sacrifice is to hold back. Don't be too long. Form the opinion of the church; God's opinion is already formed. Beware of missionary prigs. Make use of maps and diagrams, of magic lanterns, and of the illustrations, especially for the young.

HOW TO WORK IN COLLEGES.

The last noon meeting was of more than usual interest, as an attempt was made to gather up the threads, and summarise the suggestions which had been made for the development of the various student Christian unions represented. Mr. O. O. Williams presided, and urged those present not to go back to their studies and reflect on this Conference, but to look forward. "We depend on local efforts, on each one of you. Lay your plans for the new students, so often left in ignorance of the work. Bring them in. The work must be done out of love to the Son of God, and carried out by the Holy Spirit. What have you made up your minds to do next term?"

In reply, Miss Montgomery, of Edinburgh University, told how there the various associations were going to unite and accept the responsibility of the new members. Praying bands of three girls each are to be started for definite objects. Finance is going to be committed to God; Bible study is going to be encouraged; missionary volunteers are to be recruited. The religious libraries are to be well looked after and the meeting rooms kept tidy and dusted.

A PLEA FOR OXFORD.

Mr. Gairdner, President of the Oxford Union, told how the five men in the Oxford tent at the camp felt the enormous responsibility upon them. They are going to send letters to every individual they can interest in the work, and they are going to pray for great things. It is their intention to return earlier than usual to pick up the freshmen, and on the Saturday evening to invite them to hear Mr. Webster's University sermon next day. The football and boating secretaries "collar" their men within the first twenty-four hours. Shall the Christian Union secretaries do less? "Evangelical people have treated Oxford shamefully; they have tabooed it, and sent their children to Cambridge. Pray for the Hannington Memorial Hall, for which we are trusting. We need it awfully."

A FRESHMEN'S CAMPAIGN.

Mr. Learmouth, of Edinburgh, declared that the students of Auld Reekie are not going to be dissatisfied with the past, for their faces are set to the front. They are going to circulate Mr. Mott's address, and to call a meeting on reassembling, to put before those who have not been to Keswick what has been seen and heard here. "We want thirty to forty volunteers to visit and gather in the freshmen, helping them to choose their classes and their churches, for we mean to have a good week's campaign for freshmen, and we mean to ask for freshmen's sermons in the churches on the opening Sunday of the term. We hope to catch them coming out of the examination rooms, and we hope to get the local Christian doctors to invite them up in groups to meet us at tea. We'll have conversaziones and circulate pamphlets. Edinburgh students, come up early, and pray for the work all the time till then."

CAMBRIDGE TO THE FORE.

Mr. Thornton, of "Trin. Coll. Cam.," drew attention to the fact that quite unexpectedly several of the officers-elect of the Christian Unions represented belonged to his college, and had been brought together in Keswick under one tent, and they were going to make a grand united start next term. Special attention is to be paid to the daily prayer meetings, to the Missionary Union, and to the Christian Union, of which in future the last-named is to be the central thread. They felt that in the matter of the prayer meeting Oxford was ahead of them, but they had appointed a sub-committee to look after this.

WALES NOT NEGLECTED.

Mr. Roberts, of Aberystwth, said he had come to Keswick for a message, and was going back with that message. "We have everything to do when we get back. Prayer, early return, circulation of information, the institution of a new college missionary society, the establishment of the morning watch of a good hour, securing a building, developing the Volunteer Union, and arranging for a long visit from the travelling secretary. But don't forget to pray for Bangor, and Cardiff also, and the theological colleges."

To this Mr. Burgess, late of Trevecca, now of Cardiff, general secretary for Wales, added that for his part he was going to set the work going in the University, and to become himself a fanatic on missions. "I am going to confine myself to that one subject, to aim at turning all the converts in the branches of Christian work with which I am connected, whatever they are, into missionaries. I am going to be a terror on the missionary question. I shall accompany the travelling secretary wherever I can, and I trust the Lord to bring fifty volunteers to Keswick next year."

Miss Hodges, one of the lady travelling secretaries, recounted her visit to Aberystwith, where among the lady students the enthusiasm had been greater than anywhere else. Twenty expressed their wish to volunteer, though up to the present only one had obtained her parents' consent. They had capital meetings, a condition of membership being willingness to take part in them when called upon, though non-members were always welcomed.

A RECREATION CAMPAIGN.

Mr. McLean, of Glasgow, told how their small Bible reading circles had proved a training ground for further work. He urged the students to confine their efforts to the colleges, till, like the Christian students of some American colleges, they had captured the debating societies and athletic clubs, and the whole tone of University life was purified, not being content with working in the town and Sunday-schools, but taking up this work around them for Christ's sake.

After Mr. Williams had summed up the suggestions made, counting over a dozen, and had called to mind the humble spirit needed to undertake then, adding that carelessness and prayerlessness mean failure, Mr. Mott gave a closing address.

REVIVALS IN STORE.

"The Students' Conference of last year has been shown by its results to have been a success. What about this year? Everything depends on how we set to work when we return to college. The first week of term is worth far more than the next two or three months. Put in a field week for God. Athletic and glee clubs do so.

"One of your editors has written a book on 'If Christ came to Chicago,' a book in which with shame we say that there is more truth than anything else. Now what if Christ came to our Universities? How would He regard the need, and what would we do to meet it? That is the question for us.

"Now I want you to read three books. First, the Acts of the Apostles, with your college in view; secondly, 'With Christ in the School of Prayer,' by the Rev. Andrew Murray; and thirdly, Finney's first eight revival lectures, for you will find there more things with which you will agree than otherwise.

"When we return we want revivals, but they must begin with ourselves. Two men began to pray for a revival in an American college, and in a month or so they were joined by twenty; soon their prayer-meetings rose to 90 or 100. The revival had begun. If you pray for three months without being answered, that's all the more reason for going on praying. I have noticed more prayer in this Conference than in any other summer camp I have known, and that is extremely promising. At Holyoke seminary there was wont to be a revival every year, but the cause was not discovered till Mary Lyon died, and it was found from her papers that every year at a certain time she had begun to pray for this revival. There are some college walls represented here that are going to be wonderfully shaken this year.

"Let your work be personal, tactful, intelligent (this by making it a special study), and sincere (by being filled with the Spirit of Christ). Let definite men work for definite men in the football team, in the literary society, in the debating club. One year at Yale there were twenty-two such secret personal definite workers in communication with a central head, but all working unknown to one another, and soon forty men accepted Christ. That was how one revival started."

STUDENT DIFFICULTIES,

On Thursday evening Professor Lloyd Snape, of Aberystwith, dwelt on the difficulties besetting the newly-arrived student, the lengthy separation from home influences, the constant contact with adverse companions, the temptation to engage in pursuits which had formerly no attraction; selfishness, undue elevation of reason and philosophy, and lessened opportunities for Christian work. "Our fellow students compare our practice with our precepts."

BIBLE STUDY FOR PRESENT GROWTH.

Mr. Mott followed, showing how essential to the Christian life is a diligent study of the Word of God, which reveals our needs and possibilities. De Quincey divides literature into literature of knowledge and literature of power. To get either from the Bible we must ask its author. Prayer is not a monologue: it is a dialogue. There is great danger of Christian work becoming mechanical without constant Bible study. The Christian makes his environment, and not it him. "Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." Lack of time for Christian study and work is only a supposititious hindrance. There must be time to be spiritual, to learn the will of God by the study of his Word. Bible study for intellectual purposes, and to prepare for Bible classes, is insufficient. Other devotional works are inadequate by themselves. Study must be methodical, if devotional. Acts, Colossians, Hebrews, Psalms, Isaiah, or Deuteronomy are especially suitable subjects. The messages of the Epistles may be searched for, classified, and prayed over. The life of Christ may be studied in its human and divine relationships. The teachings as to the inward and outward Christian life may be gone into, or study may be biographical, spending a month each on Moses, Jeremiah, Daniel, etc. Or, topical courses may be undertaken, such as the Holy Spirit, prayer, the kingdom, God, the Church. "Define your course clearly, and don't side-track. Count that day lost on which you do not glean one thought anew of Jesus Christ."

Study alone, if possible, with resolute detachment of mind. Be thorough; meditate, record results. Give yourself up to an "intense" spirit, depending on the Holy Spirit of God. Be childlike and prayerful. The organ of spiritual knowledge is spiritual obedience. Let your Bible study be regular, daily, unhurried, uninterrupted, and at the choicest time, the first thing in the morning.

WE BELONG TO JESUS.

On Friday morning at 7 a.m. the lecture hall was crowded for the final meeting, in spite of the rain. The address by Mr. R. A. Speer on the nature of our being owned by the Christ, whose character his Bible studies had enabled us to appreciate so much more fully than ever before, was felt by many to be most helpful and practical, a fitting climax, in the spirit of which to return to our homes and our duties. As we are Christ's, He is responsible for us, both as to place and conduct, which are of greater consequence to Him than to us. It is a heavy thought that bows us down at times, that the world reads into Christ what it reads out of us, but what a thought it is that He is able and willing to share all with us, and to bear all our sins unstained. Our feeling in temptation should be, "Master, thy property is in danger." As we belong to Christ, He is waiting to dwell in us that we may dwell in Him, that there may be perfect community of lives which shall transform our characters. It cannot but help us to linger in that presence. What a new hope it brings into our own striving after a holier life and character to know that Jesus expects us to attain it! What new help it brings into Bible study and prayer to remember that we belong to Jesus! How it makes us "all one in Him!"

The matter of Mr. Speer's previous addresses is far too important and helpful for condensation to meet the requirements of space this week, and must be for the moment reserved. They will well repay a careful study with the Bible.

THE THEATRICAL MISSION.—On the invitation of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred B. Harding, between seventy and eighty members and friends of the Mission met at Macready House on Wednesday, August 1. After tea, Mr. Harding made a short statement as to the work and proposed extension of the Mission, and invited the co-operation of all members in extending its usefulness. Colonel Griffin followed with a very earnest and appropriate address on the value of Bible reading, illustrated by striking anecdotes. Mrs. Power afterwards expressed in earnest and sympathetic words the loving interest which she takes in the work of the Institute.

THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

(By a Special Correspondent.)

The ordination service is always one of the most popular of the public services held in connection with the Conference. The beautiful and spacious Moseley-road Chapel was filled with a deeply-interested audience. The young ministers to be ordained, numbering fifty-three, occupied the front pews in the body of the chapel, and behind them were many of their senior brethren. The service was conducted by the President. Bishop Andrews offered a beautiful and comprehensive prayer. After certain questions had been answered satisfactorily by the candidates for ordination, the young men proceeded to the communion rail in batches of five, and were ordained by the laying on of hands. The President and Secretary of the Conference were assisted in the ceremony by Dr. Rigg, Bishop Andrews, Dr. Young, and other senior ministers. At the laying on of hands in the case of each young minister the President said, "May you receive the Holy Ghost," and handed to each a Bible.

THE EX-PRESIDENT'S CHARGE.

The ex-President, Rev. H. J. Pope, delivered the charge, which occupied nearly an hour. He took as his text the words of St. Paul in Acts xx. 24, "None of these things move me, neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the Gospel of the grace of God." He addressed words of wisdom to the young men before him, expatiating upon the authority, theme, service, and consummation of the Gospel ministry. The Gospel ministry was a divinely-instituted order, not a human invention. Christianity was not a crude system, to be improved in the course of the ages, but a Divine message. Paul was able to say at the end, "I have kept the faith," not "I have manufactured it." A man that had no creed ought to have no pulpit. A preacher who aired his own theories and proclaimed his own doubts presented in the pulpit an example of mental vivisection which would interest few and profit none.

It was the business of the Gospel ministry to testify as well as to proclaim. It was theirs to redeem Evangelical preaching from the discredit into which it has fallen in some quarters. If he thought that Evangelical preaching was declining amongst them, he should despair of their future. Any Church that failed to uplift Christ would be a declining Church. The ex-President deplored the unwholesome tendency to divide teaching from Evangelism. One of the perils of well-to-do Methodism was that of resting content with beautiful services for the comfort of regular churchgoers. They must restore the evening service to its old position as the recognised opportunity for evangelistic effort. They were in the midst of a great uprising of the working classes, but just as the Evangelical revival of the last century saved England from revolution, so a faithful Gospel ministry would save the people from the evils that now threaten them. The multitudes, though not given over to atheism, were, to a large extent, alienated from the Church. It was theirs to bridge over the chasm. He warned his young brethren of the foolishness of being afraid of, or standing aloof from, the working classes, and characterised these errors as the besetting sins of clericalism.

In dealing with the service of the Gospel ministry, he emphasised the importance of pastoral work, and warned his hearers against sheltering themselves under their office. Some men stood upon their office who had nothing else to stand upon. Every part of their ministerial duty, even to the filling in of schedules, should be the occasion of faithful service—"Their meanest task was all Divine."

The ex-President contrasted the glad anticipation of the finished course on the part of the apostle, and the high hopes of the young men before him, entering upon their ministry. There lay before them a history of triumph or defeat. With great power and earnestness Mr. Pope pleaded with them to beware of the things that might mar their usefulness, and blight their anticipation at last of the glorious recompense.

Afterwards, in conference, Bishop Andrews characterised the ex-President's charge as faithful, practical, and inspiring. St. Paul's "week-time" attempts to lead men to Christ should be copied by ministers, who, not only in the pulpit, but in the markets and homes, should be executing their work.

THE FERNLEY LECTURE.

Rev. Professor Findlay, of Headingley College, the author of several commentaries on St. Paul's Epistles, was this year the Fernley lecturer. He chose as his subject: "Christian Morals and Christian Doctrines Viewed in their Connections," and for an hour and a-half addressed a large audience in that historic stronghold of Nonconformity, Carr's-lane Chapel. He took up the position that Christianity was the foundation of all that was good in ethics and morality. The best men of all ages had been men who observed the laws of Christ. Taking the doctrines of the Fatherhood of God, and the atonement for sin, he showed their influence on conduct. The revelation of the Divine character evoked the answering love to God of all that believed in his Son, and to love God was to be and to do everything for his glory. Professor Findlay's discussion of this great subject is issued in book form, and will repay careful reading.

THE WORK OF GOD.

Conversations on the work of God hold an honoured place both in the representative and pastoral sessions of Conference. The numerical returns for the past year, showing an increase of nearly 6000 members, are cause for gratitude and thanksgiving. In the pastoral session, the ex-President said that the brethren everywhere were beginning to ask, "Why cannot we have visible fruit to our ministry, not only in special services, but from week to week?" If they had a passion for the salvation of souls they would have visible results. Rev. Wm. Bradfield told a cheering story of spiritual success in Leicester. The people had been led to "expect great things from God, and to attempt great things for God." Rev. G. King Pryor told of God's blessing upon a Bristol circuit, where there was an unhappy disruption a few years ago. They had beautiful illustrations of how God blessed plain, unostentatious work.

THE SAINTED DEAD.

The secretary of the Conference read the roll of the dead amid solemn silence. Forty ministers in the home and foreign work had rested from their labours during the year. Rev. P. Neville Andrews, who was last Conference elected a member of the Legal Hundred, passed away with almost the suddenness of a translation. Rev. John Baker, M.A., also a member of the Legal Hundred, after serving Methodism in many important circuits, died after a distressing illness. Rev. J. Wakefield Greeves, who rendered distinguished service to the Home Mission cause as financial secretary, passed away on the morning of the annual meeting of his committee. The aged warrior and the young soldier were both among the fallen. Henry M. Haward had died in the eightieth year of his age, after an active ministry of forty-five years. Such was his tender sympathy in pastoral work, that the loving testimony was borne, "He goes in and out amongst us as an angel of God."

J. Lionel Walton, after a brief ministry of fifteen years, wore himself out by hard and ceaseless toil. From his deathbed he sent a pathetic appeal to the congregation gathered in the Southwark Park Chapel, beseeching the unconverted to turn to God. John Hay, converted under the preaching of that apostle of Ireland, Gideon Ouseley, fell asleep in Jesus in the seventy-seventh year of his age, and the fifty-fourth of his ministry. His last years were shadowed by the sad death of his daughter, Mrs. Burgess, who went down in the Roumania. One young man, born in Honduras, and trained in England, had died on the threshold of his work; and a German convert sent as a missionary to West Africa was stricken down after a year and a-half's service in that dangerous field. By such warning God teaches us that we must work while it is day, for the night cometh, when no man can work.

Rev. James Crabtree read the pastoral address to the Methodist societies, which he had been appointed to prepare. The address called attention in choice language to the dangers and needs of religious life to-day. There was in it a ring of earnest warning and wholesome advice that will make it of great value, especially to the young people of Methodism. The present danger of an excessive love of amusement was emphasised, and the sanctity of the Sabbath enforced.

SOUTHSEA.—A ten days' convention on the enduement of power for service will terminate the Gospel services now being held by Mr. Denning in the tent on Southsea Common, from Sept. 1 to 10. Workers are earnestly invited to come together, and with one accord wait for "the Promise of the Father" for their winter's work. T. M.

MR. MÜLLER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

The well-known "Brief Narrative of Facts," which issues annually from Ashley Down, Bristol, has again appeared, now for the fifty-fifth time, presenting new testimony to the power of faith on the one hand and the faithfulness of God on the other. It is gratifying to observe that, while faith has been tried in regard to funds, the directors have been relieved of the severe pressure which about two years ago rested upon them and the work. The "Orphan" account closed on May 26 with a balance in hand of £4871 12s. 9½d.; and the School and Missionary account with a balance of £1012 2s. 3¾d. in hand. During the past year 1950 orphans were under care in the institution, and the directors announce that they will be glad to receive applications on behalf of destitute orphans to fill existing vacancies. During the past year 349 orphans were admitted. The number of deaths was only twenty-one; this, considering the unhealthy parentage in most cases, testifies to the excellence of the régime at Ashley Down. The venerable founder (who in September next, if spared, will enter upon his ninetieth year) still transacts the affairs of the institution, assisted by his valued co-director, Mr. James Wright.

Conservative in the highest degree, Mr. Müller adheres closely, amid all vicissitudes, to the principle with which he started sixty years ago, and writes with that quiet confidence in the faithfulness of God which can only come of a long-tried experience. Here is a specimen:—"Trials of faith and patience continue up to the present time. On the anniversary of the founding of the Institution, sixty years ago, the income by the first two deliveries of letters has been £4 6s. 6d. only, and half-a-sovereign was given irrespective of the post, making altogether £4 16s. 6d., instead of £180 for two days' average expenses, for this is Monday, and yesterday being Sunday, we did not take in letters. Thus it often goes on for many days together that we receive very little, yet God has upheld this institution for sixty years, and we not only owe nothing, but have money in hand."

Among many remarkable answers to prayer, we quote the following:—"Our balance in hand at the beginning of the financial year being so reduced that not the fifth part was left of what we began the year with, though only three months had elapsed, under these circumstances, I fell again on my knees, asking for various blessings, and among others, that even to-day, the Lord's Day, when we take in no letters, He would be pleased to give me means for the institution. And now, see what followed. After the meeting at Stokes Croft Chapel, a gentleman, an entire stranger, came to me, with whom I conversed for a few minutes, and then he put a letter into my hands, saying it was for the orphans. The letter contained these words—'Dear Sir, will you please apply the enclosed for the maintenance of the orphans in your homes.—Yours respectfully, A Pilgrim.' The letter contained a £100 Bank of England note."

Some very pleasing incidents are recorded in this "narrative." Intelligence was received from a former matron respecting one of the old inmates of the institution. The person referred to was the first girl sent out from the House No. 2 (thirty-four years ago) and who has only lived in two places since she was sent out. In her last place she nursed her mistress through a painful illness before she died, and her master followed his wife some months after, leaving her £40 a year. The daughter of her master wished this faithful servant to live near her, and furnished comfortable rooms for her. From Mr. Müller's comments on this case it appears that he had had considerable hesitation in receiving the girl, anticipating much difficulty. "May this instance," he adds, "greatly encourage labourers for the Lord, and make them trust in Him, instead of looking at things after the outward appearance, for, had I done so, E. H. would never have been received by me."

On September 27, 10s. were received from an orphan, formerly in the Homes, accompanied with many expressions of affection, and Mr. Müller adds the information that the writer with her fellow-servant (also a former inmate), had been twenty-seven years in the situation. They left the Orphan House as believers, and have continued in the ways of God. On the same page is noted the interesting fact that on a certain day a girl had been sent out to service after being seventeen years two months and two days in the orphan homes, having been received when seven months old. The specimens of donations given in the report show the usual interesting variety of circumstances, and are accompanied in many cases with Mr. Müller's characteristic comments. Indeed, as readers of these reports already know, they are not simply annual records of work, they are treatises of a practical kind on the life of faith. Devoid of all embellishment, the simple facts are here presented, to the honour of God and the encouragement of his people. ## BIBLE WORK IN JAPAN.

BY REV. H. LOOMIS.

I left Yokohama by rail on April 24, and spent the first night at Shizuoka. This is a city of some 30,000 inhabitants, and is the home of the Shogun who was deprived of his rank and power by the revolution of 1868. He now lives in seclusion, and takes no part whatever in public affairs.

The workers in this field consist of the Canadian Methodists, Protestant Methodists, and Reformed (or Presbyterian) Missions. There is reported to be a hopeful condition of things in all the Churches. While there is no unusual interest, there is growth and encouragement in all departments of Christian work.

I learned that an effort is being made to establish in this city and elsewhere in Japan a new religion. It is proposed to combine whatever is thought to be good in Buddhism, Shintoism, and all other religions into one eclectic system of faith and worship, and in this way to secure a large following and influence.

As a basis to this form of doctrine, there is to be the teaching of the Old Japanese cult, which holds to the divine origin of the Mikado and the superiority of the Japanese people. On this account the movement has a considerable popularity and support among the officials and upper classes, who always wish to show their loyalty to the Emperor.

The whole scheme has not been fully elaborated, and is still in a somewhat undefined and chaotic state. Among many the impression is that it is a mere scheme on the part of a few energetic and ambitious individuals to raise money and get into popular favour, and that it will soon come to an end. But it illustrates how the Japanese are unsettled in their religious views, and are ambitious to get something that will be superior to anything the world has yet known.

On the following day I reached Okazaki. The only Christian work in this town is in connection with the American Southern Presbyterian Mission, and Rev. Mr. Fulton is the resident missionary. He reports that there is a general and determined opposition to Christianity on the part of the Buddhists. Parents have been induced to take their children from the Sunday-school, and if a person is seen to go to a Christian service he is stigmatised by the term "Yasu"—employed as a contemptuous epithet for Christ. So universal and bitter is this spirit that the people are very generally deterred from holding any intercourse with the Christian workers or missionaries.

The Bible-seller in that city reports that if people buy the Scriptures they are urged not to read them, and the purchase of such books is strongly condemned. Many copies of the Bible have been sold to the priests, who read them to find something that they can use as an argument against Christianity. Christ's words on the cross, "My God, My God, why hast Thou forsaken Me?" and the declaration that He came not to bring peace, but a sword, are two favourite passages, which they use as a basis of their assaults upon Christianity.

At Nagoya there is also the same state of determined opposition. It is less violent now than some time ago, but is still very general and decided. Rev. Mr. Morgan has been trying for some time to rent a place for religious service, but finds it almost impossible to do so. One man said he was willing to rent his house, but must first get the consent of his neighbours. He subsequently reported that they were unanimous in their opposition, and were even willing to pay the rent themselves rather than have the place used for such purposes.

After much inquiry another house was found, and the rent paid for two months in advance. But when the friends and neighbours heard of it, they tried by persuasion and threats to make the man give up the contract and return the money. When they found that all such efforts were of no avail, a public meeting was called and the man denounced in the most bitter terms. One speaker said he ought to be put into a kettle of oil and the oil set on fire. Another said he ought to be banished; or at least driven out of the city. Then another objected that it would be wrong to inflict on some other community such a very bad man. No decision was reached; but a band of some thirty rude fellows, called "Soshi," went to the house, and tried to find the owner, who had concealed himself where he could not be found, and thus escaped. He is still afraid to go out; and it is undecided how the matter will end. A short time before, one of the lady missionaries was hit on her head with a stone, and quite severely injured, while coming out of the service on a Sunday evening.

Two of the missionaries recently went to a town at some distance in the interior, on the invitation of some young men who wanted to hear about the Christian religion; but when they reached there, the inhabitants refused to allow any house to be used for Christian service. Even the landlord of the hotel objected to the gathering of any considerable number of persons at his place for religious purposes; and so the four young men who had invited them met at the room in the hotel, and were instructed privately.

But when the presence and character of the foreigners became more fully known, a large number expressed their desire to hear about this new doctrine. They were so urgent that after a while a room was secured, and more than two hundred people assembled and listened gladly for more than two hours to the old but ever new story of God's great love to men in giving his own Son to save them from their sins. One thing is peculiar, that while the priests and lower classes are so active and bitter in their opposition, the officials are unusually kind and friendly, and seem disposed to help the missionaries. This is a matter of special importance, and source of great satisfaction.

A revival in Nagoya, at the close of the new year's week of prayer, has been a great blessing to the labourers, and resulted in important accessions to all the churches. What is especially to be noted is that while five denominations are now represented in that city the unity of spirit is perfect. In the face of such strong opposition it is a matter of special importance, and a source of the greatest satisfaction, that, while the forces of God's army may have different names and methods of administration, they present a united front to the foe.

One thing that is encouraging and hopeful is, that the native pastors and workers, as well as missionaries, are neither frightened nor disheartened by the opposition, but confident that the issue will be success. They have supreme faith in God and the triumph of his truth.

MISS HUBBARD, of Tetuan, gives a cheering account of the professed conversion of some Spanish children attending their meetings, and in several other parts of the mission-field there are tokens of the work of the Spirit of God.

KABYLIA.—Mr. Cuendet has made an interesting tour in Kabylia, and was able to preach the Gospel to small assemblies of men in various places. The way in which the Word is listened to encourages us. We wish we had five or six brethren with a knowledge of Kabyle, who could go amongst these villages to preach Christ. Our brother has finished the translation of Matthew into Kabyle, and the Bible Society has kindly consented to print a small edition of it; this completes all the four Gospels. Our brother's health is far from strong, he has, therefore, gone for a few months to Switzerland.—North Africa.

EAST END JEWS.—Mrs. Sales, who visits much amongst the Jews in the East End of London, meets with chequered experiences. Sometimes she is well received and able to deliver her Gospel message; at other times the reverse is the case. She writes:—"In one family, that of a tailor, I found I should be very welcome as a Jewess, but not otherwise. I began to tell them something about our Saviour, when the husband, suddenly rising from his seat, asked me to leave his house at once, and added, 'Never you darken my door again, or I will throw a hot iron in your face.' Visiting another family, consisting of husband, wife, and five children, for the first time, I introduced the subject of the Messiah, when I was seized by the arm, and before I could think where I was, I found myself in the road and the door of the house closed against me."

ROMANISM IN CANADA.

In my last letter, about four months ago, I told you my hope was that, in the good providence of God, the conversion of Mr. Papineau had shaken the Church of Rome to her foundations here, and I was not mistaken. It would require a volume instead of a short letter to tell you the interesting details of the numerous conversions which have occurred since.

In Springfield, not long ago, after a few addresses to the numerous Roman Catholics who, in spite of prohibition of their priests came to hear the Message of Life, an old man mounted the platform, and, with a voice trembling with emotion, and a face beaming with joy, said: "I feel in my heart that what you have just said of the love and mercy of God for poor sinners is true. I accept the precious gift of an eternal life which the dear Saviour has bought for me on the Cross. Please take my name as one who gives up the heavy yoke of the Pope to accept the sweet one of Jesus." And there were tears of joy rolling on the cheeks of that aged man when he gave me his name that I might enrol it under the glorious banner of Christ.

But how can I tell the joy I felt when thirty-two other Roman Catholics, almost all heads of families, stopped behind to tell me: "We also want to accept Christ for our only Saviour, and his Gospel for the only guide on the way to heaven." Three days later, I was addressing my Roman Catholic countrymen in the thriving town of Skohegan. Though the priest had threatened with eternal damnation those of his people who would come and hear "the Apostate Priest," the hall was crammed by them. I spoke on "Eternal Life, the gift of God through Christ." When I had finished my address on the beauty, the greatness, the value of the gift, I said, 'Who among you will take the gift?" Forty-one signified that they accepted the gift, and gave their names as new followers of the Lamb, who had bought the gift for them with his blood on Calvary.

I would have to tell you the same story of the manifestations of the mercies of God were I to speak of what has occurred at Springfield, Lawrence, Boston, Cacouna, Waterville, and other places.

But I cannot refrain from speaking of what occurred at Newtown. I was just entering the beautiful church of that place, when a fine tall young man, who seemed very excited, presented himself. With trembling voice he said, "I am one of your would-be murderers. Do you remember the last terrible riot at the door of your church in Montreal? I was among those sent to murder you that day, and I do not really understand how you did not die from the stone I threw at you. When I saw you fall on the ground, thinking I had killed you, I fled from Canada, so as not to be hanged. The remembrance of my deed, when your only crime was to come to Montreal to preach the Gospel of Christ, has haunted me day and night. Little by little the thought crept into my mind that the religion which was telling me, through the priests, to kill you, could not be the religion of our Saviour Jesus Christ. I determined to get a copy of the Gospel to see what religion was in that book. I had not finished reading it when I saw that our Church of Rome was a fraud. By the great mercy of God, I have accepted Christ for my Saviour, and through Him I have made my peace with my merciful Heavenly Father. I married here a good Protestant girl, and God has blessed me in many ways, and to-day I am one of the active principal members of this congregation, and the superintendent of its large Sabbath school."

It was a great joy to hear how the Saviour had changed that would-be murderer into a vessel of usefulness.—Yours in Christ,

C. Chiniquy.

THE STARCH GREEN GOSPEL MISSION, which is carrying on a good work in a poor district, just beyond Shepherd's Bush, is greatly in need of a few additional workers to assist in the Sunday-school, open air, and choir. Address, Mr. W. T. Page, 96, Adolphin-road, Shepherd's Bush, W.

MADRAS TAMIL MISSION.—In conection with the first decennial anniversary day (July 1) of this mission the week of prayer (July 1-7) was observed at the various stations of the mission in Madras. A united thanksgiving service was held on July 8, at the Orphan Home, Rev. Joseph Gnanvolivn, of St. Paul's, Vepery, Madras, Rev. A. W. Ruddisill, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Mr. Samuel Israel, and Mr. G. J. Rachel took part in the celebration.

WORKING LADS IN WHITECHAPEL.

After eighteen years of most excellent work in the densely-peopled region of Whitechapel, the Working Lads' Institute is passing out of the hands of those who founded and have conducted it, into the control of the Drapers' Company. Its inception was due to the zeal of Mr. Henry Hill, a City business man, who wrote in our columns a letter which virtually enabled it to be started. It has had, from the practical standpoint, a highly successful career. Many thousands of lads and youths have received within its walls effective help in the battle of life and instruction in the way of salvation. It was the first, perhaps, of a long array of similar institutes, not only in London but in different parts of the country. Of late years, owing no doubt to the multiplication of good works demanding support, and also the prevailing commercial depression, the resources of the institution have not been adequate to its necessities; and Mr. Hill, with his committee, has encountered much difficulty in sustaining the work.

In these circumstances, which have not shown any signs of improvement, it has finally been resolved to hand over the Institute to the Drapers' Company, who have undertaken to carry it on upon the lines that have hitherto guided it. The Company will assume the liabilities of the Institute, amounting to £7000 (including a mortgage of over £5000), and will maintain the work on Christian and unsectarian principles. It will in all probability be affiliated with the People's Palace, from which will come the working staff.

At a meeting of friends in the lecture hall of the Institute on Friday evening the transfer to the Drapers' Company was formally accomplished. A report was read by Mr. Hill, explaining the condition of matters, and the reasons for this new departure. He said that during its history some 7000 lads had passed through the place, having been helped in many ways, and enabled to go out into the world with greater certainty of success. The membership of the Institute during the past winter was over 500, and nearly 1000 lads had been more or less under its good influence. Mr. Hill, we are glad to learn, will continue to take a practical interest in the welfare of the work, and those for whom it exists.

At the meeting on Friday evening (which was presided over by Mr. Reynolds, chairman of committee) brief words were spoken, regret being mingled with more hopeful feelings, in view of the changed aspect of affairs. Several members of committee expressed the pleasure they had had in taking part in the manifold operations of past years, and gave utterance to all good wishes for the years to come. Rev. L. B. White, in the course of his speech, referred gratefully to the practical interest taken by such friends as Rev. Wm. Tyler, Sir Robert Carden, and Sir Robert Fowler, who have all gone to their reward. He rejoiced strongly in the fact that the Institute would still be marked by a truly Christian spirit. Much gratitude was expressed by a subsequent speaker for the unwearied services rendered through all these years by Mr. Hill as founder and hon. secretary of the work. It is pleasing to know that the educational, recreative, and evangelistic branches of the work have been vigorously maintained. The Institute will be temporarily closed till the authorities of the People's Palace are able to take over the various operations, which, it is hoped, will be soon.

In the course of the evening some interesting tokens of esteem on the part of the members were presented to Mr. Aston, one of the active workers, and to Mr. Hill.

THE MAHOMMEDAN MISSION at Bombay, under Rev. J. G. Deimler, which was blessed with seven converts during 1893, continues to bear fruit. Mr. Deimler had some time ago the joy of baptizing four men and one woman in the Girgaum Church.

THE EVANGELICAL NATIONAL INSTITUTION in Stockholm, whose attention has long been directed towards the Galla people in East Africa, is now making another effort to reach the hitherto unattainable Gallaland. The road thither by way of Abyssinia being blocked on account of the opposition of that country, an entrance will, for the first time, be sought from the south. The expedition, says The Calwer Missions Blatt, has been carefully planned, and consists of four European agents, accompanied by several Christian Gallas, the latter representing the labours of the Swedish missionaries near the Red Sea.

"TWO SIDES TO A SAINT."

The praises of St. Francis de Sales have been celebrated ad nauseam by biographers and essayists, and little disposition has been shown to scrutinise his career. In 1878 Dr. Lasnard Woolsey Bacon, an American scholar resident in Geneva, contributed an article on the subject to Macmillan's Magazine, with the title "Two Sides to a Saint." A contemporary critic pronounced the article to be one which the apologists of St. Francis would do well to answer, and added: "If they pass it by the world may well be excused for believing that it is unanswerable." Sixteen years having passed, and no reply having appeared, the essay has been reissued by George Bridel and Co., Lausanne.

The essay gives a graphic picture of the scheming ecclesiastic, and the reader awaits in vain the appearance of the features of the "Saint." The "conversion" of the Protestants in the Chablais was organised by the same calculating and heartless propagandist who undertook to reduce to submission to the Pope of Rome no less a personage than Theodore Beza, who had become to Calvin what Melanchthon was to Luther. The student of Reformation history reads with indignation of the temptation to which this aged servant of Christ was exposed.

Argument proving of no avail, Francis reported his ill-success to the Pope, and asked for further instructions. Dr. Bacon continues: "The instructions came; and this young gentleman was not ashamed to go back to the poor study in which the old man toiled at his daily work, with the offer, in the name of the Pope, of an annual pension of 4000 gold crowns, and a gift of twice the value of all his personal property, as the price of his apostasy. It is Francis himself that tells the shameful story, and adds that seeing that he was accomplishing nothing he withdrew and returned to Thonon. A contemporary manuscript, preserved at Geneva, adds that, at these insulting words, old Beza's gentle expression changed to sternness. He pointed to his empty bookshelves, whose precious contents had been sold to provide for the suffering refugees from France, and, opening the doors for his guest, let him go with a Vade retro, Sathanas."

In conclusion, Dr. Bacon wrote, and it seems that his words must stand as incontestably true:—"There were noble and beautiful things in Francis, but one tires of seeing this adroit and courtier-like fanatic, with his duplicity and cold-blooded cruelty, recommended in standing advertisements to the abused public as 'a model of Christian saintliness and religious virtue for all time,' as having lived 'a life as sweetly pure and noble as any man by divine help has been permitted to live upon earth,' and as having been 'admirable for his freedom from bigotry in an age of persecution.' Neither can we enter fully into sympathy with those to whom it is a matter of entire thankfulness to find a distinctively Anglican writer setting forward the ferocious and perfidious dragonnades by which he extinguished Christian light and liberty in the provinces south of Lake Leman, and smote that lovely region with a blight that lingers on it visibly until this day, 'as a true missionary task to reclaim souls from deadly error, and bring them back to the truth.'" (The quotations are from "Opinions of the Press," in Messrs. Rivington's catalogue.) That writer would render a good service, not only to history, but to practical religion, who should give the world a true picture of Francis de Sales, with all his singular graces and with his crying faults; and so supersede the myriads of impossible fancy portraits with nimbus and wings, with eyes rolling in mystical rapture, and with the everlasting smirk of "sweetness" and gentleness.

THE FREE EVENING CLASSES for Christian workers, held at the Pastors' College, are about to be resumed. All wishing to join are requested to write to Mr. G. Hall, Secretary of Evening Classes, Pastors' College, Temple-street, Nowington, S.E., enclosing stamped envelope for reply.

MARSEILLES.—We have good news to report of the work; souls have lately been saved, and several others are most promising. My landlord has recently improved and slightly enlarged the Rest, but we daily realise the need of suitable premises where the family life would bring its influences to bear on our boys. I have just £378 15s. towards our building fund, either given or promised, but need between £3000 and £4000.

BRITISH SAILORS IN HAVRE.

By the Hon. Lady BEAUCHAMP.

The much-needed, much-longed-for "New Home" has not yet been given to us. The landlord of the present Home will not make any repairs unless a long lease is taken. In consequence, our Home is getting into a most dilapidated state. Our surroundings, too, do not improve. The last out of the many respectable houses which existed when we first took the Home, has been bought, and turned into the nineteenth drink house in the very short street in which we are situated. Almost every sailor that comes into the Home asks why we have it in such a situation, and why we do not move into a better quarter. Our answer is that it is impossible for us to find a suitable house in a suitable quarter, and that our only way of escape from such awful surroundings is to build.

We require nearly £4000 for the purchase of land and erection of a plain building in a locality that we have had our eye on for some time past, where we could never have any building either opposite to us or immediately joining us. Towards this much-wished-for necessity we have at present only £1210 either paid or promised. We are glad to be able to announce that lately, in addition to a local committee (consisting of the Consul-General of Sweden and Norway, Mr. William Mason, and Mr. Jas. Winning, of the Cunard Company), we have now the co-operation of Mr. John Cory, of Cardiff, Mr. T. A. Denny, and Mr. William Seagram, who have consented to act as trustees of the new Home as soon as sufficient money is sent to commence the new building. Besides the boon that out of "sailor-town" would be to our sailors, we should greatly benefit in a financial point of view, as we propose to put our present Sailors' Rest and Coffee Bar under the same roof as our new Home, each having its own separate entrance. Hitherto the united rents of the Rest and Home have been £360 per annum, causing us during the ten years of the Home, and the five years of the Rest and Coffee Bar, an expenditure of £2000 for rent only. We shall also be able to reduce our household expenses, as one staff will suffice to work the Home, Rest, and Coffee Bar. These reductions, if carried out, would be an immense relief to our slender and uncertain resources, which, alas! during the past years have been curtailed, through the diminished income of those who were privileged to bear the greater part of the expenses. Commerce has been stagnant in France, as well as other countries. This has caused shipping to be very slack, and consequently the number of our boarders diminished much during the last six or seven months.

ANSWERED PRAYER.

Owing to this combination of circumstances, we found to our great sorrow that a few months ago we had a debt of £80. Such a thing had never happened to us during the ten years of our stewardship of this Home. For some weeks we asked daily that our Heavenly Father would send the help needed to remove the blot in the work. Every possible economy was exercised, and we asked whether we were to continue the Home, as the command is, "Owe no man anything." God in his infinite mercy heard our cry, and in his own way and in his own time sums came in from those who had no knowledge of the debt, and as we write to-day the debt is reduced to £13. We feel this will also be supplied before long, that we may take fresh courage and go on in this his work.

OUR SAILORS' REST AND COFFEE BAR

has also suffered in diminished receipts through the slackness of shipping, but we find much to encourage and interest us there. It is open from 7 a.m. till midnight. English, French, and Scandinavian landsmen, as well as sailors, are to be found there, and an evening seldom passes without finding opportunities of talking to some about either the joy or the need of having a personal living Saviour. Songs and Solos are sung all together in Swedish, French, English, and sometimes German—one song in many tongues praising the Saviour of all men. We receive letters and also hear privately from many parts of the world, of men who thank God for his message given in the Sailors' Home and Rest, as having been the means of bringing life and light to their dark and weary lives. Many also express much gratitude at finding such a Rest and Home in a foreign town, where among 3000 drink houses they find in the Rest and Coffee Bar the only temperance bar in the midst of its 22,000 inhabitants.

TRACTS AND SCRIPTURES.

We keep no record of tracts given away, but know that thousands are given away in all tongues, and scores of bags given to sailors in ten different languages. We have to thank the Religious Tract Society and the British and Foreign Bible Society for supplying us with tracts and Bibles at a reduced price. Through the liberality of Mr. Gurney Barclay, we have been able this year to arrange in the two large windows of the coffee bar open Bibles and texts in more than twelve languages. The prices are marked on them for sale, and during the last six months we have sold 80fr. worth of Scriptures; amongst others we have sold portions in Arabic, Armenian, Hebrew, and Japanese.

We find that this exhibition of God's Word attracts many to the window, who read in their own tongue John iii. 16, and like passages. In one case we know of a Frenchman who was distinctly blessed in passing along and his eye catching the message of love. In another case a young Frenchman came in to get his coffee in the Rest. Seeing the Word of God he thought it must be a good place. He came after that, always regularly. We found he had a feeble glimmer of light, which God increased through his daily visits to us (he could only come at mid-day). He is now in the fleet at Cherbourg, and we have delightful letters from him. The Protestant pastor at Cherbourg sends good accounts of his conduct ashore and afloat.

THE SPIRITUAL WORK,

both in the Home and Rest, is chiefly in personal dealing. Having no accommodation in the Rest or means sufficient to procure a mission room on the ground floor, we are unable to have popular evangelistic meetings, but we do thank God for the many who have been reached through quiet talks in the bar and tiny meetings upstairs. We are confident that God has heard our prayer for the salvation of many of our sailors' souls, and that He has their names written in the Lamb's Book of Life. We feel much the need of a mission room on the ground floor, especially when we have many sailors in port, and we have sought to obtain any vacant room in our neighbourhood, but such exorbitant rent has been asked that it was impossible to compete with the café-keepers who have succeeded in getting them for liquor-houses.

The £4000 which we are asking for our new building will include in the Home, serving as a recreation room in the day (besides the bowling alley which we hope to have), and in the evening it will be used to announce the glad tidings to whosoever will come in. As our building will be placed in the midst of all sorts of ships and steamers, we hope we shall get many in. We could use it also for French and any language in which friends could come and tell the old old story to the many nationalities with which we shall be surrounded in the centre of the docks.

When friends have helped to build the new Home, then we shall want other friends to come and help us, in seeking to invite and to speak to these souls out of every tribe and nation, not forgetting our own British sailors, who are our first care in the Home. Any interested in God's work for sailors are invited, if they are coming abroad, to come viâ Southampton and Havre, and stop a few days at the Sailors' Rest, 23, Quai Casimir, Delavigne, where they can lodge and board for 6fr. a day. Fast steamers come now; the time at sea is four and a-half hours, and two hours in the Solent. A train leaving Waterloo at 9.30 p.m. will bring travellers to Havre at 6.30 a.m. the next morning. A through ticket to Paris, allowing a break at Havre, can be procured.

We wish to add that our friends of the Mission to Seamen have a reading room open in the evening, which is doing a good work in a part of the docks quite away from where we propose to build. Our building is for a Home and Rest, and coffee bar open from 7 a.m. till midnight. With 3000 drink houses we do not think that three places to save souls is a right proportion.

GOSPEL WORK IN BELGIUM.

Sir,—Having returned from a visit to the Christian Missionary Church of Belgium, as deputy from the Presbyterian Church of England, I am much impressed with the devotion of its ministers and people, and with the success which is attending their labours. With an income of £6000, they are carrying on evangelistic work in 100 different centres. That gives little margin for special calls.

One case in particular calls for assistance at this moment. On Sunday morning I was present at morning service at Jumet, in the centre of the coal district. The hall, holding 250, was quite full. About fifty persons took part in the Lord's Supper. With one or two exceptions, all present were direct converts from Roman Catholicism; with one or two exceptions, all belonged to the labouring classes. The building, once a café, is too small for the congregation; it is falling to pieces. A church has been built to hold eventually 500 people; it is to be opened on August 15. By brave efforts amongst themselves and their compatriots they have raised £1200: several hundreds are still required. The balance is a terrible burden on the heart and the work of the pastor. He is not permitted to represent congregational needs in England. I would plead for him, feeling sure that those who have the preaching of the Gospel at heart could not dispose of their gifts better than in establishing this cause.—Yours, etc.,

C. Anderson Scott.

SUMMER WINDS.

They come, so buoyant and fresh and sweet—
These winds that sweep through the meadow grass,
Reviving a loveliness most complete
In the glades and the woodlands which they pass,
As, singing their music of mystic tone,
They glide to the valleys fair and lone.

Vast, as I listen the earth grows vast,
Oh, they have voices of wondrous sound;
What are the oceans their wings have passed?
And the regions whereunto they now are bound?
As ever and ever they upward bear
The song of praise and the wail of prayer.

They fill all the earth. Yet whence have they come?
And where are they going? Ah, who can tell?
Who knoweth the place of the wild winds' home,
Of all who may list to their glorious swell
Through mighty, mysterious, awful space
Surrounding our fragile dwelling-place?

They change with a sympathy large and true,
They are stern, tempestuous, soft, and kind,
As if the great heart of this world they knew,
And felt every turn of its restless mind,
And caught every sigh of each soul opprest,
As they murmur and sob and sink to rest.

Father, Creator, I hear their voice,
Calmly I hear in the wildest hour;
Thy hand restrains them, and I rejoice
And bless Thee for all thy mighty power;
And when they come as a soft caress,
I bless Thee for thy great gentleness.

Father, Creator, thy love unknown,
Is told by the winds of north or west,
The earth relies on thy power alone,
And what Thou sendest is right and best;
And wherever thy free winds blow abroad
Thy works shall declare, and praise Thee, Lord.

MRS. M. B. FULLER, of the Alliance Mission, Akola, now in America, expects to return to her work in India in the autumn, taking a party of new missionaries with her.

A STRANGE PROCESSION.—A pathetic story that comes from China gives an illustration of how medical missions prepare the way for the advance of Christianity. A military graduate was successfully treated for a cataract at the mission hospital in Hankow. As he returned to his home forty-eight other blind men gathered about him, and begged him to lead them to the wonderful foreign doctor. So this strange procession of blind men, each holding on to the other's rope, walked for 250 miles to Hankow, and nearly all were cured. One, who could not be cured, received while in the hospital the better gift of spiritual healing.

AMONG SAILORS AT SHANGHAI.

It is hardly necessary to say that one great hindrance to the extension of Christ's Kingdom in the hearts of our seamen and to their temporal and social welfare is the demon of strong drink and its twin sister impurity. It is the testimony of nearly all the captains and officers visiting our port that these evils are more rampant here than in almost any other port in the world, one reason being the fact that nearly every sampan man, tailor, shoemaker, or washerman is ready to supply liquor (and that of the vilest), and another that a basin of samshoo can be bought for five cash and a bottle of so-called gin or whisky for ten cents. Then again, during the meal hours the men's quarters on board ship are visited by Chinese women, under a pretence of mending clothes.

Still there is a brighter side to our work. The fact that 163 dollars were given, principally by seamen, towards expenses at the offertories in the Church of our Saviour last year shows that all the sailors are not devoid of interest in the service and worship of God. To extend the usefulness of our Mission we greatly need a steam launch. It would enable us to get down to Woosung to visit the hold services, etc., on board the vessels at that anchorage. During last year the Customs returns show that 327 vessels (not including the Empress steamers) worked cargoes at Woosung. There generally the seed is sown which bears such evil fruit on arrival in Shanghai. With a launch at our disposal we would meet the ships at Woosung, forewarn, and by God's help forearm the men against the temptations awaiting them here. Of course the launch would also be of great service in conveying the men to and from the meetings held for them on shore.

Going on board a large sailing-ship, the Drumeltan, a few days ago, I received a hearty welcome from the chief officer, and found he had been enrolled at Cork Harbour as a volunteer mission helper some three years ago. He had held a little service nearly every Sunday evening on the voyage out, and as a result I found several of the men and all the apprentices and officers ready to attend our meetings, and look on us as friends. We at once arranged a short service on board to break the ice, and during the stay of the ship in this port there were always some of her people at every meeting. When she left, the captain, officers, and apprentices sent me 39 dollars as their contribution to the launch fund, and, better than all, three of the apprentices nailed signboards (texts) in their bunks as open evidence of the fact that they meant, by God's help, to fight manfully under the banner of Jesus Christ. Very frequently, on going among the men on board the home steamers and introducing myself, I am told, "Oh, yes, sir, some of us will come up to-night. Mr. Goldsmith, of Hong Kong, told us to look you up, and said you would give us some more reading," etc.

So the seed is sown, in much weakness, but in simple trust that the Lord of the harvest will graciously water it with the continual dew of his blessing. I feel that the visitation of the ships and steamers is the most important part of my work, as, of course, one gets an earnest word with many who would not come to any regular service or meeting. H. NEWCOMB.

THE COST OF STIMULANTS in the workhouses of the United Kingdom has fallen from £82,554 in 1871 to £34,332 in 1891.

THREE CLUBS of the University of Leipzig have determined to give up meeting in the mornings for the purpose of drinking beer.

FOLKESTONE.—We commend to foreign visitors and residents in this favourite seaside resort two services in French, every Sunday, at 6 p.m., in the school room adjoining Rev. C. Bosanquet's church (Radnor Park), conducted by the Rev. E. Christen, pastor of the Crypt Church, Canterbury Cathedral. The effort has been successfully made for two years past, and is a laudable endeavour for the work of evangelisation.

GOODWOOD RACES.—These fashionable races were visited this year by Messrs. Wallis and Snow, in connection with the Open Air Mission. Eight thousand tracts were distributed, and interesting conversations were held with several men. One who had sunk in the social scale through drink said his father was a minister in the north of Scotland. He professed to have been impressed with the words he heard. Open air meetings were held in the streets of Chichester. The Y.M.C.A. lent the use of their hall for meetings.

ANTI-LYNCHING COMMITTEE.

A large and representative committee has been formed in response to the appeal for help which has reached this country from the negro population of the United States of America. The objects of this committee are: "To obtain reliable information on the subject of lynching and mob outrages in America; to make the facts known; and to give expression to public opinion in condemnation of such outrages in whatever way may best seem calculated to assist the cause of humanity and civilisation."

Miss Ida B. Wells did much to bring the question home to the hearts and consciences of the public; but each day, through cablegrams and letters, through resolutions passed at negro conferences, manifestoes signed by citizens of repute, or evidence sworn to before public notary, confirmation arrived from the States which shows that the reports of the numbers of atrocities have been under-estimated rather than exaggerated, and that hundreds of coloured men and some women are annually shot, branded, hanged, burned to death, or even, it is feared, buried alive and otherwise tortured under the name of "Lynch Law."

In order to promote the objects stated, three white men, one an American and two Englishmen (bearing names well known on both sides of the Atlantic), are now making investigations in the States, but for obvious reasons no coloured man has been accredited to investigate or report for this committee. Realising the extreme delicacy of dealing with the internal affairs of other States in matters with which their Federal Government seems powerless to intervene, the executive committee have already sought the advice and co-operation of the Americans themselves in formulating plans, and they have faith to believe that it needs but this initiative, not only for the old Abolitionists, but for every lover of justice in the United States, to league themselves State by State for the protection by the law of the eight millions of negroes.

The treasurer of the committee is Mr. J. Passmore Edwards, 51, Bedford-square, W.C., and the hon. sec. is Miss Florence Balgarnie, 13, Tavistock-square, London, W.C.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR NOTES.

In Singapore the Epworth League is doing effective work among the Chinese and Malays.

The Epworth League (Methodist Y.P.S.C.E.) is doing good work in many parts of India.

The first Junior C.E. Society was formed in March, 1884; there are now 6809 junior societies, with a membership of 365,000.

India has 72 societies, Japan 59, the West Indies 44, Turkey 38, China 23, and Madagascar 30. In missionary lands there are in all 2740 societies.

The C.E. Society at High-street, Boston, celebrated its fifth anniversary with great success last Sunday and Monday. Sermons and addresses were delivered by Rev. W. Knight Chaplin.

Despite the railroad strike the Christian Endeavourers mustered between twenty and thirty thousand strong at the Chicago Convention. The meetings were held in fifteen churches of the city. The constrained absence of President Francis E. Clark, D.D., was universally regretted. He is suffering from nervous prostration. For several weeks he has been under the care of a physician, hoping to gain sufficient strength to be present, but was forbidden to undertake the journey and risk the excitement.

In the United States the denominational C.E. representation is as follows: The Presbyterians still lead, with 6652 companies; the Congregationalists have 5488; the Baptists, 3203; the Disciples of Christ and Christians, 2895; Methodist Episcopal, 1287; Methodist Protestants, 963; Lutherans, 851; Cumberland Presbyterians, 744; and so on through a long list. In Canada the Presbyterians lead with 842; the Methodists are next, with 812; the Baptists have 159; the Congregationalists 128.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—On Monday, August 6, the usual Bank-holiday tea was given to a large number of sailors, presided over by Mr. and Mrs. J. Theo Isaac, who are ever so untiring in their efforts to bring joy to cheerless hearts and lives. Two open-air meetings were held outside the Rest, at which addresses and solos were listened to with marked attention. During the evening, meetings were held in the various rooms of the Rest, both for Scandinavian and English sailors. At the close of a bright testimony meeting, nine or ten stood up, to signify a desire to be prayed for.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Mr. W. J. Crossley has been elected president of the Manchester Y.M.C.A.

The assistant travelling secretary in Scotland has been visiting in the Dumfries and Ayr districts.

From June 3-15, special meetings were held in Sydney in connection with the jubilee of the Y.M.C.A. Many leading and influential men took part. The Young Men's Magazine is wholly devoted to a history of the Y.M.C.A., with portraits of its leaders.

The missionary meeting in connection with the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. is deepening in interest and usefulness. The average attendance is about thirty-eight, and some time is spent in prayer at every meeting for the various missions with which the members are acquainted.

The Christian Institute, Glasgow, has been painted from top to bottom, and with the electric light in all the rooms, is a most attractive home for young men. The arrangements for the coming winter are now completed, and the pocket manual will be issued in the beginning of August.

The fifth annual report of the Ayr United Association records a great deal of good work by the members. Visitation of branches and interchange of essays form a feature of the work. United fellowship meetings, Sabbath evening meetings for young men, and courses of popular lectures have been held.

Mr. D. McConaughy, secretary of the Madras Association, sailed from England last Friday, returning to his Indian field of service. He is to have an assistant in the person of Mr. Raymond J. Davis, of Lehigh, Pa. Mr. Davis has had five years' experience in railroad work, and has lately been engaged in Association work in colleges.

The South London Y.M.C.A. Magazine says:—"It is with the greatest possible pleasure we record another successful and helpful month in the spiritual part of the work. Considering the holidays, the Sunday Bible Class is well sustained, and the open-air meetings keep up their tone and power, and are even better attended than a month ago."

The Montrose Association has lately moved into larger and better, but still hired, premises. They look forward hopefully, however, to the time when they will possess a building of their own. Evangelistic effort is an important branch of this Association's work, and during the past season the special efforts put forth resulted in a number of professed conversions.

The young men who preach at a farmhouse at Pantygelly, Abergavenny, held their annual meeting August 2. There was a good attendance, with capital speaking and lively singing. The enjoyable service in the large kitchen was thronged. For some years the Gospel has been proclaimed here, and for the past few by the Y.M.C.A., who care for the villages in the neighbourhood.

New rooms have recently been acquired for the Anglo-Hebrew Association at Jerusalem, situated within the City walls. The opening was the occasion of a very pleasant gathering. Among those present were Revs. A. H. Kelk, J. Jamil, A. H. Hanower, and W. Heathcote; also a number of young men of various nationalities. The future prospects of the Association are encouraging, Capitally executed photographic groups of the recent jubilee gathering at Windsor are now on view at Exeter Hall. The largest group (embracing in one picture the three sectional groups) measures five feet six inches by two feet nine, and has for a background to the picture the whole eastern front of Windsor Castle. Probably it is one of the largest photographs ever produced. The price is five guineas. Her Majesty the Queen has graciously accepted a framed copy of this picture, which now hangs in St. George's Hall. A reduced fac simile can be had for 13s. 6d., while the three sectional groups are 3s. 6d. each. The photographer is Mr. Kissack, of Eton.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The new Home and Institute recently opened in Berkeley Square, Clifton, is already doing good work.

The Cork Y.W.C.A. have now a small Holiday Home at Myrtleville, Crosshaven, where members will be welcomed.

The St. Albans Branch, not yet two years old, makes progress slowly. The interest of the members in spiritual things seems deepening.

Miss Hill, of Dayton, Ohio, has been appointed general secretary of the Y.W.C.A. in Madras. This branch has been formed since Mr. and Mrs. McConaughy went to that city. It has over three hundred members.

THE UNIVERSITIES MISSION has opened its latest station in Unangu, one of the most important centres of population in Yaoland, yet hitherto untouched by missionary effort.

Letters to the Editor.

RITUALISM.

Sir,—I do not know if anyone will care to give a denial to Mr. Carlile's conclusions in his letter on the above subject, but I am greatly surprised to discern his inability to realise the advance of Ritualism in the Anglican or Protestant Church; not in "the externalism," as he terms it, but in "the doctrine" of that Church, of which the "externalism" is the outer garb; and to hide one's face under "a cloak" of Spurgeon or Moody, whose doctrine contained no Ritualism, seems strange theorising for unwary souls to digest.

How can "baptismal regeneration" and "faith" meet and shake hands? Are they all one? Is there no difference between God on the one hand and man on the other? If God saves his people, "baptismal regeneration" is not God; for this takes place, as Mr. Carlile must now know, "without priest" and "without any sacrament," and of the will and foreknowledge "of God" in his eternal decree; this is "the elect" church of his ordaining, of which the High Church party have no cognisance, yet they seek Him in their parishes! For why?—Believe me,

A Sincere Christian.

Sir,—I have read Mr. Carlile's letter in last week's Christian with considerable interest. I am glad to hear that in his own church he has given up the eastward position, and that he encourages the preaching of conversion and the baptism of the Holy Spirit. I should like to ask him, as founder and hon. chief sec. of the Church Army:—

1. Has he ever known or permitted the teaching of baptismal regeneration to be carried on in the training homes?

2. Has he ever known or permitted the introduction of pictures, crosses, painted windows, in any of the chapels belonging to the labour homes or other buildings connected with the Army?

3. Has he himself ever joined the English Church Union?

I must confess that, as an Evangelical Christian, I have not the same confidence that I once had in the Protestant teachings and practices in the Church Army. There has been too much coquetting with Ritualism.

Is Mr. Carlile correct when he says that the large mass of English Churchmen have a greater and more intelligent horror of the superstitions of Rome to-day than they had twenty years ago? I am afraid that there does not exist much horror; otherwise Rome and Romanisers would not have advanced so rapidly within the last two decades.

Thank God, I believe that the masses (not the classes) are opposed to Romanism and sacerdotalism, for they are beginning to realise that priestcraft is dangerous to civil and religious liberty.—Yours truly,

W. T. McCormick.

Sir,—Permit me to thank Rev. W. Carlile for his reply (in your issue of the 2nd inst.) to my article on the above subject in Word and Work of July 13. It seems somewhat reassuring to have a favourable forecast from one of so large an experience in the Establishment as the founder of the Church Army. Perhaps, too, a layman, however observant, has not the same opportunities of judging in this matter as an ordained minister engaged in active work.

Mr. Carlile thinks that my "doleful forecast is entirely a mistake." Well, my real forecast, correctly put forward by you, Sir, was, that "the people of England will never tolerate a return of this country to Romanism." I presume that is not the forecast to which Mr. Carlile refers; but the other rather, which said that the Church of England was fast hastening to Rome. In this latter, however, I am only reproducing the forecast of many eminent ecclesiastics of the Establishment.

But leaving predictions (in which we shall never agree), let us come to facts. My figures about Ritualism (for which I presume "externalism" is a euphemism) were those given by Archdeacon Farrar. I wish Mr. Carlile had been at Prince's Hall, and heard the startling array of facts which Prebendary Webb-Peploe read from various sources. They quite accord with my own humble experience, which is that it is very easy, almost anywhere, to find a church where Ritualism is rampant, and very difficult to find one where Evangelical teaching prevails. In my own neighbourhood I have not to go a stone's throw from my house to find "priests" parading the church with banners and a crucifix, before which the congregation bow down as it passes them. There is another very similar church within six minutes' walk, and there are two more within fifteen minutes'. There is no Evangelical Church within a considerable distance of my house. As a matter of fact, I usually walk eight miles (two journeys) every Sunday to hear the true principles of Reformation-Protestantism upheld.

It is just the same when I go to the seaside in summer. Of course in the large towns, such as Brighton and Eastbourne, one can find Evangelical ministers, but in small towns and villages the chances are that there are none, except among Dissenters. The village I went to this very summer has two fine parish churches, both of them captured by the Ritualists; and I, together with several friends (members of the Church of England), had to attend a Methodist chapel to hear the Gospel preached in its simplicity.

After all, outsiders are often the best judges in these matters; and Cardinal Vaughan, speaking not long ago at Tottenham, called the present Romeward movement in the Church of England "a wondrous inspiration of grace from God!" and he reiterated the same sentiment over and over again with gratitude and delight. If, as Mr. Carlile says, "the large mass of English Churchmen have a greater and more intelligent horror of the superstitious of Rome to-day than they had twenty years ago," how does he account for the cardinal's ecstasy?—Yours truly, Avary H. Forbes.

"THE NOVEL OF THE MODERN WOMAN."

Dear Sir,—Referring to the article in the current number of The Review of Reviews on the above subject, and to your comments thereon in a recent issue, it appears to me that a satisfactory solution of the problem will never be arrived at on the lines indicated in the volumes which have been written with regard to it. I think that it is necessary to remember at the outset that it is the teaching of the Bible permeating society and the nation, and that alone, which has led to the elevation of woman from the position of degradation which she occupied in ancient times (and which indeed she still holds in non-Christian lands), and that as a natural consequence it follows that the further improvement of her condition, both morally and socially, can only by obtained by the same method.

The Bible has hitherto been as it were the ladder by which woman has climbed upward, and if it is now cast aside for some other means, of human invention, the result to all concerned can be nothing but disastrous.

The remedy for the injustice and degradation complained of is, after all, ready to hand. Let both men and women sincerely and honestly carry out the teaching of Christ as contained in the four Gospels and the Epistles, and the relationship of the sexes will be easily and harmoniously adjusted. As they seek each "in honour to prefer one another" they will find the questions which vex and harass the thinking mind are satisfactorily answered, and that in mutually striving to keep the law of love, they have discovered in the fullest and truest sense how to live in accordance with the perfect law of liberty.—Yours truly,

Addiscombe. H. R. B.

THOUGHT-GROWTH IN CONFERENCES.

Sir,—We all know that growth is a law of God in the spiritual as in the natural world. We are commanded to grow in grace as we are in knowledge, but it is in us individually an unconscious process; we can only trace growth in ourselves when we look back upon our former mental conditions.

The seed, the root, the branches, the graft, the leaf, the fruit, are all stages marked for us in the Scripture.

But growth, silent and gradual, unobserved by us in ourselves, becomes quite a different thing in large bodies such as Churches and Conferences, etc., these latter being a marked feature of our times and other missionary bodies. In them growth of thought is seen by all, and it marches by long strides, and one needs the line and plummet of the Word of God to test their utterances.

Thought on the second advent of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ has grown to a steady strong line for faith, and has become a bright flame since the Brethren started a small beacon light fifty years ago; before that time darkness had settled thickly on that glorious headland of truth. Now those who doubt his coming again in person, or who consider his reign to be a wholly spiritual one, are comparatively few in number, and prophetic conferences multiply, and are losing their asperities on matters of detail as to his appearing.

It was pleasant to note the happy arrangement at the Keswick Convention this year, having the hopeful and yet warning note of a three days' conference on "The Blessed Hope" of the Church sounded just before the usual week of consecration meetings. "Be ye therefore ready," was a suitable prelude to the "Be ye holy" message always then delivered. We are growing in unity of truth; to keep it in proportion is a matter of great importance to us all; and the growth is always slow in conventions. We have been hitherto people of one idea in the matter, and press home at each one, one side of truth only.

The subject of sanctification has suffered much from this undue pressure to the front, and such terms as the "second blessing," "the blessing," and other words have stolen into the place of an indwelling Christ, the Master of the house, and the Giver of all good things, who, in giving Himself, gives all the waiting soul needs. We are growing rapidly in truth and soberness in the consideration of "the deepening of spiritual life." We are finding Christ to be our only well spring of living water—"Himself," our deep sweet well of love.

The thought of the unity of all true believers in the body of Christ being manifested apart from denominationalism, which was inaugurated forty years ago in the conference at Barnet, was thought by many to be a Utopian project that must fail of accomplishment, but it became a grand success, and is a true illustration of the teaching of the Lord and the Apostles; and each year repeats itself at Mildmay and Keswick in the great confession of one Lord, one faith, one baptism.

Perhaps some day in the near future we may see such a united Conference as one on the Mildmay, Keswick, and Clapham lines, held annually, and forming a combination of truth, a testimony to our generation that truth is a great whole, one and indivisible, like Him who is a whole Christ and a coming King, Himself the Life, the Truth, the Way.

"The Church's one foundation" is evermore Jesus Christ the Lord. M. L.

PERSONALIA.

Mr. Montagu Waldegrave, who has gone to Mashonaland, asks prayer for a blessing on efforts to witness for the Lord among those who are away from Christ.

H.M. the Queen of Sweden and Norway has just sent Mr. Josiah Spiers £10 towards his special appeal for £3000 for the work of the foreign branch of the Children's Special Service Mission.

Rev. J. Gelson Gregson hopes to leave England on September 8 for Cape Ceylon and India. Meantime letters should be addressed to the Grand Parade, Portsmouth, and not to the Soldiers' Institute.

Bishop Tugwell arrived at Lagos at the end of May. He was welcomed with unmistakable signs of affection. "The memories of January," he writes, "still linger in the hearts and minds of all, subduing and softening, and, I think, deepening the affections."

Dr. Clark is to be succeeded in the foreign secretaryship of the American Board by Dr. J. S. Barton, formerly a missionary under the Board in Turkey, who has proved his qualification for the post by his temporary service, necessitated by Dr. Clark's failing health.

Miss Frances E. Willard has recently had the degree of LL.D. conferred upon her by the Ohio Wesleyan University. This honour has been given to many distinguished persons, but to Miss Willard belongs the additional distinction of being the first woman to receive this degree from an institution of the high rank of the Ohio University.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Michelsen have been ill with fever in Tongoa. So our brother informs us in a brief letter; to which his wife appends a note:—"My poor husband had a great collapse after writing the above. It was quite too much for him, although I think he is gradually recovering. I hope he may soon be stronger. He looks very, very ill. I am better, thank God, though still weak and not able to do anything. The attacks of fever were very severe, and we were quite unconscious at times."

Rev. Dr. Landels completes, in October, the fiftieth year of his ministry, and it has been thought by many friends that the occasion should be celebrated by the presentation of a testimonial in some degree adequate to the distinguished services he has rendered in England and Scotland. The members of Dublin-street Church, Edinburgh, over which Dr. Landels has presided for the past twelve years, very cordially inaugurate this movement, and look with confidence to those who, for a still longer period, have shared the benefits of his ministrations, to carry out this proposal. An early response to this appeal is respectfully requested, and cheques may be made payable to the hon. treasurer, Mr. Andrew A. Rose, 26, Regent-terrace, Edinburgh.

Bishop-designate of Tinnevelly.—"We learn," says the C.M.S. Intelligencer, "with much thankfulness, that the Bishop of Madras has nominated Archdeacon William Weston Elwes for the Tinnevelly Bishopric. Archdeacon Elwes graduated at Cambridge (Trinity College) in 1866 and was ordained in 1867, receiving his title from Canon Hoare, with whom he laboured at Holy Trinity, Tunbridge Wells, until 1870. In this latter year he went out to India, and has since held several chaplaincies in the Madras Diocese. As a member of the Madras Corresponding Committee (C.M.S.) he possesses a full knowledge of mission work in Tinnevelly, in which he takes a very warm interest. May he be privileged to help and guide it and to see it grow and extend."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Ireland.—Gospel meetings have been held in the Presbyterian Church, Drumkeen, by Mr. S. Montgomery, and a similar series has been held in the Mission Tent, Springfield, co. Fermanagh.

Messrs. B. and F. Weaver have finished their week's mission at New Barnet. The Word was with great power; the result, souls saved, Christians revived, spiritual life deepened. The tent was crowded every evening, and the good hand of our God over us all the while. J. E. D.

Kilkee, Ireland.—Messrs. F. Greville Eland and A. Grant Gibb have concluded a fortnight's mission in this beautiful watering-place on the Clare coast. A sense of deep solemnity and holy joy pervaded all the gatherings. Not a few professed to accept the Saviour, while believers confessed to receiving refreshment and blessing.

Bendigo, Victoria.—I have had a tent here for some weeks. Those who confessed Christ when the tent was up last year are going on with the Lord Himself and with the Word of Truth. The meetings this time are not without fruit, but we want to see the Lord's hand in adding. There are many small townships around here in great need of the Gospel, and this leads us to inquire of the Lord as to making this our home for a time. Frank Brewster.

Walthamstow.—Mr. Matthew Burnett visited Blackhorse-road Chapel on August 5 and 6. He was much cheered to find recent converts standing steadfast, not one week passing since the mission, three months ago, but that the "Lord added day by day those that were being saved." In answer to his appeal, a large number of God's people promised that they would each fix upon one individual, and bend all their energies towards getting that soul converted.

Dunoon.—Mr. Josiah Spiers was to have left for North Wales last week, but owing to the great blessing being granted in this Clyde watering place, he arranged with Mr. Chaplin, of Chesham, to go to Towyn instead. Thus he is staying at Dunoon two weeks longer. He is having a truly blessed work, and many have found the Lord. On Sunday night about a thousand were present on the beach. On August 13, he expects to go to Weston-super-Mare for two weeks' sand services.

Dublin.—Mr. Edward Hurditch, of Brighton, has left us after fourteen days' work in our tent in South Circular-road. The Lord has set his seal upon this preacher's labours; and we are glad to find he is at times free from his own ministry at Brighton to take up such services. Pastor Robert Clark, of Ballinacarrick, Belfast, has been with us for one week; and Pastor Mateer, of London, continues until the middle of this month. At the close of these tent services a stone building, capable of seating some 600, is to be erected, where the students of Rockefeller College and others may preach the Gospel. The prayers and sympathy of all the Lord's children are asked for this work. T. L. D.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

A friend has promised £1000 to Mr. Wm. Quarrier to build a house at the Orphan Homes for the treatment of infectious diseases.

During July, the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals dealt with ninety-six cases in various parts of Scotland.

The Young Women's Christian Union, of Glasgow, is showing active signs of life. The monthly conferences are remarkably well attended.

Miss Lucy Booth gave a vigorous address on Tuesday, in the U.P. Synod Hall, Edinburgh, which was crowded, and was accompanied to the platform by fourteen converted natives in costume.

General satisfaction is expressed that the Wesleyan Conference has seen its way to continue Rev. T. Morrom Taylor in Raglan-street Church, Glasgow, where his services in connection with the North-West Mission have been greatly blessed.

The summer session of the Original Secession Synod Divinity Hall was brought to a close last week by a very able valedictory address on "The Principles of the Church in Relation to Current Thought," by Rev. R. Morton, Perth.

Many persons professed decision for Christ at the meetings recently held by Mrs. Baeyertz in Cowcaddens Free Church, Glasgow; and testimony on all hands is given that believers were specially blessed by her addresses. She returns to Glasgow in September, after a season of rest, to carry on a fortnight's mission in Trinity Free Church.

The Established Church General Assembly's Commissioners on the Religious Condition of the People, visited Stranraer last week, and held an interesting conference in the parish church with the office-bearers within the bounds of the Presbytery and the general public. Important statements were made especially on the condition of the agricultural population.

A conference under the auspices of the Lanarkshire Christian Union has been held in the Free Church, Fauldhouse, to the evident quickening of the spiritual life of the district. The addresses, which were earnest and deeply Evangelical, were delivered by Rev. Thos. Currie, Edinburgh; Mr. Thos. Nicol, Glasgow; Mr. G. S. Colin, Glasgow; and Mr. Drysdale, a missionary from China.

Touching reference to the present coal strike were made in many pulpits last Sabbath, and the hushed attention given showed that the people felt keenly for the thousands of women and children who are suffering great privations, which are being partially met by public and private subscriptions. Soup kitchens and other means of help have been started in many of the mining districts, and the Salvation Army is doing good service in this charitable work.

IRISH NOTES.

During the past few weeks a series of public meetings have been held in the West of Ireland by Rev. David Mullan, under the auspices of the Evangelical Alliance; they have been well attended.

A meeting to bid farewell to Mrs. S. A. Bill and Mr. Kirk, about to sail as missionaries to Qua Iboe, West Africa, was held on Thursday evening in the hall of the Y.M.C.A., Mountpottinger, Belfast. A similar meeting was held the same evening in Beechpark Hall, Belfast, to bid farewell to Mr. David Officer, who is going out as a missionary to Cape Town. Mr. Officer has worked as a town missionary in Belfast for over seven years, with great earnestness and success, as through his efforts a large mission hall was opened a few months since at a cost of over £650.

OBITUARY.

MR. JAMES PATTEN DANIEL.

Many will hear with regret of the death, at the advanced age of ninety-one, at his residence, West-street, South Petherton, of Mr. J. P. Daniel, who was respected for his high moral character and Christian philanthropy. His generous help to the Congregational Church, of which he was a deacon for forty years, as well as in the work carried on by the L.M.S., the Religious Tract Society, and Bible Society, will be long remembered. "Our loss (writes a correspondent) is great. A great standard-bearer, a noble soldier, a generous giver, a staunch Nonconformist, a Christian comrade, has been taken from our midst."

PROFESSOR DOBIE.

This promising young Orientalist, from whom much had been hoped, has been suddenly called away through an accident at Newtonmore, on the Highland Railway. After studying Arabic and other Oriental languages in India, he was selected in February, 1892, to deliver the Wilson lectures on the comparative philology of the Semitic languages at Bombay University. About two years ago the Chair of Hebrew at Edinburgh University became vacant by the death of Professor Adam, and Professor Dobie was unanimously appointed to the Chair. He was at that time at Secunderabad, but he came home and entered on his duties with the fairest prospects. These have now been suddenly cut short, and his death has left little more than a record of brilliant scholarship, and the promise of valuable work which destined not to be realised.

REV. VERNER M. WHITE, LL.D.

Many will hear with much regret of the death of Dr. Verner Moore White, who had suffered for some time from a painful illness. He passed to his rest at his residence, Maybury Lodge, Woking, on Monday week, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. Born at the Manse, Corglass, Bailiborough, co. Cavan, in 1818, he belonged to a family of ministers on the sides of both parents. On December 24, 1839, he was licensed to preach the Gospel, having just then completed the twenty-first year of his age, and from that period, until four years ago, he was constantly so engaged.

Shortly after licence he was ordained to the charge of Donoughmore, a congregation of 700 members, in one of the most Presbyterian districts in the county Down, which charge he held for four years.

In 1844 he was called to a congregation in Liverpool organised by the Presbytery of Belfast, for the Irish in that city. The congregation was small, and belonged almost exclusively to the working classes. There was no church, discouragements and difficulties surrounded him, which were universally regarded as insurmountable. After eighteen months of anxious toil, he entered his church, known as Islington Presbyterian Church, with a debt of £5000, but by his energy and the blessing of God, before he left, after a ministry there of twenty-nine years, the debt was wiped off, and a further £2000 added to the property of the church. In the matter of Sunday closing of public-houses he was one of the earliest co-operators. He led the way in open-air work, and for four summers he preached in the thoroughfares to audiences from 500 to 3000. He was the first minister to preach in a Liverpool theatre on the Lord's day. In 1874 he received a call to the pastorate of South Kensington, London, where he laboured for sixteen years, retiring from the ministry in January, 1890, in the seventy-third year of his age, and the fiftieth year of his ministry. As a minister he was known as a staunch supporter of the pure Gospel, as an uncompromising upholder of Protestant truth, and an ardent advocate for a closer practical union amongst all Evangelical denominations.

MR. W. P. PATON.

Many will sympathise with Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, in the loss of his son, drowned on Wednesday week in the sad boating accident at Barmouth. Mr. W. P. Paton, who was twenty-eight years of age, was an expert swimmer, and therefore he is believed to have lost his life in trying to save the lives of others. In Liverpool, where he was engaged in business, he was an active helper amongst poor children. Rev. W. Crosbie, speaking on Sunday, said:—"It was believed—and it is easy for those who knew him to entertain the belief—that he sacrificed his own life in trying to save others. His life, therefore, was fitly rounded off, and upon the memory of it will rest the glory of self-sacrifice. He lived for others, doing good in many beautiful ways, and he died for others. For him the law of life and death was the law that has its supreme and perfect illustration in the life and death of Christ. In Him he trusted; Him he tried to follow; and in the suddenness and brave struggles and endeavours of the mortal hour He was with him, rescuing him while he was rescuing others."

MR. JOHN M. SCROGGIE.

My dear lamented brother, John M. Scroggie, was taken ill during a month's mission that he was conducting at Mr. Charrington's Hall. He rallied, however, in a measure, and was able to fulfil an engagement at Inverness. Then he went on to Cullen, where he had been so signally used on a previous visit. There he utterly broke down, and was taken to his home at Haddington, never more to go out again. Though the best medical advice that could be given was obtained, and though he seemed to revive again and again, yet it was evident some time before his death that he was gradually getting weaker. And some little time before his death he must have known himself that he was going. After expressing a wish to see me in a letter written by his son, a wish that I deeply regret to say I was unable to gratify, being myself confined to bed, he added, "But if you cannot come we shall all meet soon in the glory." He passed away at 11.30 a.m. on Wednesday last, the 1st of August. I need not try to speak of the blank that his removal has left in our hearts, and I am sure in the hearts of thousands who were won to Christ through his ministry.

J. J. Scroggie.

[We hope to give shortly a portrait of this honoured evangelist, with an account of his career.]
